Jack went all through the Crimean War, fighting tooth and nail by the side of his master, and once going so far as to save his life; one of the enemy came at the soldier with his gun clubbed, but Jack went for him! Sad to relate, however, Jack's master was killed at Inkermann.

When the regiment came home, Queen Victoria was so touched by the story that she had a miniature Victoria Cross made, which she presented to the gallant little animal, together with the Crimean medals.—The Young Soldier.

"The Children's Friend" and His Horse

The religious history of East Tennessee would not be complete without the story of the Rev. Isaac Emory, a Sabbath school missionary, and his faithful horse "Charlie."

Their labors began before any railroads were built in East Tennessee, except the one from Bristol to Chattanooga, and before the city of Cincinnati had completed its road into Chattanooga. Knoxville had a population of less than 7,000. This was in 1866.

The Rev. Isaac Emory was for thirty-two years a Sabbath school missionary in the Tennessee mountains. His method was to travel horseback or in a buggy, seeking the outlying districts, visiting from house to house, distributing good literature, and organizing Sabbath schools wherever possible. He organized over a thousand Sabbath schools, into which were gathered more than fifty-four thousand children. It is beliveed that this pioneer work in Tennessee has been wonderfully efficient in lifting up those portions of the state where it has worked to the comparatively high Christian standard they now have.

There is a story of his faithful horse "Charlie" which should share in the achievements of this remarkable man. For fifteen years, through heat and cold, "Charlie" was the faithful servant of this Sabbath school missionary. In one year the missionary traveled over 5,000 miles, mostly on horseback.

For some years where the roadbed of a railroad had been built, the tracks were not laid, and Mr. Emory found the roadbed exceedingly convenient for the purposes of horseback travel. But the bridges over the culverts had not been built, so he used to carry a couple of planks strapped to his saddle with which he would make a bridge for his horse when he came to a break in the road.

This horse would never pass children, but always stopped until Mr. Emory had talked to them, and given them picture cards. There was always a welcome for "Charlie" as well as for the missionary on their periodical trips through the mountains. They were co-laborers in a great cause.

The last public address by Mr. Emory was made at Glenmary, in Scott county, Tennessee, and during the course of his remarks the writer is informed that he made mention of his faithful horse, saying that if horses go to heaven he was sure his old gray horse would go there, and that he would be glad to see him.

Mr. Emory was killed a few days later in a railroad wreck at New Market, Tennessee. He is buried at Knoxville, and over his grave is a modest monument upon which is written, "The Children's Friend."

When an aged Sabbath school worker called on me at "Brookcroft," my home in the mountains of the Volunteer State, and gave me the facts about this man and his horse, as I knew the country so well myself and the hardships that both man and beast must have suffered in a pioneer work of the type described, I said: "Surely Charlie, too, was the children's friend."—Selected.

Useful Birds

Please notice, children, what birds you see doing useful work in your gardens and tell your playmates about them.

One year some redpolls came to visit at or home. That summer my wife and I saw we observed that she held in her mouth the mother bird hopping around our potato stalks, and then to her young ones. Watching her closely we observed that she held in her mouth some newly hatched potato bugs. I never knew until then that any bird would eat the ugly things. After this we welcomed and protected these useful creatures.

Besides this, the birds used to sing at our sitting room window. My wife died, and I moved away. Who will care for our little friends now? I often wonder if the kindly little woman from where she is can listen to her feathered pets and her favorite robin's song! Anyway, she can hear the holy angels as in hallowed worship they raise their soft and mellow song of praise to Almighty God, and so will we if we serve him here and are loving, kind and good to all around us.—Our Dumb Animals.

The No-Excuse Lady. By Mary E. Chase

Ruth Crittenden paused in her dusting to inspect the parlor furniture. She did not note any improvement since the last inspection. The haircloth was unmistakably shabby, and the old mahogany most woefully battered, as it had every right to be, having ministered already to five generations of Crittendens. Then her gaze wandered to the old-fashioned flowered wall paper, which she and Aunt Jane had so hoped to change that spring, and to the spotless white muslin curtains, which had somehow lost their look of pertness possessed in their younger days. She did not examine the carpet. There was no need since she knew every worn spot on its faded surface. Instead, she raised her troubled eyes to the face of a little old lady, who surrounded by a gilt frame, smiled down upon her anxious face from the beflowered wall.

"Don't worry, Grandmother," she whispered, half to herself and half to the face on the wall. "I'll not make excuses for a thing, no matter how much I do wish they were different. I promise you I won't."

Grandmother Crittenden seemed to smile more kindly than ever at the promise. Perhaps she had been worrying for fear her granddaughter would be tempted to forsake the Crittenden tradition, which was never under any circumstances to apologize for unavoidable conditions. Carpets might be shabby and white curtains frayed and old, but, since new ones were impossible, no true Crittenden would seek to make excuses.

Ruth was a true Crittenden. Had she been otherwise, she would have followed the lawyer's advice upon the death of her mother four years before, sold the old home, given Benny to a wealthy uncle who was very anxious to adopt him, allowed Aunt Mary to educate Dorothy as she wished, and simply looked out for herself and for her own interests. None of which, in point of fact, she did at all. Instead, in true Crittenden fashion, she announced her intention of keeping the old home so that she and Benny and Dorothy might be together, and of asking Aunt Jane, who had no home of her own, to come and live with them so that during the school year, she herself might go to college. Aunt Jane, being a Crittenden also, and admiring her niece's pluck, came and Ruth's dream of college had been fulfilled.

To be sure, it had not been easy to educate one's self and to run a home on the little money left them, always remembering that enough must be left untouched for Benny and Dorothy. But she had done it and had graduated with honors. A position as teacher was the next dream, thus far unfulfilled—a position near enough home so that she could come back frequently to see them all.

Yesterday she had been radiant with hope for the early mail had brought a letter from a certain Miss Snelling, pricipal of a girls' school in the neighboring town. Miss Snelling and her school, its fine standing and the desirability of being connected with it, were well-known to Ruth, and even the vague possibility of a position there caused her and Aunt Jane to rejoice, Dorothy to clap her hands, and Benny to turn a somersault. By return mail she had written Miss Snelling—who had announced her intention of coming to Hillcrest for a few days—inviting her to come the day after tomorrow for lunch, when they might talk matters over undisturbed. This was Tuesday morning, and Wednesday was the fateful day.

In spite of Grandmother Crittenden's smile, Ruth's hopes of yesterday grew less bright as she made a final survey of the freshly dusted room. It was shabby, and it looked even more so when the shades were high. She almost hoped tomorrow would be rainy. The sun revealed so many worn spots. If it were only dark and cloudy she would pull the shades lower and light the newly laid fire. That would help. And in the morning she would change the daisies on the table for some roses which she would have Benny get from the greenhouse. Surely that extravagance was excusable under the circumstances, and with so much at stake.

At all event she would try to make everything so homelike that Miss Snelling would not notice the shabbiness and Aunt Jane would help—Aunt Jane with her sense of humor and her dear, quaint ways. She would be dearer and quainter than ever, after her semi-annual trip to town which she was taking that day, Ruth told herself, for she always saw so many new things and picked up so many new ideas from places which were barren to the average passerby. As for Benny and Dorothy, they had been coached since last evening on all the attributes of best behavior, and they were sure to do her honor.

A ring from the telephone brought her survey to an end. How she managed to answer coherently the startling information which came over the wire, she never knew. Miss Snelling was speaking, the voice said. In spite of her consternation, Ruth noted that it was a careful cultured voice. She had just arrived in Hillcrest, a trifle early for lunch, she knew. She would complete a few errands and arrive in half an hour.

Ruth heard her own voice answer, "Very Well, Miss Snelling," in a kind of horrified dream; and the next thing she realized was that she was frenziedly laying a clean cloth and getting out the best silver. There was no time to question matters. Miss Snelling had obviously mistaken the day. Instead of the "day after tomorrow," as the invitation read, she had understood "tomorrow." It was too late to explain. Moreover, Ruth would be embarrassing to her guest. She would explain nothing, excuse nothing—she would just face the facts and do the best she could.

She took a hasty survey of the larder. There was salad from Sunday's chicken, a chocolate pudding she had made and she had yet time to make biscuits. The dainty luncheon planned for tomorrow was impossible of preparation in a scant half hour. The roses could not be gotten—daisies must do both for centrepiece and for parlor table. There was no time for her to dress, and if there were, the new gown she had planned to wear was not completed. She was glad that she had put on a fresh white dress for the children. That, with daisies at her belt, must do.

She called Dorothy and Benny from their play, and briefly explained the situation, relying upon their "Crittenden pride" to do the rest. Their white clothes were not laundered——blue gingham must do. They dressed — wide-eyed and sympathetic—and promised every five minutes to be models of behavior.

"It's just like Senator Crittenden and the 'No-Excuse Lady,'" Benny told her, as he fumbled with his buttons, while she mixed the biscuits. "You know how often Grandmother used to tell us about her."

Ruth remembered, though it had taken Benny's agile mind to compare the situations. The story was one which Grandmother Crittenden loved to tell, and from which had arisen the Crittenden tradition of the state of Kentucky in interests of Henry Clay, old Senator John J. Crittenden had once been invited to dinner in a backwoods log cabin. Absentmindedly, as was his wont, the Senator mistook the day appointed by the simple folk, and appeared for the dinner the day before. But his hostess won his everlasting admiration as well as the name "the No-Excuse Lady" by making no allusion to his mistake which he did not discover until his return home that evening. Upon remembering the gracious hospitality which he had received, and the generous way in which he had been treated, Senator Crittenden was much impressed, and he never tired, so Grandmother Crittenden said of telling the story of the "No-Excuse Lady" in the Kentucky log cabin.

Ruth would be a "no-excuse lady," too, she resolved, as she kissed Benny, and wiped some flour from her glowing cheeks. Just then the door bell rang, and she ran to open it, and to receive into the old parlor, to which somehow her charm and enthusiasm lent new freshness, Miss Mary Ann Snelling, who, secure in her infallible memory, was coming to lunch, she thought, on the very day for which she had been invited. Then entered Benny and Dorothy, clean in blue gingham and perfect in manners, and Ruth left them to do the honors while she began to take the biscuits from the oven, to garnish the salad, and to put the finishing touches to a simple but well-appointed table.

She blessed Benny and Dorothy that day. They were Crittendens to the core, she told herself, no matter how they might quarrel in the back yard. Benny said Aunt Jane's grace with unfaltering precision, and Dorothy removed the plates and brought the dessert as well as the best salaried maid in New York could have done.

Meanwhile, Miss Snelling, who had been so charmed by her two small acquaintances that she never noticed the shabby furniture or a worn carpet, grew more charmed than ever and quite changed in her mind in regard to a certain decision which she had all but made in regard to a certain lady in a far-off city. After luncheon, while Benny and Dorothy cleared the table and washed the dishes, she and Ruth sat beside a tiny friendship fire in the grate and talked of college, of girls, and of ideals of teaching them. They became so absorbed that four o'clock came before they realized it, and the door opened to admit a most-surprised Aunt Jane.

But Aunt Jane was a Crittenden through and through, and not for a moment did she make Miss Snelling feel her surprise. She received Ruth's warning smile with a sage nod of her own, and sat down to tell them in her quaint way of her experiences in town. At five they all walked to the station for the suburban train, Benny leading with Miss Snelling's bag; and at six o'clock when Miss Snelling had doubtless arrived at school and was at last remembering how shabby things were, Ruth broke down and cried on Aunt Jane's kindly shoulder.

But her worry, like most of that which burdens the world, was needless, as she would have known could she have seen Miss Snelling's face when she opened the engagement book upon her desk, and all at once discovered she had mistaken the day. She sat still for some long minutes in her beautifully furnished room, and saw again the quaint, old-fashioned parlor, the white dishes, the glowing fire, the sweet children, and, most of all, a girl's happy face and charming manners. Then she wrote two letters—one to a certain lady in a far-off city, telling her that after all she had decided upon some one else for her position, and the other to Ruth Crittenden, telling her that she was more sure than ever that she wanted her to teach in her school.

"Had I doubted in the least your ability, my dear," the letter read, "my doubts would have completely vanished upon remembering how you met a most embarrassing situation in order to save a most thoughtless guest greater humiliation than you can imagine. I shall be honored, I am sure, in having you in my school."

The letter, received the very morning which should have brought Miss Snelling for luncheon, was hailed with rejoicing by all members of the Crittenden family.

"It pays to be a 'no-excuse lady!'" cried Benny Crittenden.

And a very happy big sister agreed with him!—American Messenger.

News From the Field

Compton Avenue, Los Angeles

Since our last report this church has experienced an uplift and victory in a special meeting led by Evangelist N. W. Jennings. Brother Jennings came to us directly from Whittier where marked victory attended his efforts and although there were difficulties to face because of the season of the year, and other conditions as well, the church entered the campaign with a spirit of co-operation that meant success. Our people were tired from their participation in a union tent meeting which closed just when our own meeting began but they gladly gave their help in attendance, song, prayer, and testimony .

The church counts herself fortunate, indeed, in having been able to secure Brother Jennings' help at this time. It is rather difficult to secure outside assistance in our California churches since we are so far removed from the section where most of our evangelists live. We are thankful that the Lord made possible our brother's visit with us since it is necessary, in these war times, to make use of every means possible to keep people interested in spiritual things.

During the three weeks Brother Jennings was with us we were rejoiced to see twenty-two persons either make a public confession for the first time or reconsecrate themselves for a more definite service. Two came by relation making twenty-four in all as one result of this special effort. Not a single one who took the stand went to another church. The preaching of Brother Jennings brings people face to face with the demands of the Word and a number of those baptized came from other churches because the Brethren church offers an opportunity to follow more fully the teachings of the Book.

Three remain unbaptized but this is due to conditions over which we have no power. Among those received into membership are those who will add much strength to the work of the church.

The benefit to the church is measured not alone in accessions. The membership has been brought nearer the Master. The testimony of our people is that they have received new strength and have been lifted to higher Christian experiences.

One feature of Brother Jennings' work that has been most agreeable and caused favorable comment outside our own membership is the sane method he uses in inducing individuals to make a public decision for Chrst. There is no excitement or over-persuasion. No one is asked to come for the sake of numbers. People are told not to come unless they mean business and they need to know that it costs something to take a stand for the Master in these days. This is especially refreshing when numbers seem to count in so many cases and any means employed that the individual might be counted and large numbers reported.

We were glad to have Sister Jennings with us and had hoped she might be able to often bring the gospel in song. Throat trouble prevented her singing many times during the meeting but what singing she was permitted to do was much appreciated and it is hoped she may soon be able to take her part in the work of soul-saving.

It is a pleasure to work with Brother Jennings in special meetings. He leaves the pastor strengthened when his people and makes the work easier when he is gone. This does not always happen.

Two most estimable young people had been received into our membership before this special meeting and since our last report. One came from the Catholics and the other from the Christian church.

These are actively engaged in the work of the church and are proving a blessing to us. It is a great pleasure to welcome those who have a "mind to work."

Krypton, Kentucky

The hills that have been echoing and re-echoing, and reverberating in assisting to carry the message out over the valley in and around Krypton for the last two weeks, are very quiet this morning. Brother A. E. Thomas has just left for Huntington, Indiana to continue his work there in a soul-saving campaign.

Evangelist A. E. Thomas came to us a little over two weeks ago and held us a great meeting in many respects. I do not know how it is in other places, but here even at this critical moment, so many are thinking about other things than that of God. This of course calls out a greater resistance on the part of God's servants, but Brother Thomas came with the goods, and we are rejoicing over the victory,

They say that a confession is good for the soul, so here it goes. I had always thought that Brother Thomas was sentimental in his preaching, but I find I was wrong. Had he worked on the emotions of these people there would have, perhaps been several more started in the race for Christ. What he did was to give them the plain truth and leave it up to them. The thing we needed most of all was the strengthening of our foundation on which we are building and that he did. Another thing that helped us greatly, was that he held before the people the doctrine of the church. Yes we had a great meeting. In the two weeks we had 17 confessions, and I think there must have been 40 or 50 who renewed their confession and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The people in Krypton are united as they have never been before. Brother Thomas made many friends among the people in the mountains and they all speak highly of him. May God bless him in the meeting in which he is now engaged.

I have been so busy before and after dedication, that I have failed to publish the gifts that have come to us for several months. There was a dear brother and sister from Roanoke, Virginia, who sent us a check to the amount of $50.00 for seats, and asked that their names be not mentioned in the paper. I am sorry, for I would like to have you know who it was. Mr. Abe Bowman, from California sent $25.00 for seats. The following are gifts from the work in general: Church at Garwin, Iowa by the pastor Freeman Ankrum, Earl Riddle and wife, Gleenwood, Maryland Church at Hagerstown, Maryland, $5. Mrs. Elizabeth Cook, $10.

JAS. C. COOK.

P. S.—School is going fine, and we are glad we have with us Miss Ruby Brewbaker from Dallas Center, Iowa, and Mr. Claude Akens from Portis, Kansas, as our teachers. J. S. C.

Detwiler Notes

Letters are still inquiring why I do not write oftener for the paper. It is not because I am ashamed of the Baltimore effort that I do not want to become identified with it, but because my field is as yet in the Northwest, and all I do must be looking in that direction, until time to return after Conference. At the same time I am heartily interested in the Baltimore work,—the proof is giving them the first chance in securing my service for the summer. And that not because it was the most inviting one of the calls that came at the close of my Bible course in New York, rather the least so. Those who have had to go with the initial steps in the establishing of a new church in a city, unfamiliar to Dunkardism, will understand the stage of uncertainty, when the beautiful devotion of the faithful few, is tried by the fearful ones who feel it cannot be done, too much sacrifice. Trying to trace the members that have lived here over twenty years, is more interesting than any game. The list of Brethren in the city is over 36, twelve of which were at the meeting for organization, an other twelve we have found since, and some of the remainder have gone back to their home church, or else the home pastor has so long been out of touch with them that the address is too far back. The Spokane method of getting as much new material through the H. D. system, we have almost had to give up since the heat wave struck the city a few days ago. Not only did Brother Witter keep in touch with his members, but was the one to take the initial steps toward seeing that his members from Waynesboro moving here had a church home.

The weather this first week in August is not making its contribution towards the cause, the mercury mounting to heights almost unbelievable. At 4 P. M. the official thermometer registered 105 degrees, a record not to be equalled since Baltimore had its Weather Bureau, 1871. The day before the mercury was lower but the huimdity was excessive, 80 degrees and more. The baking streets are hindering in the H. D. method, which works here as it does in all places, as a means of getting next to new material for the foundatoin of a church. If even ten of the 40 new churches are to be started to reach our Four Years' Goal, this plan ought to be worked. Where are the workers? Where are young women who graduate from Ashland College? Some of them have applied to me to help them get a position, and they have accepted when it was in the line of teaching. But here is a field always waiting, always bringing in large results in souls won for Christ and the church. Not especially here in Baltimore, but in every local church, city or country. Try it girls, and tell me if it doesn't work, that is if you work.

One way that Brother Witter kept next to his Baltimore members was by keeping them on his H. D. of the Waynesboro S. S. and the ones now waiting baptism here, are largely the outcome of his faithfulness in thus keeping them reading the Sunday school lessons. Altogether, the prospects for a flourishing church, far outshines that of the beginning of any of the city churches that I have known anything about. And if the wage-earners make half the sacrifice that was made in Spokane, the Mission Board will not get to share long in the blessing of helping.

VIANNA DETWILER,
Baltimore, Maryland.

"On to Winona

May this be the present watch-word in all parts of the brotherhood. This conference lays claim to a unique place in our denominational activities. Christian patriotism is now directing our people to Winona. President Wilson has urged with emphasis the importance of loyalty to all church Assemblies in this crisis hour. The geat Master of men is calling upon his servants to be true to him at any cost, that his NAME may be the beacon light to changing kingdom, nations and men.

Then Brehtren "On to Winona" in the name of the King of Kings, that we may be able to adjust ourselves to the world's changing needs.

Let us go to the Conference of 1918, not for an "outing" but "on business for our King"—"If it is the Lord's will."

L. G. WOOD.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

If you have paused for a glimpse at the mercury before you began to read these notes you saw that we have reached $50,000. That is the point we wanted to make before National Conference and we have made it —indeed we have made it by a good, wide margin. Now this means that the first 18 churches canvassed in Pennsylvania have gone $25,000: In reality they have gone better than that because the report is only partial from one of those 18 churches. And the fine part is there are yet enough churches to be canvassed in Pennsylvania to require at least ten weeks more time. It really begins to look as if old "Pennsy" wanted all the rest of the $100,000 for herself. At all events it is hard to forecast at this time just where Pennsylvania will go. Among the number of churches yet to be visited in Pennsylvania are, Uniontown, Pittsburgh, Waynesboro, Berlin, Philadelphia and other good congregations. So Pennsylvania will do her full part in putting Ashland College on a sound financial basis.

Masontown is the congregation from which I can at this time give only a partial report. Brother Shively had made splendid preparations for my coming; but when I arrived on the field I found that because some of his members were away and because others lived so far out of town it was impossible to complete the canvass in the time I had alotted for Masontown. Moreover, the weather was getting so unbearably hot that nobody wanted to see an agent of any description whatever. So I told Brother Shively and his good people that I would come back in September and finish them up. However, the Masontown results were good as far as we went; and I have every assurance that when the canvass is finally completed the showing will be highly creditable. Among all the Sunday schools where I have been thus far none have hit quite so hard as the Masontown school. This school has given $600—it may still go higher. This goes $100 better than the Conemaugh school. I am sorry Conemaugh, but you know I just could not help it. The partial report for Masontown is $1500. I am hoping that the final report may show a great deal more than that. Brother Shively gave me loyal assistance both with his Ford and otherwise. And his home was my home while I was there. Brother and Sister Shively know just how to make one feel at home under their vine and fig tree. And I am very gateful to them and to many of the Masontown folks for the many kindnesses they showed me. And in September I am coming back for some more—kindnesses, and money.

From Masontown I slipped back hurriedly to Moxham to finish my work there. By the time I got to Moxham it was so hot that the mercury was nearly spilling out over the top. It seems to me I never saw such heat before. But Brother Nowag the pastor was ready to jump in and have a good sweat with me, and we had it. Brother Nowag is a grandson of Henry Holsinger, and while it did not so happen that he went to Ahland College for his training, yet he is interested in our school and was very anxious that his people should do their part in the cause for Permanent Endowment. And I am glad to say that he gave fine cooperation and his people almost to a man or woman gave me a splendid response. I left a little finishing for Brother Nowag to do and when the results are all in from Moxham I am sure it will be very close to if not altogether $700. When the whole situation is known this must be considered exceedingly good for Moxham. This is not a large congregation but they are maintaining a pastor for whole time. And besides, this congregation needs badly a new building. But notwithstanding these considerations most of the Moxham people were determined that their church should do her part. I believe she did. The home of Brother and Sister Nowag was my home while in this congregation; and I have only words of praise for their true, Christian hospitality.

When I was at Moxham the first time Brother L. Garvin Smith came over from Conemaugh several nights and gave us a helping hand. He made a speech one night that really did good like a medicine. And when I returned the second time Brother J. F. Watson was with us on Sunday night. And when I was reporting from Masontown I should have said that one night Brother Miller came over from Uniontown to help us; and the second night he brought his good wife along. I am always glad to see my brethren drop in to our meetings because it makes me feel that they are as much interested in the endowing of Ashland College as I am, and I know they are.

These will be my last notes until after Conference. Hence I want to take this opportunity to urge our people in the states and districts where I am yet to go to buy Liberty Bonds in the next drive which will be executed in Semtember, for College Endowment. We are getting lots of Liberty Bonds. We are glad to get them. When we get Bonds we have no fears as to the safety of our investments. I scarce need say again that if you give your Bond to the College you are making a given amount of money serve two purposes—the Government and your school; and besides, it is a way of accommodating yourself. So let me urge upon Sunday schools, S. S. C. E.'s and in-purpose of giving them to Ashland College and you don't have your bond paid out when I get there I have a little, simple plan that will solve the problem.

After Pennsylvania comes Illiokota.

Kentucky Mission Notes

Help Wanted

A young lady teacher is needed at once at Krypton to labor with Miss Brewbaker in the work there. It is a real opportunity for worthwhile service. A man and wife are greatly needed to take charge of the Dormitory at Lost Creek. If the man and wife cannot be found then the Board desires to secure a woman as matron. Let the friends of this work pray that the Lord will send forth laborers into his vineyard. Competent help is needed. May such as hear the call say "Here am I send me."

An Unwelcome Surprise

The whole church will be sorry on learning that Brother Cook, our faithful minister and general superintendent of the Krypton Mission has notified the Mission Board that on account of his wife's health it will be necessary for him to resign his position which he has held for five years. Although Sister Cook is in a fair state of health and is busy as usual with her many duties, yet a change is felt necessary. Brother and Sister Cook have done a great work, laying the foundation well, and making possible a still greater work if the right leader can be found to continue the work. Where is the right man, the man whom God calls to this field of wonderful opportunities and possibilities.

The Krypton Revival

Brother Thomas has returned and reports 17 confessions in the revival and a splendid communion service. He states also that he was pleased with the work done by Brother Cook.

Riverside

Miss Genevieve Strode writes that 116 pupils are enrolled at Riverside and that the patrons are more loyal to the work than ever. She says also, "I have never enjoyed Riverside the way I have these few weeks."

"Over the Top" for Washington, D. C.

"Brother Ed" writes: "This time it is Uniontown that responds to the call to assist the Washington church and to relieve the Mission Board of a 'Dead Horse' of interest. We are doing our bit by all the interests of the church. This is given very willingly and with a prayer that you pull across with the proposition. We are so anxious that you make good that we say 'Here is our pledge, and to make it good here is the cash ($25.00) too.'"

Brother G. H. Hahn, of Woodstock, Virginia sends a pledge of $12.50 for their Endeavor Society and writes: "I feel so sure that the amount will be raised that I am sending my check for the above."

Brother F. J. Reagan writes: "The Missionary Society of the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California will give $25.00 toward the Washington, D. C. church debt. The same will be sent to Brother L. S. Bauman at Conference."

The proposition is as follows: the Washington, D. C. church will shoulder $1000, if the whole brotherhood will provide the $1,500, thus making it possible to burn the mortgage which is for $2,500. A hundred churches and hundreds of individuals ought to report their pledges at once that we may go "Over the Top" for Washington, D. C. at the Winona Conference. If your pledge has not been made or sent in by the time you read this report, then get busy and bring or send the pledge to Winona. The pledges to date follow:

Our Dead

GROVE—Lucy Jane Grove, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Hildebrand, and wife of Benjamin F. Grove, was born August 12, 1873, at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, and died at the Memorial Hospital May 23, 1918. She was aged 45 years, 9 months and 12 days. On July 7, 1896, she was united in marriage with Benjamino F. Grove. On February 6, 1896 she united with the Brethren church at the Pike and later on transferred her membership to the Conemaugh Brethren church. She was a sincere and devout Christian. After an extended period of suffering she was called home to be with her Lord. She leaves to mourn her translation her husband, one son, two grandchildren, three sisters, two brothers and a host of warm friends. Funeral services were held at the Wesley Chapel by L. Garvin Smith, pastor. Conemaugh Brethren church. May the bereavel family be sustained by the divine Spirit in their affliction.

HITT—Grace Ellen Marsh Hitt was born in Bryan, Ohio, March 15, 1885 and passed on from her home in Steubenville to her reward June 18, 1918, aged 33 years, 3 months and 3 days. Early in life she gave her heart to the Master, uniting with the First Brethren church at Bryan, being baptized by A. T. Wirick then pastor at that place. She was an ardent Sunday school worker and at the time of her departure was the teacher of the Women's Bible class at the New Philadelphia Church of the Brethren of which she became a member May 22, 1913. Her life was an example of beautiful Christian living. Very few young people of her experience enjoyed such a large circle of friends. She was never strong physically, but in spite of that had planned a life's work enough for a man. She had faith that God would supply the needed strength. With her to know God's will was to do it.

On July 18th, 1909 she was united in marriage with Owen D. Hitt and to them God entrusted the care of three children, Lenore G., Otis D., and Wesley A., who with the husband, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Marsh,, four sisters and five brothers and a host of Christian friends, await the time this side the vale when we can go to meet her. One sister preceded her to the beyond September 17, 1884. Funeral services held in the First Brethren church at Bryan, Ohio, conducted by Rev. H. A .Brubaker, of Akron, Ohio, assisted by Rev. G. W. Sellars.

STUTZMAN—May 22nd, 1918, Mrs. Goldie Fritz-Stutzman departed this life for her heavenly home. She was 34 years and 7 days old, at the time of her death. Sister Stutzman was the mother of nine children, one of which preceded her to the other world. She united with the Rosedale church in 1905 and remained a faithful, devoted Christian woman since her conversion. Her sudden death was a shock to her large circle of friends. The husband and family have the sympathy and prayers of all who knew them. Funeral services by her former pastor, the undersigned.

MILLER—May 31st, 1918, Mrs. Lucy Kels-Miller departed this life. She was 46 years years, one month and 29 days old at the time of her demise. Sister Miller was married to Mr. Adam Miller in 1894, to which union 5 children were born, 3 of which, with her husband, survive her. She became a member of the Morrellville Mission church many years ago and remained a faithful member up until the time of her death. Many friends and loved ones mourn the departure of a quiet, kindly soul and extend their sympathy to the stricken family. Funeral services by the pastor, the undersigned.

MEDLING—July 22nd, 1918, Alfred Medling, infant son of Brother and Sister Russel Medling departed this life. The child contracted pneumonia and lived only a short time. Brother and Sister Medling have the sympathy of their many friends in their sorrow. Funeral conducted by the pastor.

G. H. JONES.
Pastor 3rd church, Johnstown, Pa.

SIPE—Viola Sipe was born in Adams county, Indiana, October 24, 1863, and died at her home in Mercer county, Ohio, July 1, 1918, in her sixty-fourth year. She was united in marriage to John H. Sipe February 27, 1883. This union was blessed with nine children, two being deceased.

Mrs. Sipe united with the Bethel Brethren church in the year 1892, during the pastorate of J. L. Huber. Sister Sipe was always concerned in the services of her redeemer. She will be missed both by her family and church. She was anointed shortly before her death and died in the triumphant faith. Her earthly remains were laid to rest in the Willard cemetery to await the sound of the last trumpet when the dead shall be raised and we shall be changed.

W. F. JOHNSON.

THOMAS—Isaac P. Thomas, was born May 11th, 1861, and departed this life July 22nd, 1918, aged 57 years, 2 months and 11 days. Brother Thomas left to mourn his departure a loving and devoted wife and four daughters.

When about 18 years of age he confessed Christ and united with the Church of the Brethren. About 3 years ago he, with his wife, united with the Brethren church to which church his daughters had formerly united. He was always active and vitally interested in the church and all work of the kingdom. He used his money liberally for the church. The church loses a valuable counselor and active layman. Brother Thomas had been for many years a member of the school board and was always interested in advancement of education

May God richly bless and comfort the family.

Funeral services from Williamstown, Ohio Brethren church by the writer, assisted by Elder Spacht of the Church of the Brethren. Interment in Williamstown cemetery.

H. H. WOLFORD.

In the School of Christ

For some months past the parents of children, who have completed their High School work and who have a desire to continue their preparation for the great task of living by completing their education with a college or university course, have been considering WHERE this work can best be done. Some have considered the state universities and others have considered the church colleges. They have weighed and considered the points in favor of the one and that are against the other, but we fear altogether too many of them have not considered fully how the life of a young man or young woman may be completely transformed either for good or ill by the uncatalogued influences of the college where they receive their higher education.

In choosing a school for higher learning one is sometimes influenced too much by physical equipment rather than by moral and spiritual attainment. The faculty itself should be one of the largest determining factors in reaching a decision as to where one should complete his preparation for life's work. One can not well forget the statement that was made years ago that "a university is a log with Mark Hopkins on one end and a boy on the other." In this definition the faculty is everything, but while we may not agree that the faculty IS EVERYTHING we must admit that it is after all the greatest factor in the efficiency of any school. Undoubtedly it was more the influence of the late Dr. Harper than it was of Mr. Rockfeller's millions that made Chicago University what it is in the educational world.

But it matters not how many colleges and universities one may have attended, nor how many diplomas and degrees one may have received, one's education is still incomplete unless a thorough course has been taken in the great school of Christ.

In this school Jesus himself is the GREAT teacher, but great teachers avail little unless the students are willing to become GREAT learners, so that after all the good one gets out of his attendance at any school depends very largely upon his own efforts, upon his own concentration and consecration. In this great school of Christ one may learn of, or, as the word really means, "from" Jesus by listening to his direct teachings. While he did not follow the "lecture method" entirely, yet it is written of him as he went from place to place, "and he taught them there," so that wherever we went pupils were received into his school. His class rooms were the village streets, the country waysides, the shores of the sea, and the hillsides and the valleys. No dependence was placed upon physical equipment in this great school.

One of the chief characteristics of the teaching of Jesus was "he taught them as one who had authority, and not as the scribes and Pharisees." One of the weaknesses of the modern school, as it was one of the weaknesses of the schools of the ancients, is there are too many scribes and Pharisees occupying places upon the faculties.

One is justified in questioning the authority of any human teacher and one is not to be blamed for wishing to know upon what authority Christ based his teaching, providing one is sincere in his inquires. But Jesus made some statements in his teaching that are to be received because HE MADE them, as his statements concerning the unseen world. The things one can not scientifically demonstrate, and the statement of Jesus that "No man hath ascended up unto heaven," must make clear to us that his statements concerning the other world are to be received beause HE MADE them.

Again, in the school of Christ one is to learn by contemplating the character of the great Teacher. This character is divine, and while teaching by precept and teaching by example has each its place, the teaching of the latter is more attractive and of greater power. Some have said, "not as I do, but as I say;" but the great Teacher was the demonstration of the principles of his own teaching. In Jesus we see everything that belogs to the IDEAL excellence of our nature, so that to be Christlike is to be perfect.

The Laboratory Method

The laboratory plays a more impotant part in modern educational systems than it has ever done before, but it is no new thing in the world of education after all, for Jesus used it in his great school. We learn of Christ from the practical experiences and demonstrations of the Christian life as it is applied in the great world laboratory of every day living. To get the full benefit of Christ's teaching it is not enough that we "sit at his feet, and listen to his words," there must be the actual doing. There must be the taking up of his yoke which is a good fit and rests easily upon the neck of one who submits to him, and the bearing of his burden which is light to the one that walks in his steps. There must be the growing like Christ, as well as the gaining of acquaintance with his life.

The whole every-day practice of our religion is a constant leaning of Christ just as the constant speaking and writing of a language is essential to the learning of it.

To become a good musician or a good stenographer one must give painstaking and constant practice to either, and to be a good Christian one can do no less. We learn to do by doing, and as the great teacher said, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." Many of our doubts have their beginning in our failure to do the things we have been taught.

Opportunities for original research work by the student are some of the most attractive features in our modern universities, but no school ever founded by man gives such great opportunity for "research work" as the School of Christ." The whole human family is open to investigation and the whole human race composes the material that may be subjected to the severest laboratory tests of the student of Jesus Christ, for "the world is the field, and not until the principles and teachings of Christ have been applied to the great world problems have we the right to say they are chimerical or impractical.

The question is frequently asked, Of what use is a diploma from any college or university to any one who has completed a course in it? We are thus moved to consider the result of completing a course in the school of Christ, but a very few words will have to suffice here, for our space is almost filled. It is written that "he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow," but the happy effect of learning of Christ is we find rest to our souls. The learning that causes doubts and fears, that fills the soul with a spirit of unrest and gives to the mind no peace is not to be desired, for there can be no rest to the soul until peace of mind has been secured. This is one of the greatest drawing powers in the school of Christ, that knowledge of him brings peace of mind; knowledge of him makes for freedom and knowledge of him gives the one thing all men seek after—LIFE. These things can not be found nor can they be learned or acquired in any other school than the School of Christ.

From the Editor's View-Point

Common Sense in Politics

There are two phases of the life of a man that have ever been guided and controlled almost as much by prejudice and inheritance as by reason and common sense; they are the religious and political phases of life. Any one who has been an observer of men can not help but have noticed how these phases of life have been appealed to by either political or religious demagogues. One must have noticed too that a very large percentage of the people make no pretense to being controlled by any other motives; reason and common sense make no appeal to them. They will contend for their own prejudices and inherited beliefs in the face of overwhelming reasonable and common sense ideas in opposition to their position. Newspapers and newspaper editors have been suposed to support the party or the candidate representing their lifelong political affiliations whether they are justified by reason for doing so or not. An independent newspaper or neutral political editor is an exceedingly rare commodity in this age of the world, but the supply is increasing.

More than sixty years ago a magazine was founded in New York that was to be an independent champion of certain principles of religion and politics, and it called to its support as editors and contributors a number of the most able religious and political leaders of the day; and The Independent became a magazine of unusual power for good. As a reader of The Independent for nearly a quarter of a century the writer has observed that while it has represented independence of thought in a very general way it has usually given its support to one poliitcal party, though not to all the candidates or officeholders of that party.

Now a notable change has occurred in its policy or in its support, and in the last issue it lays all prejudice aside and advises its readers to give their support in the November elections to congressional candidates that represent the present administration, other things being equal. This is a breaking away from the political "faith of the fathers," but it seems the commonsense thing to do.

A Censored Press

At the breaking out of the war between Germany and the United States there was a great deal of criticism offered to the proposed idea that the American press should be limited in what it could rightfully say concerning America's part in the conflict. A great cry was raised up in defense of a free and untrammeled press and of free speech in defense of one's individual beliefs; but it was not long until most of the American people were made to realize that, however lenient the American government had been toward those who attacked its principles and its practices in times of peace, in time of war the opinion or the belief of the individual must be subordinated to the belief and the action of the whole, and only a few arrests were necessary to convince the most rabid champion of free speech and a free press that there are certain rightful limitations even to this cause of freedom.

However it should not be necessary for the government to suppress an unpatriotic or seditious publication. There should be enough loyal public sentiment in the country that the simple withdrawal of its support would be a sufficient check upon any unrighteous or rabid sheet that might be published. Of course America is so large and there have been so many rabid thinkers. (?) developed during the last twenty-five years that they are able to give a pretty good support of their own to any publication that represents their principles of dissatisfaction and hatred.

But there is a censorship of the press that is nothing more than that of public opinion that often exercises a most wholesome influence, and that keeps from the papers many things that are an offense to the finer tastes and sensibilities of man. Men often say bitter and vulgar things about the leaders of their country that never get into print for the very wholesome reason suggested by an English writer of note who said, "What we say of the House of Commons often cannot even be printed." Of course it cannot. The public is not yet ready to surrender appreciation of the better things of life to the vulgarity of those whose chief virtues seem best expressed in the defaming of the characters of others. What is often said cannot even be printed because the public has not fallen to a level sufficeintly low to accept without rebuke s publication.

The Outspoken Man

How often have we observed men who have delighted in developing a reputation for being outspoken and candid! They have made their boasts that there is never any doubt as to where they stand and as to what they think in regard to the matter. And in season and out of season they press their views upon ears that may be willing or unwilling, it makes little difference which.

Is this a virtue? In the eyes of many it is, but in the eyes of others it is anything else than a virtue. Not that one would approve of deceit and sham in life, but there are many occasions when it is not necessary either to affirm or deny a principle or statement expressed or a position assumed. And quietness is not necessarily approval; sometimes it is only the golden quality of the speech that is silver.

While frankness is an admirable human quality there is that which passes for frankness which is rather rudeness. The manager of a large lyceum bureau whom the writer has known for a number of years puts it thus: "To be outspoken and candid is nine times out of ten only another name for being rude and unfeeling." With this statement we must very largely agree. While it is a weakness on the part of a man to be without opinions or to be unable to give expression to them, it is also an annoyance to be a man of nothing but opinions or a man who is anxious to have everyone else know what his opinions are.

There are times when candor and frankness require one to speak out even though it may hurt just a little, but it is to be observed that the man who suppresses or keeps to himself many of his opinions is the man with the most friends, and he is not necessarily a deceiver either. He is only considerate of the feelings of others.

Making Friends

Most people want friends, but only a few have as many friends as they want. One's motives for securing and keeping friends are not always the highest, but it is an honor not only to have many friends but to be counted a friend to many.

Few people have sought, by what may be called artificial methods, the friendship of the many as have the professional politicians, but few people have obtained more friends than men who have been statsemen rather than politicians and who unconsciously to themelves have won the admiration and the friendship of multitudes by their devotion to the cause of the people, and championing the things that were necessary to their own comfort good and for the welfare of the whole of society.

It is not difficult for one in times of prosperity or affluence to be entirely surrounded by friends of a sort; but such are more often sycophants than real friends. So long as one is in a position to hand out favors it is easy to secure and to hold a large following, but followers are not always friends. There were those who followed Jesus for the loaves and fishes and not because they were his friends or because the principles of his teachings appealed to them.

President Hadley of Yale has expressed the true principle of friendship in his statement: "He who shows sympathy for the weak and courtesy to all men finds himself surrounded by those who are constant in adversity as well as in prosperity." And these are the only kind of friends worth having after all. The man who is friendly in prosperity alone is not worthy the name of friend. "A friend in need is a friend in deed," is a truism which we cannot get away, nor should we want to do so. It is to be observed that one who secures and holds the largest number of friends is one who does not seek to make friends of the service they render him, but who seeks to serve and in this serving secures the friends as a fruit of his s

"Is the Doctrine of an Omnipotent and Loving God Who Is Interested in the Affairs of Men, Consistent With the Plain Facts of the Visible World Today?"

BY L. S. BAUMAN

You will notice that our subject is quoted—quoted from a ...e of different persons whom we have heard ask it in the last ...months. "Is there really an all-powerful and loving Father ...ing above this world, taking interest in the affairs of men? If ..., why does he permit all this present world-agony? And many a skeptic in this world thinks it his turn to hurl the sneer of Elijah: "Is your God asleep? or has he gone on a journey?" As Christians, we must meet the sneer and declare the eternal righteousness of our mighty God.

We happen to have the inspired story of God's dealings with nations in the past, and few men have questioned the justice of those dealings.. Time and time again did Jehovah permit national disasters to fall where there was national transgression. Time and time again did he bring down the sword upon the land of his own chosen people; and, when at last "there was no remedy," he gave Israel over into the hands of the Assyrian, and Judah to Nebuchadnezzar. "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." Prov. 14: 34. And as we meditate upon the whys and wherefores of the present world-tragedy, there are some things we need to call to remembrance.

Russia writhes in agony. But need we ask why? We hardly mention the name when there rises in our minds her oppression of the Finns and her own ancient people, the Poles. Immediately we recall the damnable outrages she has permitted to be perpetrated upon the innocent children of Abraham—robbing, torturing and butchering them in cold blood for the pleasure it seemed to afford. And can we forget the Stundists being banished to Siberia for the simple crime of loving Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth?

True, the heavens appear as brass over Belgium. But have ...e so quickly forgotten? A member of our house of representa...ves said in a speech in congress last December, "Today we are ...gaged in a gigantic struggle to avenge the wrongs of Belgium" ...d those wrongs ought to be avenged. But only a few years ...o the Belgians were down in East Africa, under their vicious old ...ing Leopold, cutting off the hands of little children because their ...rents did not bring in the raw rubber fast enough to suit the ...eed of the Belgian king." One native was compelled to do the ma...k of four men, and their protests were met with the cutting ... of hands and feet, the putting out of eyes the destruction of ...r villages, the violation of their women, and the carrying away ... their men in chains! Who can look upon Belgium today and ... to remember that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he ... reap?"

True, God's ears may seem to be deaf to France as she ap...s to him now for protection from the "German beast." But ... we forgotten that for generations France has led the crusade ...nfidelity against revealed religion? So late as nine years ... it was enunciated by the Prime Minister to the French Parlia..., boasted by a leader of the French Tribune, and focused by ...Director of Public Elementary Teaching, that the ideal of ...ce was "the State without God, the school without God, the ...cipality without God, science and morality without God."

...rue, Austrian starves, and her prayers to God for food seem ... But lest we forget, let us remember that in few countries ... the Jews suffered as they have in Austria for the simple ...e" of being born a Jew.

...erily, Germany is bleeding white, and her people starve and ... in spite of their loudly-proclaimed alliance with Jehovah ...f. But the most accursed thing in the sight of God in the ...today was born in the German mind—the "Higher Criticism" ...epudiates the Word of God, defames the virgin-born Son ..., and gnaws and tears at the vitals of the Christian faith, ...ocritically "in his name" Listen to this quotation from a ... professor: "One mighty issue is secured. Germany is ...d from the loathsome burden of the past, the cancer of ...ies (Christianity)." We might multiply such statements ... brains almost endlessly. The "Higher Criticism" ... a thousand fold worse than the infidelity of France ...s palmiest days. The French wolf wore its own skin in its attacks. The German beast comes clothed in the skin of the sheep.

And England! Why seems Omnipotence unheeding of her prayers for the past four awful years? Did not one of her great poets cry: "Lest we forget? Lest we forget?" Have we forgotten that four hundred millions of people have suffered the horrors of hell for a century past because of the curse of opium? Have we forgotten that when China arose to break her shackles and save her sons, that England, for gain, forced her Indian opium back upon China at the cannon's mouth? And when this war is over think you that England will have a dollar left that she gained in all her infamous opium traffic?

And America, our own beloved land! Need we name national sins that mount up to heaven today? Our great Lincoln one time asked: "What if for every drop of blood drawn from the slave by the lash, God should take a bucketful by the sword?" And then it came! May we not ask today, "What if, for every African soul that is hurled into eternity damned by American rum, God shall hurl by the sword a hundred souls into eternity to answer for our crime?" Our great President called for a day of prayer and penitence. Our Congress called for the same. Did we really go down upon our knees in penitence before God and confess our national sins? Have we yet through penitence and prayer and confession even touched Omnipotence?

If the nations today seem to pray in vain to Omnipotence, before we accuse God of forgetting his world, let us remember! "Son, remember!" The punishments of God are terrible. But it would be more terrible if God were to wink at sin. Really, what sort of a world would it soon become were it not for the fact that men and nations still have some fear of a just God to whom they must certainly give an account for the deeds done in the body?

Though it may be, as we have set forth, that Jehovah "hath a controversy with the nations," yet we are not at all persuaded that the nations have really come to their day of judgment. May it not be true that the true solution of the present world agony is to be found in the fact that man has been boasting more and more his independence of God; and, declaring himself to be his own Savior, God has simply withdrawn from the field temporarily, and is letting man come to see that he was created to be a fellow worker with God, and apart from him he must fail. More deadly than war or famine is this deadly "goodness germ" that creeps into the hearts of unregenerate men, causing them to stand independent of God in self-deification. Listen to this little poem which was going the rounds of newspaperdom just before the war:

"We men of earth here have the stuff
Of Paradise—we have enough!
We need no other thing to build
The stairs into the unfulfilled—
No other ivory for the doors—
No other marble for the floors—
No other cedar for the beam
And dome of man's immortal dream.
Here on the paths of every day—
Here on the common human way
Is all the stuff the gods would take
To build a heaven, to mold and make
New edens. Ours the stuff sublime
To build eternity in time!"

What defiance! No need of God! No need of "a city whose builder and maker is God!" No need of looking to the heaven for a New Jerusalem to come down! We have all the stuff right here! Well, maybe God is just letting proud man take his ivory, his marble, his cedar and all his other stuff, and build New Edens and his little "Eternity in time!" And will man never learn his lesson even in the school of experience? It sometimes looks that way.

The present world strife is the work of unregenerate human nature. It originated in human nature, and it is being carried on in human nature. Human nature is striving apart from God to establish the thing it believes to be good, and a sorry spectacle it is making of itself. The more optimistic men are about the natural order of things, and the more they are impressed with their own moral achievements, the less they feel the need of the saving grace of God. They come to consider God as an indulgent easygoing being, who looks on with approval while men fulfil their own vocation. Unless God shall permit himself to become practically a nonenity in the minds of men, though all the time "in him they live and move and have their being" Acts 17:28, he must thus let man try out the scheme of self-salvation for the human race, no matter how dire the results may be. The Le Matin, the leading French newspaper, well said: "France is under a cloud (unbelief) for the present, but when the cloud has rolled away, France will turn back to God.". And never would the race turn back to God, if, when they are denying him, refusing obedience to his commandments, and walking after their own lusts, he would indulge them, and use his omnipotence to save them from the penalty of their sins. Yes, when man, with his tower of Babel, reaching out after heaven, but falling short, sees his little tower go down in confusion and wreckage, perhaps then he will "turn back to God." In the meantime, it is not for us puny, short-sighted men of earth to accuse the All-wise of forsaking his world, or not acting in accord with moral duty. God may appear silent now. But, when unregenerate man has given his earth-stuff a thorough trial, and comes to a full end of himself, "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence." Psalm 50:3.

The Education that Made the "Hun"

BY L. L. GARBER

"The Hun" is an epithet applied to the modern German, suggestive of the historic Hun, a "gigantic bully who held in his hands powers unequalled in the world for ravage and spoliation," and who "involved in promiscuous massacre the priest at the altar and the infant in arms." Hunism is the great outstanding fact of the modern world. It is a "destruction that wasteth at noonday," and a "terror by night," painted in mysterious symbols of lurid death and funereal trappings across the visions of our dream. But Hunism is more than a figment of the imagination; it is a dread reality —a reality and a result due to definite and ascertainable causes. These causes, we, upon whose minds this sinister word is stamped even as it was ineffaceably stamped upon the tablets of the brains of Europe's children fourteen hundred years ago, should ponder and understand.

What is Hunism? Hunism is a combination of high intellectual efficiency and of thorough going brutality, due to a vicious education inspired by the passion for achievement and lust of power.

Hunism has thus, two large elements which should be clearly discriminated. It is the first, the high intellectual efficiency, expressing itself in great mentality and highly organized material form that made Germany great in the modern world. This drew to her universities students from all parts of the earth and placed their graduates in important places in most of our great institutions. This made the phrase, "Made in Germany," familiar wherever the steamship, the railway and the parcel post penetrated and wherever commerce plied her trade. This "intellectual efficiency" was direct, and thorough-going. It stripped off the husk of tradition, broke up the cake of custom, proscribed precedent, cut through the entanglement of red tape and reached its goal with a speed and certainty that commanded respect and compelled imitation. Whatever was needed to promote German material welfare, it sought with open-eyed intelligence and adopted with whole-hearted purpose. Every resource of modern invention and discovery, every application of science and the scientific method, and every adaptation of intelligence to the solution of industrial, transportational and social problems was utilized to make Germany a great, contented and powerful state. How well this effort succeeded let six or more great nations and the billions of men and women who with undaunted heroism and their combined resources have contended against for four long years with varying success and failure, answer. In the effective and thoroughgoing application of trained intelligence to the problems of material life, Germany has been and is now the leader of the world; and her influence will still be potent when the record of the great war with its collossal achievement and colossal brutalities is spread upon the pages of history.

The second element of Hunism, an unfeeling brutality, associated with a certain moral deadness and slavish loyalty to leadership, is due to a systematic elementary and military education splendidly arranged to produce just such results. While the German higher schools are arranged to educate the few leaders only, the folk (elementary) schools are planned to produce docile, well-trained, brow-beaten, Kaiser-serving followers. These schools aim to create a kind of intellectual slavery. Pupils are not supposed to think, to consult libraries and sources and to arrive at independent conclusions. They are herded in large classes in which individual attention is as impossible as it is unwished for. The teacher of the folk school is a government servant, who can be removed only by the government and a drill master who maintains military discipline, striving not to educate, to develop free personality, but to subjugate and subdue, corporal punishment being a frequent means. He lectures, requiring pupils to repeat what he gives, emphasizing mere memory work to a degree astonishing to American educators. To the pupil thinking is unnecessary and dangerous.

The secondary school is primarily a military machine run by the state to prepare officers and leaders. In them, the public has no rights, and only in exceptional cases may a parent visit them. The teacher is a state official to whom deference is paid by both pupil and parent and criticism of the schools is unthought of.

With such methods and school atmosphere, the subjects most useful for developing puppets and slavish adherents are history and religion. These the Germans utilize in the folk school. The history is wholly German, a glorification of German success and such a perverted history of the aims and purposes of other countries as will best serve the purposes and aims of the German state. The teaching of religion is a formal affair in both school and church and little attempt is made to develop sentiments and right feeling, the purpose being to inculcate habits of subordination and obedience. Though Germany emphasizes the teaching of religion more than any other nation, so little has religion been related to character and conduct, that she has been considered the most immoral of European peoples. More than half a century ago Horace Mann was astonished at the prevalence of vice in Germany. Here as elsewhere, autocracy has secured a kind of contentment among its people by a favorite ruse: it has endeavored to make up for the lack of political freedom by lax regulations with respect to gambling, drunkenness and other forms of vice and immorality, thus failing to moralize as well as failing to humanize and make free the minds of its citizens.

Such are the main features of the education that produced the "Hun;" the greatest menace to civilization; an illuminating example of both what to do and what not to do. A nation is no greater, no stronger, no better, than the sum of its educational-religious forces. The world is amazed that millions of men should be so possessed in their souls with the love of their own slavery that they are willing to die to impose that slavery upon all men. The explanation lies in the slavery of habit, buttressed and supported by false ideals and brutalized sentiments. If we are to be a great, democratic, Christian people, who love "justice and mercy," and who, in the meekness that shall inherit the earth and with the tender compassion of the Prince of Peace, do "the works of him that sent us," let us be advised and warned.

The Christian College

BY W. D. FURRY, PH.D.

What problems face the Church of God today! The war dogs of almost the whole earth have been loosed. Innumerable forces are in league with Satan to demoralize and demonize the world. Only a frivolous mind can easily be optimistic today. Whoever during the past four years has not felt a severe strain upon his faith has not taken his faith with sufficient seriousness to attempt its application to world conditions. Ours is a world all whose cultural and moral achievements seem to have been overthrown in a day and are wholly impotent to restore and reassert themselves. To make the world both safe and sane again is indeed a gigantic undertaking. Who shall undertake the task? Who is sufficient for these things?

It is significant to note that in the midst of conditions quite like those of today the church was born, and lifting the old gates from their hinges turned the course of history into channels of its own making. Never since the beginning of the church has it been more important that men should learn this lesson than now. Human ideals and human resources have failed. The world has learned that a nation's life as well as an individuals does not consist in material abundance.

The ultimate principle of the world's progress and security is found in the revelation made in Jesus Christ. The enthronement of the Christian ideal, the exaltation of the law of life proposed by him offers itself as the only solution of the terrible problems of these days. The world's life must be builded on Jesus Christ or the future will be no safer than the present. The world of tomorrow will be safer and saner than the world of today only as our Christian forces are multiplied and strengthened. In the final analysis Germany went astray because her educational ideals were unChristian.

The world-war is the legitimate and logical outcome of the peace enjoyed for a half century. We are persuaded now as never before that ther is neither safety nor sanity in military power or material achievements. Spiritual values are to be coveted for the nation rather than industrial organization or technical accomplishments. The soul of the nation is nobler than its wealth. The modern world has more goods than its has heart to use them aright. The worth of a nation can not be expressed in terms of wealth or trade balances. American democracy was fast lapsing into materialism. To prevent this lapse is the immediate and urgent task of the church. To accomplish this end means that a generation must be trained to interpret life in Christian terms and to administer the divine riches in Christ to the needs of the world.

Here precisely is the task of the Christian College. There is today no other way by which the spiritual aspects of life can receive such reinforcement as in the hearts of the youth of our Christian College. The world of tomorrow will be directed by men and women of liberal education, of large vision, of power and initiative. But to enlarge a man's power without supplying him with the Christain motive is to make him a menace rather than a blessing. To train a leadership for the new world after the Christian ideal is the only hope of a better world tomorrow.

However worthy the appeals that have been made for money since the beginning of the war I make bold to urge that no appeal has come to the church replete with greater possibilities for good to the generation yet unborn than the appeal of the past twelve months for Permanent Endowment for Ashland College. The most strategic point of attack both in the making of a better world and a larger church where plastic youth with all its high hopes is crystallizing into character where young men and women with their life yet unfashioned under the inspiration of Christian teaching catch the vision of the conquering Master; and where they develop a faith as profound as life itself and consecrate themselves anew and with more reasoned faith to the church under whose influence and liberality they have received their training. Brethren of all the Districts awake! Behave like men. The cause is urgent and worthy. The opportunity is imperative. The future of the Brotherhood—the destiny of the nations waits upon your response. The future of a redeemed humanity depends upon your fidelity.

Government Asks Churches' Aid in Community Organization

BY REV. EDMUND DE S. BRUNNER

The Council of National Defense is turning to the church in a new way, and in behalf of the nation they are calling upon the church to throw its influence and enthusiasm into the war work of each community, and into the organization of an effective community Council of Defense.

The Council of National Defense in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Education, and other agencies, is extending the National Defense organization into the smallest communities, through the establishment of Community Councils of Defense. The school district has been suggested as the unit of organization, and the school house as the meeting place where all can gather on a plane of equality. This school district organization would be on a union basis, and would enable all the different war appeals to come from a single central organization. The Community Council is not to be a new organization, but rather a gathering together of the existing organizations for coordinated war work. As the establishment of Community Councils has been placed entirely in the hands of State Councils of Defense and varies considerably in the several states, it is urged that you communicate with your appropriate State or County Council of Defense for fuller information before taking any action. By this means alone can confusion be avoided.

President Wilson says the Community Council "will weld the nation together as no nation of great size has ever been welded before. It will build up from the bottom an understanding and sympathy and unity of purpose and effort which will no doubt have an immediate and decisive effect upon our great undertaking."

The church is an integral part of every community, and especially in the open country holds a place of strategic importance. The church needs to take part in this work, and, more, it needs to place its resources and its leadership at the disposal of the community. In times like these, no minister will hold back. and no minister will be tempted to use such an opportunity for the benefit of his own organization. Such machinery in the smallest community once set up will never be lost. It will furnish an avenue of approach in each rural community to the great problem of reconstruction which we will face after the war.

"The Baby Who Never Had Smiled"

They called him the Baby Who Never Had Smiled. The lady doctor found him in one of the factory dispensaries to which her Red Cross automobile climbed twice a week, in a smoky manufacturing village near the American front in France, so near that the fire from the guns flashed on the sky at night and on still days when the fighting was heavy the boom boom itself could be plainly heard.

At noon the women from the factory brought in the babies for the lady doctor to see—and for some babies she gave medicine and for others advice and still others she took in her big car back to the big barracks, once a military school, now marked with huge red crosses in the slate of their roofs to show strolling German aviators that they were a hospital.

"But your baby does not look very well," she said gently in correct American French to one woman who brought forward a year-old mite.

"No, madame," said the woman shyly. "He has never been well. First his eyes have been sore,—then he has a rash—and I can not take much care of him. He is always sick—and he is not like my other children—madame, he never has smiled."

Then the Change Began

So the lady doctor took him to the hospital and had him bathed and put to sleep in a crib in one of the long white washed rooms of the barracks. He spent weeks there, growing a little less pale each day and looking wisely at the nurses who brought his food and gave him his bath. His two dozen compatriots in the ward weren't a very happy looking lot—most of them, too, had come from the little villages of the frontier where war bore heavily on the mother and children whom a poilu father had to leave behind—but as their checks grew plumper and pinker they learned to gurgle with joy at the sight of an approaching milk-bottle and to catch the nurse's finger gleefully.

"Never you mind," she would say, shaking that same finger at him, "we'll make a real baby out of you yet in spite of yourself." But he would only look at her like a wise little old man.

Other babies in the ward had names and when the night nurse came on she would say:

Has Georgette been good today and eaten all her meals properly?" or "I think Guillaume can go back to his mother next week, don't you?" But though he had a card at the head of his bed with a name on it, no one ever used it. The other doctors would say, "How about that baby of yours that never has smiled?" Has he laughed yet?" And the nurse wuld answer, "Not yet, but just you wait till he gets eight ounces fatter and see if he doesn't."

A Mother's Happiness

Parents come to visit on Sunday, and almost every week his mother went through the complicated formalities of even a short journey in the war zone and came toiling up the hill to the hospital. She rejoiced in the added ounces, in the vigorous fashion in which he could kick, in approaching teeth and other technical details. She was a tired woman in black, but her face would light up as she sat for hours beside his crib, prattling to him about his father in the army, his uncle who had fallen at Verdun (just over yonder she would show the nurse pointing across the hills out the window) and about his older brothers and sisters at home. But one day a glorified vision of the mother flew toward the nurse when she came to announce that visiting time was over—there were tears of happiness in her eyes—and she pointed incoherently to the crib where the Baby Who Had Never Smiled was belying his name with a broad infantile chuckle that showed unexpected dimples in his plump cheeks and puckered his mouth invitingly.

"See," said the mother, "only see! You of the American Red Cross have made my baby smile!"

A Labor-Sunday Message to the Churches of America from the Secretary of War

The needs for production for the creation of war necessities are forcing an industrial expansion upon the country which must be accomplished in as many weeks sometimes as years would be required under ordinary circumstances.

Under such circumstances there is a very great responsibility both upon the government and upon the people of the communities in which these war industries are developed, that there shall be no lowering of the standards which have been acquired so laboriously through years past, but that rather those ideals toward which we have been working shall be conformed to as promptly as possible. Our thinking for the safeguarding of industrial workers against unnecessary hazards ought to act under as great stimulation as does our thinking in regard to creating new and great industrial processes.

There is no point at which such thought ought to be applied more carefully than in regard to the responsibilities which attach to the greatly increased number of industrial processes by women who are thus rendering their war service.

The government is doing what it can in regard to all these matters, but no amount of supervisory work can take the place of a genuine community interest in such problems. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will be making a very real contribution if it can give its emphasis to the responsibilities which rest upon individuals and communities in regard to vital matters of this sort.

Statement to the Public

Complaints have reached me from time to time of overcrowded trains and unsatisfactory conditions prevailing in some sections of the country in passenger train service. I feel certain that there are grounds for some of these complaints, but I am sure the public will be interested to know that the reasons are twofold:

First, the great number of troops now being handled over the various railroads between the homes and the cantonments, between the different cantonments and then to the seaboard, is making extraordinary demands upon the passenger car and sleeping car equipment of the country. This has caused a scarcity of day coaches and sleeping cars which it is impossible to remedy immediately.

Secondly, the increased demands upon track and terminal facilities for the transportation of the tremendous amounts of coal, food supplies, raw materials, and other things required for military and naval operations, as well as for the support of the civil population of the country, force the largest possible curtailment of passenger train service. The movements of troops and war materials are, of course, of paramount importance and must be given at all times the right of way.

It was hoped that the increase in passenger rates recently made would have the wholesome effect of reducing unnecessary passenger traffic throughout the country. The smaller the number of passengers who travel, the greater the number of locomotives and cars and the larger the amount of track and terminal facilities that will be freed for essential troop and war material movements. Engineers, firemen and other skilled laborers will also be released for service on troop and necessary freight trains.

Among the many patriotic duties of the American public at this time is the duty to refrain from traveling unnecessarily. Every man, woman and child who can avoid using passenger trains at this time should do so. I earnestly hope that they will do so. Not only will they liberate essential transportation facilities which are necessary for war purposes, but they will save money which they can invest in Liberty Bonds and thereby help themselves as well as their country; and the fewer who travel, the more ample the passenger train service will be.

I may add that consistently with the paramount demands of the war, every possible effort is being made by the Railroad Administration to supply the largest possible amount of comfortable and prompt passenger train service.

W. G. McADOO,
Director General of Railroads.

It Isn't Your Town; It's You

If you want to live in the kind of a town
Like the kind of a town you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip,
And start on a long, long hike.
You'll only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing that's really new,
It's a knock to yourself when you knock your town
It isn't your town—it's you.

Real towns are not made by men afraid
Lest somebody else gets ahead.
When everybody works and nobody shirks
You can raise a town from the dead.
And if while you make your personal stake
Your neighbors can make one, too,
Your town will be what you want to see
It isn't the town, it's you.—Ex.

Editorial Paragraphs

Millions of human beings starving in Western Asia. Men, women and children are dying daily by the hundreds through massacre, deportation, disease and starvation.

Armenia, the first nation to embrace Christianity as national religion. The Armenian church has had 137 Pontiffs in unbroken succession since 309 at Etchmiadzin, the great monastery in Russian Armenia.

Tragic situation in Western Asia. Personal testimonies received from American Ambassadors, Consuls, teachers, physicians and missionaries recently returned from Turkey. All tell the same horrible story of destruction, starvation and death.

1,000,000 Armenians and Syrians have perished in the last two years from massacre, starvation and disease, the result of the most barbarous deportation ever enacted in the history of the world.

The Sunday School

A Budget of Suggestions

The Autumn months are just ahead of us, and they are the choicest season for Sunday school work. With the return of many of the workers every one should be made to hear with increasing emphasis "To the work."

Promotion and Enlistment Day

Early in September, if not before, efficient officers of the up-to-date school begin to plan definitely for the reclassification of their students. This involves Promotion Day which is generally but not uniformly observed. But with the larger use of the graded lessons an increasingly large number of schools have come to use the last Sunday of September so that the students promoted to new classes can begin the studies of the new quarter. Where intensive work has been done examinations may be held. If these are not deeemed advisable there may be a review of memory work. If carefully planned for this may be presented before the entire school immediately preceding the presentation of the promotion certificates. Such a plan serves to make both the children and parents feel that the work is worth-while.

At the suggestion of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations most of the churches are urging a Teacher Training Drive during September. The underlying purpose is to place the urgent necessity of better Bible teaching on the conscience of the people and to inspire them with an abiding desire to improve the teaching of the Bible in the church school. Once these convictions have come to hold sovereign place in the thought of the workers many of them will have a mind to pursue a course in teacher training. Anticipating such results the following plan may be adopted:

1. On the third or fourth Sunday of September let the pastor preach on "The Teaching Ministry of the Church," setting forth the truth scripturally and historically, showing the advantages practically and making an appeal for the consecration of native teaching ability.

2. Follow up every prospective recruit with a personal interview. In a heart-to-heart talk show the interested individual of promise why he should develop his teaching talents and not let them atrophy through the want of use. Make him feel that he is as definitely called to teach as the minister was called to preach and that the "woe of necessity" rests upon both. Then assure him that if God calls one to teach he also calls him to prepare to teach.

3. Enroll these carefully selected persons as rapidly as possible, encouraging them to make an open Enlistment on Promotion Day. This public decision will burn the bridges behind them and serve as an incentive to cause others to enlist.

4. The class membership having been determined provide the members with the best teacher at your command and assign them to the most suitable quarters. Encourage them to begin with the first year's work of the new course. Since Part I of our book is not completed you may begin with Part II, entitled "The Educative Process in Religion" and written by Dr. L. L. Garber, formerly head of the Department of Education in Ashland College. You will be delighted with this excellent production from one of our own men. It is now in the press and may be ordered from the undersigned.

Rally Day

The time for the observance of Rally Day varies considerably. Some schools observe it with Promotion Day on the last Sunday of September, but others have found that it is better to have the rally day service after the new classes have been formed. For this reason the first Sunday of October is being more generally observed as Rally Day. We should commend a simultaneous observance on the part of our schools, as far as possible, and suggest the first Sunday in October as Rally Day Sunday. For some years now Editor A. D. Gnagey has felt that Brethren schools should have a program provided by our own publishers and this year he has decided to publish one. It will be ready for distribution early in September, and will be arranged so as to meet the needs of Brethren schools. We believe that this new departure represents a step in the right direction, and beg to suggest that the proposed program merits your careful consideration and general use by our schools. Brother Gnagey will be glad to supply further information.

Making Rally Day Worth While

BY W. H. BEACHLER

THERE are those who insist that Rally Day cannot be made worth while, because it is conducive to no practical and lasting results in the school, and should indeed be dropped from the list of annual events of the School. It is urged that if the local school would constantly hold itself to high standards of efficiency and service such a thing as a Rally Day would be unnecessary. It is also urged that the average Sunday School rally is little more than a spasm or a momentary fit of enthusiasm which speedily dissipates into thin air and nothingness, in reality leaving the school in worse condition after the rally than before.

Now I am not going to say that there has been and is no warrant for these criticisms against Rally Day. There is little doubt Rally Day has been much abused in the past and has in some instances been an actual source of harm. However, I am not yet willing because of these criticisms, be they ever so just, to pronounce Rally Day a failure. For I must believe that when a real, serious effort is put forth to make the annual rally worth while it is fruitful of much good.

In a general way I will say that to my own way of thinking the most worth while Rally in a local school is when it is a part of a simultaneous movement among all of the schools in a city or community. I have seen this tried out and am a firm believer in the idea. I point out only one of several advantages gained through this plan, viz., that it brings the cause of Sunday school to the attention of a community with a far greater impact than can possibly be gained when the schools rally independent of each other.

But to confine our thought to the local school, a rally is worth while when it has accomplished its purpose. And I believe we are agreed that that purpose is the enlistment of recruits to the school, to the end that they shall be permanently held in the school. I have no more faith in a rally which does not hold its recruits than has the very sharpest critic of Rally Day. I am saying nothing as to the source from which these recruits must come. It is apparent they must come from everywhere—except from other Sunday schools. And so, holding to the thought that the primary purpose of Rally Day is to enlist and to hold recruits in the school I want to point out a few things which will help toward this end, thus making the rally worth while.

First, the school must want the rally. No school ever had a great rally that did not want it. Unless your school is eager for conquest and enlistment you will have no real rally. A desire, an enthusiasm for rallying and enlistment must be created first.

Second, the school must plan thoroughly and wisely beforehand to "go over the top." It is too late to plan when the moment has come for action. Set a goal big enough to make your pessimists faint; and then swing as nearly as possible every member of the school into action.

Third, all of your plans have aimed primarily up to this time to get the recruits out. And assuming that you have succeeded in getting all kinds into the school for the big day, what are you going to do with them? What sort of an impression are you going to make? Remember, very, very much depends on the impression you make that day. I can only say, everything and everybody must be at their very best that day. Music, superintendent, teachers and all—at their very best. If the rally is to be a representation then use some time studying the lesson; if it is to be a misrepresentation then do not study the lesson.

Fourth, after the rally what? Unless the leadership of the school were willing before hand that the rally shall bring them new responsibilities and work they should have no rally. But assuming that you wanted more work, then you saw to it before the rally that plans were carefully worked out to conserve and follow up. Otherwise what use to have a rally? After some experience I must say it is hard to prepare for a real rally; but it is far more difficult to conserve the results of that rally.

Briefly, to make a rally worth while requires careful planning, prayer, and a vast amount of hard work. Unless you really mean business don't bluff at having a rally.

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK. In keeping with the time-honored custom of the Publishing House to drop an issue of the Evangelist at the time of the meeting of the General Conference no paper will be issued next week. When this number reaches our readers all the editors and principal writers for the paper as well as the leaders of the work of the church in other lines will be expected to be in attendance at the Conference at Winona Lake. If it is possible to do so we will endeavor to run "Notes of the Conference" in the next number of the Evangelist.

This week we conclude the report of the Bible and Church conference recently held in Southern California. That this was a notable gathering for the churches of this conference district is easily seen, and that the experiences of the last two years has demonstrated the helpfulness of such conferences is indicated by the determination of the California Brethren to hold a similar conference at the same place, Long Beach, next year.

It will be observed that there is no Four-Year Program Page this week. We are not able to announce at this time what arrangements will be made for the continuation of this page, but we believe it has been one of the most helpful pages of the paper during the past year, and we hope to see it or something to take its place continued another year.

This week our readers are favored with one of L. S. Bauman's characteristically vigorous contributions. These are days that call for vigorous thinking and many of our brethren have been giving their minds to vital things the past year though a goodly number of them have not been as free as we would like to have seen them in passing their thoughts on to others through the columns of the Evangelist. There is always room for virile contributions to its pages.

Brother M. E. Horner has been appointed church correspondent by the Goshen, Indiana church and favors our readers with his first report this week. The work at Goshen is moving along nicely as usual and the faithful workers are expecting to accomplish yet greater things for God.

The letter from Miss Strode of Lost Creek was intended for last week's paper, but it reached us just one day too late to find its way into the paper. We can no longer hold the columns of the paper open as long as we formerly did and hope to get the paper out on time. The increased size of the subscrition list makes this impossible.

The business manager of the Brethren Publishing Company asks the privilege of publishing his annual report of the business of the company in the Evangelist this week. We do not remember that this has been done before, at least for many years, but since the church paper is now going into so many of the homes of Brethren we feel that they will be interested in the report of the business and will be glad to know that, regardless of the stress of the times and of many unfavorable conditions, the past year was the BEST year the Publishing House ever had, so far as we have any knowledge.

While it is a little too early to make definite announcements concerning our Sunday school publications for next year, yet Brother Gnagey will be on hand at the conference with information and plans that will show a marked advance over anything we have ever had before, and we would urge all Sunday school workers to see him at the Conference. He will gladly give a private interview to any one who wishes information bearing upon Sunday school lesson helps, upon which subject he is a past master.

Prof. L. L. Garber is not a frequent contributor to the pages of the Evangelist, but when he does write it is because he has thought seriously of the subject he wishes to present and has deep convictions upon the same. Any one who will read his contribution this week on "The Education that Made the Hun" can readily see that Brother Garber has a firm grasp upon the situation.

Around the Editor's Table

Worthy of His Hire

Not in a good many years has the laboring man been in the position where he could demand almost any compensation for his labor with a pretty good assurance of receiving it as at the present time. In fact we know that never before in the history of the world were such wages paid to laboring men and women as are being paid right now. However as the cost of practically all commodities used by mankind has advanced in proportion that is perhaps equal to or greater than that of labor it is possible that a man may not be able to purchase much more with a day's wages now than he could two years ago when his wages were considerably lower, yet another fact remains and always will remain, and that is that "the laborer is worthy of his hire" only when the labor he performs is worth a little more than the compensation he receieves for his labor. Unless there is some profit to the employer there is a loss, so the honest laborer is willing to earn just a little more for his employer than he does for himself, otherwise it will not be long until his opportunity to labor will have disappeared and he will have been the destroyer of his own job.

But while there has been such a tremendous advance in wages paid for physical and mechanical labor, the same can not be said of those lines of employment that are more of the mental kind. Office and professional men have not shared the advance in an equal proportion with the mechanic and the laborer. Especially is this true of the Christian ministry and of other lines of Christian employment. It is true that churches have generally increased the support they are giving to their pastors and some educational institutions have increased the salaries of their faculties, but it can hardly be said these increases are relatively proportionate to the advance that has been given to common labor or to any other kind of what is called secular employment. This is not the fault of any individual nor of any special class of individuals, but is rather the result of false social and business standards that place a higher value upon physical and commercial production than they do upon intellectual and spiritual production. Illustrative of this principle is a short item from the pen of Prof. Harry F. Ward that recently appeared in The Biblical Review upon the subject:

Preachers or Cloth?

The church is an employer, paying large numbers of preachers, janitors, office-workers in its general church boards, and mechanical workers in its printing and publishing establishments. In this capacity does it make, follow, or lower standards?

The janitor can and does bear witness in the wage-earning group concerning the effectiveness of the Christian teaching of the organization that hires him. The credit standing of a church determines the extent of its moral and spiritual authority with business men.

In its business raltions with its preachers the church as a whole cannot claim to have shown the world the standards of the Christian employer. Its financial realtions with the men in the pulpits have recently been vigorously described by one writer as an economic crime. It is a notorious fact that the average salaries of preachers are less than the average salaries of some sorts of skilled mechanics.

The church is limited here by the standards of wealth-producing nation which has never properly estimated or remunerated the services of those who increase the spiritual good of the community. But the church cannot escape responsibility for passively accepting this false standard of values.

A certain church numbers among its members some professors of theology whose salary is $2,500. It has also in its membership the superintendent of a cotton mill. His salary is $25,000. These facts reflect, not the judgment of the church, but the judgment of the community concerning the respective value of making preachers and making cotton cloth.

The above words of Professor Ward are deserving of the attention of all leaders in religious or Christian work. The church needs to be regarded in a different light by the men who control the business world. While we would not have the church conducted along the lines of the business of the world, and while we never expect Christian workers to receive any such compensation for their services as the business world gives to its successful employees, yet we feel that the discrepancy is too great and there needs to be made a readjustment of estimated values in regard to human services.

Using Our Pens For Christ

This was the topic for a recent Christian Endeavor Society meeting, and it was a very practical topic too; but as we looked over the notes and helps for the meeting in a leading religious paper we were impressed with the thought that most of the notes and comments were too narrow in their application, as they were confined almost wholly to the use of the pen in letter writing.

It is true that letter-writing has largely gone out of date and the brief post card has taken its place; but there are still some good letter-writers and there is a place for good letters almost any time. However the phase of the subject we would like to emphasize here is that of using the pen for Christ in a way that will reach a much wider circle than that which is covered in private correspondence.

It is universally understood that the great newspaper world and the world of magazines must be fed with the product of a great many pens, though a very large number of them cannot be said to be used for Christ. Some one must produce the articles and stories which fill the columns of these publications, and for this purpose men and women are hired and paid; but there is another class of publications that is hardly in a position to pay for the matter that fills all their pages, but must depend somewhat upon the free use of the pen by men and women who have messages they feel impelled to give out to the world without specific charges or without compensation, and that is the religious journals, especially the denominational Christian publications.

This is one of the hard tasks of the editor. It is not so difficult for him to fill the pages allotted to him. He knows what is necessary to fill these pages and he knows how to fill them, though the quality of the filling may not always be up to the standard, but the thing that does worry him is how to get others to supply the remaining pages of the paper with reports and contributions that will be both interesting and edifying. We know that it is a real task for many people to write for publication, but it is a worthwhile task and a character-making task that should really challenge the best there is in our pastors and other Christian workers.

The readers of a church paper become much more tired of reading the writings of the editor week after week, however formal or however exact they may be than they do of reading the contributions and reports that come from the men and women who are actively engaged in doing Christian service among the people who constitute the field of workers for the churches.

We feel that many pastors do not realize how great service they could render the cause of Christ by using their pens for him. They may not feel impressed with the necessity of writing a full page contribution, but five or six hundred words to convey the best part of a recent sermon would be a real service in the cause of the Master and a very large number of the readers of the Evangelist would greatly appreciate a more widely spread use of the pen for Christ.

Pastors may not realize it, but we are sure that many of their members would enjoy reading in their own chuch paper some of the things they had heard their pastor proclaim from the pulpit, and moreover it would leave a more lasting impression on their minds.

A Real Business Asset

Many pastors have lamented the limited circulation of their church paper among their membership and they have found it difficult to awaken a lively interest in the plans and work of the general church among them. They know this difficulty would be largely removed if they could have their membership as well informed about all the general interests of the church as they should be, but it is a problem as to how this information can be conveyed to them.

They have suggested from the pulpit many times (perhaps) that every family should read the church paper and they may have appointed some good sister to receive (?) the subscriptions of any who MAY care to subscribe for the church paper. But what has the pastor himself done to make the paper interesting to his own membership? How much has HE used his own pen for Christ? Has the average pastor come to realize that his membership is as eager to read the little bits of church news from their own church as they appear from time to time in the church paper as they are to see the item, "Mr. and Mrs. John Smith motored to Brown county last Sunday to spend the day with their married daughter, who with her husband, Frank Masters, is located on one of the finest farms in the county. Grandpa Smith is quite proud of his little namesake that had arrived in the Masters home since their last visit," in their local weekly paper?

There are more human interest stories about us than many of us realize until we have had our eyes opened to them. This is equally true of the work of the church. Such work is full of human interest and the pen that can be consecrated to the service of passing these bits of interesting church news along to others is doing a real service for Christ.

This appeal is to any member of the Brethren church as well as to the pastor, and if you will use your pens in this way it will be a real asset to the Brethren Publishing Company.

The Religious Press and the War

Because the religious papers of the country are not unanimous in giving the winning of the war the FIRST place in their consideration of the great problems that the human race must solve and because all editors and all contributors of the religious press are not militant souls, rabid in their declaraations of support of the Allies in all things pertaining to the winning of the war, the whole religious press of America is charged with being "shrinkers" if not "slackers" by one of their number that is distinctly militant in its tone and temper.

While practically every exchange that comes to our office stands firmly back of the American government in its part in the conflict and lends its support in every way to the things that may properly be the function of the church in times like these some of them may not measure up to the standard of their critic who would subordinate everything else, even the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ, to the winning of the war. The critic to which we refer is The Christian Register (Boston) and goes on to say:

"The best they can make of it is that it is the world's sorry way of settling great issues. Their timorous approach to the chronicle of battle, their temporizing with those who may fairly be called pacifists, their omission from their columns of the grim but glorious facts that are being achieved for their security, amaze us and distress us. They are failing ingloriously in their duty.

"Featuring Y. M. C. A. huts and printing the portraits of denominational representatives among Army and Navy chaplains, fellow editors, don't touch the heart of this war, and our duty in it. Not at all. The soldier is winning this victory first, not the man of the Red Triangle, nor yet he of the Holy Cross. The fighting man's is the honor and the glory and the spiritual significance. All that our ministries to him can accomplish—and it is no little thing—is to praise his nobleness, comfort, hearten, and cheer him. One gets the impression from the pietistic fulsomeness of sundry church papers that the chief opportunity of this war is to glorify religion, to tell the men about God, about immortality, about the spiritual credentials that must inhere in their character and conduct, not as means to victory, but as apologetics for the faith.

"Religion's business in this epoch is to win the war. The assumption seems to be made that the religious forces have their separate rights and functions. We need a constant heroic word for the war from both Mr. Raymond B. Fosdick and Mr. John R. Mott. They are reported as being interested in getting clean recreations, decent moral conditions, and high religious influences for the men. Occasionally, as in the article by Mr. Mott in this issue, the proper theme is dominant, but it is exceptional."

The only reason we give our millions to the auxiliary agencies in this war, it is pointed out, is that they shall really be auxiliary and speed the complete victory. The Register denounces "a new variety of religious institution whose glory is in itself, and goes on:

"What we demand more and more is that our spiritual forces

What Christianity Has Done for Korea

By Yi Kwang Su, Chosen, Japan

(1) Christianity Made Known to the Korean the Affairs of the West

Formerly the Korean knew of no country other than Korea and China. He had no idea that learning, morality and other forms of civilization existed anywhere outside of these two countries. But since the missionary went about preaching everywhere, the Korean has learned htat there is such a thing as the Western world. He has even faintly realized that the West has developed a peculiar form of civilization and this civilization is superior to that of the East .... The political movement, like that of the Independence Club, may be said to have been an echo of the Western influence. It is, at any rate, an undeniable fact that Christianity brought to Korea the dawning light of that civilization.

(2) The Quickening of the Moral Sense of the People

Toward the end of the Korean regime it was not only politics that were corrupt. Industry and finance were disorganized. As education was neglected, and administration rotten, social morals were indescribably corrupt. A whirlwind of extravagance, selfishness, dishonesty and jealousy swept over the nation. Officials openly practiced bribery, favoritism and cruelty. People sank deep in debauchery. Even children indulged in gambling. Slaves were sold and bought. Everybody seemed to think of nothing but evil day and night. Summed up in one sentence: the Korean degeneration reached the point where life had no ideal and morality, no standard. When I think of what I heard and saw in my childhood, I can't help trembling. To this confused and wicked society Christianity brought a high ideal of life and the dignity of virtue. Intemperance and immorality were forbidden. Dishonesty was denounced. Human traffic was discouraged. To worship God, to seek after righteousness, to teach new ways of living a pure, ideal life—all this has been the gift of Christianity. It is Christianity that has enabled nearly three hundred thousand souls in Korea to enjoy religious consolations and to strive after a morally pure life.

Not only the Christians but, through them, the moral conscience of the whole nation has been awakened and the ethical standard has been raised—another inestimable service which we owe to Christianity.

(3) The Spread of Education

We have now common schools and higher schools at different localities. In Seoul there are even schools for special subjects. Educational facilities are thus being provided. But up to seven or eight years ago, there were scarcely any but Christian schools. Of those who have received the new education, and who are above thirty years of age, the majority are graduates from Christian institutions of learning.

Since the religious revolution in Europe, the Christian church has found it necessary to establish schools. As all believers had to study the Bible, children were taught to read. This became the foundation of the modern system of common education. For the same reason, the Christian church in Korea has given much attention to the founding of schools and hospitals. A church with two or three hundred members has a primary school, as a rule. It is thus that the Christian church has laid the foundation of Korea's new system of education.

Besides school education, the necessity for reading the Bible and hymns has induced illiterate believers to learn Un-moon. Moreover, the reading of the Scriptures has created a taste for reading, with pleasure, such simple religious works as "Pilgrim's Progress," etc. Thanks to this fact most Christians male or female, old or young, have acquired the knowledge of letters and the ability to read.

(4) The Status of Woman Has Been Raised

The distinguishing mark of Oriental ethics is to honor man and despise woman. Especially in Korea a woman was considered no better than a domestic animal. She was denied the privilege of education. To assert her personality or to engage in an independent livelihood was never dreampt of. But it is the blessing of Christianiity that has induced her to attend church services and to engage in acts of worship along with men giving her the conception that men and women are sons and daughters of God on equal terms. A Christian woman enjoys that same power with men to vote for the election of church officers. She shares equally with men the responsibility of supporting the church. In the roll-book of Christians a woman possesses her individuality as well as a man.

The first school for girls was a Christian school and the first girl students were Christians. Now-a-days there are common schools and high schools for girls; but as late as five or six years ago the very mention of a female student was associated with a Christian girl.

Again, it is the Christian church in Korea that has sanctioned the re-marriage of women. By breaking down the notion that it is a great sin for a widow to re-marry according to the literal interpretation of the maxim that "a virtuous woman never has two husbands" Christianity has conferred on the Korean women a precious freedom.

(5) The Hurtful Cusotm of Early Marriage Has Been Rectified

Now we have a legal age for marriage so that early marriage is, at least theoretically forbidden. But formerly it was Christians alone who enforced strict rules against premature marriages.

(6) The Universalization of Un-Moon

It is the Christian church that has given to the Korean the idea that Un-moon is also a form of writing. The translation of the of the precious Testaments, Old and New, and of the hymns has given to Un-moon its dignity and universality .... It is probable that the Korean alphabet and the Korean language have become, for the first time, the medium of high and noble thoughts through the translation of the Bible. When the history of Korean literature shall come to be written by a future historian, the fact that the Bible was translated in pure Korean will find its place in the first page.

(7) The Mental Faculties of the Korean Have Been Stimulated

The Korean mind has been paralyzed, dried up an dstagnated. To this, Christian thoughts, unheard of in former ages, brought a powerful stimulation.

(8) Personal Liberty

The individual is the basis of this religion. In the Confucian system, the sage makes ethical laws for the people who are required to obey them unconsciously. "People should be made to obey but they should not be made to know," is the Confucian doctrine. Hence the Confucian ethics destroy private judgment, and this has hindered the free development of thought. But Christianity teaches that each individual, through his own prayer and endeavor, can find and see God and obtain eternal life. To say that all persons, sons, daughters and slaves in fact every human being has a soul implies that all men are brothers; that everybody is to be respected; and that all persons are equal in status and dignity, however they may differ in abilities. This is the source from which is derived the idea of the equality of men and women. This is the root of modern ethics.—Missionary Review of the World.

Mormon Chaplains

Both Eastern and Western Mormons are urging their soldier boys in the army to miss no chance to spread Mormonism among their comrades. Polygamists B. H. Roberts and a son of Jos. F. Smith, the head Utah Mormons, have secured appointments as "chaplains" and will do their utmost to help this on. Mormonism made a leap ahead in the Civil War because of the diverted attention; it is doing the same now.

Hostesses for Colored Troops

The first of the eight Hostess Houses fo friends of colored troops, which have been authorized by the War Work Council of the Young Women's Christian Association, is open at Camp Upton. This house is to serve a double purpose as training center for workers in the other houses.

Other houses for colored troops are being built at Camp Dix, N. J.; Camp Jackson, S. C.; Camp Dodge, Ia.; Camp Lee, Va.; Camp Gordon, Ga.; Camp Sherman, Ohio, and Camp Funston, Kansas. At Camp Funston army barracks are in temporary use until the house is opened.

Cleaning Up Newport

The effort to "clean up" the city of Newport, and to make it "safe for the boys" in the Navy Training Station, dates back to 1915, when a mass meeting of citizens was addressed by naval officers and others. But the active work has been carried on since December last, with ministers in close co-operation with naval officials.

In May, 1917, the Ministers' Union had wired Washington asking for war time prohibition and intimating that Newport, with its large number of enlisted men, needed such a measure. Later the Union sent its own representative to the capital to ask Secretary Daniels to make the city dry.

Our Youngest Readers

The Make-Believe

Every time Honorable Miss Teacher met with her little Chinese girls in the afternoon sewing class, she observed the new schoolboy, Jung Er, hanging about the sewing room door or peeping through a hole in the paper window.

Certainly Jung Er behaved strangely for a boy of eleven years. His parents were out-and-out heathens, and that may have explained his bad manners; but there were other things that seemed very unusual. For instance, when his boy companions played ball or leapfrog, he looked upon them indifferently, and when they urged him to join in the sport, he walked away with hanging head. Naturally, the other boys laughed at him, but all their jeers and ridicule did not induce him to join in their games.

Miss Teacher noticed Jung Er's queer behavior; but, most of all, she noticed his spying upon the little girls when they were sewing, and she resolved to speak to him the next time he came over into the girl's school yard. This place was forbidden ground to all boys, large or small.

Miss Teacher had not long to wait, for Jung Er stole over the following afternoon when the little girls were sewing away as busy as bees—that is, as busy as bees would sew if they had time for anything else in the world but buzzing about and making honey.

To make sure that there would be no more peeping upon Jung Er's part, Miss Teacher had pasted a whole new sheet of paper over the inside of the carved wooden window. This done, she went about smiling to herself, thinking that she had settled Jung Er and the peeping business, when suddenly, rip! rip!

It was a tiny sound, almost like a scratch, but the little girls began to giggle and Miss Teacher to frown. Out of the corner of her eye she first saw a rosy finger-tip sticking through the new paper window, then the finger was taken away, and something very black and shining was pressed in its place. This black, shining object was Jung Er's eyes, of course, and Miss Teacher determined right then and there to put a stop to his nonsense.

For the moment, she went on with the sewing class as if nothing had happened—then, rip, rip again! This time the hole in the paper window was big enough for two shining, black eyes, and the little girls giggled louder than ever. Miss Teacher still said nothing. However, she worked her way quietly around to the little girl nearest the door, then suddenly she dashed out and caught Jung Er by the collar.

Now, to catch a boy by the collar has always been considered a perfectly good way to catch boys since boys began to act naughty. And when Miss Teacher grabbed Jung Er by the collar, she was convinced that he should be punished. However, she was not prepared for Jung Er's next move. Instead of pulling away and sulking, he cried out, with a loud voice:

"I want to go in there; I want to sew with the girls!"

"What!" Miss Teacher was so astonished that she let go of Jung Er's collar. "What! You, a boy, wish to sew with the little girls?"

"Yes, I do—O Honorable Miss Teacher!" Jung Er's tears fell. "I do so want a little, shining needle and the pink and blue threads!"

"What!" Miss Teacher's eyes were as big as saucers; but Jung Er had another surprise for her. He beat his little breast and shouted loud enough for every one to hear. "Yes, I want these girls things because I am not a boy; I am a girl!"

Miss Teacher never was so surprised; but, as she looked close at Jung Er, she couldn't help believing him—such soft, shining hair; smooth, rosy cheeks; flashing black eyes and small, slender hands and feet.

"Yes, I am a little girl," Jung Er sobbed. "My parents love me so much that they dresss me like a boy to fool the gods, for the gods love and favor boys, but they hate girls."

Then what did Miss Teacher do? She had come out to punish; but with Jung Er's last words she cried:

"I love girls, too," and she gathered the small form in her arms. Jung Er threw her arms around Miss Teacher's neck, and for a long moment no one said a word. Then pretty soon they went back into the sewing room, where Miss Teacher spent all the hour teaching the new little girl how to sew with the shining needle and the blue and pink threads.

When the class was over, Miss Teacher put on her hat and called upon the head teacher in the boys' school. After this, she climbed into her cart and went to call upon Jung Er's parents.

With them she was very firm. "If Jung Er was allowed to remain in the mission school, she must be dressed properly, and put into the girls' department." This was a hard matter for Jung Er's heathen parents to decide; but finally, because they had a great desire for Jung Er to be educated, they agreed to risk the gods' disfavor and dress her as the girl she was.

So it came about that very next day, Jung Kuniang (her new name) played happily with all the other little girls in the girls' school; but I am sorry to say that every now and then the new Jung Kuniang made naughty faces in the direction of the boys' school.

However, this was not all. So many good things happened to Jung Kuniang after she was put into girl's clothing that her parents began to doubt the power of the gods to help or to harm. And when they began to doubt their Chinese gods, they began to ask questions about the God that little Jung Kuniang mentioned so often.

The strange thing about this was that, the more they questioned, the more they wanted to know. Thus it came about that they kept on asking questions and learning more and more wonderful things. And they are still learning, although many months have passed since the bright Sunday morning when they—father, mother and little Jung Kuniang—stood up and were received into the family of this same true God.—Queen's Gardens.

News From the Field

Riverside Institute

If we of Riverside were as faithful with writing for the Evangelist as with reading it, we should have written before this.

Riverside, as you may know, was this year combined with the "free" school of this district so that we began (as is the custom with the free schools) the middle of July. The enrollment that day was 105—now 115—a thing we have never before had in the fall term. I remember that five years ago, the first week of school there were 3 dormitory boarders. This year there were 13; most of them in the Normal Department.

A thing that Riverside did not have when I went away from here before was the ringing of the Prayer bell. But for the past 2 years they have been ringing the school bell every evening about 7:30, the idea being that those within hearing of the bell pause that moment for prayer. This was a new thing to me, but among the students on the campus particularly this is very impressive.

The ladies of the Carleton, Nebraska church would no doubt be interested in the work the Domestic Science girls are doing, as they fitted up this department of the work. Over 20 girls enrolled for this. The sewing for the year is to be for the organization of Red Cross at Jackson, Kentucky. We are trying to live up to the reputation of Breathitt county for patriotism. Breathitt with one county of Vermont were the two counties of the United States to have the most enlisted men up to May of this year. There was no drafting in Breathitt county until this June.

May I remark too that the flag is flying everywhere these days is flying every day from a firm, straight pole that was put up of the Riverside campus, July Fourth.

Two weeks ago Thursday we were surprised by a visit from Mr. McBride, of Dayton, who thought he would visit the workers as he was passing through Winchester, Kentucky. We wish that more of the Brethren would do the same.

The same day that Mr. McBride was here, the teacher of the 5th, 6th, and 7th grades was summoned to appear before the exemption board and we are without a teacher for this room. A young man of the neighborhood assisted with the work. If there is some one who is anxious to do something for this work they should offer to teach this room and assume the management of the boys' dormitory.

Sometime ago the doctor pronounced one of the most faithful workers that we have ever had here, a subject of tuberculosis of the throat. This person, Elizabeth Haddix, was among the Ashland students of 1917 and is the kind of a devoted Christian that any church would be proud of. Her strength was weakening and there was a marked decrease of weight till about the last week of June the decrease was at the rate of 4 or 5 pounds a week. Elizabeth requested that she be anointed, so Brother Drushal and Brother Bradfield anointed her. In the few weeks that have elapesd there has been a gain of 3 or 4 pounds weight and she was able this week to ride to the depot, three miles from her home.

There are other things that might be said: things to prove that the work is moving forward with unprecedented vigor. There are others though, who are preparing to report as soon as the present stress of the work is somewhat lifted. We have been praying that the proper matron for the girls' dormitory may volunteer soon and too that the proper one for the management of the boys' dormitory be forthcoming.

GENEVA STRODE.

Goshen, Indiana

Some time ago the writer was elected corresponding Secretary of the Brethren church of Goshen, Isdiana. Much would I have preferred some one who could have done the work better than I can, but since it has fallen to my lot I will do the best I can.

It is generally expected that the pastors of the various congregations will give a write up of the progress of the work, so if Brother Mc. "as we call him," does his part we will be relieved somewhat.

A fine Christian spirit prevailed at the business meeting of this year much business was disposed of in a very satisfactory way, preferring others rather than one's self.

The church at this place has a fine system for its business affairs where every department of the church and her auxiliaries give a report. This makes it interesting and encourages good attendance. Brother Irvin Duker our Moderator with tact and ability was re-elected, also Brother Menaugh, secretary.

Brother Trimmer, treasurer, and others were re-elected to offices they had creditably filled. Brother Roscoe continues to be our Sunday school superintendent, taking a very active interest in all its departments. The Sunday school is one of the live wires of the Goshen church, attended by men and women of silvery locks, down to the little tot. Bible reading is encouraged and reported by each class, sometimes as many as three hundred or more chapters are read by a single class and a thousand by the school in a single week.

The young men's class, the "True Blues," is performing a kind act by presenting a box containing a lunch to all the boys who leave Goshen for United States service. This has been some expense to the boys, but they are doing it in the spirit that merits the blessing, "More blesed to give than receive." God alone knows who may be influenced for good by a small act of kindness like this.

Brother Mc. is taking his vacation at the present. They have gone back to old Virginia to visit parents and friends. Brother Thomas of Milford and Brother Menaugh have been filling the pulpit with fine messages from the WORD.

Brother Wolford of Elkhart, also came to help us by giving us a message from God's book. Come again. During July and August the various congregations of the city unite in union services. They are held in the Court House Park. The meetings have been largely atetnded. Dr. Bradford, of Oklahoma delivered one of the sermons, filled with plain truth for all, fitted for the day in which we are living. We were all glad to know that our dear Brother Furry had a call to speak at the union service and to say the least his was a great message, full of truth. God bless his servants.

M. E. HORNER, Cor. Sec.

Annual Brethren Bible Conference Long Beach, California

Wednesday, 7:30 P. M.

The evening devotions were begun by such songs as "Lean Upon His Arms," "He is Mine," etc. Brother N. C. Nielsen led in prayer. Sister Leila Nehr of Compton Avenue church sang "Nobody Told Me of Jesus." Brother Stout sang "Poor Li'le Brack Sheep." By request of Brother Darling he also sang "The Lost Ship."

Brother R. E. Darling, pastor at Turlock, Stanislaus county, then preached the evening sermon, subject, "What Will Happen on the First Resurrection Morn." Scriptures used were Rev. 20: 4-6; 1 Cor. 15: 51-54 and 1 Thess. 4. He spoke of the evangelistic use of this uject. There was sorrow in the homes of Thessalonians because of the going of loved ones. They were looking for the coming of Jesus, and feared those who were gone would not share in his coming. 1 Thess. 5: 18,—"Wherefore comfort one another with these words," is based on 1 Thess. 4: 14, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again."

This service was closed by an invitation hymn and a benediction by J. C. Beal.

No program had been provided for Thursday forenoon, that being set apart for rest and recreation. The conference convened at 2 P. M. by singing gospel songs. Prayer was offered by N. W. Jennings'

P. B. Fitzwater gave his sixth address on the incarnation, "The Humiliation of the Incarnation," or "The Shame of the Cross."

Phil 2: 8; Heb. 12: 2, 3.

(1) The fact of the Cross.

Recorded by Math., Mk., Luke and John. Paul says such a death was a curse (Gal. 3: 13.)

(2) The necessity of the cross. John 3: 14, 15. This lies in

(a) The nature of God. He is absolutely holy, righteous and just.

(b) The nature of sin. Sin is guilt, uncleanness and disease. This must be gotten rid of. Sin is not an abstraction, but is vitally connected with man.

(c) The nature of God's law, must be upheld. Sin cannot be condoned.

(3) The method of the cross.

God became universal man and himself endured the agony of the cross. (2 Cor. 5: 21; 2 Pet. 2: 24).

(4) The issue of the cross.

It is the cross that puts the difference between men, and this has been parabolically enacted in the crucifixion. (John 129: 16-18 and Luke 23: 32-43).

(a) The cross of the unbelieving thief.

1. Sin in him (Ps. 51: 5).
2. Sin on him (Rom. 3: 9).

He yielded to his sinful nature and railed on Jesus.

(b) The cross of Christ.

1. No sin in him (2 Cor. 5: 21 and 1 Pet. 2: 22).
2. Sin on him (Isa. 53: 6).

(c) The cross of the believing thief.

1. Sin in him (Rom. 7: 17).
2. No sin on him (Rom. 8: 33).

Each man has power to decide which cross he shall rest under.

At the close of this address Prof. Stout sang "And He Answered Never a Word."

The second address of the afternoon was by Louis S. Bauman on "The Signs of the Times," "The Great Apostasy." Scriptures, 2 Thess 2: 1-4 and 2 Tim. 4: 3, 4. An apostate is one who has had the rtuth and has moved away from his stand. The speaker asked the question, "Are we now in such a condition as a whole body of people?" and proceeded to show why he thinks we are. One of his conclusions was that this great war is a result of false doctrines taught in Germany, and the war is an evidence of this great apostasy.

The session closed with prayer by Sylvester Lowman.

Thursday, 7:30 P. M.

Professor Stout lead the congregation in singing several popular gospel songs.

A number of the ministers present formed a chorus and rendered, "The Old Wayside Cross," and "Remember Me, Oh, Mighty One."

Professor Stout rendered "The Song the Angels Cannot Sing."

Of all the sessions of the conference the audience on this evening was no doubt the largest, every available space being occupied.

P. B. Fitzwater gave the message, speaking on the theme "The Nature of God as Revealed in His Names."

The name "God"—"I am." It is equal to the Hebrew verb "To be," and means "The Self-existent One," or "The Source of All Things."

God has three primary names. The others are derived from them.

First Elohim, "The Strong One." This is plural in form and suggests plurality in the Godhead. We do not have the Trinity in the Old Testament in name but we do have it in fact. Note it in the first lve verses of Genesis.

Second, Jehovah, "The Covenant One." The reason people do not put their trust in God is because they do not know his name.

If you go to hell, it will be by your own suicidal act.

Several other derivative names were discussed at some length such as Jehovah—Jirah, "The Lord Will Provide." (Gen. 22).

Jehovah—Rafah, "The Divine Healer." (Ex. 125: 25 Waters healed).

Jehovah—Missi, "The Lord Our Banner." His banner over us is "Love" even the Christ of the New Testament.

Jehovah—Shalem, "The Lord Our Paece."

Jehovah—Rawah, "The Lord Our Shepherd." (Ps. 23).

3. El Shadai, El "Strong" Shad, "Breast," The "Strong One" who has come into the breasted relation, as of a mother. God who gives nourishment and comfort. Think of a mother's tenderness and care. Our God is infinitely more so.

At the close of this very instructive address an invitation song was sung and a closing prayer was offered by Chairman A. V. Kimmell.

Friday, 9:30 A. M.

Devotions were conducted by Professor Stout who sang "The Old Time Fire."

P. B. Fitzwater gave the 7th in the series on the incarnation, "The Demonstration of the Incarnation," or "The Resurrection of Christ."

(1) The fact of—

(a) Testimony of the Evangelists.

(b) Witnesses at different times. 12 Cor. 15: 5-8.

(c) Circumstantial evidences.

(2) What it guarantees to us,

(a) Integrity of scriptures. (12 Cor. 15: 3, 4).

(b) Reality of the Divine Person. (Rom. 1: 4).

(c) Sufficiency of Christ's Atoning Sacrifice. (Rom. 4: 25).

(d) Of life and immortality. (1 Cor. 15: 20). "Because I live ye shall live also."

After a recess of five minutes N. W. Jennings spoke on "Evangelism in Pulpit and Pew."

This interesting and instructive address consisted largely of personal experiences of the author in his evangelistic work throughout the country. Desire will not bring a revival. The need of PERSONAL effort is great. There must needs be word, prayer and weeping.

The morning session closed with a song by Brother Stout, entitled "I Am Going Up, Dear Papa."

Friday, 2 P. M.

The audience sang "If Jesus Goes With Me" and "Lean Upon His Arms." Professor Stout sang "Who Will Answer for Me?" R. E. Darling gave the 3rd of his "Studies on Prayer," "Why Some Prayers Are Not Answered." God does not answer formal prayers. Nor where known sin exists. Ps. 66: 18; Isa. 5: 1, 2. When we do not keep his commands Jesus said, "I do always those things that please him." God does not answer where faith is lacking, if we are unforgiving.

Your prayer may not be answered because you can answer it yourself. | Some one one has said, the Lord answers only those that men cannot.

The second address of the afternoon was by F. J. Reagan; subject, "The Pre-eminent Christ." Col. 1: 18.

The conflict between right and wrong centers around the person of Christ. All of heaven contributes to his glory; all hell opposes. He is pre-eminent in creation (Col. 1: 16), in redemption (Col. 1: 124, 21, 22, 30) in the scriptures, in the church and in peaching. Paul said, "I am determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." He may be pre-eminent in us. "Christ in me the hope of glory."

Friday, 7:30 P. M.

After several gospel songs Sister Jennings rendered, "He's Real to Me."

At this time the Chairman A. V. Kimmell, presented the matter of the expenses of the conference and listed the main items of expense which totaled $525.00. An offering of cash and pledges was solicited and the full amount was soon raised.

Louis S. Bauman preached the evening sermon, subject, "The Prince of Peace." Isa. 9: 6. In the face of the terrible unrest and suffering, let us count our blessings, especially here in Southern California, where we have so much to be thankful for. He said the spirit of the Christian was exemplified during the Spanish-American war when a general said to his men, "Boys, don't cheer. They are dying over there."

Saturday, 2 P. M., Business Session

(We note only item of most inteest.)

Albert E. Neher of Compton Avenue church, Los Angeles, was elected a member of District Mission Board by acclamation.

The following resolution of the District Mission Board was adapted on motion of L. S. Bauman.

Resolved, that the Southern California District Mission Board's annual assessment for the year, October 1st, 1918, to September 30th, 1919, be $1,000, and be apportioned among the churches as follows:

Long Beach	$ 450.00
Whittier	137.50
La Verne	137.50
Compton Ave. L. A.	137.50
First Church, L. A.	137.50
Total	$1,000.00

This assessment is to be paid quarterly beginning Octover 1st, 1918.

(Signed) H. V. WALL, Secretary.

On motion of J. C. Beal, a second resolution of the Mission Board was adopted as follows:

Resolved, that the Southern California District Mission Board, in conjunction with the Fillmore church, be authorized to build a church in Fillmore which shall not cost, including furnishings, to exceed $9,000.

(Signed) H. V. WALL, Secretary.

(In this connection we give the Annual Report of the District Mission Board which was not in our possession when the first part of these notes were sent in).

Long Beah, Cal., July 19, 1918.

Report of the Mission Board of the Brethren Churches of Southen California

Your Board considered several places since our last Conference, but it was the unanimous opinion that Fillmore was a needy place and the best place to start a mission at this time.

At our General Conference Brother L. S. Bauman and self had made parital arrangement with Brother S. Lowman of Dayton, Ohio, to do mission work here, and the Board later engaged him. Therefore, Brother Lowman being ready to take charge the Board engaged Brother L. S. Bauman to do the preaching and Professor B. P. Stout to lead the singing at a four weeks' meeting.

We put up our tent and started the fifth day of May, the work for the Lord in winning of souls. It proved to be a most needy place and hard to work, so the working force had a mgihty struggle to get the people to come out, and to get a hearing, because the forces of the enemies of Christ had united in telling all over town all kinds of lies about us as a church, but the workers stood at their guns and volley after volley of gospel truth was fired and by a continual bombarding the third week the enemy had to yield ground and we went on to victory in winning souls for Crhist, our King, whose banner had been held up. At the end of the fourth week twenty-nine souls had made confession of Christ.

The Board bought two lots for $1,800 and pledges were given for this amount the last Sunday of the meeting. On the second of July a church was organized with twenty-four members. There are three more now.

With Brother Lowman as pastor, deacons and deaconesses were elected, and Sunday scohol superintendent and other officers chosen. The Sunday school which was started the second week has an average attendance of forty-three. They had a Sunday school picnic the Fourth of July where eighty turned out.

They also chose a building committee as it is the plan of the Board and the church there to build a house of worship. This committee has plans here and the prices of everything for the building and furniture, and the estimate is that it will cost $9,000. A decision to put up the church building will probably be reached at this conference.

Considering everything and the tremendous power it took through God and the Holy Spirit given to his servant to get a start, things look very good and encouraging.

The Board wants to express its thanks and appreciation to Brethren Bauman, Stout and Lowman and to Sister Lowman, and all the others who helped in different ways to make the mission a success.

(Signed) N. C. NIELSEN,
President District Mission
Board of Southern California
250 Pine Ave.,
Long Beach, Cal.

In accordance with the lart article of the Constitution and By-Laws previously given, a Ministerial Examining Board of five members was elected (one member from each church) which resulted as follows:

Long Beach—L. S. Bauman.
Whittier—A. V. Kimmell.
La Verne—T. H. Broad.
Compton Avenue, Los Angeles—J C. Beal.
First Church, Los Angeles—A. P. Reed.

On motion of Morris Lefler an invitation of the Long Beach church to have the Conference meet with them again next year was accepted.

The Tabulating Committee submitted the following report which was accepted after a correction in the amount of foreign mission money reported:—

T. J. STEVES,
A. E. Neher,
L. A. Ogden, Committee

Chairman E. M. Cobb of the Committee on Resolutions made a report which was adopted. We quote only the last paragraph:

Resolved, that we recognize the fact that our government is a chosen vessel of God, ordained to execute wrath upon the wicked; and is a mighty instrument in the hands of God to be used for the fulfillment of his great purpose an plans; and that, as such, we shall give to her and her great president, our prayers, and every support, moral, financial and otherwise, that we can possibly give, and yet remain true to the spirit of Jesus Christ, and in harmony with his teaching.

The question of fraternal relations with the Church of the Brethren was discussed and on motion of J. C. Beal the following committee was selected: A. V. Kimmell, E. M. Cobb and H. V, Wall. An effort willl be made to hold a joint conference with them next year.

Saturday, 7:30 P. M.

Devotions by Roger E. Darling, Professor Stout sang "The Three R's"—"Ruin, Redemption, Regeneration," a song written by Major Whitney.

P. B. Fitzwater gave the 8th address in the series on the incarnation, "The Present Activity of the Incarnation," or "The High Priestly Work of Christ."

I. What it is—High Priest in Heaven Heb. 4: 14.

II. His qualifications as High Priest.

4. Sympathetic. Heb. 2: 16, 17.

III. Issue of his work as Priest. Heb. 7: 25.

Jesus took the nature of man so that he could enter into the most definite realization of nur needs.

Brother F. J. Reagan made the closing prayer.

Sunday, 9:30 A. M.

Sunday school was conducted by the Long Beach officers, D. E. Waller, Superintendent. This was a great day of songs, sermons and fellowship. Among other songs was one by Mr. and Mrs. Stout, "God's Way is the Best Way," which added to the occasion.

N. W. Jennings gave the morning message, "The Only Immortal Winning Organization in the World," which of course is the church. He spoke of the glory of the church, a perfect church, the church immortal, the church a magnet, a lighthouse, to evangelize the world with a heaven born call.

At the afternoon session an offering was taken for the new Fillmore Mission church as per a decision of the Conference at the business session on Saturday.

Sunday, 7:30 P. M.

The evening service was rich with songs and solos. Miss Bly of Compton Avenue church sang, "Say Amen to Jesus," and it was much enjoyed. There were special songs by Miss Hazel Shively and Miss Leila Neher.

Professor Stout imitated in colored singer in "Hear De Waves a Rollin' Near."

L. S. Bauman preached the closing sermon of his present pastorate of the Long Beach church, having planned to start the following Tuesday morning to go by automobile to National Conference and for at least six months' evangelistic tour of eastern churches.

The text was Heb. 10: 12, 13, "Henceforth expecting till Jesus makes his enemies his footstool."

Jesus is expecting something. He has a right to as the sower of good seed expects a harvest, because of the promises of the Father. He wants us to live so as to catch his glory and reflect it to others.

Jesus expects sacrifice. He expects us to bear fruit for him. He spoke of the sacrifice being made by Brother and Sister Rollier in their preparation for and in their going to Africa to assist in the work there. He closed the service with an earnest prayer for the church.

On Monday afternoon, the 29th, there were three addresses on "What the Bible Says About the Love Feast" in preparation for the communion service Monday evening.

There was a good attendance Monday evening at the communion service held in the commodious new basement of the Long Beach church. There were six long tables reaching the entire lenght of the basement, all filled with members from all the churches of Southern California. The tables were tastefully decorated with flowers and ferns. The plates were neatly covered with napkins which were removed at the proper time and replaced when the supper was finished. L. S. Bauman conducted the service, being assisted by A. V. Kimmell, F. J. Reagan, J. C. Beal, J. W. Platt and B. F. Schisler. It was a delightful service which we all hope may be repeated in many places in our brotherhood.

In concluding this write up of this great conference, we present an interesting report which was made during the first day's sessions by our esteemed Brother N. C. Nielsen on "Ashland College, Recruiting and Endowment."

Ashland College has eighteen acres of ground lying nice and high in the outskirts of the beautiful city of Ashland. It is worth at least $150,000 all paid for. But no college can be run in these days without a permanent endowment. Our college has some temporary endowment but it has about all expired. I have been watching the college for the last twenty-five years and all things considered, I think the college has done most excellent.

When I was at the General Conference last year I saw as fine a lot of young preachers as you will see anywhere. Moreover, if we are going to proclaim to the world what the Brethren church stands for, and do our share in teaching the gospel to all the world, and bringing in the millennium, we must have endowment for the college so we can send our boys and girls there to be trained for the Lord's work.

We started out to raise $100,000, but that is just a minimum goal and we hope to far surpass that when the campaign is over, and we want not only some of your money but we want also your boys and girls. We want recruits.

Many of our older brethren have gone to their reward, and others have passed their best days. They did well, but we need recruits an many of them, so if any of our young people will give their lives for the Lord's work and feel called of him, you parents do your part to send them to our own college. Because if we want the Brethren doctrine and that for which we as a church stand, to prosper, we must have our preachers and missionaries indoctrinated.

It is a fact that if our young people go to other denominational schools they will as a rule be of the persuasion of the school to which they go. Take for instance the Disciples, or Christian church,—all the preachers I have heard are just charged with their doctrines, and I think the same can be said at least to some extent of all other denominations. More than that, in my opinion and observation, it is not only the doctrines we believed in as Brethren that make our young people real stalwart Brethren, but the contact at the schools with others of the same faith.

We hear much of a new world after the war. I think the world will be a good deal the same till Jesus comes. But one thing is sure, we need an efficient ministry, and if we are going to have an efficient ministry, we need better college equipment and better remuneration to the teachers there. Our teachers and professors have been giving their lives for the scantiest kind of salaries.

We cannot expect to have always such well qualified Brethren who will offer their lives that way, and we have no right to expect good work even if it is for the Lord, without a fair pay. Therefore, it is our business if we want to do our share of the Lord's work, to do our share in the college endowment, and when Brother Beachler or some one else comes around for the campaign in this district we want every member to be prepared to give something, even if it is not more than $5.00 or $1,000, Brother Beachler will be glad to take it.

And I think it is a mighty good investment to give money for the preparation of our young people for the Lord's work after we have departed for our reward.

It is evident that Ashland College has a warm friend in Brother Nielsen and this report of his will mean much, we hope, for our College, both here in California and everywhere this report of his may be read.

Having enjoyed this great Conference together this year, if the Lord wills it, we will all be anticipating another one even better and greater next year.

Watch Pennsylvania Push the Mercury Above the Star in This Thermometer

Facts and Figures Relative to the Campaign for Permanent Endowment for Ashland College

Facts:

1. It is a fact that the Campaign is meeting with great success. The mercury is steadily moving upward. We have gone beyond $50,000 and the Campaign is really just well begun.

2. It is a fact that we have learned by experience that it takes time to do this work thoroughly and well. Some things can be done with a rush—experience has taught us this cannot. More than another year will be required to complete the task ahead of us.

3. It is a fact that the Brethren church has made up her mind fully to carry through to a grand finish what has been undertaken. The remaining States and Districts of the brotherhood stand ready to meet Indiana and Pennsylvania half way.

4. It is a fact that the Brethren church CAN DO and WILL DO what practically all denominations are doing today—adequately endow her College.

5. It is a fact that ultimate victory for this Campaign looms big ahead.

Notes:

1. Five churches remain yet to be canvassed in Indiana. Indiana has not yet spoken her final word.

2. At least sixteen churches are yet to be canvassed in Pennsylvania. This will be completed immediately after Conference.

3. The churches of Illiokota will be visited next after Pennsylvania.

truly show 'force, force without stint or limit,' the spiritual urge that is the determining power in any human engagement. It is the only raison d'etre of our churches' part in the crisis. Is it not, therefore, a subtle and smug and pernicious conceit which our religious press is nurturing in its constituency? Is it not the old sacrosanct wickedness that religion is its own end? We wonder how the fathers and mothers feel about it, who are offering upon the altar of holy liberty their offspring, their faces fresh with morning light, their hearts as strong as steel.

"This worse than impotent business must stop. Our leaders must talk about the war and their passion to help win the war, and not about even Jesus Christ in such wise as to divert them from the duty which is summed up in his own words, 'The truth shall make you free.' Make him the captain, not the pietist.

"In too many cases which come under our view, as we read the alleged religious papers, the policy of religionists is to laud their own work. We have listened to speech after speech by so-called religious leaders, as we have read thousands of editorials and articles in the church papers, and only once in a hundred times does either speaker or writer go to the center and soul of the business and utter a ringing challenge to win the war for God and Christ and mankind. They skirt around the edge of the principal enterprise, urging with fervor and tremulous emphasis the well-being of the souls of the soldiers, and appealing to the sentiment of affectionate religionists instead of championing the heroism of great-hearted soldiers. It is all wrong, shamefully wrong."

Editorial

At the Threshold

The 1918 General Conference is now history. Those in attendance have returned to their respective fields of labor. A new year for church activities is just before us. With what spirit and with what sort of an outlook do we approach our task? Success or failure will be measured by the answer to this question. It has occurred to the writer that now is the time to consider well several aspects of our work that lend encouragement. Then too, we need to think well of our problems. Doing this wisely and acting as becometh men committed to a great cause we may confidently pray for and expect success.

A Great Year. It is a commonplace saying and yet it needs repetition lest we forget,—This is a great year that is just opening to us as a church. Every day is a great day for any right-thinking and hard-working man; for a man with a serious purpose in life and a task to perform. This is equally true of an organization such as the church. Never a day so freighted with opportunity for service as this day! Never a day in which so great responsibility developed upon men in positions of leadership as today! This is especially true of the church. The pastoral office has an opportunity to exalt itself as never before. Local churches have a resonsibility to direct a manifold ministry such as has rarely if ever been theirs. The big and strong men of the church are everywhere in demand as never before. This is true of both the ministers and the laymen. Few indeed are the great denominations that have not recognized the imperial and inescapable obligations of the day resting upon the church of our Blessed Lord. To meet these obligations and to enter upon the full acceptance of the opportunities presented religious gatherings have appropriated both men and money. It is a great day upon which we have come when such vast sums of money are freely given for the work of the church, sums of money vaster than have hitherto been dreamed of being given. It is a great day in which to live and have a share in its work when the best life of the church is consecrated as never before to the execution of the stupendous tasks that lie just before the church. Does the Brethren church know her day? There is someting inexpressibly sad in the contemplation of lost opportunities. "If thou hadst known in this day ....! but ...."

Let us consider a few factors that bespeak success for us as a church. Others than those indicated here might be named but these grow directly out of observations made at Conference.

First. As a church we have never been so well organized for work. Organization is essential to the successful accomplishment of any worth while task in the church. Great business has at last taught us this. Organization centralizes responsibility. It finds those especially fitted for the work to be done. It saves the useless expenditure of time and money that always attends the lack of concerted and directed effort. In speaking of the organization of the church for work reference is made not only to the General Conference but also to several district conferenes. Our districts are better and more efficiently organized than hitherto. This is also true of the local churches. Only a word of earnest exhortation need here be given to all congregations in which organized effort under competent leadership has not yet been realized. All such must organize to meet the demands of the hour. The very best talent in the church must thus be enlisted and where leadership is wanting leaders must be trained. This is one of the big pieces of work a pastor can do. Out of the most unlikely material by the grace of God leaders can be trained. It is an omen of good for us as a people that we are better organized for our work than we have been in times past.

Second. A second factor that promises success is to be found in our corps of workers. We have the best trained leaders and more of them than we have had at any previous time in our history. Our ministry is almost wholly made up of men under forty years of age. These men are the best educated Brethren preachers the church has had. They are men of conviction and character. They have the enthusiasm and and the strength of manhood at its best. And whether trained in the hard school of experience or the University or both they are men who for the most part can do the work committed to them. Then we have a larger body of efficient laymen who are more and more giving themselves to the work of the church. These are business and professional men of splendid proportions and they are rendering an increasingly valuable service to the church. We find them in growing numbers in our local churches and they constitute the reserve forces of a militant Brethrenism. Add to these the host of consecrated women who have so whole-heartedly given themselves to the work of the church nationally and locally and you have a mighty factor portending success. These women are educated, consecrated and enthusiastic for the work of the Master. They are for the most part thoroughly organized in every local church. Last and most auspicious of all is the growing efficiency of the young people of the church. Let there be no misunderstanding of my meaning here. It is not that we have nothing to desire in leadership. What is said is that we have the best leadersip we have ever had and this augurs well. Let there be no slacking of effort. May God greatly multiply not only the numbers but the ability of trained leaders among us.

Third. The Brethren church is a church of young people. This becomes more and more evident at our conferences. I have visited many congregations during the past two years and I find it true in the local churches. This is the very best indication of a growth that speaks for the future. It also speaks eloquently for our appeal. A church that has no appeal to young people is doomed to die. Ours is a church of young people and this fact alone will ensure success to every faithful effort. Youth has an enthusiasm and a vision that allow no retreat. It belongs to youth to fight the world's battle for right. It belongs to the youth of the church to win for Christ.

Fourth. Let us note one more factor that promises success. It is that as a church we have a great plea. Our slogan, "The Whole Gospel for the Whole World," must be to every loyal and faithful member of the church more than an empty though it may be a high-sounding phrase. To us the "Whole Gospel" means somewhat more than to others. We hold all the fundamental and essential beliefs that evangelistic churches commonly hold. But we hold a bit more. And it is just in this "more" that we hold essential to a full expression of Christian faith and life that our existence is at all justified. It is just this "bit more" that we hold that we believe will make men better Christians. It is just this that will round out and fill up what is lacking so often in the faith and life of the church. It is the plea that what Christ says is much better than any human substitute; that God's way is better than ours and that there is nothing that will do as well as what he directs. Ours is the prestige of a great plea and it surely makes for denominational success.

A Call to Action. Will not the reader again note the four things here named as bespeaking success for the year's work in

A Button-Hole Boquet

The day of the button-hole boquet worn by men has long gone by, and in its place has come the fraternity emblem, the class pin, the Red Cross button, the Liberty Bond badge, etc., without end.

The good old days when men, young and old, wore an old fashioned pink from the garden on the lapel of the coat may not have represented the same degree of culture that is now represented by the more modern decorations and adornments, but thy represented a degree of simplicity and sincerity that is too often lacking in modern life.

But did you never notice that there is what may very properly be called a human "button-hole" bouquet? When any considerable number of men are gathered together from different sections of the country for any special purpose there usually appears on the scene one or more men who have a peculiar knack for "button-holing any one and every one who will be polite enough to endure the annoyance and to listen to their tale. We have said annoyance, for it is almost the universal habit for such "bouquets to have a tale of woe to relate or a grievance to air. Whisperings, bickerings, back-bitings, scandal and slander are their stock in trade, and through their persistent efforts molehills are made into mountains and whisperings of the wind are made into tornadoes of corruption by the scandal-mongers who use this method for peddling their wares.

That these human button-hole bouquets were common in the days of Paul is indicated by his words when he spoke of "busybodies, meddlers in other men's matters, etc.," and as he warned against such in the apostolic day it is well to heed the warning even in these modern days. Some men may regard it as a compliment to be "button-holed" by these disturbers of the peace and good will of men, but it is anything but a compliment. It is a sure indication that the "bouquet" has judged you an 'easy mark" and hopes by this method to accomplish his cowardly work which he is not man enough to come out in the open and advocate.

Luck or Accident

How often do we hear the expression, "He is a lucky dog," or "That was a most fortunate accident." Great things are done or wonderful achievements are accomplished and then because we do not know of the toil and plodding that led up to the consummation we call it luck or accident.

Accidental discoveries may be made, but it is no accident when the discovery is turned into account through the toil of the brain and the brawn of man. Some unexpected opportunity may come to a man but it is not a matter of luck when he seizes that opportunity and uses it as a foundation upon which to build a career, a name or a fortune.

The world has seen the rise and fall of many so-called great men, and to the thoughtless it may seem that large numbers of them have been creatures of luck, or accident, or circumstances; but we are inclined to believe that an acquaintance with their inner lives and an understanding of their purposes and motives will reveal the fact that in every instance there was a strong underlying principle in all their accomplishments that was the spur to their efforts, the motor power that carried them forward.

It was no case of luck that made Lincoln president of the United States at the time when the great crisis came which was to determine whether a government of the people, by the people and for the people should endure or be destroyed by the disturbing factors of that day and generation, and it was no accident that General Grant quit hauling cordwood into St. Louis to lead the Union armies through the Wilderness and on to Richmond. Luck and accident have very little to do in such great events. The most distinguished warrior of the centuries, Marshal Foch, has declared, "The great events of history are never accidents."

It behooves men who are waiting for luck or accident to bring good fortune to them to bestir themselves and to be their own piece of good luck or their own accidental discovery and through personal effort achieve things worth while.

Free Thinking

Not so many years ago it was regarded as an almost unpardonable sin to be a free thinker. All kinds of heresy, skepticism, infidelity, agnosticism, etc., were attributed to the free thinker. He was to be shunned by all right minded men as they would shun a plague, the smallpox or the "cooties" of the trenches of Europe.

The free thinkers of old were those who refused to accept the dogmatic statements of theology as made by the orthodox of their day and undoubtedly the reaction that set in because of the narrowness and bigotry of the narrow minded theologians who were the leaders of the church a few centuries ago did result in a body of men who, calling themselves free thinkers, denied God and any revelation he might have made to mankind. Because of this any one who was suspected of being a free thinker was at once branded a renegade and a menace to society.

However we have now come to a place in the development of the race where it is not considered to be a disgrace to be known simply as a free thinker. The disgrace is dependent entirely upon the KIND of free thinking. One can not defend the doctrine of the freedom of the will and deny freedom of thought; but we are still suspicious of many kinds of such freedom. An American of some note has declared that we Americans fear political free thinking more than the British do, which is no compliment to the American mind. The fact is we are still prone to believe that men who will not accept either our religious or political views are stiff-necked heretics.

When Right Shall Prevail

Right has long been upon the scaffold and wrong upon the throne and it has come to be believed by altogether too many that wrong and injustice shall ever rule the world. Judging from the experiences of many of the nations through the many centuries that have passed, even since civilization has begun, is almost enough to lead one to doubt that right shall ever reign supreme. But one who believes in right and believes that right rather than might shall rule can not help seeing that slow as the progress of right seems yet it IS gaining over might and there are reasonable grounds for believing that it will come to rule after sufficient time has elapsed.

Men have been thinking more of the cause of right since the whole world has been drawn into the great war through the teaching of one mighty country that believes "might makes right," and the world is becoming more and more anxious that right shall prevail. While the ordinary preachers of the gospel have been preaching the principles of right ever since the beginning of the Christian era their preaching has too often been disregarded and counted common, so that when some one of prominence and who belongs to the great body of laymen says the same thing that the preachers have been preaching for generations the people sit up and take notice. Only recently John D. Rockefeller, Jr., said, "As surely as there is a God in heaven right will prevail," and a whole lot of people will be greatly encouraged because this wealthy layman has said what other people of less prominence have said times without number. But there are some people who would like to know how far Mr. Rockefeller is willing to go to help the right to prevail. There are other wrongs in the world besides political wrongs, and other evils besides the great Prussian evil. Society has been menaced by greed and oppression from the days of the Hebrew children in Egypt until now, and the cry of the poor has ever been heard in the land. Yes the right shall prevail, but before it can prevail there are many social, economic, political, moral and religious wrongs that must be righted.

Conference Sketches

BY MILES J. SNYDER

The Brethren people, especially the ministers of the church, enjoy a unique privilege which is becoming more largely appreciated each year, namely, the opportunity of attending the great Bible Conference at Winona Lake. Coming as it does, immediately preceding our own General Conference, it is an easy matter to come to Winona a week earlier and get the inspiration, vision, and spiritual uplift of one of the leading Bible conferences in all the world. And, fortunately, increasing numbers of our people are doing this each year.

August 26th was the date set for the opening of the thirtieth General Conference of the Brethren church. The afternoon of that day brought a very agreeable surprise to many people as the crowd began to gather at "the Inn." Some sincerely questioned the wisdom of holding our General Conference this year, owing to the abnormal conditions prevailing, but the attendance from the start clearly showed that such a decision on the part of the Executive Committee would have been most unwise.

President Wilson has repeatedly urged that there be no cessation in the activities of the church. A truly democratic people must be able to think and act righteously, and religious conferences are highly conducive to that end. Dentists and doctors and barbers, the Elks, Owls Eagles, Moose, Mutts, and many other fraternal groups, have their annual gatherings, even in wartime, and why not the church?

Very properly, Conference opened with a devotional song and prayer service on Monday evening, when earnest prayers were ogered for the power and guidance of the Holy Spirit through all the conference, after which W. S. Bell delivered the opening sermon on the subject "The Militant Christ."

Tuesday morning credentials were received from the delegates present and a report of the committee showed an attendance of one hundred and sixty. The Long Beach, California congregation distinguished itself by having thirteen delegates present.

Following the address of retiring Moderator L. S. Bauman, organization of the Conference was effected by the election of W. S. Bell, Moderator; H. H. Wolford, Vice Moderator; Horace Kolb, Treasurer; Dyoll Belote, Secretary.

The delegate attendance on the second day was over two hundred. How could we hold a General Conference without Ford cars?

Tuesday found the various boards of the church busy with their annual grind of routine and constructive work. Little do people unacquainted with their arduous tasks know of the faithful and sacrificing labors of the members of these very important boards.

A new record was set last year when there were seven deaths in the membership of the Brethren Ministerial Association. At the annual election, G. W. Rench was re-elected President of this Asscoiation, and Martin Shively its Secretary-Treasurer. The membership has been considerably increased.

Cool, delightful weather was enjoyed during the Conference, although it is a question whether that is the most desirable kind for the best results. Too many delegates sit around under the trees and enjoy the beauties of Winona with nothing to do but visit, when they should attend Conference sessions for inspiration and uplift. Rainy weather would drive them inside, and quite a number seemingly needed some sort of external compulsion to get them in the auditorium and chapel.

How can people in the audience be persuaded to show speakers on the platform the common courtesy of not finding seats or leaving them while a program number is being given? Proper consideration along this line would be a jewel.

The Brethren Publishing Company made a splendid report of the year's work. The financial showing was very good. Something like two thousand names were added to the subscription list of the Brethren Evangelist, representing an increase of eighty per cent. R. R. Teeter was continued as business manager and office editor. George S. Baer was elected editor of the Brethren Evangelist, and assistant to A. D. Gnagey, editor of the Sunday school literature.

The report given by the Board of Benevolences showed exceptional growth in that direction. Offerings during the year went beyond the goal and were over one hundred per cent more than the previous year. Two new names were placed on the Superannuated Minister's list, and the amount per month to be given to each was materially increased. The officers elected for the coming year were: President, H. F. E. O'Neill. Secretary, Herman Roscoe; Treasurer, J. L. Kimmell.

The sessions of the National S. S. C. E. were very well attended and much good work was done. There were one hundred delegates present, being several more than last year. Offerings during the year were the largest in the history of the organization. The officers for the coming year are: President, Miss Maud Billman; Vice President, Mrs. U. J. Shively; General Secretaries, Miss Marie Lichty and Miss Mae Smith; Financial Secretary, Mrs. N. G. Kimmell; Treasurer, Mrs. Mary Wenger; Editor of Woman's Outlook, Miss Marie Lichty.

Some of the most important work done during the Conference related to the Four-Year Program. That the adoption of this program injected new life and determination in the Brethren church, anyone acquainted with conditions will not deny. Nothing can be said here about detailed results, but doubtless it will be of interest to report that figures covering the year's work showed that there were in the broherhood one front line, four banner, and seventeen star churches. Out of two hundred congregations there were only one hundred and twenty that reported anything. Out of a possible number of 2,800 attainable goals, 772 were gained, 552 were lost, there was progress in 336, and no report at all on 1120. It is easy to see that somebody must get busy. By action of Conference the National goal directors were continued in office until the expiration of the Four-Year Program. Renewed efforts will be made all along the line.

There were no reports given at Conference more thrilling and significant than those of the mission boards, both home and foreign. The appeals during the year were met with splendid responses. Offerings for both boards went "over the top" and then some. Besides, a number of men and women have offered their lives in the cause. The foreign board now has ten workers on the field, six in South America and four in Africa. Two more, Mr. and Mrs. Antoine E. Rollier, expect to sail for Africa late in September; and three others have volunteered for service in South America. Here at home twelve or fourteen mission churches will be assisted during the coming year. The Kentucky work was never more promising, and over $2,600 was raised for this work on Thursday evening. There will be fourteen workers in that field next year.

From reports given it was learned that the work of the College is moving steadily forward, with a promising outlook for the coming year. Two new teachers will be in the faculty. Miss Amy G. Puterbaugh will be teacher in voice, taking the place of Miss Martin who resigned after many years of faithful and efficient service; and Miss Hargreaves, teacher in expression.

The Evangelistic Association elected the following officers for the year: President, L. S. Bauman; Secretary-Treasurer, A. T. Ronk. Any church desiring an evangelist can be helped by writing to Secretary-Treasurer at Warsaw, Indiana.

Gratifying reports were given by the National Sunday School Association. In spite of the invasion of the draft in our schools, the annual report showed an increase of eleven per cent in attendance and twenty per cent in total offerings.

The National C. E. work during the year was commendable. New plans were formulated looking toward increased growth, efficiency and usefulness.

At the Conference the College Endowment campaign was given new impetus. W. H. Beachler is enthusiastic about it and his enthusiasm is so contagious that the success of the project is certainly assured.

On Saturday evening an opportunity was given to receive offerings to meet the proposition made by the church at Washington, D. C. The raising of the $1500 necessary was completed and the mortgage in duplicate was burned while the audience sang "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow." Thus one more mission church becomes self-supporting and goes on its way rejoicing.

With what trouble is a speaker afflicted who comes on the platform with a written fifty-minute addresss when he is clearly asked on the program to limit it to twenty minutes? Should the remedy be applied to the head or the heart?

Because of the order of the Fuel Administration calling for an "Autoless Sunday," the attendance the closing day of Conference was materially lessened. Nevertheless, there was a large Sunday school with a record offering of more than $400. H. F. E. O'Neill was the Superintendent.

Following the annual missionary sermon by H. H. Wolford, there was a very impressive consecration service when Mr. and Mrs. Antoine E. Rollier were set apart for missionary work in Africa.

One of the really great addresses of the Conference was given by Dr. J. L. Gillin on Sunday afternoon, whose subject was "Exterminating Un-Christian Social Forces."

Sunday afternoon Conference was treated with a splendid address by Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, representing the World Alliance for International Friendship, through the Churches, on the subject, "The New Task of the Church."

At the last business session it was decided by the unanimous vote of Conference to hold the thirty-first Annual Conference at Winona Lake at the usual time next year.

The closing sermon of the Conference was preached on Sunday evening by A. V. Kimmell, of Whittier, California. This was Brother Kimmell's first appearance on the Conference program and his splendid message was a fitting close to a Conference of more than usual importance.

One Touch of Jesus

BY S. D. GORDON

Author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer, etc."

One touch of Jesus makes the whole world akin. Or, rather, it would be better put in this way—one touch of Jesus reveals the fact that all the world is akin.

When I went to the Orient I was bothered quite a bit, sometimes, in thinking that perhaps I would not fit in the Oriental way of looking at things. Could I really get into human touch with them? Would my American way of putting things fit in? The American has such a distinctive way, all his own of putting things.

And would my interpreter "get" my American English? For American English is so distinct from English English. And most of the English-speaking people of Europe and Asia have been trained in the literature and verbiage of Great Britain.

Then I had read a few of the books that insist that the Orient and Occident have no point of contact. Kipling's insistence on this is familiar, that East is East, and West is West, and the two never get together.

I recalled how the American puts his coat on over his vest, and the Chinese his vest on over his coat. We read a book from left to right, and our olive-skinned brother of the Orient from right to left. And when one tries to get hold of a Chinese sentence thrugh some expert linguist you feel that if you could stand on your head for a fresh point of view it might help things out a bit, linguistically.

But to my delight I found that my misgivings were all awry. Once again my fears did not have a good footing. I made a great discovery that still makes my heart burn—all the world's akin! And a touch of Jesus, the world's divine Kinsman, reveals the fact.

The East balks at our rule of the clock. Our Western way of organizing is a puzzle to them. The highly inflectional languages of Europe are in strange contrast to the agglutinate languages of China and Japan. And our highly polished, abstractly phrased book sentences are in as sharp contrast with their pictorial languages. And our theology! Our intricate, nicely mortised together systems of theological philosophizings are bewildering to them.

But, but—one touch of Jesus, one warm living touch of the divine Man who belongs to all the race, Son of God, Son of Man, Brother of Man, this draws together all the world, East and West, North and South, Arctic and Equatorial, yellow skins and brown, blue eyes and black, round heads and long.

Then the differences become incidental. By themselves they seem as big and hard as the book makers say. They tower to Alpine heights that bar people from each other. But as one gets into this Jesus-touch of heart it is quickly seen that the world's more alike than it is different.

It is striking that as men come to know, in a simple warm human way, about Jesus Christ, they are drawn to Him. They never think of Him as a foreigner. He is one of themselves, they instinctively think. Wherever I went I felt that I was a foreigner, but Jesus was never a foreigner.

In the south of Japan I went into the churches founded generations ago through the Portuguese priests. I listened as the people were praying. But they were not praying in Portuguese. They had no idea that Jesus was a Portuguese, though the Portuguese had taught them of Him. They were praying in Japanese. To them the Man Christ is a Japanese. He talks Japanese. He is one of themselves. The same is as true in the churches founded by the Americans during the past sixty years.

And so it is everywhere. The Chinese think of Jesus as having a round head like their own, and slanting eyes, and olive skin. The flaxen-haired Hollandish maid praying by the side of her single cot pours out her petitions in Dutch. And that, not the Dutch of the books and the scholars; no, the Dutch of the cradle and the fireside, of the street corner and the market place, the Dutch of love-making, the real language of any people. And if you could listen you would feel that she knows down in her heart that Jesus talks Dutch.

I recall an old Lappish woman far up in Northern Sweden, where the nomad Lapps still thrive, and reckon their wealth not in gold but in reindeer. Despite her seventy years she had come three days' journey alone, over the snow on her long wooden snow shoes or skees, to be at the week's meetings. She used to sit about midway down the hall, with the drapery of white hair over her black eyes that glowed and deepened and flamed as she listened.

Of course I talked through interpretation, as I did almost wholly for about three years. Sentence by sentence, short, terse, simple, the message went in a stream, from my lips through those of the man by my side, to the people.

One night these simple-hearted, earnest Laplanders asked to have an open prayer meeting following the speaking. And so it was quickly arranged. And they spent two or three hours in prayer, one after another pouring out the heart, with intervals of silence. I stayed and listened and joined them in spirit. It's surprising how much you can know of things going on by the feel of the spirit.

By and by, I thought it was my old black-eyed, white-haired woman friend praying. We had come to know each other just through the intercourse of our spirits, during the speaking. I glanced up to see. Yes, she was praing in a low hushed vibrant voice. But she had no need of an interpreter. She was face to face with a Friend, a Kinsman. You could tell by the feel of her voice in the still air that she knew that Jesus talked Lappish. They were alone together in closest kinship of spirit.

I recall a Sewdish friend telling me of an experience he had up in the Baltic provinces of Russia. He was speaking in German, the common speech of most of the crowd of those parts. And in that my friend was quite fluent. But it was the high German he spoke, the language that Luther of the highland country of Saxony had made the standard language of all Germany by his Bible translation.

One day, at the close of the meeting, a woman came to ask my friend a question. She was one of the common, unlettered people, and spoke the low German still used by great numbers of her class. But my friend couldn't understand her. At length, after many attempts to make herself understood, the woman simply said, "Ugh, well, I'll just ask Jesus. He'll understand. He talks low German."

She felt in her heart that she would get what would satisfy her quest. So often the common, unlettered people have in freer degree, the spirit of discernment which our Quaker friends call "the inner light." Unhampered by the elements in learning which sometimes hinder, though they need not, they seem more open ofttties to Spirit influences

Now Jesus has a universal human heart. Men of all the race come to feel that Jesus understands them. As they kneel in African kraal, or Chinese village, in Indian tepee, or amid Western civilization, they look up, and they know that there is on the throne yonder one who is bone of our bone, whose experience is our experience. He bends over listening with a man's sympathy, with human understanding.

There is more of God since Jesus came down here, and lived our human life, and went back again. He has taken human experience up into the heart of God. And all the world comes to understand it so, when once they get into simple warm human touch with Jesus, without being hampered by some of our over-conventionalized and abstract Christian philosophies.

It's striking, too, to notice everywhere what it is in Jesus that draws men. They admire his teaching, its freshness and originality and comprehensiveness, and its high ideals. They stand in awe of the character of Jesus, its purity and strength. But these are not the things in him that take hold of their hearts most and compel the devotion of their lives.

It is this: that he loves, really loves them; that he pledges his love in the one unmistakable way, by giving his life, and giving it clear out.

Here is the clue to fine missionary strategy. This attitude of men everywhere, east and west, north and south, toward Jesus when they get the warm touch with him, this gives the strategic clue. Take to them the story of the man who died for them, when he was not obliged to do it. The only necessity was the driving power of his great human divine love. This is the finest, the shrewdest strategy in all missionary propaganda.

Of course other things go with this, hospitals and medical colleges, with the best equipment and the latest of western science. Of course we will take these. Educational activities and industrial, and humanitarian, grow naturally out of the Gospel spirit. We will teach them all about better selection of seed, and how to get larger, finer cabbages, and the like.

And we will seek to co-ordinate all missionary effort, so that the field may be studied and planned for in a thoughtful, statesmanlike way. We will naturally insist that men of nations classed as Christian shall at least not be untrue to the more dominant truths of the Christian faith in their contacts, commercial and otherwise, with the non-Christian people.

Yet, of course, all this is part and parcel of the brotherly spirit, the Jesus spirit. It is possible to do all of these good things and utterly miss the mark in the chiefest thing of giving them warm close human contact with the man who died. It is the tremendous subtle influence flowing out of, not Jesus life merely, but his death, his peculiarly distinctive death, that makes the western civilization so different from the characteristic Oriental civilization.

It is not possible to give them Jesus, in the warm living human way suggested, without giving them these other things, too. That is, it is not possible where his spirit in its breadth, its humanness, its practicality, has sway.

These other things in themselves are secondary. They are of incalculable value in themselves. They are well worth doing in themselves from the humanitarian, the brotherly, standpoint. They fully justify all the millions involved. But from the point of the Book, of our Lord's great commission to his church, from the real Christian point of view, to give these, with the other as incidental, is wholly missing the mark of missionary propaganda.

And it still remains true that the one chief thing that fits a man for any part in missionary service is that he has been caught by the Jesus' passion, which comes only as his life and powers and training are flamed and swept by the Holy Spirit. He may have the best that academic course, and specialized technical training, can give. And the more the better. But if he have not the other simple fundamental essential—well, the least that can be said is to question the value of his going as a Christian missionary, however useful he may be in other ways.

This attitude of men toward Jesus when they really get in touch with him, gives the unfailing clue to missionary qualification, and to missionary strategy.—Missionary Review.

Tobacco and Soldiers

Half the newspapers of the country, with thousands of deluded mothers, have joined hands in helping the American tobacco trust to conduct a sampling campaign and fairly smother the American army with tobacco smoke.

The prepared copy which docile newspapers are publishing offers inane and silly reasons for sending the soldier cigarettes. "Soothe the poor, suffering soldier in the trenches," is the pathetic wail of the tobacco trust, one of the useless and destructive business organizations rivalled only by the "whisky ring."

Try to imagine the board of directors of the tobacco trust sitting in their smoke filled office puffing cigarettes and wiping their eyes with tobacco leaves because of their sympathy for soldiers suffering in the trenches.

This hypocritical blubbering is worse than "tommy rot," whatever that is. There are no American soldiers suffering in the trenches. If there were, the air of the trenches and dugouts is bad enough without being contaminated with tobacco smoke.

The soldiers in the trenches need "soothing." Many a babv has been soothed into its last, long sleep by soothing syrups. Tobacco is a narcotic.

The soldier needs the stimulus of good food, warmth, and full possession of his faculties and command of his maximum efficiency. He doesn't need "soothing."

To "soothe" the soldier is to unfit him for his task, to undo the work accomplished by his long and arduous training. "But the surgeon administers 'soothers' to mitigate the sufferings of his patient," said a college professor, "why not have the same consideration for the soldier?"

That's true, professor, we give anaesthetics to patients, but not to the surgeon. The soldier is the surgeon. The more the soldier is soothed, the easier to conquer him. Don't stupefy the soldier.

It is the testimony of cigarette smokers that they derive no positive pleasure from smoking. They only smoke because they are nervous and shaky and fly to the cigarette for relief.

Suppose a soldier in the trenches happens to get out of cigarettes just before an assault on the enemy. He is already half defeated by his after-smoke misery.

If we make cigarette fiends of soldiers, the situation may become such that before the action the commanding officer will have to issue an order for all hands to smoke so as to get steady enough to obey orders.

The cigarette does the soldier no good. It does him harm. It does not lessen his miseries, it adds to them. The smoker is miserable all the time unless he smokes. The non-smoker is not bothered with cigars, he knows nothing of cigarette miseries. He has better wind, better resistance to disease, stronger heart, sharper eyesight, steadier nerves, surer aim, and is able to endure hardships without the aid of "soothers."

Here is food for thought for women who are collecting money from factory girls, girls in department stores, and everybody who can be induced to contribute to purchase cigarettes from the American Tobacco Company.

Army surgeons display growing uneasiness on the subject of excessive cigarette smoking among wounded and convalescent soldiers. People shower cigarettes upon men who are struggling back to health, and by this means retard recovery, and even do permanent injury to health.

A London military hospital superintendent says: "Nobody objects to an invalid smoking three or four cigarettes a day, but there is danger in fifteen or twenty. A patient returning to hospital after a day's leave is often found with an irregular pulse due to too much cigarette smoking."

This interferes with sleep and leads to a general lowering of vitality. The public should remember that a convalescent soldier is more like a boy than a grown man in his power of resisting nicotine.

It should be borne in mind that cigarette smoking injures the soldier just as much before he is wounded as afterward. The harm done before is less apparent but not less real. A man with a cigarette heart is unprepared to stand a bad wound or any other test of endurance.

The tobacco habit and everybody who encourages this death-dealing practice by growing, selling, or distributing the poisonous weed are enemies of freedom and of human welfare.

The American Tobacco Company's sampling campaign, which is being assisted by women's clubs, the Red Cross, and even the Young Men's Christian Association, is against manhood, stamina, and efficiency of the army.

Thousands of healthy boys who left their homes for the front with sound hearts and sound nerves will come back wrecks, cigarette fiends, fit only for a bed in a hospital or a lunatic asylum.

Every cigarette a soldier smokes does him harm. Here are some if the things it does: Cigarette smoking raises the pulse rate and the blood pressure and so weakens the heart. Tobacco is a heart poison.

Smoking makes the soldier short of wind. The men who smoke most are the first to fall out on a "hike." Watch the great smoker. He's a quitter. He can't stand the pace.

Smokers are twice as liable to consumption as non-smokers. Trenches and dugouts are not healthy places at the best. Smoking doubles the danger. Smokers are less accurate in shooting. One smoke cuts down accuracy twenty per cent.

The habitual smoker is shaky and nervous when he can't get his cigarette. Smoking tends to undo everything that training is intended to do for the soldier.

The athlete does not smoke, because he needs a strong heart. Tobacco is a heart poison, nicotine is nearly as deadly as prussic acid. A drop will kill a man by paralyzing his heart. Five minutes' smoking raises pulse and blood pressure. No athlete smokes when in training. The athlete needs a good wind. Smoking weakens the lungs and causes breathlessness. The doctors in the Phipps institute of Philadelphia have shown that a smoker is twice as liable to consumption as a non-smoker. The athlete needs sturdy muscles. Doctor Lombard, University of Michigan, shows that smoking lessens a man's capacity for muscular effort. A single smoke cuts a man's muscular power appreciably. An athlete needs steady nerves. One smoke cuts a man's accuracy in target practice twenty per cent. Regular smoking impairs the eyesight and weakens the nerves. A soldier must be an all-aruond athlete, hence he should not smoke.

Researches of the Phipps institute of Philadelphia prove that smokers assume double risk of contracting tuberculosis, and the cigarette habit cultivated by soldiers stand greatly in the way of recovery.

Such soldiers are likely to be more nervous and irritable than the civilian patient, also restless and despondent, and it is hard for them to get away from the habits of cigarette smoking. Since it is certain that a considerable number of soldiers, probably not less than ten per cent will contract tuberculosis, and whil have to make a desperate struggle to save their lives, it is evident the effort now being made to furnish them with cigarettes will tend to increase the death roll from tuberculosis.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg, in Good Health.

Pepper and Salt

BY A. SHAKER

The chief use of pepper is to cover up the taste of an article of food that is in itself unpleasant and unpalatable. It has sometimes been suggested that preachers should put a little more "pep" in their sermons and that editors should put it into their editorials. But since pepper has no real food value we take it that those who suggest its use do so, not from a sense of hunger, but because the plain truth is distasteful to them and they prefer to have the real thing covered up with something that will hide its identity and remove its unpleasant taste.

While one of the chief uses of salt is simply that of seasoning yet it has great preservative qualities and because of this has proved a great factor in the supplying of food for man both in season and out of season especially for all lovers of salt fish as well as Dill pickles. While Battle Creek may put the kibosh on the use of salt there are still many people who desire all food for the soul as well as for the body liberally seasoned with salt.

The "pep" in many sermons is nothing more than bringing into the pulpit the language of the street and the manners of the auction block. That there is a taste for this kind of preaching can not be denied, but we have our honest doubts about the wholesomeness of the result of such upon the minds of the hearers.

John the Baptist may have been the most popular preacher in the Jordan valley in his day, but we doubt very much if he would meet the requirements of the average "pulpit supply" committee of the modern church. But should he receive the recommendation of this committee we doubt very much if their recommendation would be endorsed by the average modern church. The John the Baptist type of preacher and preaching has evidently gone out of style, but it is evident that everywhere the spirit of John is needed and the preaching of a John the Baptist is needed to call a world to repentance to prepare for the still coming King.

The writer once knew a good sister who regretted very much that she had been induced to sign a pledge to contribute one cent a day for a year to missions although her husband owned two farms. But this was in the good (?) old days of which some of our older brethren love to speak. One cent a day! This would shame a boot-black that made any pretence of supporting missionary work in any systematic way whatever. How infinitesimally small some of our contributions seem when compared with what we spend in useless, if not harmful, indulgences! How can such a one sing,

"I gave, I gave my life for thee,
What hast thou given for me?"

Buzzards and similar scavengers are protected by law because they do what man neglects to do in the way of destroying unwholesome and filthy carrion that is a menace to the human family; but there is another type of scavenger that can hardly be classed with the buzzard, for instead of destroying that which corrupts, he only spreads it out among his fellows and increases the affliction. There are those with a sense of smell as keen as that of a buzzard who seem to delight in ferreting out any ill report that may be circulated about any good man or woman and to spread it from mouth to mouth until the odor of the report resembles that of an old-time country abattoir, or in plain English, slaughter house. Watch out for the human buzzard.

The Sunday School

The Sunday School and Democracy

A Rally Day Program that Rallies

Rally Day comes this year on October 6, but Rally MONTH takes in the whole of September. Rally Day is not quite the right name for it: it should be Rally Month. The Sunday School Journal has this significant paragraph on the subject:

"September is Sunday school Rally Month. No formal action of committees, superintendent's cabinets and boards is required to make it such. It is Rally Month by divine right of the seasons. Midsummer, with its lethargy, its vacations, its recreational diversions, is past. The public schools are opening. Boys and girls are turning again to their books, men and women are giving themselves to the tasks of desk and store and factory with a new zest. A new spirit of diligence, earnestness and business like purpose is everywhere evident. By every law of habit, of association, of natural fitness, of opportunity, September is Rally Month."

Superintendents, pastors, teachers, Sunday school workers,—are you preparing for it? Have you resolved to make the most of it? The need is great, greater than ever. Retreats, diminishing enrollment, and a falling off in attendance from 6 to 20% are reported in nearly all rural districts, and the great cities are not faring any better. We MUST regain our lost ground and advance into new territory. That is the way our Allies on the Western Front are now doing and by that method they will win the war.

"For every reason of need, of opportunity, of patriotism, of devtion to the cause of Christ, we should go forward and not backward."

Pastors, officers, and teachers should plan deliberately and wisely for an efficient campaign. It means work, hard work. You can not have a rousing Rally DAY without a stirring Rally MONTH. The reason why some schools get so little out of Rally Day is that they put so little into it. Do not wait until the day is at hand: Begin NOW. Lay the matter on the minds and hearts of the people. Issue a call for advance and do not be satisfied with anything else. Do something each day, each week, press steadily forward. Start a forward movement that will end in a great climax on Rally Day.

Do not be satisfied with hurriedly arranged programs and impromptu service. The times demand the best there is in your people. A cheaply devised program will not do this year. Enlist the sympathy and the support of the church and the community in a great campaign for liberty and righteousness. Kindle enthusiasm for increased enrollment and attendance during the fall and winter. Fix on something definite, a definite purpose for the day and definite goals towards which the day's observance should contribute. A program which merely entertains, which does not promise permanent results, a permanent contribution to the life and work of the Sunday school and the community is unworthy of use,--it is not commensurate with the cause which we profess to serve.

We heard a lecturer say not very long ago that after we have done our best we can still do better. Sounds paradoxical, but it is true, because of the unused energy that is pent up and not given an opportunity for expression.

A special Rally Day program will be ready in a few days. Send in your order NOW that there may be no delay in transit.

SPECIAL FEATURES OF THE PROGRAM

The program has been prepared and carefully edited jointly by Prof. J. A. Garber and the editor of the Sunday school literature. It is made for Brethren people, by Brethren people, and with the needs of Brethren Sunday schools in mind.

It aims to emphasize the kind of citizenship the world of tomorrow will demand; to show that if democracy is to be safe for the world it must have its root idea in God as revealed in his word.

The program has several special features, one of which is a pageant representing the allied nations (a flag service) the climax of which is the bearing aloft of "By This Sign We Conquer" as the only Banner under which the nations of the earth may unite and secure for themselves a permanent peace, the peace of which the angels sang when the Christ-child, the Prince of Peace, was born.

From beginning to end the program emphasizes the religious element which should pervade all life at all times, but especially during these stirring times.

Send your order for programs at once to the Brethren Publishing Company, Ashland, Ohio. Price, $2.00 per hundred, including ten copies of the Supplement; five additional copies of the Supplement will be sent with each additional fifty coies of the program above one hundred.

Every school in the brotherhood should use this program. It will help you make the coming Rally Day a crowning success.

A Statement and Important Announcement

At the General Conference of 1917 the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren church appointed a committee with instructions to make a careful study of the comparative and relative merits of the Closely Graded Lessons issued by different denominations. At the late General Conference the committee in its report recommended the use of the Closly Graded Lessons published by the Methodist Book Concern. Formerly, these lessons, with slight changes, were used by the Presbyterian people.

These lessons may be ordered through the Brethren Publishing Company, though it is too late now to provide special Order Blanks for use in ordering. If your school wishes to begin the use of the lessons recommended by the committee above named October of this year, please make out your order on separate sheet and mail to us, but DO NOT CANCEL ANY ORDERS ALREADY MAILED, as that would create confusion and much trouble.

Teacher Training to the Fore

In line with the recommendations of the Sunday School Council representing about thirty denominations with a Sunday school enrollment of more than nineteen millions the next four or six weeks will see teacher training given the foremost place. The movement is not only representative but comprehensive in its outlook. It seeks to emphasize five

Specific Objectives

1. The organization of at least one teacher training class in every school to meet at the Sunday school hour.

2. A monthly workers' council in every school, meeting at least ten months out of the year.

3. A midweek training class in every school for the benefit of present teachers. May follow the prayer meeting.

4. Co-operation with the community training school of religious education which presents graduate and specialization work, trains leaders for classes in the local school and provides central training facilities for schools unable to maintain their own classes.

Suggested Plans

1. Every pastor is requested to preach a sermon on "Teacher Training A National Need," on September 15 or 22.

2. Preparatory to this service there should be a workers' luncheon and conference to consider the needs of the local school and to see how they can be supplied through the teacher training drive.

3. On the afternoon of Teacher Training Sunday there may be an interdenominational community conference to consider the best ways of securing trained teachers for each local school.

4. In the evening of the same Sunday there should be an inspirational service, union or separate meeting, having for its theme "The Importance of the Sunday School in the Present Crisis." Call for volunteer teachers who will pay the price of training.

5. On some week day evening of that week have a second workers' conference to perfect plans for conserving these results and adding thereto.

6. Several weeks later a second community meeting might be held to receive reports and further plan for teacher training through co-operative effort.

Viewed thus and planned accordingly there will not be a single Sunday school that does not feel the influence of this united effort. Brethren schools will profit from it in so far as they seriously consider their own needs and graciously share with others engaged in a like endeavor. No one cares to be called a slacker. Few desire to be drafted. Then strive to enlist every available recruit for the teaching ministry through this selective draft process. A class in every school means your school.

J. A. GARBER.

Lincoln's Three Books

Lincoln had only three books in early life—the Bible, Aesop's Fables, and Weems's History of the United States. The Bible was the great Book that gave our martyred President his simple, tender, beautiful literary style, both for speaking and writing. The Fables gave him his story illustrations, while the History made him familiar with the great characters and events of the nation. Leave the Bible out of his life and he might have been a moral wreck; at least, there would have been no Abraham Lincoln as the world sees him today.

Young man, the dust on your Bible may be the cause of your downfall—your failure in this life, as well as in the life to come. If you are not a lover of the divine counsel, you will gradually drop out of the Sunday school, the church, the worship and service of the living God. You will become a stranger and foreigner when you should be a fellow citizen of the New Jerusalem on earth and of the capital city of the Celestials in the heavenly world. When you see this red light warning, heed it; step off the track leading to ruin into the way of holiness, happiness, and usefulness forever. —The Christian Herald.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

The Winona Conference of 1918 is a thing of the past; it now remains to be seen whether the work of the conference shall justify the time and money spent to make the conference possible.

It was a GOOD conference. Some things occurred that we would have prevented had we the power to do so, but other things were so agreeably wholesome that they overbalanced by far the things that were not as we would have had them.

The doubts as to the attendance that some of us had in our minds were not well grounded, for the number of delegates in attendance was very nearly if not quite equal to that of 1917. The delegates reported for 1917 were 244. We do not have the report of the secretary at hand and will not attempt to give the number present this year, but it was just about the same as that of last year. The Sunday attendance was about 200 short of that of last year which undoubtedly was largely due to the new "gasoline order," but it was still a big day.

The Brotherhood owes a debt of gratitude to Miles J. Snider for furnishing Evangelist readers with a gist of the proceedings of the Conference. It is no small task for any one man, aside from the Conference secretary, to keep "tab" of the proceedings of the various meetings from day to day. With his other duties pressing upon him during the entire Conference the Editor can not do it; but it was well done by Brother Snider and we wish to give him this word of appreciation. The full report will be published in connection with the Brethren Annual and we trust the short sketch supplied by Brother Snyder may create a demand for the complete report that will justify its publication.

G. C. Carpenter's smile after the burning of the (duplicate) mortgage on the Washington, D. C. church was of the "Bill" Taft variety, and now any one who reads his report and appeal in this number of the Evangelist can see that should the churches come to the assistance of the Spokane, Washington mission in the same liberal way the smile will broaden into the "Billy" Bryan kind; but let him smile, it only shows that the church is following his efficient leadership in home missionary work.

The letter from Brother Yoder in South America was received only a few hours before we left Ashland for General Conference, thus it is seen that he made a pretty good "guess" as to the time it would reach the home land. While the letter was five weeks on the road it was not much longer coming from South Amercia than some of our Sunday school supplies seem to be on the way from Ashland to the Pacific coast. The handling of second class mail is one of the serious problems publishers must now face.

Brother Yoder improved his mid-winter vacation from the University by traveling among the villages and cities of Argentina and preaching the gospel and assisting in Bible coach work. We trust the way may soon open for Brother Yoder to be supplied with a motor truck to enable him to conduct similar work out of Rio Cuarto as a headquarters.

While California had the largest delegation in attendance at the General Conference in the history of the work in the far west the workers of this great state were not all present, as the letter from the pastor of the new Brethren church at Fillmore makes plain. If there is one thing Brother Lowman possesses more than other men do it is his faith in God and in the success of the Brethren cause. His spirit of optimism is indeed commendable, and should more of us possess that same spirit we would most certainly be more likely to reach the goals of the Four-Year Program. Confidence and faith are perhaps half the battle in any undertaking in life. The Fillmore congregation is going on with its church building, but it is not neglecting the building up of the spritual life in the meantime as the report of their recent communion services clearly indicates.

Another of the Brethren missions where the spirit of optimism predominates is that of Fostoria, Ohio. This is one of the very promising fields for the Brethren in Ohio and we rejoice at the progress the Brethren there are making. The little Sunday school that for the present must meet in the homes of the members has made a record in its offerings that should make any school feel proud. Not many schools can establish a six months' record of TWELVE CENTS per member for each Sunday for that period of time.

It is also to be noted that this little school observes all the missionary days of the church and that its live missionary superintendent keeps in mind all the fields now occupied by the Brethren and gives them special days in the school. Brother Mack White is now preaching for them twice each month at the morning hour. We wish also to thank Brother Hazen for his expression of appreciation of the Evangelist.

If Mohammed can not get the mountain to come to him, then Mohammad must go to the mountain. This has been the experience of A. L. DeLozier in his efforts to do missionary work among the Italians in Allentown, Pennsylvania. Shut out of a place to hold an Italian Sunday school by the sale of the room he had begun using for this purpose he still finds time to preach and to sing the gospel on the streets in the very center of the Italian colony. In this work Brother DeLozier is greatly helped by a goodly number of the members of the Allentown church who have caught a portion of his vision and would share his enthusiasm as well.

G. C. Carpenter gives our Christian Endeavor readers a few facts this week that should be of real interest to all Endeavorers. Few societies are as welll acquainted with the work of the society at large as they should be, and in many instances they would be really astonished should they learn of the big and practical things some societies are really doing. Of course the BIG thing the Brethren C. E. societies are doing is supporting the Kentucky mountain work. The officers of every society should read what Brother Carpenter has to say and then ask their societies to act accordingly.

This week we publish the program of the Pennsylvania District Brethren Conference which will meet in Johnstown the first full week in October. We have been informed that no less than four district conferences will meet that same week. This will make it impossible for any one representative from either the College or the Publishing House to visit all the conferences, but we feel sure these interests will be well considered at each conference anyway.

W. T. Lytle issues an urgent call to the churches of Indiana to send a full quota of delegates to the conference which meets at Flora during the first full week in October. Indiana has important work to do and no doubt will keep up past records for good conferences. When we remember the little struggling congregations at Flora as it was twenty-three years ago when we took it into our already full circuit as a young preacher and then think of what a magnificent force for God it has grown into we have a great longing to visit this field once more and to rejoice with the Brethren in their success.

Orion E. Bowman gives his final report of funds received by the General Mission Board for the last conference year in this number of the Evangelist. It is a splendid report, but it is Brother Bowman's desire to make a better report next year. Shall we help him to do so? The answer is yes.

One of the most important announcements ever made to the Brotherhood is that of Dr. Furry which appears on another page and has to do with the education of young men who otherwise will be sure subjects to the call of the government to enter the trainnig camps of the country.

Around the Editor's Table

Important Changes

The changing order of the world and of its forces has been called to the attention of our readers on several occasions by some of our writers during the past year. These great changes are felt in every phase of the world's work. The social order is changing, the educational world is being worked over, the business world has been almost revolutionized and the religious world has passed through and is passing through some marvelous transformations. To meet these opportunities and to insure the fulfillment of its mission the church is forced to take some advanced steps in its plans and purposes.

Realizing the need as well as the opportunity to render a greater service to the church and to the world some changes have been planned for the future work of the Brethren Publishing Company. The work and business of the company have increased during the last three years to the extent that it was felt additional help should be added to the office force of the company and at the meeting of the members of the company at Winona Lake this additional help was provided for. The present editors will remain in office with some changes in the relation they hold to the company. A. D. Gnagey will remain as editor in chief of the Sunday school literature and R. R. Teeter will remain as office editor and business manager of the company, while George S. Baer has been called to the position as editor of the Brethren Evangelist and assistant editor of Sunday school literature.

It is believed that this arrangement and this combination of workers will prove most helpful to the interests of the church and the Publishing Company. Brother Baer was most heartily endorsed by both his senior editors and his selection for the place is regarded as a most happy one. It is only to be regretted that he feels he can not enter upon his new duties before the beginning of the new year. A more formal announcement of the selection of Brother Baer and a sketch of his life and his preparation that has made him fit for this honored position will be given to our readers in due time before he enters upon his editorial duties.

Helping the Business Grow

With the resources of a company limited as the resources of the Brethren Publishing Company are this added expense of its operation means quite a venture from a finanical point of view, and there is only about one way that this extra expense can be met, and that is through the co-operation of all the pastors and churches of the entire brotherhood. If we can be assured of this there will be no danger but what we shall be able to meet this added expense, but unless we can have this, almost certain failure is before us. So, Brethren, the matter is "up to you." We will do our part to improve the output of the office and also to improve the service when this added help comes to our relief, but will you improve your patronage and remember that every little helps, and remember that the business of the Brethren Publishing Company is the King's Business and that its aim is to do the business in a manner that will be well pleasing to the King.

The one feature of the business during the past year that made it even SEEM possible to add this extra help to our office force was the great increase in the subscription list of the Brethren Evangelist, but should this increase prove but an expression or an outburst of enthusiasm that is only temporary in character our plans would all fall to the ground. Not only must the subscription list we now have be made permanent, but there must be a great many new names added to the list to assure success. The list must grow and grow so long as the Brethren church grows. Of course we expect it to grow until the end of the time set for the completion of our great Four-Year Program, but if it ends with the completion of that it has not been a success, it has been a failure, for ground gained in this case, as ground gained by the opposing armies in Europe, must be held to prove a real success. We have established some "front line trenches" in this business, but we can not hold them unaided and alone. We must have the support of the reserve forces that have not yet been brought into action. We must have fifty more churches do work similar to that done by forty-eight churches during the last year.

To help the pastors to reach goal nine of the Four-Year Program and to get the Evangelist into seventy-five per cent of the homes of their congregations a slight modifications of the terms made to such churches last year has been planned and will be put into immediate effect. It is believed that this plan will help a number of churches to win a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll and still prove a paying proposition for the Publishing Company.

During the last year congregations that placed the Evangelist into the homes of 100 per cent of the active families of Brethren composing their membership either by the budget plan or by an every member canvass, or congregations that secured a list of one hundred or more subscriptions were given a special rate of $1.50 per year in addition to a place on the Honor Roll. The above terms will continue throughout the remainder of the campaign, but in addition to that we have decided to offer the following inducement to pastors and churches that want to win this goal and incidentally a place on the Honor Roll: Any church that will through a PERSONAL canvass succeed in placing the Evangelist into 75 per cent of the homes of the membership it reports in its statistical report to its conference will be given the special rate of $1.50 per year along with the churches that have reached 100 per cent of their ACTIVE mmbership by the budget system. We feel that this arrangement will be a just one for from the experience we have had as a pastor we feel sure that seventy-five per cent of the total membership of the average church is equivalent to one hundred per cent of the active membership, but it will give the pastors and churches a little less responsibility in reaching the decision as to what families are rightly considered active or inactive by using this system. And yet we are convinced that it is a sound business policy for the average church to list its families and to send the Evangelist into their homes, paying for the same out of the church treasury as a part of their yearly budget or from a special fund raised for that purpose. Every Brethren family should have the Evangelist just as every pupil in Sunday school has a quarterly or a lesson help and it should be supplied in the same way.

A Cause of Great Rejoicing

It was a source of constant delight during the meeting of General Conference to know how splendidly the churches responded to the many calls from the various boards of the church to supply them with the funds necessary to carry on the work for which they were created. "Over the top, and beyond" was the almost unanimous experience of these boards. The Sunday School Association, the Board of Benevolences, the Foreign Missionary Board—all these had glowing reports to make. Delighted hardly expresses the feeling of those who carry these various projects and activities in their hearts. But how did this come about? Largely through the greater activities of the churches in an endeavor to reach all the goals set for the Four-Year Program to be sure, but how has this enthusiasm been carried from church to church and to the extent the financial reports at the Conference would indicate?

We do not hesitate a moment in stating that it is our firm conviction that the Brethren Evangelist has been one of the largest factors in this success. Not only has it been means of expression for the enthusiastic goal directors who have used the Four-Year Program Page during the past year, which has been no small matter in this forward movement, but since the paper has been sent into TWO THOUSAND new homes during the year, which surely brings it into contact with six or eight thousand more members of the Brethren church, it is not to be wondered at that the greatest offerings in the history of he church were made to the various funds during the last conference year; and we do not feel that we are making idle boasts when we say we are convinced that, if the churches and pastors will see that two thousand more families receive the Evangelist next year, there will be an equal if not a gerater increase in the offerings of the year before us than there was in the year just closed. Information and exhortation go hand in hand in securing finances for the Kingdom of God, and what better or more successful method can be employed to get such information and also the enthusiasm necessary than to employ the columns of the Evangelist for this purpose? There is no better method at present and we not only urge the pastors to co-operate with us in getting the paper into thousands of Brethren homes where it does not now find its way, but we also urge our pastors and mission workers in the fields and on the boards to keep the columns of the paper filled with the news of the field and with the thoughts of the leaders and workers in every department of the church.

The Evangelist is OURS, that is it belongs to ALL of us and it will be just what WE, you and I, make it. Will we do our best during the year that is before us? It is my prayer that each worker may feel personally responsible for the part he should do in this matter.

Teaching the Krus to Keep the Sabbath

BY REV. WALTER B. WILLIAMS
In The Missionary Review of the World

Usually the Krus don't need to be taught to rest. That comes naturally to the native of a tropical country. But to rest on Sunday with our rice farm newly planted, or heading out, and hundreds of hungry birds waiting to take their part—ah, thats' another story!

In this section church members as well as heathen spent their Sundays in their rice farms. We preached for three apparently fruitless years. "The birds no fit to chop (eat) rice on Sundays?" was the universal query.

"Of course, the birds will eat some, but God no fit to let you suffer if you obey his law," we reiterated. It was no use. The idea of letting the birds eat any was too repugnant to Kru nature.

Then a native rebellion and a revival swelled the number of our boarders at the Nana Kru Mission School to about 100. On top of that the European War inflated the price of rice beyond all reach. And rice is the "daily bread" of Kru school children.

Prudence said, 'Cut down your school one-half, or close it." Christ said, Feed My Lambs." We cast prudence to the four winds and laid hold mightily upon God.

We cut a rice farm. True, we had never done such work before. It is not included in one's bringing up in London, England, nor Philadelphia, U. S. A. But, then, neither had we been taught to make soap, nor manufacture a yeast cake, nor build a house, nor sit on a Kru man's head while he carried us through a river up to his mouth. We had mastered these arts—and, anyway, the missionary's motto in Africa is, "You can because you must."

Our boys helped us faithfully. Acres of swamp land were cleared of an eight years' growth of bush. Anxious days were spent scanning the sky for clouds while the debris was drying. One glorious day arrived when everything went up in smoke. Dirty days followed when cleaning the ground by hand was the order of business. Brighter days came when the air resounded with the click of hoes as long ranks of women and girls —in all 220—advanced, cutting the ground, covering the seed, and planting cassava with their toes.

Then came Sunday. We put the newly planted rice farm into God's hands on Saturday night "and rested the Sabbath Day." And then we saw God's purpose in all this toil, for, while the heathen could not close their eyes to the illustrated sermon of an unwatched rice farm on every Lord's Day. A thousand eyes were upon us. Whether or not the birds ate their part, we do not know. The rice sprouted and grew luxuriantly. The heathen waited in non-commital silence. Then came the drought. All around us rice farms withered and died under the blazing sun. Our own rice began to look a little rusty. We went to persistent, united prayer. Rain fell—tons of it—into the greedy sea, but only a light sprinkling upon land. It was as if God said, "See I hear your prayer, but you must wait a little." We saw God's hand in this test of faith when we found out that in the town a devil woman had been engaged to conjure rain.

Our rice, unspoiled by the drought, began to head out. "Surely now you no fit to leave your rice on Sundays," our neighbors plead, almost in tears, for to deliberately waste food in hungry Kruland is the unpardonable sin. Every possible concession was advanced. "Pay our town boys to watch your farm on Sundays while you do your church work," was the popular suggestion. Anything except trust God!

Faithfully was the bird watching done week by week. A score of boys, through drenching cold rain, under blazing hot sun, from daydawn to sunset, six days out of every seven, drove away hte rice birds from the grain. Day and night sessions of school were held by the missionaries so that no student should leave his beloved studies because of the farm.

Not only did our boys watch. They prayed. Earnestly, importunely, every morning and before eating every night, great volumes of prayer went up to God, that he would take care of the rice and show the heathen that he had power. Their own faith grew and deepened, and so did the faith of our native workers.

To adults, with families dependent upon them, with all their people against them, with relatives refusing to let them have seed rice because thy said, "You teach the birds to eat rice," and "You waste the rice by letting the birds eat it on Sundays"—to such adults, leaving their farms untended by any visible helper on the Lord's Day was a sore test of faith. One or two faltered, but most stood firm, and it was given to these to declare: "If the birds chop (eat) all our rice, all right, it be good, God will bring something else for us." Timid Christians went into their farms on Sundays and in every case lost nearly the entire crop, while the farms, unwatched on Sundays, of stronger Christians, right beside theirs, yielded such abundant harvest that men exclaimed, "God can do something!"

We had the best crop of rice in the country, and the natives say that if this Mission rice farm belonged to any one man, they would take him by force and make him king. The visible appeals to the African more than anything else. What he sees he believes in.

This farm was a farm of prayer. Before cutting, it was dedicated by prayer. Before burning, it was dedicated again by prayer. The planting rice was dedicated by prayer. And prayer has gone up unceasingly for it. The results prove that it pleased God.

Why Did They Do It?

BY WILLIAM M. DANNER
In The Missionary Review of the World

A church in Chicago recently took up an offering of $30,000 for foreign missions. They are not wealthy people, but of the middle class. They had not pledged themselves to the work and the unusual demands of the war press on them as on others. They were not obliged to give so largely—

Why Did They Do It?

WHY did this church, composed for the most part of people, who would be called "poor" as to this world's goods, deliberately plan for an Annual Missionary Rally which all knew would mean appeals for money?

WHY did they appoint special committees and workers to plan and campaign unitedly for months in advance?

WHY did these people forget that they had no comfortably cushioned and carpeted church, but were worshipping in a wooden Tabernacle, with sawdust for carpet and were sitting on the soft side of pine boards?

WHY did they bring Missionary representatives from many different foreign mission Boards to present the missionary work and appeal for money for many lands?

WHY did the people crowd the tabernacle for afternoon and evening sessions for four days, and on Sunday come in almost continuous sessions for morning, afternoon and evening?

WHY did 164 young people joyfully join the former volunteers in offering themselves for Foreign Mission service?

WHY did these people give out of their poverty, voluntary offerings, so largely that more than $30,000 was given or pledged for Foreign Mission Work?

WHY did the pastor, without thought of his own needs, pour out his soul in words of entreaty, lovingly and faithfully urging his people to do their best to send the blessings of the gospel to every creature?

THE ANSWER to these questions gives the reason why Christians rejoice in giving themselves and their substance to advance the cause of Christ at home and abroad. It is the consciousness of indebtedness to Jesus Christ and loyalty to his command and compassion for those who do not know his salvotion. Long live the spirit which reflected "the compassion of Jesus' 'in the Third Annual Missionary Conference of the Moody Church, Chicago (May 29th to June 2nd, 1918). May that spirit stir other churches so that they too may know the joy of being co-laborers with God for the redemption of the world.

Why Send Missionaries to Latin America?

BECAUSE we are commanded by our Lord to preach the gospel "to every creature."

BECAUSE the dominant church there does not teach the real gospel of Jesus Christ.

BECAUSE the people have not been given the Bible or encouraged to read it.

BECAUSE the people have no assurance of salvation and peace with God.

BECAUSE the people have not been allowed "the right of private judgment," in reading the Bible, or in questions of conscience.

BECAUSE the priests, the Virgin Mary and saints are thrust between the sinner and the Savior.

BECAUSE salvation by works is there substituted for salvation by faith.

BECAUSE religious rites are made a matter of money, as, for example, the masses for the dead, marriage, baptism and festivals.

BECAUSE the people are not given that which will satisfy their spiritual natures.

BECAUSE wherever the gospel has been faithfully proclaimed in these lands, there have been conversions and converts have become noble Christian men and women.

Endeavorers Should Know

That in the world there are more Christian Endeavor Societies in Methodist churches than there are in any other denomination.

That in one society in New Hampshire in the last two years twenty-one of the thirty-five members have joined the church.

That one Intermediate Society in Australia sent in one year 626 bouquets of flowers to shut-ins and held 226 meetings in homes visited.

That from many British societies all the men have gone to the battle front.

That there is a C. E. Society on the island of St. Helena, where Napoleon died.

That Hindoo and Mohammedan friends helped to pay the expenses of an Endeavor Convention near Bombay, India.

That British Societies have welcome-home committees to welcome and take care of the boys when home on furlough.

That a young Endeavorer in India sold his buffalo and hired an interpreter that he might go to the Endeavor Convention and know what was said. Who of us would sacrifice his best work animal to attend a convention?

That our Kentucky mission work is facing the greatest opportunities for service since the beginning of the work. The best days are yet ahead.

That every C. E. society in the Brethren church should make and send a pledge for Kentucky missions for 1918-19. Many societies gave pledges at Winona Lake Conference, but about fifty societies have not yet pledged for the new year.

That every pledge for the past year should be paid at once, as they are now on the delinquent list. The Lord's business should be done promptly and efficiently and diligently.

Pennsylvania Adds One More

Several weeks ago Miss Nora Bracken District Secretary, visited the Brush Valley, Pennsylvania church, giving particular attention to the young people. Finding the pastor, Brother E. H. Smith, quite sympathetic with the suggestion, plans were formulated for the organization of a Christian Endeavor Society. More recently Brother Smith reported the organization of a new society with a charter membership of fifty members. Ten of these persons have enrolled in the Expert Endeavor class. The officers are as follows: President, R. A. Crisman; Vice President, Bessie Hooks; Secretary, C. L. Hooks; Treasurer, Eva Hooks; Corresponding Secretary, Alberta Cousins.

Heatiest congratulations go to Brush Valley for a new society with such a large membership and class in Expert Endeavor. We cordially welcome these new Endeavorers into the fellowship of our National Union, a large field of Christian service in which they will find abundant opportunities to use all their powers for Christ and the church.

Our Increase Campaign

The foregoing report forms a fitting prelude to this word concerning our increase campaign. "Increase Campaigns" is the service theme presented by the United Society for September and October. The idea is to encourage the organization of new societies and the enrollment of new members. In harmony with these lines of endeavor we are calling attention anew to the goals of our Four Year Challenge, viz., thirty new societies and an increase in membership of two thousand by 1920. Let presidents call a meeting of the Executive Committee to determine the proportionate share of increase due this year and to perfect plans for the enrollment of these new members. Here is a task for idle Lookout committees. Then wherever there is no Christian Endeavor society the church will do well to consider the advisability of organizing a society. The time for renewed effort on the part of all is upon us.

From Coward to Hero

It was a fact that John Armstrong seemed to be a misfit in the surroundings amid which he was born. Why this studious, thoughtful boy should have been called upon to live on a Utah ranch and have been expected to ride and tame wild horses when he was deadly afraid of them was one of the mysteries of life. John's father had been born in the East and had been educated with all the care that is given to the son of a more than prosperous man. Not contented to take things easier than most boys were able to do, he surprised his family one day with the announcement that he wished to go West and make a place for himself, instead of dropping into his father's very comfortable shoes. Finally going to Utah, he went onto a ranch, which he took to as naturally as though there had been generations of out-of-door people behind him.

John's mother could not understand where his 'softness," as she called it, came from —certainly not from her, for she could ride any horse in the country and was a better marksman than most of the men. His father understood, and counseled patience. "Do not be in a hurry," he would say to the mother, "I have seen his kind before. The boy is made of good material, and that is the main thing. There are plenty of things for a man to do besides loping around a ranch. Perhaps John was intended to take the place in the East that was mapped out for me."

John was fifteen the year that old Brush Creek went on a rampage and rose higher than it had done for thirty years. It stormed along like an army, taking with it many of the bridges, and at last away went the dam at the head of the canal, which spilled over from end to end, covering the lower fields with six feet of water. The creek, which had never been known to stay up more than three days, was now in the sixteenth day of its flood, and the range riders brought the disquieting news that yet five feet of solid snow still remained at the head of the creek, and it was still raining.

The threatening danger grew greater, and promised to engulf all of Mr. Armstrong's possessions. He and all of the neighboring ranchmen were out, fighting night and day to save their property. He had been away from home for forty-eight hours, and John and his mother had been obliged to look after the ranch and the stock.

The old saying that "it never rains but it pours" proved true at this time also, for John's mother, who had hardly known a day's sickness in her life, became ill. She kept about for a whole day, trying to conceal her suffering from John, but in the evening she went in a heap on the floor. Floods mattered but little to John then, for there was his precious mother, dying, as he believed, and no one but himself to care for her. He managed to get her into bed, but nothing he did for her helped and the suffering increased. The nearest doctor was ten miles away, and on the other side of the mad, roaring creek. And how could he leave his mother, who probably would die while he was away.

But he knew that he must get help, and that it would not do to delay. The only horse in the corral was Terror, for his father and the men had ridden the others away when they had gone to fight the water. Even the best riders thought twice before mounting Terror. John had a great sinking of the heart, as he thought of what was ahead of him, but he did not hesitate, for he would have gone through fire for his mother.

Either Terror welcomed company on this stormy night, or she was too surprised to resist, for she was easily caught and saddled. But as soon as John was mounted she recovered her senses, and in a twinkling her four feet were bunched, and she tried to make herslf into an aeroplane. But John's fear for his mother had driven all weakness away and he stuck to the horse. He applied the whip so vigoruosly that the animal reconsidered matters and started on a wild run across the plain. But he again used the whip as if to urge her on to greater speed. This was more than her horse sense could work out, and so she decided to settle down to good, steady work John always maintained after his experience that Terror was all right—that she had been looking for a master and had not found one until he had taken this wild ride.

On and on they went at break-neck speed, but never fast enough to satisfy John, for always ahead of him was the white face of his mother and the fear that he might not get the doctor back home in time. He talked to the horse as though she were a human being, telling her that she must not fail him. And she seemed to understand, for she put forth every effort. Once or twice she stumbled into a hole and nearly fell, but she recovered her footing and was on her way again. Once they had to ford a stream which was very high, and the horse hesitated for a second when she reached the bank, but John touched her lightly with the whip and she plunged into the water. Part of the way she had to swim, and John clung to her as best he could. When they reached the opposite bank, she clambered up like a cat, and away they went again.

Now they neared Brush creek, and if the bridge for which John was making was still standing he was all right, but he knew that even the most willing horse could not swim the roaring torrent that was rushing through the channel. John gave a great sigh of relief as Terror's feet struck the first planks of the bridge, and he knew it was still firm or the horse would have hesitated to go on it. They were soon over, and the rest was easy.

John reached the little village where Doctor Royal lived just as day was breaking. The doctor was accustomed to all sorts of calls at all times of day and night; but when he saw John he couldn't help looking startled, for the boy was not one of the type that would take such a ride on a wild night unless the case was urgent. And, when John told him why he had come, the doctor lost no time in starting, for he knew Mrs. Armstrong well enough to realize that she had not given up so long as she was able to stand. He was into his clothes and had the saddle on his horse in less time than it takes to tell it.

—And back they started, Terror leading the way. John slowed up when they reached the bridge and he could see that the water was already on a level with it, and that if they were to get across it must be within a very few minutes. He asked the doctor to go ahead, for if the bridge was to take one of them down it must not be the man no whom his mother's life depended.

As soon as the doctor's big bay horse struck the bridge, he stopped and began to back, for he knew that the bridge was not safe. The doctor dug his spurs into the horse and he plunged forward, tearing a piece of earth away, and leaving a space about three feet wide from bank to bridge, but he crossed safely. John backed Terror and touched her with the whip. The mare took a run and jumped over the hole. The bridge swayed as he struck it, but his horse made the other side in about three leaps. The horses were frightened and the doctor and John were unable to stop them until they reached the top of a hill about a half a mile away. When they looked back, the bridge was gone and the creek was roaring as though rejoicing that it had swept away the last trace of man's control of it.

"A close shave that, my boy," said the doctor; but John did not hear, for already he was again on his way, and Terror was loping down the hill. The doctor chuckled a little and said to himself. "Armstrong has lost a boy tonight and gained a man."

When they reached the ranch, they found John's mother in great pain, and the doctor gave John plenty to do as his assistant. "Can you save her?" was John's first word, his face white and his eyes big with anxiety.

'Yes, John, but we were none too soon. It's a pretty stiff case of pneumonia, and your mother should have been in bed three days ago. But her strong constitution, and more than all that, her 'sand,' will pull her through."

And they worked like beavers for an hour or more, until finally the patient began to respond and could once more breathe without the great effort she had been making to do so. When she was quieter, John slipped away, and when the doctor looked up to tell him what he thought of his courage he found the boy just outside the door, lying face downwards, his head buried in the grass and his body shaking with sobs.

John's father came home in the late afternoon, quite worn out with the terrific strain under which he had been working, but the rain had ceased to fall and the creek had done all the damage it could before another year. He came in with a "Hurrah" on his lips, but it never got beyond them. When he saw the doctor and the expression of John's eyes, he almost fell to the floor himself, and leaned against the door, looking from one to the other, afraid to ask what was wrong.

But his wife called to him, and the doctor reassured him. He told him also of John's going for him, and that but for his son's bravery and quick action the story might have been different. John's father knew that his boy had done a man's work that night. He drew himself up to his full height and held out his hand. As John grasped it and the father and son looked into each other's eyes, they understood that henceforth they were to be man and man.—Caroline Parker, in the Congregationalist.

To All Members of the Ministerial Association

If you have not received your card, showing your standing, from September first, it is an indication of the fact that your annual dues have not been paid. The amount is 25 cents, and it is due in the office of your Secretary-Treasurer before October 1. Nine new members were added to our roll at the General Conference, and eighteen of the delinquents have been re-instated, making our total membership, at present, 177.

Faithfully, Your Brother,

Indiana Churches Notice

The District Conference will be held at Flora, Indiana, October 7 to 10. Full Program will be published later. All churches should begin to plan now to send a full quota, all pastors should begin to pray now that this may be the largest and best Indiana Conference ever held. There will be plenty of room and all can enjoy the new accommodations which will be turned over for use to the Conference. There will be royal entertainment furnished, we assure you, and especially at this critical hour in the world's history. We must be more zealous and prayerful in all our activities. So, this conference will give us our place in this community in a larger way if real enthusiasm is manifested.

W. T. LYTLE,
Pastor of Conference Church.

Ashland College

President Wilson says: I would particularly urge upon young people who are leaving our high schools that as many of them as can do so avail themselves this year of the opportunities offered by the colleges and technical schools to the end that the country may not lack an adequate supply of trained men and women."

A unit of the Students' Army Training Corps will be organized in Ashland College. Young men as young as eighteen may enter this unit and receive the full pay of a private and in addition the government will pay all charges for room, board and tuition. This gives young men an opportunity to remain in college while preparing for the army. It is an exceptional opportunity and ought to be grasped by young men of draft age.

Ashland College is a thoroughly organized institution and offers courses in the Arts and Sciences, Theology, Religios Education, Public School Work, Piano, Voice, Expression, and Business.

Nearly a year has elapsed since our last report appeared in the columns of this paper. As to the work, we have made no rapid strides, although we can see some advancement. During the early part of March this year, we discontinued our services with the Church of God. Since then we have been holding our Sunday school services in the various homes of the Brethren. Although we have felt the "summer slump," our average attendance at Sunday school for the second quarter was 25. I like the spirit of a Salvationist I heard on the streets of our city the other night when he remarked that it never got too hot or too cold for him to go to church. Our offerings since March 17th have amounted to $69.17, including 23 Sundays. Our efficient missionary Superintendent is doing splendid work. The first quarter of the year we had South American Day. This introduced the work in South America, giving a description of the country, of the beginning of the work and the splendid band of workers.

Last Sunday, August 18th we had African Day. This was similar to our South American day, in addition to this we lifted an offering which will go toward the support of the work there. Next quarter will be Kentucky Day. We hope to have a missionary Sunday at least once every quarter, introducing the different fields of work and lift an offering toward the work, and thus in this way encourage the people to give. Our Cradle Roll Superintenednt has already added nine members to this department. Brother White has consented to preach for us every other Sunday morning.

Sister Baringer came over from Fremont on the 8th of this month and organized an S. S. C. E. Already four new subscriptions have been secured for the Woman's Outlook. July 21st we dedicated our service flag in honor of two of the boys who have gone from us to serve their country. Our prayer meeting attendance has averaged 25 per cent of the membership this summer. Occasionally we have others coming in to share with us the blessings that come from these meetings.

As to the work elsewhere—doubtless the Brethren from other churches are as interested in the report of the work from other places as we are. It surely does us a great deal of good to hear of the splendid work and the progress made in other parts of his vineyard. Every time I read the Evangelist it inspires me to do greater work for the Master. Personally, I would not want to be without the Evangelist even if the subscription price was $5.00 a year. It seems to me, brethren, that we could do a great amount of good by placing the Evangelist into the Y. M. C. A. libraries and Women's Rest Rooms of our cities in which we have Brethren churches located. Brother Yoder's book—God's Means of Grace would be a fine addition to any public library. (And now Brother Editor, you may expect something like this to happen over in Fostoria.) We solicit the prayers of the entire brotherhood in behalf of the work here.

R. ALGER HAZEN.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

We are now having our winter vacation in the schools and are taking advantage of it to have special meetings for children every afternoon. We expect to close with the observance of decision day in the Sunday school. This week we are also having preaching every night.

Last week I visited our work in Cabrera and remained there several days to visit among the people. There was a good attendance at the services in spite of the very cold weather and there are marks of progress in the work. Brother Atkinson is now able to use several of the young people as workers in the Sunday school, and is also meeting with good success with the Young People's meeting on Wednesday evenings. A number of the young people are now willing to lead the meetings. One young man, whose home I visited, goes six miles every time to be present at these meetings.

In connection with this visit at Cabrera Brother Atkinson and I began to do something to carry out our program of extension work. We canvassed the neighboring town of Dehessa with gospels, going from house to house through nearly the entire town. This place has about fifteen hundred inhabitants without even a priest there and no religious services of any kind except about once a year when a priest comes in and reaps his harvest of baptismal fees. Nevertheless. a large proportion of the people are still dominated by the "religion of their fathers," although the majority are indifferent and quite a few seem to be open to the gospel.

From this place I went to Cordoba, the capital of the province, where I visited the work of the English Brethren, commonly known as the Plymouth Brethren, being the liberal branch of these Brethren. They were celebrating the national holiday with a Sunday school outing which was attended by about four hundred persons. I had the privilege of addressing this gathering and of speaking again in the evening at the church. They have a nice church near the railway station, and are doing very good work in this fanatical city. We have more in common with them than with any other denomination at work down here and they seem glad to co-operate with us.

From Cordoba I went with the Bible coach along the line to the north toward Tucuman. Mr. and Mrs. Langran have given seven years to this kind of work, six months in the year. They are generally accompanied by some one else who helps with the preaching.

We did colportage work through the country and several towns the last one being a town named Jesus Maria. Here I was obliged to leave the coach in order to return for our special meetings here this week. The experience I had however, more than ever convinced me that it is a class of work that we ought to be doing also. On our way we met many people who had received tracts when the coach passed that way before and they were delighted to have it come again. Here and there were isolated Christians who are trying to do something to interest their neighbors also. The work, it seems to me, is truly apostolic and is the means of doing several important things: first, it gives the gospel to those who are not being reached by the established stations, then it keeps in touch with the isolated believers and sympathizers, and third, it develops centers for the establishment of permanent missions later. The sales of Bibles and portions covers a large part of the expenses of the work, but to most of the people we gave literature gratis. Some refused to receive it because they had already been told by the priests that all our literature is false.

The present Bible coach is drawn by three large horses and there is much work and expense involved in maintaining them. On this trip especially we got into a region near the mountains where water was very scarce and once all we could get was what we could beg from the engineer of a train who left us have some from the engine. Brother Langran is convinced also that an auto would be very much better and is intending to sell the present outfit in order to buy an auto. An auto constructed as we wish will cost about $1100.00 but we have already $245.00 including $15.00 just received through Brother Oxley, and we are confident that if it is the Lord's will for us to have one that the means will be forthcoming.

I learned on my trip that all the missions have been suffering heavy losses during the past few years on account of members moving away to find work. This winter also has been marked by extraordinary cold and the cost of living has increased greatly.

By the time this reaches the Evangelist readers it will be time for the General Conference. We shall not forget you in our prayers and ask again that you be faithful in remembering us also.

I have just learned that three of our young men who have entered the Salvation Army in order to give their time to Christian work have left it again and are supporting themselves in Buenos Aires where they hope to hold meetings together and build up a mission. They have never given up the Brethren doctrine and wish to remain in fellowship with us.

"Over the Top" for Washington, D. C. Concentration Wins

"Think that you can't and nobody is going to take the trouble to dispute you. Believe that you can, and, somehow, folks will take you at your word."

A few people believed that the mortgage on the First Brethren church of Washington, D. C. could be burned (in duplicate) at the Winona Lake conference. It was done. The real legal paper will be burned at a spcial service in the Washington, D. C. church as soon as all the pledges are paid and the mortgage released.

This is a notice to every one who sent us a pledge before conference in response to the appeal in the Evangelist and also to everyone who gave a pledge at Winona Lake that the same is payable not later than October 31st. Many sent the cash with their pledges, an evidence of faith in the project. Let payment of pledges be made at once if possible; payment to be made to the writer.

The following telegram was sent to Elder W. M. Lyon, pastor of the Washington, D. C. church on Saturday evening after the mortgage in duplicate had been burned: "Over the Top." Amount raised. Duplicate mortgage burned. Great conference." Doubtless there was rejoicing at the Sunday services in the Washington church.

A Proposition—"Over the Top" for Spokane

Others in the brotherhood had planned to help burn this mortgage but were waiting. The writer is making this proposition, to the Home Mission board and to the whole brotherhood, namely, that all the money we receive on the Washington appeal in excess of the amount needed to burn the Washington, D. C. mortgage be given to the First Brethren church in Spokane, Washington, to apply on the $2,000 that will enable them to go forward with the completion of their building. Who will object?

May it be that many will add to their amount actually pledged an additional sum to help Spokane go "Over the Top?" It's all for Washington, whether East or West, on the Atlantic coast or on the Pacific. "Over the Top" for Spokane would be a good slogan.

May it be that many will just send us a splendid gift to swell this excess sum for the far northwest. The reports from the Spokane church are all of the kind that inspire confidence and the expectation of great things. The pastor, Brother Paul Miller, assures us that they can go on with the building of their church, of which only the basement is completed, if they can secure $2,000. This amount ought to be provided in this day of big things without any difficulty. Let us encourage Spokane at once. Let those who thought of helping Washington in the East, but did not, now help Washington in the West where there is an almost unlimited field for the Brethren church. Act now, and place in this fund a fine balance to help Spokane.

Fillmore, California

Some weeks ago we told something about our new work at Fillmore, California. This work is under the care of the Southern California Mission Board, with the writer in charge. I want to report that our work here is growing. Our Sunday school last Sunday was a record school for any one Sunday yet; in spite of the summer slumps some of our schools are reporting. We now have 7 classes with a corps of officers and teachers that are alive to the situation and the Sunday school bids fair to be one of the leading schools in the town in a short time. We are in the midst of building a $9,000.00 church and hope to have this ready to go into by November of this year. There are some additions to the church every few weeks. Though this is an exceptionally hard field, I think there is a splendid opening for the Brethren with our whole gospel plea. On last Sunday night we had the largest audience since coming here. I have been rather amused at some of our folks back east, talking about our Four-Year Program and saying that 40 new churches by 1920 is too many. Say, Brethren, this is the greatest cause this side of heaven. Why not make the most desperate effort to accomplish this goal?

Southern California had 5 churches, this one at Fillmore makes 6, and we are already talking another one by 1920; you fellows back East hurry up a little and the Lord's work will grow faster. I tell you the King's Business demands haste.

I almost missed reporting our communion here on August 15, when there were 28 members seated at the tables. Many folks had never seen this service as the Brethren observe it. It made a deep impression on some of the outside folks. For this service we had as visiting Brethren, Brethren Neilsen, Warren and Elder A. V. Kimmell, who assisted us in the service. Pray for us. I wish we could be with you at Annual Conference but can not this year.

Italian Open Air Services

For some time we felt led to conduct open air services in the Italian colony of our city. At last a night was named and we went down into the very heart of the colony. There were fifteen of us. We had no sooner begun to sing than a large crowd collected. Brother Fehnel had charge and gave a brief address which was followed by several ringing testimonies all in English. Also the singing was in English except a solo: "Wonderful Words of Life," which was sung in Italian by the writer. I then stepped into the ring and delivered a brief address in Italian. The meeting ended by inviting all to accompany us to the church where the regular evening service followed.

The following Sunday evening (August 18) we went to the same place and conducted another such service in Italian and English. Again a large crowd greeted us. The interest was good.

Of course no one followed us to the church to worship, but we are not discouraged.

We had the real happy satisfaction of knowing that we had done some sowing. But moreover I was in the colony later and found that a great impression had been made. A Catholic woman came to congratulate me on preaching the truth. She said: "La sua religione e compagna della nostra" (your religion is like ours).

I am glad to report that a cultured Italian woman who corrects my manuscripts, is thinking. The last time I was at her home I asked her if she would accept a New Testament with my compliments. Her answer was that she would not only accept, but read it. Needless to say that I immediately gave her a copy of the beautiful Diodati Italian version. Her willingness to read along with many questions she asked, gives me hope for this family of free-thinkers.

Evangelist readers are doubtless interested in our little Italian Sunday school. But I am sorry to report that it no longer exists. The room we were occupying changed hands and the new landlord refused to let the Sunday school continue. Then we held it in our church. But soon the city quarantine for measles plus the intimidation of parents by the priest, put the quietus on our little school. We hope to win the children back and have them attend our regular English Sunday school.

Indeed, after some advising with workers in other churches who have had experience in imimgrant work, I have decided upon extension work among the Italians. By extension work I mean the attempt to win them right into our little church on Fifth street, instead of trying to establish a separate mission.

A large Evangelical church in Cleveland and a Methodist church in Scranton are succeeding very well in this line of work.

So in a word I may say: There is no Italian mission in Allentown yet, but we are not discouraged. All we ask is your prayers and we shall succeed.

But for the present we get great joy out of the sowing. We will let it to the Lord about the reaping. The day may not yet be here for the Brethren church to have her first real Italian Mission. But when that day comes we shall have such a mission. Only let each one be sure to do his share in bringing it about.

REPORT OF AUDITING COMMITTEE

Winona Lake, Indiana, Aug 29, 1918.

We have this day audited the books of the Secretary-Treasurer of the Missinoary Board of the Brethren church and find the same correct.

(Signed' A. C. HENDRICKSON.
(Signed) H. E. EPPLEY.

The past year has certainly been one of success along Missionary lines. We have more than reached the goals and I desire to thank all who have contributed and made this success possible. Next year we have a new "Goal." It is this. (1) Every pastor to urge his congregation to make at least a 30c per member contribution at "Thanksgiving" for Home Missions; (2) To make a total offering in General Fund aggregating $7,500.00.

May every pastor co-operate with us and begin to plan now for the Thanksgiving Offering.

Respectfully Submitetd,
ORION E. BOWMAN,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Marriages

STRONG-HOFFMAN—Miss Eva Hoffman and Paul Strong, of Akron, Indiana, were united in marriage August 1st, at Rochester, Indiana by Ora E. Oxley. Mrs. Strong is a member of the Brethren church, New Highland. They will make their home near Akron at present. Mr. Strong is in the draft age and expects to be called into service soon.

ORA E. OXLEY.

STARN-WOOD—At the home of the officiating minister, Muncie, Indiana, August 9th, 1918, Oliver C. Starn and Edith M. Wood were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. Brother Starn whose home is at Sterling, Ohio, is a theological student at Ashland College and is preparing for a useful life in the Brethren ministrly. Miss Wood is a member of the church at Maple Grove and will be much missed by the workers there.

The best wishes of the many friends of the bride and groom go with these noble young people for a happy and successful life.

J. L. KIMMEL.

APPLEMAN-FISHER—Mr. Curtis D. Appleman and Miss Mary Elizabeth Fisher were united in marriage Thursday evening, August 15.

Miss Fisher has worked in the M. E. church for years, but expresses her desire to unite with the church of her husband's choice.

May the blessed Holy Spirit guide them in the safe path of righteousness, peace and happiness as they travel through life together. Ceremony by the writer.

E. A. ROWSEY.

Our Dead

ZOOK—David B. Zook was born at New Enterprise, Pennsylvania, February 19, 1849. He was the third son of Jacob S. Zook and Barbara Bulger Zook. In 1870 the "call of the west" lured him to Fairmont, Nebraska, where he lived for twelve years. During his residence at Fairmont, 1878, he was converted to Christianity while attending a United Brethren revival. He shortly after was ordained in the "Church of God" and took up the call of a minister.

On November 8, 1883, he was married at Lincoln, Nebraska, to Julia A. Crawford and fom 1883 to 1903 he resided in Crete, Nebraska, during which time he followed his profession.

Owing to failing health he moved at this time with his wife and son, Clarence V. Zook, to Sunnyside, at which place he resided up to the time of his demise.

He is survived by his widow, his son, and two brothers.

He passed to the world beyond at 10:30 P. M., June 22, 1918.

JOHNSON—Mary Jane Johnson was born, and lived all her life in Preble County, Ohio near Gratis, being born October 12th, 1838 and departed this life August 14th, 1918, aged 79 years 10 months and 2 days. She was united in marriage to Alfred Johnson on June 5th, 1861. To this union there were born three children. Mr. Johnson and one son preceded her to the Spirit world, leaving two children, three grandchildren and one great grandchild; besides a host of fiends and neighbors to mourn her loss. Sister Johnson was a faithful member of the Gratis Brethren church and will be missed as one of the older residents has said she was one of the best women he ever knew. She was afflicted for many years, yet through all this she manifested that patient Christian spirit, as all good mothers do. Through all her afflictions and helplessness she was tenderly cared for by her loving children, at the home of Mr. I. O. Flory and his good wife Lenora. They can look forward for their reward and reuniting in that world where loved ones never part, Funeral conducted by the pastor C. E. Beekly, Gratis, Ohio.

KELSEY—Robert A. Kelsey was born in Whitley county, Indiana, October 17, 1856, departed this life at his late home near Argos Indiana, July 24, 1918, at the age of 61 years, 9 months and 7 days. He was united in marriage to Ella Young, March 17, 1881. To this union three children were born, one son and two daughters. Brother Kelsey with his wife united with the Corinth Brethren church, Twelve Mile, Indiana, in 1893 and was a faithful member, always ready to do his part in the service of the Master. Eight years ago he removed to Argos, Indiana. Since which time he has been isolated from the church of his choice, but he remained in the faith "once for all delivered to the saints." Just a few days before he departed he called for the elders of the church and was anointed in the name of the Lord. Thus another of our number is gone. He leaves to mourn their loss a loving wife, three children, eleven grandchildren, three sisters, one brother, a large circle of relatives and friends.

Funeral services by the undersigned, assisted by Brother L. W. Ditch and Rev. McMillon of the M. E. church.

the Brethren church? Will not every reader think for himself what these factors mean? Think it through for yourself, brother, sister. Then remember that no success can come without action. Pastors who are the captains of the front-line trenches of Christian conquest must lead. And they must never lead ar retreat. With courage and faith and undaunted purpose and a clear vision of victory they must lead on. They must "carry on." After these leaders must follow the soldiers of the ranks. After all they must do the hard fighting. Volunteers every one of them and oh, how they ought to "carry on!" And then to carry out the figure a bit further the recruiting officers must be at their task every minute. Evangelists—that means you. Every church ought to have a revival,—must have if progress is to be made. The people must give themselves willingly to the service of the Lord. Men and money must be consecrated. To put in a word,—every member of the church must live the finest Christian life and render the finest piece of service in the name of our Lord Jsus Christ possible and then God's blessing will give success.

VOLUME 40 ASHLAND, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1918 NUMBER 35

Editorial

The Mind of God in the Commission

The mind of God is further conveyed in the HOW of baptism. He says, "baptized them." The action of the verb terminates on "them." Do something to the intelligent subject. Apply the candidate to the water, not the water to the candidate. In baptism we are commanded to handle the candidate, not the water. We can rantize (sprinkle) with water, but we can not baptize with water. We baptize in water. In baptism we are required to put the candidate in the water, not the water on the candidate. Edward Irving, speaking of John the Baptist, says, "This is the first baptismal service on record, the new rite of baptism unknown under the Mosaic dispensation." What of it? John said, "I indeed baptize you in water unto repentance" (Matt. 3:11 R. V.). "And they were baptized of him in the river Jordan" (Matt 3:5). "Jesus was baptized of John in (marginal, into) the Jordan" (Mark 1:9).

Mark HOW is further expressed by the very significant words, "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." People who handle the Word carelessly often say, "into the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit." But this is not the mind of God. He did not say this, and we must give heed to what he said. "Into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit" because each one is alike interested, and just in human redemption. "The Father loves, the Son dies, the Spirit quickens. The Father forgives, the Son pleads, the Spirit seals. The plan of redemption originates with the Father, has its essential sacrifice with the Son, and derives its effectual power through the Spirit." The baptism in water is to be into the triune God as named in the commission. When the blessed Trinity is recognized in the rite of baptism as the commission requires, then, those so baptized are said to be in the Father, and in the Son, and in the Spirit. When Paul wrote to the chruch at Thessalonica he said, "in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." Here these Christians were said to be in God the Father. They had been baptizel "into the Father" (Matt 28:19). Paul says to the Galatians, "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ" (Gal. 3:27). Here Paul separates Christ from the Trinity, and yet speaks of being baptized into him. Again, in Romans 8:9 we read, "But ye are not in the flesh but in the Spirit," if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." So Christians are said to be in the Spirit. The question is, how do we get in? The commission says, "baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Now, had Christ intended baptism in the Father, Son and Holy Spirit by one act he would have clothed his language in those words. That he did not use that form of speech, certainly means something. The structure of the language used, other scriptures by inspired men, and the history of the early church establish beyond a doubt the triune baptism of the commission.

The fallacy of the single immersionist in quoting the commission as though it read, "in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost," is that triune baptism is three baptisms. But this is not true. Triune immersionists go into the water but once, and come out of the water but once. What they do while in the water is to recognize the Godhead as three in one, and one in three. While in the water (once) the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, each and alike, receives recognition by bowing the head beneath the wave, "For if we have become united with him in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection" (Rom. 6:5). Yes, even in the likeness of his death; for "he bowed his head, and gave up his spirit" (John 19:30). Having recognized the Trinity thus, the candidate comes "up out of the water" having completed the one baptism that is recognized by all religious bodies, he has no doubts to doubt, and goes on his way rejoicing. In the department of "Religious Problems" in the Christian Standard of February 9, 1918, after using more than a column of space in one of the numerous attempts to explain away trine immersion, Mr. F. D. Kershner says, "We do not regard trine immersion invalid, for the same reason that we should not deny that a Christian had communed if he partook of the Lord's Supper three times in succession." Thanks, Mr. Kershner; if trine immersion is not "invalid," then it must be valid and that is all we are contending for.

The single actionist shouts, "Christ died but once; he was buried but once; he arose but once." Certainly. If trine immersion were three baptisms, there might be some argument in the analogy. But trine immersion is one baptism; it requires going into the water but once and the coming out of the water but once. But it is the one baptism with three bowings of the head, representing the one God in three—Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Of course it is valid.

We are reminded that Paul says, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism" (Eph. 4:5). Of course, when that is quoted, the implication is that we have three baptisms. But since that has been answered, let us notice how that very passage is a fine argument for the trine action. What word did Paul use for baptism in that passage? Was it the word "bapto"? Not at all. Had he used that word then the Eph. 4:5 would read, "One Lord, one faith, one "dip," for the scholars say that bapto should be rendered "dip". But Paul passes by the word "bapto" and selects as a word to convey his meaning, the word 'baptisma." The authorities say this word "baptisma" means dipping. Then what you find in Eph. 4:5 is not "One Lord, one faith, one dip (bapto)" but "One Lord, one faith, one dipping (baptisma)." The word dipping certainly admits of repeated action. It is left to single actionists to explain why Paul passed by their favorite word, bapto (dip) and selected the word baptisma (dipping). Trine actionists say it is because obedience to the commission requires dipping instead of dip. Of course, a dipping in baptism is valid, as our single actionists admit.

Then between 145 and 220 A. D., Tertullian, one of the church, fathers refers to the mode of baptism as trine immersion. Here is the quotation: "When we are going to enter the water, but a little before in the presence of the congregation and under the hand of the president, we solemnly profess that we disown the devil, and his pomp, and his angels. Hereupon we are thrice immersed, making a somewhat ampler pledge than the Lord has appointed in the gospel." This is finding trine immersion very close to the apostles, to say the least. But to escape the force of this historical testimony, the writer in the article referred to says that Tertullian admits that the thrice immersed is a "somewhat more ampler pledge than the Lord has appointed." In the issue of the same paper, of April 6, 1918, Mr. Creel makes the same charge. But the baptism is not the pledge he refers to. Obeying a command is different from making a pledge. The "ampler pledge" was renouncing in set form the "devil, and his pomp and his angels." Obeying a command of the Lord is one thing, pledging a thing before the "congregation and under the hand of the president" is quite another.

What Law Cannot Do

It has long been claimed by opponents to prohibition that "you can not make men sober by law;" all of which we are perfectly willing to admit, for we know there are many things the law can not do; but there are some things that, while the law itself can not do, it can make possible for men to do.

While the law may not be able to make men sober it is able to prevent other men offering for barter or sale to another that which intoxicates, yes it is able to prevent in a large measure even the giving to another that which is for his hurt. We have never yet seen a man that would contend that druggists should be permitted to sell cocoaine, opium, morphine, etc., to whoever shall call for it. All admit that the sale of such drugs should be in the strictest conformity to the law which has been enacted to control their sale, but many men seem to think the sale or distribution of alcoholic liquors can not and should not be under as strict control of the law as the sale of other poisons. The law may not be able to make a man sober, but it should be able to keep him from getting drunk.

It is also said "you can not make men loyal by law;" the truth of which statement we are also ready to admit. The penalty of the law may prevent one from giving expression to disloyal thoughts or from performing disloyal acts, but law has never yet made a traitor over into a loyal citizen. Law can establish and uphold justice so that men may be inspired to be loyal to the form of government under which they live, but it can not force them to accept graciously its provisions unless this sense of justice which they possess is gratified. There may be many ways suggested to make men loyal, but they will all fail unless the spirit of justice prevails. A prominent American writer has recently said, "Men can not be goaded into loyalty," and he spoke the truth, for men can not be goaded into any thing that is really good. All the nagging and all the sarcasm and all the venom of men and newspapers supporting a government will not make the subjects of that government loyal to it, if that government refuses to recognize the rights of the people who are subject to its laws .

Once again the law can not make men good enough for heaven. The great law-giver of the children of Israel performed a most worthy task for the world, but all the laws he wrote with their combined power have not been able to keep man from sin nor to save him from the sins already committed, but what the law could not do Jesus Christ in fulfillment of the law can do and moreover does do for those who give him the opportunity.

The Brotherhood of Man

It may be a long time before the brotherhood of man is realized in any marked degree. It may seem strange that the much teaching upon this truth for so many years, yes even so many centuries, has borne so little fruit. It is difficult to imagine the world would have been thrown into such terrible struggle for mastery as it is at the present time had the doctrine of the brotherhood of man not only been taught but lived as well. It is difficult for men to call one another brother while they are engaged in mortal combat, and it may seem far fetched to even talk about it while the great world struggle is on, but as it was once said: "In time of peace prepare for war," we may now say, "In time of war prepare for peace."

It may be a difficult matter to establish peace again on the earth, especially an enduring peace. Peace that is forced upon one is not a peace that can be depended upon. It is the peace of good will that is enduring, consequently one of the greatest tasks of the world at the close of the present war will be to establish a condition of good will among the nations of the earth.

It has been said, "When peace is established on an enduring basis, then and not until then can the spirit of brotherhood be extended among the nations, and then it must be extended to include all the nations of the earth."

This peace and this brotherhood can be nothing short of Christian, and in the face of this feeling among men it is high time the churches and the Christian people of the world bestir themselves to make the world Christian so that a real brotherhood of man may be established in the world.

Leading the People

People have always been led and we presume there shall be no change while time shall last. Since this seems to be the lot of man in every age one of the most important questions is that concerning leadership. Proper leadership, good leadership always leads onward and upward, and because of this it is well to refuse to be led by any different kind.

A certain professor says, "The German people are being led by the nose," which statement if true is anything but complimentary to the German people. We have seen rings in the noses of certain kinds of refractory animals that they might be safely handled and led in the way their owners and masters would have them go; but is there any occasion for any people in this twentieth century to fall into such a mental and spiritual state that they must submit to such leadership? Of course it is easy to criticize, much easier than to offer helpful suggestions, so let us not become too severe in our criticism of a people who will endure such leadership.

In the first place it is no easy task to lead any people successfully, and it must be remembered that most leaders are born, not made, and if one knew the inner working of the minds of the great world leaders of the past no doubt one would be amazed at the difficulties they had to contend with in order to get the people to follow their leadership. One of the greatest trials in the life and work of Moses was that occasioned by the people questioning his leadership, and Elijah wished to die because the people refused to allow him to lead them to walk in the way of God.

While it seems easy to lead people into evil it is alogether a different matter to attempt to lead them in paths of righteousness. There is a clamor today for efficient leaders, but it should not be forgotten that intelligent followers are needed to get the best results from efficient leadership, although intelligent followers will soon detect inefficient leaders and will refuse to follow them. This is the one hope for the German people. Although their eyes have been blinded by false teachers and the materialistic philosophers of the past century, yet it is felt that their general intelligence is too great to be much longer deceived by the speciousness of the arguments of their leaders and that soon they will refuse to be longer led around by the nose and will in some way assert their own individuality and in time become a really progressive people.

But it is not good to forget self in one's contemplation of the weaknesses of others, and it might be well to ask, Who leads you, my reader? What is the power or the force that is leading you on in your life? Are you letting the customs and habits of the age lead you around by the nose? or are you asserting your independence and depending upon some higher and more liberty-giving leadership than that? There is a better leadership which, sad to say, is too much neglected. Have we forgotten the words: "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God." This is the one and only leadership that can always be depended upon.

Men Who Think

It matters little what line of work one may follow as a profession or as a life work it is the man who thinks who succeeds. It is man's power to think that enables him to obey the command of God and to subdue the earth. Men who have succeeded in life are men who have given thought to their work, but how this great power to think has been prostituted by unholy or unessential uses! Charley Chaplin, the noted actor in comic movies, said of his work, "I took long walks at midnight, thinking, thinking, thinking." No doubt these long walks and these long, long periods of thinking helped him to develop the many diverse and comical situations that have convulsed the movie audiences with laughter, but, what is the good of it all? The world will accept such devotion to one's art of this type and commend it; but, the thing that puzzles us is why can not men be found who are as devoted to developing the things that are really worth while in life? Or are there a great many men who think and think for God at the midnight hour without the world learning of it?

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

What of the Program?

We are going on. We can not do otherwise. Conference never allowed a single thought of retrogression in the Program. We must win the war is the sentence on every lip—almost—in the U. S. A. We must win the Goals was the thought of all the Conference. A few minor changes were authorized which in due time will be made known, but the Program is the program of the church as outlined and expected of the churches by the Conference.

Attainable? Sure enough. What we wish to do can be done as long as it is in line with the plan of the Master. This Program is that. It may not be as large, but is not any bit smaller. We do not please him if we do not attain every one of the Goals.

With only half the churches working, we can not hope to reach the Goals for the thing is planned as a basis of growth for the whole church. Indeed, some of the Goals can not be reached unless 75 per cent of the churches reach them. Here is a big hint to organization leaders. It will be a race for your life, remember to get 75 per cent of the churches in line.

What a pity! Some churches have not reported on a single goal not a single time. They are on the map; they do not wish to be counted dead or dying. But it will be a death mask they wear if they do not report. They can report some; more if they work hard.

BAME.

Evangelizing the World

BY HOMER ANDERSON

Upon whom does the evangelizing of the world depend? This should be considered by every ordained minister in the Brethren church. I bring this message because it is of much importance in these dark days when it seems that the devil has come from the bottomless pit. If ever the miinsters of the gospel ought to awake it is now. I am sure that many of the ministers of our beloved church have been called to the ministry by the church, some have felt the call spiritually and some have sought the ministry as a job to make easy money. While this is true and we are condemning no one, for we all have our faults, yet many of the ministesr have not considered the importance of the ministry.

We, the ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ are his agents to advertise his gospel to the world, and God the Father and Jesus Christ the Son and the Holy Ghost will stand before us at the judgment bar of God, if we fail to evangelize the world.

When we look over our church annual and find over three hundred ministers and the names of two hundred churches there is one hundred ministers not in service. Then we have fifty-seven pastorless churches which could be supplied from this one hundred idle ministerial list; and this is not all, there are some of our faithful ones preaching to two different congregations. There are eleven ministers preaching to 22 congregations in the Brethren churches. Some of the idle ministers are perhaps too old for service and who have done more for the church than many of the younger men and they have a just cause to be out of active work, but there are some of the one hundred that have their names on the ministerial list that have failed to do their duty and they ought to consider what an important office they have neglected. Let us use some of the words of Jesus in connection with our thoughts on how we shall evangelize the world and on whom does it depend? Matthew 10 chapter, Go is the word used by the Son of God. Go, and as ye (go) preach, saying the kingdom of heaven is at hand. These are the words of Jesus as he sent out the twelve apostles and when he sent out the seventy, Luke 10th chapter, comes again the word "Go", and Matthew 28th chapter once more "Go." "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." Once more the word "Go" comes to the broken hearted Mary. As she stood at the empty tomb of Jesus she was told to "Go" tell his disciples. Go is the word that is heard by all of the servants of Jesus. Go tell the world that Jesus ascended into heaven and the signs of his coming are being seen and heard by the believers of the Christ. Go tell the world. Who shall go? God's ministers, the agents of Jesus Christ the Son of God. This is no time to lie down on the job. I look at the great industries of the world. I find that the industry that was well advertized is the one that made good, and through its faithful agents it became famous. Look at the agents that come to your homes telling you the value of the product which they represent. Listen to them and learn a lesson. Just a word—take the name of the Ford automobile. What made the Ford famous? It was the Ford agents telling to the world the value of the Ford with the Ford industry behind the agent to meet what he has represented. But what would Ford have done if his representatives had lain down on the job? Now, I need go no farther. This is enough to prove my point. Ministers are the agents of God, and heaven will be what the ministers have adveritzed it to be and the souls in heaven will be the result of the amount of labor the ministers have done while in the ministry, and the minister that laid the ministry aside to take up an occupation that he might get more of the world's goods than the ministry would give, is not the kind of an agent for the gospel that goes to evangelize the world. I know one town with six ministers, one retired, all the rest all able to go. Go, not stay, but go. Jesus never said stay and I will bring all nations to you. No. Go is his command. Go tell the world of the Chirst. Will you go? You must go. God commands it. Let there be no slackers. A minister of the gospel can not sit and read the call of Michigan with five pastorless churches calling for some minister and not answer the call. When our beloved church calls for her ministers let us be loyal to the church of our choice. If America called you to the trenches you could go to face German guns I believe. But I sincerely believe there is more danger for a minister to refuse to preach Jesus Christ and him crucified than there is to desert from the army of the world. Are we soldiers of the cross? Are we? Then get off the bleachers and get in the game and help raise the blood-stained banner of Jesus over all the world. Jesus has been holding up his arms so long victory has been assured. But his arms are tired brother minister. Won't you volunteer? Come, get under his holy arms and help hold them up until this hellish war is over. Victory shall be ours. God's ministers, upon you the evangelizing of the world depends.

The Christian Sabbath---The First or Seventh Day, Which

BY HENRY WISE

The Sabbath or Seventh Day.—In the first chapter of Genesis we have a description of the creation, and in the second chapter, second verse, we read, "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his works which he had made." This is all we know of the Sabbath for more than 2200 years. The next we hear of it is in connection with the giving of the manna to Israel as bread in the wilderness between Elim and Sinai, Exodus 16: 23, 27. Six days they were to gather it, but they were not to go out to gather on the seventh as here would be none. This was the law Sabbath as given to Israel; and yet some of them violated that law by going out to gather it on the seventh day. Then the Lord said unto Moses: "How long refuse ye to keep commandments and my laws?" Thus God made a covenant with Israel to be a perpetual covenant. See Exodus 31: 13, speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; v. 16. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. For the violation of this law Sabbath there was attached the penalty of death. See v. 15. Now if this Sabbath is yet in force when was the penalty removed? If removed, when, how and by whom? If the penalty is removed then the law is null and void. This Sabbath was also a sign symbol or type of their rest in Canaan, to which they did not attain because of unbelief. See Hebrew 4. With whom did God make this covenant? The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us who are all of us here alive this day. Deuteronomy 5: 4. And how long was it to last? Throughout their generations; when did their generations end? I answer with the generation of Jesus Christ, Matthew 1: 1. The generation of Jesus Christ, "The son of David, the son of Abraham." Abraham begat Isaac; and Isaac begat Jacob. And in v. 16, "And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ." Here ends Genealogy. It was during the lifetime of many of this generation Jerusalem was taken, the temple destroyed, and they were dispersed among all nations. If God made any covenant with Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob, which had any sabbath in connection therewith, we fail to have any account of it. The old covenant failed, not on God's part, but on the part of Israel. For finding fault with them, he saith: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord when I will make a new Covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah." (Jeremiah 31: 31. So in the fullness of time God sent his Son, as an Ambassador, or Representative, who took the law covenant and nailed it to the cross, that by his death and resurrection he might bring in a new creation, with which to establish that new and better covenant, even the covenant of grace, in which we are not justified by the works of the law, but by faith in him who the Father justified by raising him from the dead. In the new covenant there is no law sabbath. The new creature in Christ Jesus holds sacred the day of the ended work of the new creation, the first day of the week, the day the Lord hallowed and sanctified by his resurrection, and entered into his rest, as did God when ending his work of the creation on the seventh day. But did Jesus set the first day of the week apart as the Sabbath? Not by precept, had he done so we would have had another law Sabbath, but as a day of the assembling of his disciples he gave sanction to it by meeting with them on that day; see John 20: 19-26: "When therefore it was evening, on that day, the first day of the week, and when the doors were shut where the disciples were, for fear of the Jews, Jesus came and stood in the midst, and said unto them Peace be unto you." v. 26. "And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them, Jesus cometh, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you." Thus he showed his approval of their meeting together on the first day of the week, by meeting with them and pronouncing his benediction of peace upon them. Never once do the scriptures speak of his meeting with them after his resurrection, either in the Synagogue or temple, on the Sabbath as had formerly been his custom. He was seen of them forty days, and speaking to them of the things of the Kingdom of God. Five Sabbaths had come and gone during that time; what must be the answer to this strange conduct on the part of Jesus? There can be but one answer to the question; that on the first day of the week, Jesus ended the work of the new creation, by his resurrection, thereby he blessed and sanctified the first day and entered into his rest. At the end of the forty days, he is taken up from them, but before he leaves them, he bids them tarry at Jerusalem, to wait the promise of the Father, which said he ye have heard of me. They waited over one Sabbath, two Sabbaths, and not anything strange happened, but on the first day following the second Sabbath, after his assension, occurred the most wonderful event in the Church's history. They were all assembled waiting according to the command, and the Holy Spirit came on them in a most miraculous way. The number present was about an hundred and twenty. The church was born on the first day of the week, fifty days after the resurrection of Jesus. Up to this time it had been in embryo. It was begotten by Jesus the Christ, the Son of God.

Having been born of the Spirit, she is now under the leadership of the third person of the holy trinity, and being endued with power which was then manifested, she goes forth on her mission of love to carry the gospel to the uttermost parts of the world. So when the Christian church keeps holy the first day of the week, she is keeping in memory or celebrating two of the greatest events in the history of the Christian church: namely the resurrection of Jesus, the bringing of the new creation, and the descent of the Holy Spirit; on the day of pentecost, the birth of the Christian church. The enduement with power, to keep themselves holy, and lead the world up to God. It is not surprising to me that Jesus, never met with his disciples after his resurrection, in the synagogue or temple on the seventh day or Sabbath, which was typical of their rest in Canaan, to which they did not attain as he result of unbelief. Hebrews 4: 4 to 11. But he did meet with them in their assemblies, at different times on the first day of the week, the Christian sabbath. See Luke 24: 33. John 20: 19-26. Which is typical of the believers eternal Sabbath, or rest in the kingdom of God, the inheritance of all who become new creatures in Christ Jesus. It was befitting that the disciples of Jesus should come together on the first day of the week, the resurrection day of Jesus the author of the new creation, the day in which the Father, justified or vindicated him in his claim to be the Son of God, by raising him from the dead; and the church coming together to break bread, in commemoration of his death and suffering on the cross, by which he made atonement for our sins. It was befitting that they should have done it on the day of the week, the day that the Father justified or vindicated him in his claim as the Son of God, the savior of sinners, and that in his justification, all true believers are justified before God. The apostle tells us he died for our sins but he rose for our justification, if he rose not then are we yet in our sins. Hence by his resurrection, he ended the work of the new creation, blessed and sanctified the first day of the week, and entered into his rest, as did God ending the old creation on the seventh day enter into his rest.

To me it is not surprising that the Jews, and all others who accept Moses as a prophet, and the history of the creation as true, but who reject Christ Jesus as the Son of God and who deny the resurrection of Jesus, by which he ended his work of the new creation; I say I can understand why they should keep the seventh day, in honor of the old creation, but why those claiming to be members of the new creation, should prefer to honor the ended work of the old creation, in preference to that of the new is not so easily understood. Why should we walk in the shadow when the better things have come, of which the Sabbath and other hand writings of ordinances, was but the shadow, but was the Sabbath a shadow? Hear Paul, (Colossians 2:16.) Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a feast day or new moon or a Sabbath day, which are a shadow of the things to come; but the body is Christ's.

Webster defines shadow thus: To represent faintly or imperfectly hence to represent typically. I referred to the law Sabbath as typical of their rest in Canaan, in proof of the fact that Paul, had reference to that rest, read Deuteronomy 12:9, 10, "For ye are not come to the rest and inheritance, which the Lord, thy God giveth you, but when ye go over Jordan, and dwell in the land which the Lord, your God giveth you to inherit, and when he giveth you rest from all your enemies round about, so that ye dwell in safety, etc." To this rest Paul says they did not attain because of unbelief. He says if Joshua had given them that rest he (God) would not have spoken afterward of another day. There remaineth therefore a sabbath rest for the people of God. For he that is entered into his rest hath himself also rested from his works, as God did from his. R. V.. So Paul would tell us when Christ ended his work he entered into his rest. Hence, we have the first day of the week, the Lord's resurrection day, or Lord's Day, the Christian Sabbath, emblematical of the Christian's rest in Christ here and now, and typical of the eternal Sabbath, or rest in the heavenly Canaan, or paradise of God.

After what I have said in the foregoing you ask me are the ten commandments binding on us today? I unhesitatingly answer yes, not because they are written in the decalogue, with a penalty attached for its violation, but because of its moral obligation? Paul tells us the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, so if we have properly learned our lesson from our teacher, the law, that it is morally wrong to have any other god than the God of heaven, and therefore it is morally right as Jesus taught, to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Is it not strange that to this first and greatest command, there is no physical punishment attached? The reason is very apparent; God would have voluntary service or obedience, as that is rendered by love. Jesus said if ye love me ye will keep my word. Jesus said the second is like unto the first: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self. On these two hang all the law and the prophets. The first has reference to man's duty to God alone, to whom alone man must account. The second has to do with his neighbor, and with God; a wrong against thy neighbor is a wrong against God, how is that? Well a trespass against my neighbor is wrong, and that which is wrong is an offense against God. To such offenses is attached temporal punishment, not to atone for the offense against God, but for the good of society. If men would follow this second commandment as Jesus put it, then the golden rule would be the law of life. Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Where these two commands are observed there is no need of the others, there will be no murder, no theft, no false swearing, no adultery to break up the home and disgrace society. . Paul realized that the law was not only a schoolmaster or teacher to bring us to Christ, but would be a teacher to prepare Israel for the new covenant, which would not be written in statute books, but would be put in their inward parts and written in their hearts, his is the law of the spirit, which maketh free from the law of sin and death; Therefore under the new covenant, we are free from the old law with its penalty of death, that is the death that was inflicted as a punishment for adultery, sabbath breaking, etc., but does not release us from the moral obligation, it does grant a respite, during which time if the sinner repents of his sins he has promise of pardon, and peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, the author of the new creation, the one who brought in the new covenant. Have we learned anything more from our teacher? Yes we learned that because God ended the old creation on the seventh day he blessed and sanctified it, and rested from his work which he had made. God knew that man made in his likeness would need one day out of seven for the recuperation of his physical being: Therefore when he called Israel to whom he would deliver the law, he made a covenant with them to keep the seventh day as a day of rest, to be perpetuated throughout their generations, as we have shown heretofore. So we have learned from the law that it is morally wrong to work ourselves, our manservant, our maidservant, or our beast, more than six days out of seven; Therefore we are morally bound to keep one day out of seven. If under the new covenant we have as I said before no law sabbath, then how are we to determine what shall be the rest day or sabbath to be kept holy unto the Lord. We have learned from the law that God, by virtue of, or in honor to the ended work of the old creation on the seventh day, set that day apart as the Sabbath; the natural sequence would be the day the Lord ended the work of the new creation, would be the Lord's day, or Christian Sabbath; and so we find them that first day of the week meeting together and Jesus with them. And then after eight days they have met together and Jesus with them; and then later on we find them coming together to break bread on the first of the week in commemoration of his death and suffering. Acts 27:7. And then we hear Paul, instructing the Corinthian brethren in regard to their collection for the saints, he gave them notice he would be with them on the first day of the week to receive their collection, and for each of them to be ready as the Lord had prospered them. Corinthinans 16:1-2. In Revelation 1:10 John tells us he was in the spirit on the Lord's day, etc. From the above it would appear the change of the day took place with the followers of Jesus immediately after the resurrection. This thought is confirmed by Paul, Collossians 2:16. The Jews who clung to the law condemned them for eating of meats, and not observing their feasts as regulated by the new moons, and their Sabbath days, all was wrong because it was contrary to the law of Moses. Now Paul says, let no man judge you (or condemn) you in this, Jesus had blotted out these things having nailed them to the cross.

By what law then were they governed? I answer by the law of the new covenant which the Lord said he would make with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah. Not according to the law made with their fathers, (which law was written in a statute book) but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel. After these days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. But we are told by those who argue for the seventh day sabbath, that Constantine was the author of the first day sabbath. The facts are Justin Martyr, was the first writer who mentions Sunday as applicable to the Lord's day. This designation the first day of the week, had come into general use in the Roman world shortly before Justin wrote his apology. See Encyclopedia Brittanica—The use of weeks was introduced into the Roman Empire in the first or second century of the Christian era from Egypt, and had been recognized independently of Christianity before the Emperor Constantine confirmed it by enjoining the observance of the Christian Sabbath. See Encyclopedia Americanus.—For some time after the foundation of the Christian church the converts from Judaism still observed the Jewish sabbath to a greater or less extent, at first it would seem concurrently with the celebration of the first day; but before the end of the apostolic age or period, Sunday known as the Lord's day, had thoroughly established itself as the special day to be sanctified by rest from secular labor and by public worship. The hallowing of Sunday appears incontestably as a definite law of the church by the beginning of the fourth century, and Constantine confirmed the custom by law of the state. See New National Encyclopedia.

Here I close, not for want of testimony—I could give many other authors. Hoping this little contribution may help some to a better understanding of our Christian Sabbath or Lord's Day.

Little Children Deprived of Milk

That babies and little children are directly affected by the decreased sales of milk reported in American cities is illustrated by the findings for Baltimore made public today by the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor.

Of 756 Baltimore children between 2 and 7 years of age, only 29 per cent are now having fresh milk to drink as against 60 per cent. a year ago. And only 20, or less than 3 per cent. of the children studied, are having as much as three cups a day. With the babies under 2 the Children's Bureau says the situation is a little less serious. Apparently their needs are more generally understood than the needs of the child over two.

The number of families in this group who are buying no fresh milk at all has risen from 37 a year ago to 107, or 29 per cent. of those from whom information was secured, and these 107 families include one-fourth of all the children under 7. At the same time, the total daily purchase of canned milk by the families studied has increased from 75.5 cans to 84 cans.

Most serious, according to the Children's Bureau, is the substitution in the children's diet of tea and coffee.. Of the 575 children who are not drinking milk, 64 per cent have definitely substituted tea and coffee, and 24 per cent are "sharing the family diet" which may or may not include tea or coffee, or milk in other foods.

The Children's Bureau states: "Taking a pint and a half of fresh milk as the desirable daily allowance for the average child these 756 children were having last year on an average only 40 per cent of what they should have had; this year their daily average has dwindled to 14.4 per cent of this allowance.

Preacher Pensions

The Methodist church is aiming to do for superannuated ministers what society as a whole should do for all men and women who have done an honest life's work. It has been one of the worst indictments against the church that a minister, after a life spent in good work at a small salary, should be cast adrift in old age. The Methodist church should have the support of all its members in its efforts to raise a fund sufficient to pension all superannuated ministers.

But millions of men and women, in all walks of life, are left as helpless and as poor in their old age as are the ministers. It is not merely the church that is to blame: it is society as a whole. Society should see to it that every man, who works honestly through his years of strength, shall be looked after in his old ago, not as charity, but as his rightful due. Many countries are already putting old age pensions into effect. It is high time for the United States to be following suit. In our soldiers insurance business we are building up a force that might just as well take over this other business.—Wichita Daily Eagle.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON 31 July, 1918.

My dear Mr. Secretary:

I am pleased to know that despite the unusual burdens imposed upon our people by the war they have maintained their schools and other agencies of education so nearly at their normal efficiency. That this should be continued thrughout the war and that in so far as the draft law will permit, there should be no falling off in attendance in elementary schools, high schools or colleges is a matter of the very greatest importance, affecting both our strength in war and our national welfare and efficiency when the war is over. So long as the war continues there will be costant need of very large numbers of men and women of the highest and most thorough training for war service in many lines. After the war there will be urgent need not only for tained leadeship in all lines of industrial, commercial, social and civil life, but for a very high average of intelligence and preparaton on the part of all the people. I would therefore urge that the people continue to give generous suport to their schools of all grades and that the schools adjust themselves as wisely as possible to the new conditions to the end that no boy or girl shall have less opportunity for education because of the war and that the Nation may be strengthened as it can only be through the right education of all its people. I approve most heartily your plans for making through the Bureau of Education a comprehensive campaign for the support of the schools and for the maintenance of attendance upon them.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. Franklin K. Lane,
Secretary of the Interior.

The Sunday School

The Sunday School and Democracy

This caption forms the timely title of our Rally Day Program. It represents a new departure in Brethren Sunday school literature that is designed to fill a need of long standing. Its delay has not been due to a lack of desire on the part of our honored Editor whose indefatigable efforts are well known to those conversant with his manifold work, rather a want of time. This year Brother Gnagey voluntarily took upon himself this added responsibility and dared to enter the venture of a much needed publication. Certainly our schools willl be appreciative enough to give this initial program the consideration which it justly deserves and thereby show their willingness to go half way in an apparent experiment.

You need not fear any disappointment. The program is sufficiently varied and comprehensive to meet all your needs. It is elastic enough to be used during the Sunday school hour only or to be extended through the period allotted to the church service which follows. The latter plan usually produces the more effective Rally day service. If you adopt that plan you will find time to use practically every feature. The address on "The Sunday School in the Present Crisis" by some good speaker will awaken a real rally spirit. The impressions created thus may be deepened and directed by the pastor while speaking to the theme "Blessed to be a Blessing" which is peculiarly true of the Sunday School and America. What could be more entertaining and inspiring than a clear, concise recital of the outstanding historical facts connected with both? Where else could the minister find the basis of a wider and stronger appeal for devoted Chrisitan service?

A careful examination of this program will reveal the elements of devotion, instruction and inspiration. Each part is so simple that it can be prepared in a limited time. Let all the schools rally and use the first Brethren Rally Day program. Order now, if you have not already.

J. A. GARBER.

How We Kept Open All Winter

On one of the spurs of the Allegheny Mountains, in Pennsylvania, nestles a comfortable schoolhouse, to which the children of the district thread their way around rocks, in paths made by their forefathers, near-cuts to the public road passing the schoolhouse. The road, leading quite over the mountain, sends off branches here and there to small "farms" or clearings, dotted with humble homes, where several generations have been reared. In some of the homes there is real comfort, but life is simple at best, and very lowly in some of the cabins where poor "renters" can barely afford to pay for a shelter, trusting to chance jobs to furnish the rest.

For several months the schoolhouse opens its door for the children who come in all directions to the day school, from one-half mile to two miles, carrrying their dinner in pails, baskets, boxes, or tied up in a cloth, according to the family possessions.

There was a time when the First Day was disregarded, and the Bible neglected. A white haired Presbyterian elder, living in the town four miles distant, saw the need, embraced the opportunity and organized a Sunday school.

On the day appointed a gratifying number gathered about the schoolhouse, some sitting on logs whittling sticks, smoking pipes, or "chewing." Trotter was tied to a sapling, and his rider went among the rows of men and boys with a word for each one. Some boys, with too much curiosity to stay at home, came near enough to see and hear what took place. At the approach of the superintendent they turned and fled like frightened animals, leaping over stones, and cracking the twigs in the underbrush, in their haste to get away! Within a few weeks they ventured inside the door. The friendly welcome and benign smile moved the clumsy hands toward the extended hand of the superintendent in a manner understood to be apologetic by one who could read untutored, shy mountain boys.

Two young women joined the superintendent, one taking charge of the small children, whose classroom was under the wide spreading boughs of the oaks, during the summer. An organ was procured at once, and there was much singing—not all of it music!

A total abstinence society was formed, the meetings held monthly. Occasionally a night meeting was arranged when a speaker or speakers from town cheerfully gave assistance. In time, nearly all became members and wore a blue ribbon, which, in some instances, became so twisted and black it looked like a shoestring. One young man refused a fresh ribbon, saying: "That one was tied on the day I signed." All honor to the black, string reminder of a solemn promise! More than one signature was adorned (not disgraced) with "his mark."

A young people's prayer meeting was also formed, which was held for fifteen minutes after Sunday school. Several boys took fright, supposing they would "be made to pray;" but they came when they found the exercises were wholly voluntary.

A picnic was held in the summer, an occasion of very great pleasure. An entertainment was given one Christmas delighting every one, the boys merrily bringing in the hemlock tree, and the girls assisting in decorating it.

The two young women spent two days among the people, calling upon each family. At one home where they were expectd (without ground) to be guests for dinner, unusual dishes were prepared—then put by, untouched, when the guests did not speak. When they did arrive, late in the afternoon, they were at once told of the disappointment, and urged to stay for supper. The invitation was accepted, and the company dishes were brought forth, this time to be eaten. The friendly visit with the people in their homes was timely; it gave an opportunity to learn of actual conditions. Where destitution and sickness were found, clothing, jellies, etc., were sent. The girls were inclined to be "chummy" with the teachers, and the boys were not behind in showing attentions—awkward, but well meant, all of which was welcomed, as proof that an important point had been gained—they were one. Better still, the people were won.

The respectful behavior, the rapt attention of the whole school, kindled in the teachers an enthusiasm which quickly brought a response. So deep was the interest that the question of closing the school in cold weather never intruded itself. Rainy days found all present, if possible.? Several dear old grandmothers, with their fresh gingham aprons and stiff sunbonnets, were rarely absent.

When winter came, and raging mountain storms swayed the stalwart trees, or biting cold made fingers and toes tingle, or when the snow was so deep that the wee ones came in the arms of their fathers, or big brothers, no one thought of absenting himself. One young man, a hard worker at the coke ovens, came regularly, walking three miles. He came early for a rest before the service. With his had on the desk, his arms his pillow, he slept (and sometimes snored) until the call to "books" roused him.

For three years the superintendent and teachers were present continuously; in winter forgoing the moning church service at home in order to reach the schoolhouse at the appointed hour, and returning too much fatigued to attend evening service. They faced all sorts of weather, over a four mile drive, the last mile typical of the road the rest of the human family are traveling, "up hill and rocky." But the school climbed in attendance until there were one hundred men, women, and children on the roll.—S. S. Times.

A Surprise for Rally Day Sunday

The utilization of the processional idea in one Sunday school brought out the largest attendance on Rally Day of any in the history of the Bible school.

This plan as follows originated with the pastor of the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church of Chicago: Announce a week or two previous that as part of the Rally Day program, the Sunday school is to have a grand procession of all of the departments, the scholars coming from the Sunday school into the church auditorium, each department from the Cradle Roll up to the Home Department carrying a banner, and each department singing a selected song as they enter. The Juniors would sing "Onward Christian Soldiers." The next year it was tried in the Auburn Methodist Episcopal church, and the pastor suggested why not have the official members of the church and Sunday school come in on this same program. This they did and a they headed the processional, their song was "A Mighty Fortress is Our God." They took their places on the platform, reviewing the other departments as they entered. The attendance was the largest in the church's history.

Such an announcement given by the pastor and superintendent two weeks before Rally Day will make this number the most attractive on the entire program.

The idea of a procession will attract the parents and friends of every member of the Sunday school. Beautiful banners for every department of the Sunday school can now be had from all the publishing firms. They are carried in stock and can bo purchased at about half the prices at which satin banners were formerly sold. These banners can be used on other occasions, such as Children's Day, Flag Day, Field Day, picnics, and for decorations at Easter and Christmas time. In the smaller departments banners are frequently used throughout the yer. Thus an investemnt in a few banners may accomplish wonders for any Sunday school.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

GOVERNMENT ORDERS have been received from the WAR BOARD advising us that, in order to be allowed to receive paper for their publications, all publishers must DISCONTINUE ALL subscriptions at their expiration unless they are RENEWED.

It has been the rule of the Brethren Publishing Company to discontinue unrenewed subscriptions sixty days after expiration, but because many churches have been working toward the BUDGET system for placing the Evangelist in all the homes of their congregations we have not followed the rule closely during the past year; but now we MUST follow it to comply with the orders of the WAR BOARD.

We have sent out expiration notices to all who are in arrears for their paper and we can allow but FIFTEEN DAYS from the date of the cards in which renewals can be made; then unrenewed subscriptions MUST BE DROPPED from our list. Please renew NOW so that no papers will be missed. If not convenient to send the money, sign and return the coupon card attached to your notice.

A great opportunity awaits the Pennsylvania Brethren in October. First of all their district conference is scheduled to meet at Johnstown, October seven to nine, which in itself is a great occasion with the Pennsylvania churches, as this district is one of the really wideawake districts of the brotherhood, and then the meeting place also assures the success of any gathering that may be held there. The close proximity of the final windup of the College Endowment campaign and the presence of campaign secretary, Beachler will also add to the interest of the conference; and then last, but not necessarily least, the Pennsylvania interdenominational state Sunday school convention meets in Johnstown immediately following the close of the Brethren conference. This makes it a great week for the Pennsylvania Brethren.

We wish to call attention to the notice that appears elsewhere in these columns from the secretary of the Evanglists' Association of the Brethren church. This organization plans to be helpful to all the church and it would be well for many churces to accept the service it offers.

One of the very happy occasions in Indiana during the past year was the recent dedication of the new Brethren church in Huntington. For a long time a few faithful brethren and sisters labored earnestly, under great disadvantages to found and build a Brethren church in this thriving little city, and now to see the consummation of their hopes realized is an occasion of great joy. The account of the dedication with cuts of both pastor and the church appears elsewhere in this issue. An evidence that the church's welfare is upon the hearts of the Brethren in Indiana was shown by the large number of visiting Brethren present at the service of dedication, and that there is a place for the Brethren church in Huntington is made plain by the fact that a two weeks' series of meetings immediately following the dedication conducted by A. E. Thomas, resulted in thirty-six confessions. The outlook in this city is good for the growth of the Brethren cause.

The office of the Publishing House has had a number of welcome visitors since the Winona conference, among them being Brother H. V. Wall and son, of Long Beach, California; Miles J. Snyder, Milledgeville, Illinois; E. L. Miller, Uniontown, Pennsylvania; George S. Baer, Louisville, Ohio and E. L. Parsons, Mansfield, Ohio. Come again, brethren, we like to have the Brethren from different parts of the brotherhood show an interest in our work.

The opening of Ashland College for the year's work was accompanied with more than ordinary activities and attendance. In fact the first week's enrollment was larger than at any time for a number of years, and the end is not yet. The provision the government is making for training college students in the colleges rather than in the cantonments is having its effect in many colleges of the land and Ashland is also feeling the effect of this order. A great year is atticipated in the work here at this time.

W. M. Lyon takes occasion to express the gratitude of the Washington Brethren toward all others who have so graciously come to their aid in liquidating the mortgage that has been so long a burden upon that church. A great day is planned to celebrate this happy occasion on Rally Day, Sunday, October sixth. The Brethren in Washington seem to know how to appreciate kindness shown to them and any one who has kept well informed concerning the work in our capital city knows that these people are liberal with their blessings and that they are always ready to pass them on to others.

A classified report of the Secretary of the Board of Benevolences of the Brethren church is made this week. At the request of Brother Bame who has charge of the Four-Year Program page of the Evangelist this report is run on that page. It shows how one of the goals of the Program was attained last year, but the goal for this department of the work of the church has been set ahead and the churches must bestir themselves to reach it another year.

L. G. Wood announces an evangelistic meeting to begin in the Roanoke, Virginia church on September twenty-second under the leadership of Willis E. Ronk. A splendid work for the kingdom is anticipated from this meeting.

A number of our pastors are entering upon new fields of labor this fall as requests for changing the address of their papers indicates. A. E. Whitted goes to Morrill, Kansas; George E. Cone to Hamlin, Kansas; J. D. Kemper to Carleton, Nebraska; D. A. C. Teeter to Cerro Gordo, Illinois; A. J. McClain to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; I. B. Trout, to Berlin, Pennsylvania, and so the work goes on. We hope to hear good reports from all these brethren in their new fields.

A. E. Thomas has begun his winter's work in the evangelistic field and has furnished our readers with his first report of his work in the field for this year. Brother Thomas will continue these reports during the season and we know many of our readers will look for them at stated intervals. Brother Thomas is now in a meeting at Williamstown, Ohio.

Elder Wm. Keifer was a recent caller at the Evangelist office. He is now past eighty-two years old and is totally blind, consequently his days of activity in the church are over. He is now making his home with his daughter and awaiting the day when the great cange shall come.

The expression of appreciation manifested by the Conference of the work of the Publishing House the last year was well pleasing to the Editors and Business Manager, and we trust that even a better report may be made next year. With the continued cooperation of pastors and churches this CAN be done, and what can be done should be done, and according to the present spirit of the church we believe that what should be done will be done. So press on Brethren. There is still a rich reward before all of us.

This might well be called a Conference Program number of the Evangelist as no less than three district conference programs appear in its pages. We know this is too much for the good looks of one issue of the paper, but the time is so short until the conferences meet that we felt it would not be well to hold any one of the programs back another week. The programs all show that the various districts are awake and alive to their opportunities and that they do not intend to fail in doing their part toward building up the kingdom of God upon the earth.

The Salt of the Earth

Few finer compliments can be paid to the Christian people of the world than that expressed in the words of Jesus to his disciples when he said, "Ye are the salt of the earth." We know salt is one of the most common household articles in all the earth, used by practically all people. The figure of speech based upon this article of common use is perhaps understood by as many people of the different tribes and nations of the earth as any figure Jesus used in all his ministry.

Some people may not be content to perform the common duties of life, they may want to do the BIG, the SPECTACULAR thing, but life is not made up of spectacular things, rather the commonplace, every day tasks are the lot of most of us in this world, and the most good can be done where the most people dwell. Salt may be a very common article in the average household, but what would a meal prepared without its use be, whether prepared and served in the kitchen of the poor or served in the dining room of the rich by liveried servants and carried in on sterling silver platters? Some of the most common things of life are not given much thought and their relative importance in the scheme of life is not observed until we are deprived of them, and then it is difficult to describe the feeling that comes over one because of their loss.

Society, like fresh meat, naturally tends to corruption. It must be preserved in some manner or it will "spoil." Society is not exactly what we feel society should be at any time, but how much worse might we expect it to be were it not for some of the preserving qualities at work among men! Christian workers may not be able to convert all men, they may not be able to fully preserve the human race, but Christians by their Christlike influence are to save society from falling to pieces by its own wickedness. "The presence of a good man hinders the devil from having elbow room to do his work." Have we not all known groups of men who have been held back from committing some evil simply because of the presence of some good, Christian man whose unspoken influance as powerful enough to restrain them in their contemplated act?

As salt does its work only by contact with the substance upon which it acts so the Christian must come in contact with the whole social system, if he is to have any worthwhile influence upon men.

Savorless Salt

While salt is good and its goodness was recognized by Jesus, it must not be forgotten that he suggested the possibility of its goodness being lost, for sometimes salt does "lose its savor." On one occasion we heard a lady who had been reared in Palestine explain what savorless salt means to the people of the orient and how it cast out as a useless article and trodden under the foot of man. Few people would like to be regarded as savorless salt; but there is no need of any one becoming such. Some things are kept in good condition only by constant use. Idleness is more destructive to them than action, and they must be kept in constant use or they become "lifeless." This is decidedly true of the Christian life. The inactive Christian is about as heavy a burden as the modern church has to carry. Sometimes one may be led to believe that the church is carrrying too many financial burdens, that it is supporting too many different departments of Christian and benevolent work, that its back is bowed down almost to the breaking point because of this load; but none of these things are true. The great burden of the church is SAVORLESS SALT, members who call themselves Christian, but who bear scant resemblance to Christ. Let me say it right here and loud enough to be heard by the entire Brethren church, THE BIGGEST BURDEN THE CHURCH HAS TO BEAR TODAY IS ITS LOAD OF INACTIVE MEMBERS.

There is no task set before the church today that could not be adequately financed, if its members were all active Christians who have not lost their savor. There is money in the church as never before and there are men in the church also, and in sufficient numbers to accomplish wonders, but too many of us are like the salt that has lost its savor. We are useless. It may be impossible to restore savor to savorless salt, but here is where men are better than salt. Men may have their savor restored.

Sometimes we are inclined to criticise REVIVAL meetings and to say we should rather use the term, evangelistic meeting. We will admit that if all the churches were active and all the members were in working order an evangelistic meeting to reach the unsaved would be the one thing necessary, but one of the great objects of a revival meeting is to restore SAVOR to those who have lost it. This "working over" process may not be ideal, but it is very real in many instances. A new vision of one's mission and a new purpose in one's life are sometimes the result of attendance upon a good spiritual revival meeting; so let the good work go on. Save as many sinners as will turn to Jesus for their salvation, but also keep in mind the fact that many who are now in the church are like savorless salt and they need to have their savor restored that they may become useful members of God's kingdom.

How the Kingdom Grows

Dead matter does not grow. Life is essential to growth, and it is the live church that grows, that has part in spreading the glad tidings to all the earth.

Jesus spoke a number of "kingdom parables," and all of them show it as a growing kingdom. No people, no church should be satisfied with present attainments. An increase campaign is a proper one in every church. No real church becomes too "big" to continue to seek to increase itself. The kingdom of God shall never cease to extend its borders until "every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that Jesus is the Christ." What part shall our church, what part shall we have in the growth of this kingdom?

It is well for any church to have an increase campaign, but it should be prepared to care for the increase when it comes. Sometimes the church must do for its salvation what the foolish man did to his destruction, "tear down and build greater" to care for its fruit and its goods; but there is this difference, the rich fool tore down and built up for his own selfish ends, but the live church tears down and builds up for the sake of OTHERS.

It has very appropriately been pointed out by some of our brethren that if the Brethren church wants to have its part in helping the kingdom to grow, and if it wants to reach any or all of the goals establihsed in our Four-Year Program, then there must be a REVIVAL in every church in the brotherhood every year until the time set for the reaching of our goals.

No church should remain satisfied with past achievements or with past records. It is not the "has beens" nor the "going to bees," but the "is nows" that count for the kingdom, and who would not rather be an "izzer" than a "has been" or a "going to be?" The kingdom will grow as we help it to grow, and none of us should be content until we have had part in extending its growth.

What Great Things the Lord Hath Done for Thee

Many of us are inclined to criticize the street methods of the Salvation Army. Often we charge it to their lack of education and culture that they make their religion so common and that they are so free to tell upon the streets what great thing the Lord has done for them. But we should not foret that when the restored demoniac expressed his desire to travel with Jesus he was requested to go back to his own people and to tell them what great thing the Lord had done for him. This might be called a Salvation Army religion, but one had better have the Salvation Army type of religion than to have no religion at all.

It may be true that some of their methods make the religion of Jesus Christ too common and thus bring it into disrepute, but if this is true on their part it is also true on the other hand that many professed followers of the Lord make their profession of religion so exclusive that no one ever discovers they have any.

If the religion of Jesus Christ is good for us, if it has done anything worth while in our lives, then as loyal followers of his we should make that good thing which has come into our lives known to others. Religion is more than impression, it is expression. It is more than a taking in, it is a giving out, and the soul that has been satisfied in its longings should speed to tell others of this wondrous story that meant so much when it first was told to him. The woman who came to the well of Samaria hastened back into the city and told everybody what a great thing had come into her life. Many believed because of her testimony, but many more also believed, not because of what she had said, but because of what they learned directly from the Master after they had been led by her to him. It is an obligation resting on all of us to lead others to Jesus, and then let them learn from him the things they so greatly need to complete their lives for both now and for the hereafter that awaits all of us.

LATIN AMERICA

Plans for Co-operation

In his valuable booklet on Latin America, Rev. S. G. Inman enumerates among the factors favorable to missionary effort the attitude of increasing friendliness to North America, due in part to the war, and a growing hunger for spiritual things. Among the difficudties, he places the indifference of the educated classes to religion, the fondness of the people for the forms to which they have been accustomed, and the tendency of those at home to generalize, as if all South America were one.

Among the necessities Mr. Inman feels that, in the first place, the emphasis which has hitherto been laid upon preaching must be somewhat lightened and diverted into channels of social service. "Latin America needs a gospel of social power," and to this end the hearty co-operation of all forces, eliminating denominational emphasis should be employed; particularly the scattering of forces in the education of future generations of workers must be avoided. Provision should be made for reaching the people through native workers thoroughly trained. And further, close touch must be kept between the foreign field and the home base. At home the directors must send level-headed and open-minded men to the field; and must have confidence in the recomendations and follow out the suggestions made by those who know the conditions. Especial care must be taken not to awaken antagonism at the outset by injudicious polemics against Roman Catholicism, which is the state religion in all these countries.

Gambling Outfit for Mission

A noted gambler, who came under the influence of the gospel in the Presbyterian mission in Guatemala and was converted, confessed he was in fact nothing but a plain robber—that he had been robing people through his roulette and fortune wheels. Naturally, he wanted to get rid of the implements of his nefarious trade immediately. He couldn't cnoscientiously sell them, so he decided to destroy them. But another thought came to him one day, and he brought the entire outfit to the mission and offered it for the purpose of teaching the sin and folly of gambling.

In front of a group of young men and women, the converted ex-gambler took his machines apart and showed the young people how the magnets secreted inside could be operated at will by the owner, how the dice were loaded, and how in every way the fortune was tourned to the benefit of the man running the game. The exhibit was an object lesson which no one could forget in a hurry, and the outfit is now the property of the mission.

An Argentine Philanthropy.

The report that comes from Tres Arroyos, Argentina, that an evangelical orphanage is being started, which is to be supported locally, indicates not only that a much-needed philanthropy is under way, but that the "evangelicals" has won the confidence of the town. The committee consists of members of the church, but when the people of the town heard about it they responded in a remarkable fashion. No less than three building sites were offered as donations, and at the end of the year £1,800 in cash was in hand. Nor was this all. A lawyer drew up the title-deeds free of charge; an architect contributed the plans and is supervising the building work as his donation; 25,000 bricks and a large quantity of other materials have also been given; while the railway company has offered to carry materials, freight free, and has presented old rails for the necessary girders. The mayor has promised a muiicipal grant of £200 a year toward the up-keep, and nearly forty children are awaiting admission. It will accommodate seventy. The foundation stone was laid in December, and the building is going up, the work being done by a member of the Juarez church and his four sons. The cost will be about £3,500.

AFRICA

The Attitude of Moslems in Egypt

Dr. S. M. Zwemer sums up as follows the results of a questionaire sent out to some forty workers in Egypt concerning the lines along which Moslems are thinking today:

"The war has made Moslems feel very keenly that they are losing ground politically. It has thrown Christendom and Christ into their thouhgts as never before. They are face to face with a new world situation which fills them with dread. . . .

"The battlefield has changed in Egypt within the last decade as regards the line of opposition to gospel preaching. Formerly the arena of the conflict was the Koran and Tradition; now it is the Bible. Moslems are trying everywhere to prove from our Scriptures the incorrectness of our teaching and are trying to read Moslem truths into the Christian gospel. . . The general opinion seems to be that at present there is a greater willingness to converse along religious lines and that the corruption of the gospels and the stumbling block of the incarnation and the atonement are less referred to than formerly. . . There is increasing interest in a comparison of the cardinal points that distinguish the two religions; increasing friendliness in the villages of the Delta is due, we are told, to their appreciation of missionary character and the Christian ministry of kindness.—United Presbyterian.

Sultans in Mission Schools

Canon R. H. Leaky, of the Church Missionary Society, who last year took up his residence at Bukoba, in the county of Buwaya, in German East Africa, says that it is divided into nine sections under "sultans," who resemble the county chiefs of Buganda, save that the office of the former is hereditary. Three of these "sultans," who are minors, have been sent to school in Buganda—two of them to the Kampala high school of the C. M. S., and the third to a Roman Catholic school. Of the others—one, the Sultan of Kiziba, is under Protestant instruction for baptism, two have professed to join the Roman Catholics, and one is a Roman Catholic, baptized in Budu some years ago. Since Buwaya has come under British rule there has been a real movement towards Christianity, and Canon Leakey is constantly being asked for teachers. But they need to be educated men.—C. M. S. Review.

Methodist Work in East Africa

"We have been fighting against great odds," writes Rev. P. W. Keys of the M. E. Mission in Inhambane, East Africa. "Storms and heavy rains have continued through more than twelve weeks. There will be no crops and thousands of people will be compelled to live on leaves, roots and herbs, such as they will be able to find in the forests.

"The great hope for the evangelization of Africa lies in the children. As we bring the message of repentance and salvation to crowds of heathen people, or even now and again to individuals, we often find the older people saying, 'I am too old now. I couldn't change my life, for I am so accustomed to heathen practices.' But even when we fail to win the older people, we usually find them not only willing but anxious for us to take their children and teach them the 'Way to believe.' And that is just what we are trying to do. Hundreds of such children are now in our schools, mostly in the out-stations. In a short time they go about as far as the native teacher can carry them, and they are now clamoring for something more than our present equipment affords."

War Time in Nyasaland

"We doubt whether it is in the power of anyone at home," says the quarterly Tidings of the English Industrial Mission in Nyasaland, "to measure the demands upon the European and the native populations of Nyasaland which have been made by the war. In newspapers lately received from Africa it is stated that no less than 167,000 natives have been called up for the transport service, and though the whole of these have not been taken from Nyasaland, we have to face the fact that many of our most reliable native helpers have gone, in addition to the white missionaries, who are being held in government service. It has become difficult to keep the schools supplied with teachers, while, notwithstanding all the efforts of the missionaries, any adequate visitation of the schools is a physical impossibility. This last is a factor of the utmost importance, for even the best native workers are apt to get slack and discouraged in the absence of effective supervision."

"New Africans'

"This huge industrial center of Johannesburg is a mighty force in the transition of the blacks from the simple communal life of the tribe to the individualism of modern times," writes Dr. F. B. Bridgman in the Missionary Herald. "How to help them make readjustment to the new order is a problem as fascinating as it is difficult. Under native custom, marriage is a tedious, round-about, go-between affair—months of negotiations as to the cattle to be paid, and then years to find the cattle before you get the girl. Think of he shocking directness of this 'ad' by a young Zulu, in the last native paper on my desk. I copy the wording which is in English:

"'WANTED—Smart, respectable attractive young Lady to correspond with a gentleman in good situation (£0 monthly), very good home. View, Matrimony. Please write for his photo with strict confidence to "Chef," P. O. Box 1624, Johannesburg. Applicants must not be over nineteen years of age.'

"How's that for the new native! And now, in this morning's paper, prominence is given to a native boycott of certain storse in a large section of the Rand. The boycott is well organized, with pickets posted about all the tabooed shops."

Kentucky Mission Report

"Free of Debt"

Our slogan, "This work free of debt," is still waving high for the year just closed found in the treasury the small but most welcome balance of $10.31. Thanks to our God and to all the faithful helpers who gave of their means and of their prayers during the year. And thanks to the faithful workers who gave themselves to the Lord's work in the service of the good people of the hills. They are our neighbors and next-door neighbors at that.

The Kentucky Rally

"Ktntucky Day" at the Winona Conference was one of unusual interest and the special program at the evening hour brought out a record attendance. The messages of Superintendents Drushal and Cook were listened to with unabated interest, as was also the message of William Tipton of Lost Creek, a fine produce of Riverside. He appreciates what our church has done for him and for hundreds of other young people by planting Riverside church and institute in the heart of "Bloody Breathitt" which is becoming more and more "Beautiful Breathitt," but only to the extent that the people are enthroning Christ in their own lives and in the civil, social and religious life of the community.

Bowman's Stereopticon Lecture

One of the most welcome and enlightening numbers on the Kentucky conference program was the stereopticon lecture given by the faithful secretary-treasurer of the Home Missionary Board, Orion E. Bowman, of Dayton, Ohio.

The Stuff Sufficient

Brother W. H. Beachler was the man at the bat who induced the many pitchers in the audience to do some of the finest pitching seen on any Kentucky night. That figure might not suit the Cubs or Sox but the goods were delivered in the form of the largest amount ever pledged for Kentucky mission support. Thanks to Brother Beachler and every loyal supporter of this great work.

Peru, Kentucky Rally

Sunday, September 8, was Kentucky Day in Peru. Brother James S. Cook, of Krypton, Kentucky, preached at the morning service and gave a most interesting address at the evening C. E. hour, while Brother G. S. Baer, of Louisville, Ohio, preached the evening sermon which was a most inspiring and appropriate message and eminently fitting for the close of a great day. Thanks to Brethren Cook and Baer.

Teachers

Miss Charlotte Hillegas has again joined our corps of Kentucky teachers, going from Conference to Krypton to labor in the school there with Miss Ruby Brewbaker, who also enjoyed the privilege of attending Conference, school being closed for the week. Brother Claude Akens is teaching at Riverside, laboring with Miss Geneva Strode, Miss Velma Brumbaugh and Miss Campbell of Kentucky.

News From the Field

The Thirty-first Conference of Indiana Brethren Churches Will Be Held At Flora, Indiana, October 7-10

Location—Flora is in the central part of Carroll county, seven miles west of the Mich Carroll county, seven miles west of the Michigan Pike, a state auto road. Flora can be reached very nicely with autos for the roads leading from all parts of the state, which connect up with the Michigan pike east of Flora and with the Delphi Flora Pike lead right in to the city.

Train Service: Three trains each way from north and south each day, on Vandalia road, of the Pennsylvania system, direct route out of South Bend, North Manchester and Logansport, North; and Frankfort, Indianapolis and Terre Haute, South.

Meals for Confrence will be furnised at 25c per meal, lodging will be arranged for free with the brethren and friends.

Special Note.—The Flora Brethren are planning for the largest conference the Brethren churches of Indiana have ever held, and the equipment and organization will be in a position to entertain and afford all things necessary for the Coference.

Brethren—Make this a Record Breaker in every way as a Conference.

W. T. LYTLE,
Pastor Conference Church.

"Over the Top" for Washington East and West

How the large audience at the Winona Conference did sing "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow" as that (duplicate) mortgage twenty years old on the First Brethren church of Washington, D. C., was burned and the smoke ascended as a sweet savor. Brother H. F. Stuckman made the appeal that brought results. The real mortgage will not be burned however until all the pledges given are paid, every one of which should be paid at the earliest possible date, not later than October 31.

Now why not go "Over the Top" for Washington in the west by helping Spokane to complete her church building. Brother Paul Miller, the pastor, states that $2,000 will enable them to go ahead and complete the building which ought to be done at once. This additional amount can be provided if every pledge given for Washington D. C. be increased and if a thousand individuals and churches and other organizations that did not get in on the Washington, East proposition will get busy now. California has already helped Spokane but come on California, lead the way and others will follow.

This is no time to play at the Lord's work. This is the time to press forward. We are told that our soldier boys who have gone to the front line trenches and have gone "over the top" and some of whom have died—we are told that all of them have to the last had their eyes turned toward Berlin. The whole of the Brethren church if made up of loyal soldiers must keep her gaze fixed on Christ and His church and Victory for his Kingdom on earth. We can do more in our Home Mission work than we have ever done—if we will. Make "Over the Top" your slogan and then do your best. G. C. CARPENTER.

Campaign Notes

Our silence which was due to the taking of a little rest and attendance at General Conference is now broken. And we hope there may be no more lulls until the Campaign is far nearer completion than it now is.

On our return to Pennsylvania we began work at Jones Mills. This is a rural church and one of the oldest congregations in the brotherhood. Here we found a splendid, loyal people, and notwithstanding they have had no pastor for a year I found the work in a live condition. I was impressed with the notion that Jones Mills was a fine example of what a congregation can do by its own effort to keep things going when it is without a pastor. Some churches it would seem, proceed to try to die just as fast as they can when they are pastorless and it is amazing how well some of them succeed; whereas Jones Mills has undertaken with a real determination to keep the fires burning. Under the leadership of Brother A. J. Miller the Sunday school is going forward. The school also has a Cradle Roll. But I was particularly impressed with the Home Department. Here is a rural school with a Home Department membership of fifty members. And the superintendent of this department told me that the quarterly report for lessons studied is highly satisfactory. He also told me that even though many of the Home Department members live long distances on the rough roads of Westmoreland county, (I have reason to know those roads are rough) they get a copy of the Angelus to every member each week. This is splendid work. Then too, there is a Young Peoples' Society of Christian Endeavor with a good membership which meets every Sunday night. I was present in one of their meetings which would have been a credit to any Endeavor society. And there are the agencies which are keeping the fires burning in this pastorless church.

In the matter of permanent endowment Jones Mills gave a very good response. I can report $550 at this time; and when the final results are in it will be better than $600, I am sure.

In past years Jones Mills has sent three of her young people to Ashland College. This may account in part for the warm feeling I found here for the College. And in the years to come I predict other young people will make their way to Ashland from this same place.

I can only say I was treated with uniformly fine hospitality in one of the homes of this church.

In a closing word I want to say as the date draws near for another Liberty Loan drive I feel constrained to urge upon our people to buy Bonds with the express purpose of giving them to Permanent Enodwment. If any in Indiana or Pennsylvania who have already give a note wish to do so, they may pay their note with a Bond. And in the places where I have not yet been, I earnestly recommend that you buy bonds in this next drive and let me have them when I come to your congregation.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

Pennsylvania! On To Johnstown!

We are having the great privilege of a double bill this year. The Johnstown church has extended the Pennsylvania District Conference an invitation to meet with them on October seventh to ninth, and we have accepted. Now it is up to us to make good and turn out in force. The program that appeared in last week's Evangelist gives promise of being one of the best that you have ever been privileged to enjoy. Then the Pennsylvania State Sunday School convention meets in Johnstown this year using the remainder of the week in which we meet. Surely such a double bill ought to induce every church to see that it is fully represented this year. It is a fact that the more active churches are the ones with a membership fully informed about the things of the Kingdom, and surely no other influence would be farther reaching along this line than our denominational conferences, and such inter-denominational conferences like the Pennsylvania State Sunday School conventions usually are. The folks at Johstown will make full preparation to care for all who come, and their well-fitted building will give us all the conveniences for the conducting of a successful conference. Jonhstown being on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, there is no need of giving directions as to how to reach the place. Let every church be loyal enough to heed the call of our commander-in-chief, President Wilson, to send a full delegation to help "carry on" the work of the church which he has declared one of the most needful and essential of war time works. May we have God's blessing toward the best convention possible. Hoping to see you there, I am your servant,

E. L. MILLER, Sec. Ex. Com.

Washington, D. C.

I desire to express my sincere appreciation with reference to the response of the brethren and sisters throughout the brotherhood which has resulted in the liquidation of the debt on the church property. And permit me to express also the thankfulness of the membership of the church in this city. I can assure you that we are all truly thankful for the service rendered at the suggestion and request of our National Mission Board, and for their kind response, and especially for the deep, personal interest of our dear Brother Carpenter. I can only say, may our heavenly Father's richest blessings be yours!

We have decided to have the first Sunday in October for our Rally Day, not only for the Sunday school, but for the church. One feature of the exercises of that day will be the burning of the mortgage, yes, this time, the original document itself. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

In conclusion permit me to make this suggestion: If there are those who have had part in this blessed fellowship, (Yes, it is real fellowship, mind you, when you part with your money and give to the glory of God in any good cause), if there are those who may desire to do so and have the time, we shall be glad to have a message from as many as will respond, to be read on that happy occasion. This will add greatly to the interest.

Will you not continue to remember us very definitely before the throne of grace?

Again, I say, May God bless you all!

Sincerely,
In His Name,
W. M. LYON.

NOTICE
Evangelistic Association

Churches desiring to correspond with evangelists regarding revival meetings may write to the secretary of this association, stating their preference as to time for such meetings and he will send the names of all the evangelists available for that time.

Evangelists seeking meetings may also write, giving dates open and your name will be sent to inquiring churches. The secretary should have a complete schedule of every evangelists' dates for the winter.

The secretary assumes no responsibility for your selection or satisfaction in this matter.

A. T. RONK, Secretary,
Warsaw, Indiana.

Huntington, Indiana

More than a year has elapsed since the beginning of the building of the new church at this place. Many times it seemed as though our efforts must fail, but by God's help we have come out victorious.

The completion of the church was made possible by the aid of ten churches of Indiana, which helped us to secure the necessary funds. The churches which came so nobly to our rescue are Nappanee, North Manchester, Flora, Loree, North Liberty, Roann, Mexico, Goshen, Oakville and Huntington. May we ever remember them and may God prosper them.

On Sunday, August 11 the church was dedicated. Our dear friend and brother, W. H. Beachler, of Ashland, Ohio, preached the dedicatory sermon, and to say that he did his part would be putting it mildly. We will not soon forget that he so kindly consented to come to us just in the beginning of his much needed vacation and rest, sacrificing the only time he could call his own.

We thank you, Brother Beachler, from the depth of our hearts.

We had with us the following Brethren ministers:—W. T. Lytle, Flora, Indiana; J. L. Kimmell, Muncie, Indiana; G. C. Carpenter, Peru, Indiana; C. E. Kolb, Nappanee, Indiana; A. E. Thomas, South Bend, Indiana, and D. A. C. Teeter of North Manchester, Indiana.

Large delegations from neighboring congregations, Roanoke, Muncie, Flora, North Manchester and others, were present. I am sure God will richly bless these brethren for the part they had in making the day a success.

In the afternoon the ministers of other denominations of the city were present and a praise service was held. Each minister present gave a talk and we were made to feel that we are not considered "one church too many," but that there is "room for us in the city" and a work for us to do. May we have the prayers of the entire brotherhood, that we do the work our hands find to do.

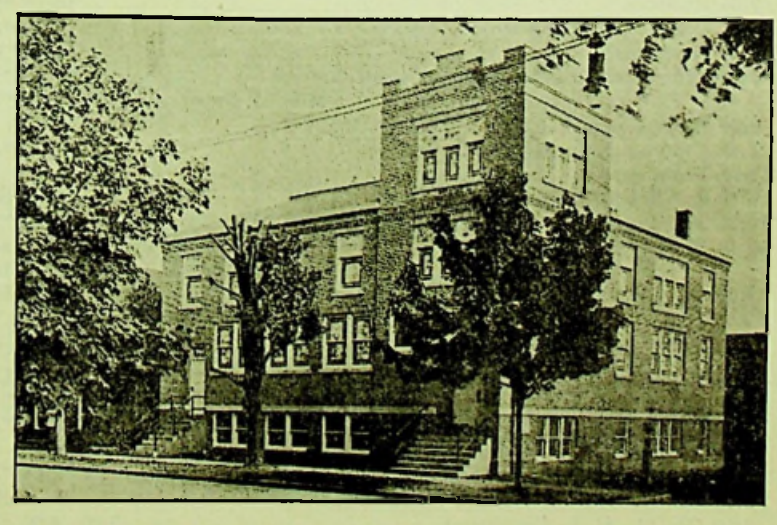
The closing service was one certainly filled with joy. Brother Beachler preached a wonderfully inspiring sermon, the trustees were given their charge and presented with the keys, and the service closed—as one which will be ever remembered by those present—with the singing of "How Firm a Foundation."

God has richly blessed us here for which we praise his Holy Name. We covet the prayers of the brethren as we begin this greater work for God.

Beginning Monday evening after dedication Evangelist A. E. Thomas of South Bend conducted a two-weeks' campaign for souls. Brother Thomas brought the gospel message each evening of the first week from the pulpit and in the homes of the inquiring ones in the day. On Sunday the first invitation was given. Thirteen came forward and made the good confession in the three services of the day.

The second week the evangelist brought the message in his forceful way and as a result of the campaign thirty-six made the good confession.

I want to say for our dear Brother Thomas, I found in him a willing worker. HE IS A POWER IN THE PULPIT. Also as a personal worker he was ready and willing to go anywhere, any time, with us and with open Bible brought the message of the Christ. Many were brought into the Kingdom in this way. May God continue to bless him and use him as in the past.



J. W. BROWER.

Keeping the Home Fires Burning
ARTICLE NO. 1
Krypton, Kentucky

After a brief rest we found ourselves in the mountains of Kentucky. We landed in Krypton to begin our warfare on sin with Brother Cook and his able assistants as co-laborers. We surely enjoyed our labors with them. As the meetings have been reported we only wish to add that in five years since we started to send workers to this field, God has certainly blessed the labors of our dear Brother Cook. The town is going to grow in the months that are to follow and we predict that ere long the mountains will resound with the true gospel of Jesus Christ. I can assure those who are supporting this work that Brother Cook is truly a workman that we need not be ashamed of. Everybody in Krypton knows Cook. And that he stands with his clean life as an example to all who comes in his pathway. Does it pay, you ask? One only has to go there and see what has been done to answer this question aright. And really I must confess that it does pay, and that in the years to come we shall see still more results in these parts of God's vineyard.

A Word About Lost Creek

We spent one day there and were pleased with the doings at this place. The school was on in full blast and everybody was busy and happy. May God bless the work and workers in the mountains of Kentucky is our prayer.

From Krypton we came to Huntington, Indiana to hold a short meeting before National Conference. We arrived in time for the dedication of the beautiful new church which has been erected in this hustling little city. Brother Beachler was the orator of the day—enough said. He made good of course, and the money came in response to his appeal very readily and in a manner which made some of the members of the Home Mission Board present feel supremely happy. For the victory here came after a desperate struggle. We certainly were happy to meet other brethren of like faith during the day.

We began our meeting on the Monday evening following. The weather was very hot and it was hard to get started. The first week no invitation was given, but with the assistance of the hustling pastor and the Ford we made a canvass of the membership. Our efforts were rewarded when at the end of the second week thirty-six confessions were made. We were forced to close with the meetings at high pitch to attend National Conference. The field here is very promising, Impressions are being made for our people which we know is going to bring great results to us. We feel that we will have constant growth during the coming years here. Too much credit cannot be given to Brother Brower and his good family for the work they are doing for Huntington. He has a well established reputation in the business center and is a mighty example for the Lord. Under his leadership we can look for larger things in the coming year.

I am now at Williamstown, Ohio. Report later from here. May, in this season of sorrow and sacrifice, the home fires of religious fervor be kept burning brightly is our prayer.

A. E. THOMAS.

Roanoke, Virginia

The church at this place is still on the map, and trying to follow her Master in rendering service in His name. We are now busy preparing for our revival, which is to begin Sunday, September 22nd. Our esteemed Brother, Willis E. Ronk will lead us in this campaign. We are hoping for great good, and may we all realize our dependendence upon God and that we must all work for his glory in the salvation of souls. We ask an interest in the prayers of our Brotherhood.

The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire

In every crisis of national life the clergymen of America have stood in the forefront of patriotic endeavor; in every human crisis they have brought support and guidance, and comfort to souls in desperate need. Now it is time to measure the work and needs of the preacher and pastor as men in other departments of work today are being measured, that their value may be rightly appraised and their needs fairly met.

The cost of living has greatly increased. Clothing, food, fuel, and all the daily incidentals that go to make up American life have gone up from thirty to a hundred per cent. And the loans and taxes for Freedom's war are ever making deeper drives into the purse. Wage-earners in every department of the nation's work have been demanding more income, and their demands have been recognized as just and necessary. Railroad men and miners, lumberjacks, and ship-builders, munition-workers, telegraph operators, automobile-makers, and all the multitudes of skilled and unskilled laborers have been counted "worthy of their hire," and of higher hire. The United States Government, very recently, has raised the wages of two million railroad workers alone, giving the poorest paid men an increase of 43 per cent. Corporations and individual employers without number throughout the United States have taken similar action. Trade-unions are standing back of their men and using pressure when necessary to gain for them the means to live their lives and do their work as Americans should.

Who stands back of the clergymen of America in these days of pressure? What great organization or compelling authority, what generous heart or spirit or fair play is winning for your minister, or pastor, or priest, or rabbi the salary increase that will give him strength, courage, efficiency, and success in his vital and exalted work for the welfare of the nation and the kingdom of God?

Your pastor is not a cheap man nor an unskilled laborer. He has brought long, careful training to his task. He was chosen with scrutinizing care as to his qualifications, and he is being measured today by high and exacting requirements in the performance of his task. Carry that measurement to its just conclusion. What salary would you expect to pay to the trained man in business of whom such important work and expert ability were required? Set down on paper some of the qualities and duties you demand of your pastor, and then judge their value.

He must be a man among men, a man of force, tact, and agreeable personality, a good mixer, a man of knowledge, wisdom and authority, whose presence commands respect and whose word carries conviction. He must be able to influence men and women, win their confidence, kindle their enthusiasm, direct their energies, and organize their working powers. He must be full of sympathy, ready with consolation, a strength in weakness, a bright light in times of darkness, and a never failing source of inspiration to the souls of his people. You expect all this of him.

Your pastor also, must be the successful head and center of your organized church activities, business, social and spiritual. On occasion, or as a regular part of his task, he must be an expert money raiser. You engage him as your chief and leader, the general manager of your church, if not its actual creator, or savior from its difficulties. You put upon him a burden and a responsibility you would never dream of entrusting to any cheap man in business.

Nor are those his greatest tasks. He must read and study, and meditate, and commune with the Infinite. He must understand men, and know their work, their trials, their problems, their temptations, their deep inner feelings and aspirations, and the avenues of helpful approach to their sympathies and convictions. He must know something of history, science, literature. He must be familiar with all social needs and institutions and methods. He must be able to interpret the Word of God with true spiritual insight, and practical human application. He must stand before you in the pulpit on the Sabbath and deliver messages that search the soul, feed the mind, bring courage to the heart, make plain the path of daily life, and lift you nearer to heaven, or bring heaven nearer to earth.

In these days, also, your preacher must proclaim the ideals and principles of America. He must stir the patriotism of his young men and send them with strong hearts and noble vision into the service of their country. He must pastor them in the camps and follow them with his letters and prayers as they go across the sea to fight. The government values him so highly that it has already called thousands of American clergymen into active service to shepherd the fighting men and help them win the war. At home the government calls him to be its mouthpiece in its appeals to its citizens for every form of patriotic service or economy prescribed as needful for victory. You expect your pastor to be equal to such demands and to do your church credit when called upon for public addresses or community action.

When you have listed all the qualities and services you ask of your pastor, make out the bill for the amout your church ought to pay for such a man, and then move things to see that the church pays that bill. Never mind what has been done in the past, nor what long habit has accustomed the church to believe can be done. The standing record of clergymen's salaries throughout this great rich nation is a pitiful shame, and belies the real heart and fairness of the American people. The average salary of clergymen in ten of the largest denominations is only $793 a year. What trade or business would tolerate such a condition?

The minister of your church is a human being like the rest of us, and he is feeling the pressure of increased cost of living just as we do. But no government decree has raised his salary. No corporation or trade-union stands back of him. He does not go on strike. He simply trusts his people, and works faithfully for them seven days a week, and many nights, and struggles to look respectable, and pays his bills, and performs the miracles expected of him, often for less than the salary of the young girl stenographer who teaches a class in his Sunday school or the wages of the man who lays the sidewalk in front of his church.

Among the more than two million readers of the Literary Digest are active and substantial members of thousands of the churches throughout the United States. To them this frank appeal is made, in keeping with the urgent needs of the day, and the American spirit of justice and generosity. Give your minister a lift. Take the iniative now and have his salary increased to an amount which will come nearer to the real value of his services, and enable him to meet the increased cost of living. He is not demanding it, but he needs it none the less, and your own sense of right demands it for him. If his salary is $800, it ought to be made at once $1,200. If it is $1,000, it ought to be raised to $1,500. There is scarcely a church, large or small, anywhere in America that can not increase its pastor's salary at least 50 per cent. Money never was so plentiful. More actual cash—gold, silver and paper currency—is in circulation today than at any time in the nation's history, and there is a bigger share for every man, woman and child. See that your pastor gets his fair share of your profits and those of every member in your church.

Back up the soldiers of America who follow the flag to France! Billions for them! Nothing is too much nor too good for our soldiers of liberty. But now remember that your minister is one of the bravest, worthiest soldiers of all. He is fighting for America, for the righteousness that "exalteth a nation." He is fighting for America, as he puts his clean, valiant, patriotic spirit into the youth and into the

The Last Ditch

It has been ever regarded as an indication of valor for either party to a conflict to fight "to the last ditch." One party to the conflict may be fighting for an unrighteous cause and in time it may be shown that it is a losing cause, but in desperation its supporters fight on hoping against hope that something will yet turn up to alter the situation and to again give them the supremacy in the fight. Such now seems to be the situation in regard to the liquor forces of America.

To an unprejudiced onlooker it would seem that the saloon is a doomed institution in America and that it is a waste of time and money to wage longer a fight for its retention of a place among the institutions of America; but its supporters are fighting with desperation, and what at times seems to be a lull in the battle is taken by prohibition leaders as nothing more than an attempt to throw the prohibitionists off their guard and to give the wet enemy time to "dig in" for another stand in defense.

Knowing that this war against the liquor traffic is a war unto the end, or until a "victorious" peace has been established, and recognizing the fact that many people hold to the old saying: "all is fair in love and war," perhaps we should not lay too much blame on the supporters of the liquor business who in desperation employ any methods they can devise to protect what is so dear to their "alcohol pickled" hearts. For more than thirty years the writer has been an ardent prohibitionists and he has watched the slow growth of this sentiment among the populace with more or less impatience; he has also been contending from platform and press for this same cause for considerably more than twenty-five years, and from what most of the leading daily papers of today have to say about the question in contrast to what they had to say twenty-five years ago one is justified in the conclusion that a real prohibition revival is on in America extending from whiskey bound New York to wine soaked San Francisco.

The enemy has not yet surrendered, nor will it do so so long as a leg is left to stand on, and we would urge the Brethren wherever they have an opportunity to exercise their right of franchise in helping to determine this question in the fall elections to help settle it once for all in any state where an election is held.

We know that such labor leaders as Samuel Gompers stands strong with the brewery interests of the country, but we rejoice that such men as John Mitchell are brave enough to say, "Almost every disturbance in the ranks of organized labor can be traced back to some connection with the saloon." And we would accept the judgment of John Mitchell above that of Samuel Gompers every day in the week. John Mitchell knows as every other unprejudiced, intelligent laboring man knows, that the saloon is one of the greatest enemies to the prosperity of the working people they have to face, and he knows that the complete overthrow of the liquor traffic will prove one of the greatest boons to working men that the labor world has seen in a generation. Yes, the wets are fighting in the last ditch; let us cover up the ditch and end the matter.

On the Cheaps

Recently a new play was put on in a New York theater that apparently did not strike the fancy of the critic who was designated to review its first performance for the press. In the first place the title of the play was not such as to command the attenion of the average theater goer. "A Very Good Young Man," might be an appropriate title for a Sunday school story, but who goes to a theater to observe the character of either a good man or a good woman. The theater has not been built up on the virtues of men and women, but rather on their vices, and a play that does not deal with some of the moral lapses of society seldom proves popular and, in fact, is not regarded as true to life. Play writers, like the average novelist, take it for granted that no depiction of human character can be true to life unless some phase of the "eternal triangle," or "the other woman" can be rung in on the scene; but from the character of the "best sellers" among novels and the best patronized plays one is led to judge that the American public really likes it, and as most writers seek to cater to public opinion rather than to create it, perhaps we should withhold judgment against the writers until the door yards of the public have been given a good sweeping.

Possibly the title of the play under criticism was only given in irony; but anyway the critic described it in the tersest language possible by simply saying, "Cheap farce, cheap characters, cheap furniture, cheap humor, for cheap people."

Sometimes one fails to recognize how real values are lowered either in character or commerce. It is not always the best form of economy to cheapen the produce one has to offer for sale, and yet how frequently this very thing is done in the name of economy. For the sake of character a little self denial is better than cheapening one's output in order to practice economy. The world really does not want to live on the cheaps.

Unto Caesar the Things That Are Caesar's

Less and less recognition, as the days go by, is given to individual opinion in America. Practically everything is now going on the principle that we are in the war, that we have been in it for more than a year, and no matter how much we may regret the circumstances that brought it upon us, there is now but one thing to do, and that is to end it as soon as possible, but to end it only after the great cause that brought it on has been brought into subjection to reason and common sense.

The August primaries all over America permitted the people to speak in no uncertain sound their sentiments concerning men who held public office, but who by their voice and vote opposed the forward steps the government has taken to secure a victorious peace in the termination of the war.

There was no serious objection offered if one expressed a hope, two or three years ago, that America might not be drawn into the great struggle; our President himself tried hard to bring about this result and he was honored for his efforts, but when it was finally determined that America must get into the fight, then every energy of the executive and legislative branches of the government was called into action and any man in any department of the government who stood in the way was regarded as an objectionable obstructionist, and most of them were gotten rid of in the August primaries.

There is no dishonor attached to being a strong peace advocate in time of peace and in propagating peace principles energetically, but when Caesar (the authorized government) is at war there is nothing left for the subject of that government to do but give unstinted support to his government. One may feel that he cannot take up arms against another human being, but that will not free him from responsibility to serve the government in any way he may be called upon to serve where he is not called upon to take human life. There are multitudes of ways in which loyal subjects may support their government aside from that, but all must serve.

Converting by Force

The Moslem religion has been spread over vast sections of the world by the power of the sword, but this method of converting individuals or nations to Christianity has never been successful. The religion of Jesus Christ is spread by the principles of love and through the power of the Holy Spirit or it is not spread at all.

Recently an English Lord said, "We are fighting not only to overcome Germany in the ordinary sense but to convert her also." The quotation does not make it clear to what they would convert her. If it is to Christianity it will not be a success, but if it is to a democracy or a representative form of government and to a sane view of international relationships it ought to be a success. This Germany needs; but she needs to be converted to a real appreciation of the gospel of Jesus Christ even more. However this conversion must be accomplished as an after the war work by the Christian forces of the world and not by force of arms.

Contributions

The Eucharist

BY E. M. COBB

That great, immeasurable, gulf, impassable and unfathomable that lies between the holiness of Jehovah and the depravity of man, caused by the great adversary, may be through the Eucharistic Miracle, recrossed by three great processes—reconciliation, consecration, and communion. Any estrangement from God, be it great or small is sin. "The wages of sin is death." That's final; and it is a wonderful reality. It is not an exception to a rule. There is no rule. It is an axiomatic truth. "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Romans 3: 23. So we are "dead in trespasses and sins." Eph. 2: 1-4.

1. RECONCILIATION.

For a human being to live in this world, two things are necessary. He must be given birth to bring him into life, and he must be given nourishment in order to sustain life. While these two things are absolutely necessary, yet they are entirely independent of each other, and relatively, one necessarily precedes and the other follows. Exactly the same is true of the spiritual birth or regeneration. The unsaved soul is brought from degenerate oblivion by being given birth, just as the human child is given birth by his parents without his knowledge and consent. Not even of ourselves did he believe on him, because we were dead in our trespasses and sins, Eph. 2: 1-4, until God by his most sovereign grace chose to speak the lifegiving word. Never was I so painfully conscious of this as upon one occasion while standing at the tomb of Lazarus in Bethany, and beholding the place where the partially decomposed body of poor Lazarus lay, silent in the embrace of death, unable to think or reason, or to do any works of righteousness, or even to believe, methought I could hear the Word of the living God fall from the lips of the Incarnate Son, "Lazarus, come forth," and Lazarus came forth at his word alive from the dead. "And you hath he made alive who were dead in your trespasses and sin." Eph. 2: 1. "To as many as receive him gave he power to become sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John 1: 12. "For by grace are you saved by faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God, not of works lest any man should boast." Eph. 2: 8-10. "The wages of sin is death but the gift of God is eternal life through Christ Jesus our Lord." Rom. 6: 23. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 22. "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Rom. 3: 23. "But God who is rich in mercy, for his great love, wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath made us alive, together with Christ. Through grace have ye been saved," Eph. 2: 4-5, and hath raised us up with him and seated us with him in the heavenlies." Eph. 2: 6-7. "That in ages to come he might show through us his wonderful grace, for we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus that we might work for him after we have been made alive," Eph. 2: 7-10. "Therefore, if anyone be in Christ Jesus he is a new creation, old things are passed away and all things are become new, and this is the work he has given us to do, to act as ambassadors, telling all men everywhere of this wonderful grace of God, whereby he is able to offer to all a perfect righteousness," 2 Cor. 5: 17-21. "For God commendeth his love toward us in that while we are yet sinners Christ died for the ungodly." Romans 5: 8. "He was made sin in our stead, he who knew no sin, he who had no sin in his nature, for he was very God who took upon him the SIN of the kosmos and bore it to the cross. There he, standing in our place, received the judgment of God's holy wrath upon SIN once, and for all," Romans 5: 12-21. "There, upon Calvary's cross, man beheld the Lamb of God, who taketh away the SIN of the kosmos, John 1: 29. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, has everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment; but is passed from death unto life." John 5: 24. "We were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, having been justified through his blood, now being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." Romans 5: 9-11.

'Twas not enough that sinful man should be justified not only pardoned but justified, exonerated as if he had never sinned——but now he must needs be clothed. Sin robbed him of the robe of righteousness which God gave to the first Adam, and he dare not come naked into the presence of God, even though the sin question has been settled forever, and every claim has been settled by another. So God provides him with his own righteousness, "which is by faith in Jesus Christ, Romans 3: 22; 2 Cor. 5: 21. Our old sinful nature God nailed to the tree with his Son, and now since we died in him, we shall also live in him, Romans 6: 8-10. "So God raised him from the dead, the first fruits of them that slept, and when he raised him, he raised us up with him, clothed now in his righteousness, and seated us with him in heavenly places, and our new created life is hid with Christ in God," Col. 3: 1-4. "There is therefore now no condemnation, no more judgment to them that are in Christ Jesus." Romans 8: 1; John 5: 24.

The necessity of the new birth grows out of the incapacity of the natural man to either "see" or "enter into" the kingdom of God. However gifted, moral, or refined, the natural man is absolutely blind to spiritual truth and impotent to enter into the Kingdom; for he can neither understand, obey nor even please God. Therefore, "marvel not that I say unto thee, ye must be born again." John 3:7. This new birth is not a reformation of the old nature, Romans 6:6, but a creative act of the Holy Spirit, John 3:5. By this, then, it should be evident that those who are eligible to partake of the Eucharistic Emblems of his broken body and shed blood, are the reconciled, regenerate, twice-born sinners saved by grace.

After the child is born, he must eat to live. There is no choice as to what he shall eat. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, we have no life in you whose eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me and I live by the Father: so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." John 6: 53-57. However, before he shall eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, he shall have an opportunity to test his own degree of consecration that he will not eat and drink "unworthily and be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord." 1 Cor. 11: 27.

Spiritual things are only spiritually discerned. When a child of God is not wholly and completely consecrated, he fails to that degree to "discern the Lord's body." Necessarily, then, he eats unworthily, and therefore eats and drinks condemnation or judgment to himself. Now, in order to avoid this awful dilemma, a self-examination or judgment is tendered the communicant that he may stand acquitted before God. This self-judgment is not so much the believer's moral condemnation of his own ways, conduct or habits, as it is of himself for tolerating such habits. This self-examination avoids chastisement, but never judgment. John 5: 24.

And again, how eminently fair is this self-examination. The communicant is never examined by a set of church officials, or by the presbytery, or even the church, but "Let a man examine himself," and after the examination, eat according to the results of the examination. The good Lord turns the whole matter over to his children who are sinners saved by grace. In this examination the communicant becomes the criminal being tried, the star witness in the case, the prosecuting attorney, and the judge on the bench; after the Lord turns the whole court house over to us and if we do not do a good job in this work preparatory to the Eucharist, whose fault is it? And yet how many falter just here, not discerning the Lord's visible body! "And for this very cause, many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." 1 Cor. 11: 30.

Is not the same true from the natural standpoint? When a man pays no attention as to what, when and where he eats, how long does it take to impair his digestion, absorption and assimilation? In the same manner, therefore, when a child of God eats and drinks unworthily, how long is it until he manifests weakness and ill health, and is sooner or later reported dead? In this matter, there are just three things that may be done by the communicant.

1. He may stay away from the Lord's table and die; or

2. He may eat and drink unworthily and be guilty of the blood;

3. He may examine himself, discern the body, and eat and live. Had I the skill of an artist, I'd paint an immeasurable canyon, in which flows an unfathomable and overwhelming torrent representing sin. Across this great chasm, from the blood-stained summit of Calvary to the glory-crowned summit of Olivet where sits the King under the shekinah of Jehovah, I would paint a suspension bridge high, strong and safe, characterizing THE EUCHARIST.

3. COMMUNION.

Then, after the child has been regenerated and born from above, and after this new reconsecration, rededication and sanctification or setting apart of one's self, then, and only then, comes communion. Behold the Eucharist which is, literally translated, "Thanksgiving." Yes, thanks for the "Blood Covenant." There can be nothing better said than is said by our brother Paul to the Jews in Hebrews IX, "But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? And for this cause he is the mediator of the new Testament that by means of death for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first Testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. For where testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined upon you." This evidently is why Jesus said, "This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you." Luke 22: 20.

When we can really appreciate this blood covenant, we really have communion. A new covenant had been promised through the prophets with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah. The Lord said, "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people." Heb. 8: 8-12; Jer. 31: 31-34. God showed mercy to "their "unrighteousness" by laying their sins on Jesus, who died for his own people,—"to the Jew first,"—and thus the blood covenant was duly sealed and confirmed. The Gentiles who believed, are also made recipients of the great salvation, since the Lord Jesus Christ was not only "a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to conform the promises made unto the fathers, "but it was also a part of the eternal purpose, "that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy." Romans 15: 8, 9.

The blood of the Cross was necessary, both in order to show God's righteousness in the passing over of sins done aforetime, in his forbearance, and also to make it possible for him righteously to save men in this present time; "that he might himself be just, and the justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus," Romans 3: 21-26. The blood covenant speaks also of the eternal safety of the saved who "being now justified by his blood shall be kept safe from wrath through him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be kept safe by his life." Romans 5: 9, 10.

It is God's chief desire that we should have fellowship with him, and with his Son Jesus Christ, and that in this communion our joys should be full, 1 John, 1, 3, 4. The faithful Lord has called us unto the fellowship of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. 1 Cor. 1: 9. Communion is fellowship; these words are identical. Christ himself is the basis of our fellowship with God. It is in Christ and through Christ that the Father meets with his people. The Father delights in Christ, he feeds on Christ, he finds satisfaction in Christ; and it is only as the believer also finds delight, food and satisfaction in Christ, that he can have fellowship with the Father. This is exactly what the communicant should be able to discern at the Eucharist. He should be able to see Christ upon the table, broken and bleeding, while the father and his children sit together around the table in sweet and satisfying fellowship. And, remember, it is Christ crucified. The bread is his broken body; the cup, his shed blood. The cross is the meeting place between God and man, where hangs the Lamb of God as a vicarious substitute.

To feed upon the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood we must be able to discern the word of God. The incarnate word must be devoured. "Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man life." Deut. 8: 3.

Real fellowship and communion at the Eucharist demand sanctification or separation from all that hinders communion with God. "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread ..... ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of demons ..... whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all for the glory of God." 1 Cor. 10.

If we, then, the communicants, according to Hebrews 10: 22, have drawn near with a true heart and in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled once for all from consciencieness oppressed with sin, and our bodies bathed in pure water from the guilt of sin, and if we have washed the saints' feet from the defilement of sin from the daily walk of life, and if we have partaken of the Agape, Lord's Supper, or the Feast of Love, in anticipation of the great Marriage Supper of the Lamb, then we may sit down to the great God-given Eucharist, and, by faith, go back to blood-stained Calvary and follow carefully, but confidently and securely, this great suspension bridge of God's grace to glory-crowned Olivet where the Substitutionary Lamb will become KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS.

Killing the Officers

BY GEO. H. JONES

During the Civil War in certain regiments where officers whose treatment of their men, in the rank and file, was more like that of brutes than gentlemen. As a result feelings were aroused that very often resulted in officers being shot in the back by their own men in time of battle. The same conditions prevailed in the Russian armies prior to the great collapse of their armies, in the present war, we are told. How deplorable such conditions are only the commanding officer can tell. Not only is the morale affected, but it becomes increasingly difficult to secure officers.

It is the closing clause of the preceding paragraph that is needed by the writer as a text for this preachment.

Particular Cases

We know of a number of cases but will only cite a few. A certain minister in a small town, the half of a charge, was accused by the merchants of being "slow pay" and sometimes forgetful. It became such public talk that his usefulness was over as pastor and he was compelled to resign. He secured another place and as he was able to secure a large enough salary to keep his family, he was able to avoid debts. Today he is an honored and useful minister in that city. But the church he left had to face the accusing looks and talk of many people because of those debts he left behind. They were later paid. But in the interim the church suffered. The membership, be it understood had bargained as closely as they could when they secured his services and most of them were in comfortable circumstances. The poor fellow found it impossible to live on a salary which was irregularly paid and so small that the best kind of management upon the part of his wife failed to cover his expenses. That congregation deserved worse than it got.

Another one was that of a young man who brought his wife and family to a church to which he was called and found upon his arrival that certain members had "pocketed" the church and he had to please that little group first or his salary would be slow and his pastorate short. He tried hard and failed, not as a Christian, but as a sychophant of the "bosses." He would not "lick their boots," as an amused observer laughed. He found another pastorate and made good.

Another one found the members fondly calculating that the small salary was wonderfully augmented by so much being donated. They prided themselves upon the fact that donations were so good that the preacher got his living through what was carried in. Only the preacher's wife knew how foolish such talk becomes when her tally of donations amounted to less than a month's salary for the year, even at market prices. His shabby clothes soon made them so much ashamed of him that he had to change to experiment on short rations in another charge.

Still another was that of a splendid fellow who left college with a debt of several hundred dollars, which a kind friend had loaned him. He worked hard for several years trying to save enough to liquidate his obligation, but failed. His friend needed the money and wrote again and again. It goaded the poor fellow into all sorts of expedients to try to get the money and in the meantime the worry and the consequent neglect of his pastorate compelled a change, hoping for a better opportunity to save where a higher salary was paid, but only to find that a city had a higher rental as well as a higher living cost. It was "Out of the frying pan into the fire for the poor fish," if the comparison can be used..

These cases could be multiplied a hundred fold, but these are singled out that we might get a glimpse of a general condition that is getting worse all the time. How many observers at General Conference noticed the increasing loss of men from our ministry? No, it isn't altogether the war conditions, as it is a penuriousness upon the part of the churches. They are sad incidents of a church life that are significant of the future trouble which can be looked for unless there is a radical change of attitude upon the part of the churches toward a minister's salary. In self defense these men have had to look out for their family needs.

Labor Advances

With unskilled labor getting $1.50 to $2.00 per day in 1916, to the $3.50 to $4.50 in 1918, we have an amazing advance. From 100 to 200 per cent. With corn selling at from 100 to 200 per cent. more than in 1916, wheat the same, pork and every other farm product in the same proportion, we all think it is only right and just that the farmer get these prices. We then discover that in less than two years the laborer and farmer have had their incomes doubled and in many cases trebled because of the high cost of living and of production.

Religion

But how about the church? Your church giving? Of course your gifts have doubled and trebled. The preacher's salary likewise? or has the cost of living for him remained the same?

Business Costs

Clothing and notions, groceries and necessities have all had their advance. The rise has been proportionate.

Breaking the Preacher

The preacher, poorly paid before the war, as every one admitted, where is his income now in buying war goods at war-time prices? Debt and heartache have already driven a number of men into other callings and in scores of cases forced them to ask for an advance in wages to meet these increased costs. What has been the result? In many cases grudgingly given and then at the rate of about 10 per cent. and not one case exceeding 20 per cent. What a magnificent appreciation of the work of the ministry! What consideration! What generosity! How can the congregation ever make up such a large advance out of their new incomes? How our preacher's wife is rejoicing (?)! Even merchants outside the church are surprised. The question is a good one—Is there something wrong with these ministers? They are finding it harder than ever to get the preachers to pay their bills. The working bees of the church hive must have found them to be drones and are "stinging" them to death. There is no other explanation of the universal complaint. "Church and Sunday school are dropping off alarmingly in numbers and effectiveness. From 25 percent. and up," is the Pennsylvania report.

This is such a delicate matter with the average Christian minister that he keeps silent and "Trusts in God" for a more generous attitude upon the part of his people and they are failing miserably to live up to his ideals of them. What says the Word? To the Law and the Prophets! James is stern, his fifth chapter is worth reading from beginning to end.

A Heart to Heart Talk

The writer of this lives in a valley filled with industrial workers, whose wages rise from $3.65 per day to $10. A fair general average for an electrician or mechanic ranging about $7.00 per day. This represents the needed advance to meet the increased cost of living here. But the preachers in this valley have had from $100 to $200 per year advance over their 1916 salaries. What a comment on religion! And all the denominations are about as generous. There are no exceptions.

Among the farmers the claim is often made that there is more religious life than among the city dwellers. Are conditions any better? Would mill worker, laborer or farmer accept in these times of soaring prices an advance of from 10 to 20 per cent. and feel thankful? If not why are officers of the church forced to it? It is a dangerous condition. What is happening to the preacher in the eyes of the world? They are valuing him at his congregation's valuation. It is simply a question of how long our ministerial forces can hold together and keep out of debt to save the reputation of the church. What encouragement to push the goal for the addition of new ministers in our Four-Year Program! There is no better way to kill off our ministerial laborers.

Johnstown, Pa.

The Y. M. C. A. Under Shell Fire

The Y. M. C. A. man's job on the western front is no sinecure. Under German shell fire much of the time, he is called upon constantly to sacrifice his comfort and safety for the sake of carrying his peculiar ministry to the boys along the front line of battle.

But the job of dodging German shells appeals to many red-blooded American men who are now in the service of the Y. M. C. A. overseas. More than 500 of them are now doing their part to sustain the morale of the American troops in the trenches of France. One of these, Sanford L. Porter, of California, has written a vivid word picture of his life as a Y. M. C. A. worker and says he enjoys it.

"For weeks I have been under German shell fire (almost hell-fire) on the American front," says Mr. Porter in a communication to ————————, general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city. "My Y. M. C. A. hut is between the second and third line trenches. Some days we get no shells, but most of the time they whistle over me day and night. We are ordered to carry gas masks all the time indoors and out. Cannot step out without the steel helmet on the head. The English mask must be carried always in the alert position, as one can get it on the face before he breathes, in case of gas alarm. The second mask is carried so that if a bullet goes through No. 1 the other is available at once. The helmet protects from bursting shrapnel, which often falls, especially from the air battles. Sometimes the sentry awakens me four or five times in a single night for a gas alarm. That gas is terrible.

"My little town has been captured twice by the Germans (before I came), and each time regained by the French.

"The ground is too level where we are for dugouts, so my "Y" is in a grand old residence. Of course, we have small bombproof dugouts for safety. Only a few feet from my door is one used by two officers besides myself and assistant in case of fierce bombardment. We stayed in it one night.

"I am in constant danger, but somehow one hardly feels that way at the time. One afternoon last week nineteen high explosive German shells struck directly in front of the Y. M. C. A.. They were '105's and, believe me, they tear some holes in the ground.

"Our movements are in the nights mostly. If one goes on the street in daytime he is obliged to walk close to the side of buildings, as the planes are out for photographs, etc., so much. The aviators are having battles overhead often. Some people think a Y. M. C. A. secretary's job is a snap! Let such follow me for a week and out of the trenches into the infantry, etc., and I'll guarantee they'll be taking nerve tonics for a month afterward."

Life on the Y. M. C. A. line develops a most sensitive sense of humor. One secretary slept for weeks in the upper story of a house over which the Germans were lobbing their shells to reach a battery in the valley below. It semed to him, he said, that the shells did not pass more than four feet above the ridgepole. The funny thing about the affair to him, was that he developed a blind faith in German efficiency. He was quite sure they would not fire a "short" and smash through that ridgepole and secretary. Nor did they. He thought this was very, very funny.

Churches Will Pay Their Way

An important meeting of the Joint Committee on War Production Communities with the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Misisons was held in New York September 11. The Joint Committee reported on fifty-five centers of war production in which surveys had been made, and for which the Joint Committee made definite recommendations. These included ship yards, government ordnance reservations and a large number of miscellaneous centers of war industry.

The Joint Committee recommended the immediate assignment of thirty-one whole time community organizers, eleven of whom were women, six whole time pastors and three women assistants. The committee also recommended the erection of a Liberty church, representing all the Protestan bodies at Nitro, W. Va., and reported that it is probable that there will be need of several like churches in other ordnance reservations. In all but two or three of these reservations it will be possible to erect but one church for the Protestant denominations. It was the judgment of the committee that these churches should have strong staffs. At Nitro it was recommended that there should be a chief pastor, a director of religious education and at least one visitor, and that one of these should be a capable musician.

The twenty-two community organizers recommended are for established communities to assist the churches in working out the problems involved in caring for these thousands of workingmen and their families, including not only their religious welfare, but their health, recreation, protection against vice and other needs. They will attempt to bring the religious forces into relationship and cooperation with the government, and with loyal community organizations working for the same purposes.

The women organizers were suggested for communities where women have entered the factories in great numbers. It is plannd that the organizers shall study the needs of these industrial women, and that they shall assist in interesting and organizing the women of the churches for their welfare. It was recommended that these women should be furnished by the womens' boards represented in the Council of Women for Home Missions.

The recommendations of the Committee on the Nitro church are written by one of the home boards, but that the direction of the work shall be left with the Joint Committee, representing all the boards. The denominational affiliations of members are to be kept separately on the rolls of membership, and provision will be made for special denominational services when desired, and for receiving people into denominational fellowship according to the customs of the various churches. These recommendations were approved without revision. It was realized by those present that the conditions of these reservations force some such joint action.

The Joint Committee also recommended the addition of six persons to the staff of the central office; a secretary each for rural work, very important. They provide that each church shall be under-surveyors. It was estimated that the office budget would total $50,000, and that an emergency budget of $10,000 should be provided. This was approved in principle and referred with power to the Joint Committee and its Finance Committee.

The government is prepared to build the churches in the ordnance reservations, but the conference took unanimous action that the churches should request the government to be allowed to pay for their own buildings. This seemed to those present to be a patriotic duty, on account of the high cost of the war, and it was also thought to be a wiser policy to preserve the historic principles of religious liberty and separation of church from the state, for which American Protestantism has consistently stood. The Joint Committee was also agreed upon the importance of organizing churches in these industrial centers for seven day service, and of setting up work to meet the needs and point of view of working people.

The conference was memorable on account of its spirit, the quickness with which the representatives of the boards acted, and the sense of opportunity which pervaded the meeting.

Prayer for the General Clergy Relief Fund

O Lord Jesus Christ, Thou gracious Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, we beseech Thee for Thy ministering servants, now aged and infirm, and no longer able to work as active laborers in Thy vineyard. Leave them not, neither forsake them in this their hour of temporal want and distress. Open the hearts and hands of thy people for their support and comfort, that their pathway to the grave may be free from all worldly cares and anxieties. Let the fund which thy church has established for their relief be increased many fold, that neither they nor their helpless widows and orphans may ever come to want or have cause to complain of our neglect, but as the members of one family and household of faith, may we rejoice together in thy love shed abroad in our hearts through the same Jesus Christ, our most Blessed Lord and Savior. Amen.—The Retired Minister, Chicago, Ill.

The Sunday School

The Value of Teacher Training

The day is past when any one may question the statement that Teacher Training is the key to the problems which have puzzled Sunday school workers for a whole generation or more. Within recent years the matter of Teacher Training has made tremendous strides in practically all denominations, but it has not yet come to its own. We are just beginning to be awakened to the need of better trained teachers and that other equally important fact that better trained teachers can be had in one way only,—that is, to TRAIN THEM.

That adequate provision for Teacher Training will solve our otherwise unsolvable problems has been demonstrated many times over, but never more strikingly and convincingly than in the story of a Sunday school which makes the astonishing announcement that it has too many teachers. It is not an imaginary story, but the record of something that actually happened,—no, it did not just happen, for such things do not happen. There was something back of it that brought it about,—a purpose, a plan well organized and systematically executed.

The story of the Sunday school which announces too many teachers appeared in a recent issue of one of the many journals devoted to the work of the Sunday school and religious education that come to my table. It is now a school of a thousand members. Five years ago it was struggling with the problem of having sufficient teachers for a school of four hundred. Today it has so many trained teachers who want classes that it has divided its beginners' circles into four smaller ones, has added a Cradle Roll class, and has a waiting list. (The story in full appears on the fourth cover page of the October BRETHREN TEACHER.)

How was this accomplished? Note again that we do not ask how it HAPPENED. It does not belong to the things that happen, if any such things there are in this universe. It was an accomplishment, an achievement.

The whole story is told in SIX WORDS, namely, THEY STARTED A TEACHER TRAINING CLASS. They graduated one class, then another, and still another, and yet another. The demand for trained teachers in that school kept on growing and so did the "output" of trained teachers. At last the demand was fully met and more.

Today that school numbers 1,000 members instead of 400, and from first to last is equipped with thoroughly trained teachers and workers,—and WORKERS, "get that," as Dr. Miller would say. It is a mark of real progress that we have come to realize that teacher training is not enough. The superintendent, the assistant superintendent,—all the officers of the school need special training if they are to do their best work, no less than teachers. We are now looking about for a substitute term, more inclusive than Teacher Training. Training for Leadership has been suggested, even if it is a bit awkward.

The importance of Teacher Training is set forth in a single paragraph by Bishop Thomas Nicholson, as follows:

"ADEQUATE TEACHER TRAINING, MAKING FOR AN EFFICIENT TEACHING FORCE, CAN ENHANCE THE VALUE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AN HUNDREDFOLD. THE INTERESTS OF THE CHURCH, THE SALVATION OF THE INDIVIDUAL, THE PERPETUITY OF THE NATION, ALL UNITE TO PRONOUNCE TEACHER TRAINING A THOUSAND TIMES WORTH WHILE."

These words of Bishop Nicholson ought to be printed in large enough type to be easily read across the street and a card containing them hung up in every Sunday school room and church auditorium in the Brethren church.

TESTIMONY OF TWO TRAINED WORKERS

Number One is the testimony of an adult who for the last year has been sitting in a class of which a trained teacher is the instructor. This is what he says:

"The effect of teacher training is far-reaching in a Sunday school. The trained teacher is prepared to present the truth in a manner and form better adapted to the pupil he teaches and to handle his subject with more confidence. No one is quicker to recognize ability in a teacher than is the pupil himself. In my opinion no Sunday school can be truly aggressive without trained teachers and a Teacher Training department training future teachers."

Number Two is the testimony of a high school girl who has taken the complete teacher training course. She says:

"The training class has opened my eyes to such an extent that I am able to see as never before into the realm of Christian service. I have a vision that I never thought it possible to have. I have a larger conception of God's will and what he wants me to do. I have an inspiration for the study of God's Word that I did not have before. The course has given me a real vision on the nurture of the child and the material to be used in successful training. I can see the child today as I have never seen him before. I can see his needs and prepare to meet them better when I come in contact with them. I cannot see just now how we have managed as well as we have in the past without the training. I can see that there is no other way to meet the needs of the child of today but by trained service. Just what it has done for me I am sure the study will do for others. I recommend it to others as a very present help in service. So great and extensive has been my vision that I am inspired to say to the church, Here am I; send me."

Home Department Superintendent

To the Readers of the Brethren Evangelist:

I am glad to introduce to our Sunday school friends, Brother Whitted, who has been chosen to take my place as national Home Department Superintendent. I desire for him a hearty co-operation of the District Superintendents for he has a permanent address. My interest in the Home Department has not waned but my address has; and at present I haven't any—waiting at the crossroad, a road well named. I stopped at Conference on my way to Spokane to fulfill my promise to the people, when the Mission Board requested my return to Baltimore for a time. With no settled address and no opportunity to get next to the Sunday school body at General Conference, I saw no other way by which I could do justice to so important a line of work as the Home Department.

Brother Whitted will announce the goals decided upon at Conference, and I shall be among the first of local workers to make the effort to reach that goal, whether my field will be on the Atlantic Coast or the Pacific, everywhere the greatest need is for Bible reading in the home.

Home Address
Ridgely, Maryland.

VIANNA DETWILER,

Goal Announcement

I am sending these goals out early that they may appear before the October District Conferences. I trust that each District Superintendent may get in line and see that they are given due attention in your different conferences.

1. A working Home Department in 75 per cent of the Brethren Sunday schools.
2. An increase of 40 per cent in Home Department membership.
3. A full record kept in each school.
4. A report from each school to the district superintendent who in turn will report to National Superintendent.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

The Evangelist Honor Roll is brought into use again this week, and we must admit there has not been a church added to the Roll for many months that has given us any more delight than the one that is added this week. This is the newest Brethren church in Ohio and is the First Brethren Church of Fostoria.

The Brethren in Fostoria have not yet had a pastor in full charge of the work, but Brother Oberholtzer has been giving them what help he can in connection with his regular work at Fremont, but now Brother M. S. White of Fostoria who has been retired for several years will look after their preaching services for a time, and R. Alger Hazen their young Sunday school superintendent who is so full of zeal for the work will see that it is not allowed to lag in any way. This church has gone the SECOND mile in placing the Evangelist in every Brethren home in the congregation, for we are told that it shall be placed in the home of every member, active or inactive, and also in the reading room of the city library and of the Fostoria Y. M. C. A. This is service with unstinted measure.

The first page contribution from Brother Baer as it appears in this week's paper deserves special mention. This article was read in the Literary Digest by the Editor several weeks ago and he was contemplating reproducing it in the Evangelist, but before this was done it was sent in to this office in connection with the very pointed contribution from the pen of Brother Jones, and now it comes from Brother Baer with editorial comment, so we take it for granted that this is ONE piece of REPRINT that our critical brethren in the ministry will not object to. At least it shows what some people besides the preachers themselves think about the compensations of the ministry. The article is worthy the closest consideration from the lay members of the church.

The contribution from the pen of Brother E. M. Cobb this week is deserving of special mention because it treats one of the great doctrines of the church of Jesus Christ. We hold that doctrine is one of the things necessary to the life and growth of the church and we have felt for a number of years that our Brethren are somewhat neglectful in contributing doctrinal articles to the pages of the Evangelist. So we welcome this contribution from Brother Cobb, and we trust he may find time to write upon a number of the other vital doctrines of the church for the good they may do all who read them.

Brother Watson, Moderator of the Pennsylvania Brethren conference makes an important announcement this week relative to the opportunities and work of the coming meeting which is scheduled for October seventh to ninth at Johnstown. If the time can be possibly found to do so the Editor hopes to be able to be in attendance at this conference for a part of the session and he hopes to make the acquaintance of many of the Pennsylvania Brethren whom he has never before met.

G. E. Drushal writes interestingly of the work at Lost Creek as he finds it since his return from the General Conference to the field where many of the best years of his life have been spent. Lost Creek has become a real center from which goes out in many directions influences and forces that will tell for good on the lives of the coming generations of many of the citizens of Kentucky.

We are sure our readers will rejoice to know that the gospel is taking such deep hold on the people of South America that come under the ministrations of C. F. Yoder. As a result of a recent two weeks' meeting sixty-seven confessions were made in Rio Cuarto. This means sixty-seven babes in Christ that will need careful nursing to enable them to grow up unto real Christian manhood and womanhood. Brother Yoder also writes of the splendid work being accomplished by Brethren Atkinson and Bock. In South America the harvest field is surely great and the laborers are indeed few. We should constantly pray for the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest.

After two and one-half years spent as pastor of the Carleton, Nebraska church Brother Livengood with his wife has gone back to his old home at Lanark, Illinois, retired from the active ministry. While Brother Livengood has given more than thirty-five years to the ministry and has accomplished more in his work than the average minister accomplishes he still possesses too much vigor to quit preaching altogether and we trust he may yet decide to put on the harness once again and come to the help for a few years more of some needy yet fertile field for the Brethren.

J. A. Garber has a message this week for the Endeavor Societies of the Brethren church. Faithful efforts were made to effect a forceful national organization of the young people's work and the co-operation of all the societies is solicited to make the work effective.

Thomas Allen of Haddix, Kentucky who preached several years ago for the Brethren at Limestone, Tennessee, recently had occasion to make a business trip through that section of the state and spent several days visiting among the Brethren and preached for them on Sunday. Brother Allen reports the work at this point in very good condition even though they have been without a pastor for some time. Pastoral care is always needed, but faithful work on the part of the laity often makes up for lack of pastoral care.

J. D. Kemper, pastor of the conference church at Carleton, Nebraska, has a good word and an important message to the churches of the Kanemorado district. Those of us who have visited the Carleton church in the past know that what Brother Kemper says about the care and entertainment by the Brethren of that place is all true, and as the stress of the times through which we are now passing demands the utmost vigilance on the part of the entire church and we trust the hopes of the workers of this district may be realized.

The reports from the work at Zion Hill and Ankenytown show that Brother Lynn has not been idle as a pastor during the past year even though he may be carrying heavy school work. The mid-summer revival at Zion Hill resulted in a splendid work being accomplished. Twenty-two members were added to the church as a result of these meetings under the leadership of the pastor. Brother Lynn also feels under obligations to the Ankenytown Brethren for the kindness shown himself and wife during the latter's illness in the past year.

Sunday, September twenty-ninth, is Home Coming Day for the Flora, Indiana Brethren church. This is planned to be a big day for the Flora church and Sunday school. It is also to be the closing day of the pastorate of Brother Lytle who has served them so faithfully and successfully for seven and one-half years.

G. C. Carpenter reports the amounts paid by the subscribers to the Washington, D. C. church mortgage fund. As Brother Carpenter states every pledge should be paid before October first so that Brother Lyon and the Washington congregation may be able to celebrate this victory on their fall Rally Day. Brother Carpenter also makes a plea for that other Washington church in the far North West.

Beachler's campaign notes make it plain that he is still busy at his job, and that the people in Pennsylvania are willing to co-operate with the College workers when opportunity is given them. Since his last report he has canvassed Mt. Pleasant and Uniontown with unusual results at the latter place. Any one who has ever seen Brother Ed from Uniontown knows exactly how that smile Brother Beachler mentions looked; but we do not blame Brother Ed for smiling nor can we blame Brother Beachler for his hearty laughter which we can imagine we hear accompanying Brother Ed's smile. It is a mighty good work they are engaged in.

Brother R. Paul Miller reports the progress of the work in Spokane, and while it is delayed somewhat because of a shortage of funds to enable them to complete their building yet as we learn how they sacrifice and how they labor we are almost led to exclaim, "Lo, we have not found so great faith, no not in all the Brethren church!" But such devotion to a good and worthy cause is sure to bring a rich reward.

There is still a great need in the work in Kentucky. Will not our readers give special attention to the call that is made by Brother Carpenter, and will not some pastor take it upon himself to find some one to fill that place that is so urgent?

Don't Mix the Babies

Many comedies and some tragedies ars supposed to have occurred in the world through incompetent nurses or more incompetent fathers and sometimes even mothers getting the babies left to their care mixed with somebody else's baby and then not being able to tell "which from t'other." Of course this occurs more frequently in movie performances or in theatrical farce than in real life; but similar things occasionally occur in real life and in the business world.

Sunday school officers frequently mix "the babies" in ordering their quarterly Sunday school supplies. We frequently receive checks or orders intended for David C. Cook or for the Meigs Publishing Company, and these companies receive orders intended for us. Of course we have no trouble in identifying our own babies and thus the exchange is easily made, but if those who order the supplies would exercise a little more care in making out their orders and in putting them in the proper envelopes these "mixings" would occur less frequently.

Of course when such things occur we learn where some of our schools are buying a part of their supplies, and to this practice we have no objections when their order includes something we do not have for sale, but why not order all your supplies, even those secured from Cook, from us? We order some things from Cook for a number of our schools every quarter, and while it does not cost the school ordering one cent more for the goods it does give us a little profit, though the profit is small. However, we feel sure that if every Brethren Sunday school that orders even a small part of their supplies from the Cook Publishing Company would order through us there would be some material gain in our business during the year. Only yesterday we received one of these "mixed baby" orders. Of course we forwarded it at once to the proper firm at a cost of only three cents, but had the order been sent originally to us it would have not cost the school any more but instead of the Brethren Publishing company being out THREE cents it would have been ahead ONE DOLLAR and SEVEN cents.

Now Brethren you expect the Business Manager to make the business of the Brethren Publishing Company pay its own way in the world, and it can be done, too, with your cooperation, but that means that every Brethren Sunday school and every Brethren church should buy all the supplies they use from publishers with whom we constantly do business through us.

There is no profit for us in taking a single order for one dollar's worth of supplies to be secured from the Cook publishers, but when that one order is included with a number of larger ones to be cared for at the same time at the beginning of each quarter then there is some profit to the Brethren Publishing Company in handling it. The only way to build up a denominational publishing business is for the denomination to cooperate in that business, and it is hard to make bricks "without straw." But Brethren, if you will keep us in "straw" we will make the bricks.

An Irresistible Force

One of the questions that used to be at times sprung upon us was, "What would be the result should an irresistible force come in contact with an immovable object?" And hot and lively were the discussions sometimes, when it was not understood that there can be no such conditions in the process of nature. Either there is no irresistable force or there is no immovable object. There may be neither, but there can not be both. However, so far as the resisting power of man is concerned there are a great many irresistable forces.

One of these forces is now looming large before the entire publishing business of the world. The advance in the cost of labor, coupled with its scarcity, the shortage of essential materials for the manufacture of paper and the accompanying rise in the price of the same are making it more and more difficult to supply the wants of the reading public.

Two years ago when the price of paper advanced nearly eighty per cent. many publications were suspended because their publishers could not meet the advanced cost of material with the price for which they could sell their finished product. The subscription price of other periodicals was advanced to meet this added cost of production. Practically all church and Sunday school publications were advanced in price, those of the Brethren church included, and the breakers ahead were avoided. But now comes another manifestation of this irresistable force of "price of paper" together with the government's limitation of the supply to be secured by publishers.

The Brethren Publishing Company was fortunate in being able to place an order last February for a goodly supply of paper before the great advance in price and the government orders occurred, but this supply will not last very long after all, and last week another order was placed by us for paper to be delivered in January, but the price is practically FIFTY per cent. above that of the last shipment we received. This is the irresistable force we must face. Now what might be considered the immovable object would be a price of periodicals that can not be advanced. If the question is asked, what will be the result if this irresistable force comes in contact with immovable prices it will not be at all difficult to answer, there will be one big SMASH. But we are not looking for the smash, rather we are planning to avoid it. We have received notice from other publishers with whom we do business that all their Sunday school publications including those for both the New Improved Uniform Lessons and the series of Graded Lessons, will be advanced in price beginning with January 1, 1919; and we see nothing left to do but to follow suit.

This matter has not yet been taken up with the Prudential Committee of the Publication Board, but we feel safe in assuring our readers that the price of the Evangelist will remain unchanged for the present, and what changes must be made will be made in the price of the Sunday school publications. This seems to be the inevitable, a force to which we must all bow and which we should all accept graciously. More about this will be said later.

What Is Religion?

We are told that there is more religion in the world today than ever before, but (and what a wonderful significance is sometimes attached to that word but) that it is not of the staid formal type that has been held by the regular orthodox churches for the past number of centuries. So free have men become in expressing what they THINK religion is and what they THINK is all that is required to assure one entrance into heaven that a great many people who had thought they knew in the past what religion was are no longer assured in their own minds and they find it more and more difficult to give "a reason for the hope" that is in them.

In the first place it should be remembered that there is a great difference between religion itself and the Christian religion. The world has always been more or less religious. The heathen world is religious, sometimes deeply so, but of what value to them or to the rest of the world is their religion? There were religions in the world when Abraham was called out of Ur of the Chaldees to become the head of a people whose God should be Jehovah, but these religions lacked the one essential element that makes a religion valuable to its followers, the atonement of Jesus Christ, and lacking this all religions are in vain.

It is not enough that one should be religious, it is required that his religion shall be the Christian religion. The question very naturally arises, Is this world religion that is now spoken of so frequently Christian religion? Natural religion is lacking in the saving power that the world of mankind so greatly needs and it is in supplying this great want that the supernatural Christian religion finds its way into barren and desolate hearts. When the Christian asks the question, What is religion? he can find a final answer in the words of the editor of the Sunday School Times: "The eternal bond which binds him to Jesus Christ as his glad and grateful 'bondservant.'"

Now, what is this eternal bond but the atonement which Jesus accomplished on Calvary? There are many principles of good in the teachings of Christ and they prove helpful to any man or to any group of men that live according to them, but the only really saving principle of Christianity is the shed blood of the Savior, for "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission," and what the world needs today as much as it needed it when sin first entered into the human heart through the serpent trail in the Garden of Eden is that its sins shall be remitted.

Questions of theology may confuse the layman as they have confused the minister a great many times, but the greatest question of theology that concerns the average man in this life is answered in these words: "In Jesus dwells the fulness of the Godhead bodily," and when we have this truth and live it in the fulness of the power of the Holy Spirit all other questions become of none effect.

Does Mission Work in South America Pay?

South America is one of the least productive fields. A nation is not being born in a day here as in some fields, and native workers cannot be obtained for a few cents a day as in India, for instance. From year to year in the general there is often but a slight increase. This leads to discouragement on the part of God's children, both in the home land and on the foreign field. But does this mean that nothing is being done?

Some twenty years ago, through the instrumentality of one of our veteran missionaries, Dr. J. F. Thomson, an almost illiterate Italian immigrant, Louis Ferarini by name, became thoroughly converted. He became a regular St. Francis, his soul was constantly on fire with the Savior's divine love, and every one who came in contact with him could not help but feel his mysterious influence. He was sent out as local preacher to a town called Chivilcoy; this town is about four hours' distant from Buenos Aires. Here this faithful servant of the Lord laid the foundation for a flourishing congregation.

One day Jose Di Leo, also an Italian immigrant came to the preaching service. For years he had been a drunkard and a gambler. He was absolutely wretched when he came into this meeting. During the first prayer God's spirit broke up the depths of his heart. He felt that he was utterly lost and began to cry for mercy. The cry of his heart was heard immediately, and the dear loving Savior came in and took full possession. The gambler and drunkard became a true and efficient worker, his family life was wonderfully transformed, and now he and his wife are having constant proofs of God's transforming power in their children.

Signor Di Leo's first thought after his conversion was for his brother Pedro (Peter). Pedro had excelled his brother in wickedness. If any one had asked the street urchins of Chivilcoy twenty years ago: "Who is the worst gambler in Chivilcoy?" They would have answered, "Pedro Di Leo." If any one had asked: "Who is the worst drunkard?" he would have received the answer, "Pedro Di Leo."

This drunkard and gambler came to the Methodist church at the invitation of his recently converted brother. Our half-illiterate Italian local preacher took for his theme, "The Prodigal Son." Every word that he spoke seemed to pierce poor Pedro's heart and he became mightily convicted of sin. He went home with a heavy heart, and so that his wife might not hear him, he locked himself up in the kitchen to pray. The Savior knew what Pedro wanted and he also knew how great Pedro's need was. And that same night, there in the kitchen, the terrible load of sin and iniquity was all taken away. Oh, what a happy day that was! How he ran to his dear wife, who had suffered blows, hunger, and almost starvation on account of his bad life. Not long after she also found peace and then a real home was begun, whose cornerstone has been up to the present time Jesus, the sinner's friend. Surely, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creation.

Pedro soon found that in order to make progress in the Christian life he must be able to read his Bible, so he went to work and began to study with all his might. In these twenty years he had made such progress that the Sunday school board elected him as superintendent. His brother Jose is a class leader and is very active in all church work. Did it pay to take the trouble to gain that Italian immigrant for Christ? Did it pay to send him out to preach the gospel to his fellow countrymen in Argentina? Did it pay to bring about this wonderful transformation in the homes of these drunkards? We who know their sweet, pure family life today have no doubt of it.

Not long ago a young man came to the parsonage to have a talk with me about the welfare of his soul. He told me the following sad story: He had not seen his mother for twenty years, although she lived within about forty squares of his workshop. She had abandoned her husband and seven or eight children, the youngest of whom was only two years old. Ever since she has been living with another man and has had children by him. "Now, what can I do for my mother?" he asked. "My father tells me never to call on her, but I should very much like to see her again, although she will certainly not recognize me." We got down on our knees and prayed for his mother, and we hope to see a speedy reconciliation brought about between her and her legitimate husband.

Several months ago I called on a Swiss family; they had come to Argentina about twenty-five years before. The father for many years has been a confirmed drunkard, and the mother had lost the little religion she had had in former days. She told me how different things were now from what they once had been. How for years she had practically abandoned the church, because she could not understand Spanish preaching very well. And having left off uniting herself with God's children, her own religious life had suffered more and more. "Oh, I am so unhappy, I want to go back to the Savior, I must have peace in my heart." I read passage after passage from her own Bible, and she seemed to be more at peace. The following Sunday she came to the altar and surrendered her life to God. "I have such a wonderful peace now," she said, "I must visit my married daughter and be a messenger of peace to her as you were to me."

When I was pastor in one of the provincial towns a few years ago, an Englishman who had been wandering up and down this country began to attend our services. He soon became aware of the fact that he had not lived up to the Baptismal Covenant of his boyhood days. For a long time he did some pretty hard thinking, and finally made the great decision of his life. He did so well that he was soon elected superintendent of the Sunday school, and as class leader he began to do valiant work for the Master. Recently he was married to an Argentine lady, and judging from a letter received from her lately, she is well under way towards accepting Christ.

Is it worth while to send missionaries to this far-off southland? Ask the families whose lives have been so wondrously transformed; ask these redeemed sinners, whose love can never forget those who first brought them the good tidings. From all parts men and women are saying: "Come over and help us." Who will say, "Here am I, send me?"

Conversion of a Japanese Woman

The line of thinking which led Madam Hirooka, a prominent Japanese woman, to become a Christian is thus reported in her own words in Asia:

"I wanted women to be good and I wanted to help them to improve their lot. I found that I could not accomplish what I desired without religion. That conclusion sent me to study religion from the woman's point of view. I found that there is no hope for women in any of the religions of the Orient. They teach that from the cradle to the grave women are inferior to men. They for example, teach that fools and women can not be educated. A woman can not be a 'heavenly creature.' It teaches that it is better to see a snake than a woman, for the latter arouses passion. Japanese women have been so long oppresed by this kind of teaching that they no longer stop to ask why. They are afraid, like slaves. Then I began to read the Bible. I did not like some parts of it any better than I like the religions of the East. . . . When I read the gospels I found that Jesus made no distinction between sexes. I liked that. We are all, women as well as men, children of God. I came to the conclusion that the only hope for the women of the Orient to attain their true position is through Christianity."

St. Bernard for Japan

Some students of church history and of missions might find it of interest to analyse the value for the Christians of the Oriental races of the lives of various saints of the Early Church. One Japanese pastor had clear views on the subject, as the following incident shows:

"Mr. Ikeda, whose health had broken down, devoted his time to a translation of 'St. Bernard and His Times,' believing that the book would be a message of inspiration to Japanese Christians. To a friend visiting him in his poor lodging he confided his difficulties in finding a publisher because of the size of his work. The friend suggested that St. Bernard was but little known and that a life of St. Francis of Assisi would be more acceptable to both publisher and public. Mr. Ikeda acknowledged the force of this view and said that he, too, revered St. Francis, 'but,' he said, 'St. Francis stood for love alone—selfless, gentle, self-sacrificing love. There is great power in that, but it is not enough. There is evil in men's hearts and that evil must be fought against and subdued. Only so can men be saved. Not St. Francis but St. Bernard is the man who combines in himself both these principles, love and the aggressive fighting spirit, and so I thought it would perhaps serve Christ best if I introduced St. Bernard to the Japanese Church.' "—

A Lay Missionary to Japan

The visit to Japan of Capt. W. H. Hardy has been described by a missionary there as "one of the most brilliant chapters of unofficial missionary service in the history of modern times." He says: "All sorts of records have been broken by this 'simple sailor.' He is a hero of three wars, who carries ten bullets and five silver ribs in his body besides a silver plate in his scull; he is one of the two survivors of Commodore Perry's famous band of voyagers who opened Japan during the past five months in ways that no other commoner has ever been; and he has chosen as his pet name for himself one given him by admiring friends,'The Grandfather of Modern Japan.' But these and similar facts concerning the old hero which have been stressed in the papers and magazines are not the things that have impressed us most. What has touched us most deeply is the five-months-long sermon he has preached and practiced on God and international good feeling. He has preached from scores of platforms and written in hundreds of albums 'God is Love.' In many ways he has set an example that regular missionaries might well follow."

Working at Her Religion

A faithful Bible woman in Taiku, Korea was very ill last year, and went to the Japanese hospital for treatment during an entire summer. At the end of the time, when she asked for her bill, the Japanese physician in charge said, "I am a Buddhist and you are a Christian, but I see that you are working at your religion and so there is no bill. Shortly after that the Bible woman came to one of the missionaries in great distress and said, "How can I repay him?" and then suddenly her face brightened and she said, "Oh, I can pray that he may become a Christian, and then he will be fully repaid."

The missionary tells also how, soon after the Bible woman began to pray, this physician, who is a man of high rank, having been decorated by the Emperor for bravery during the war with Russia, began English lessons, reading the gospel of John, and soon became so interested that he asked to have the way of salvation fully explained.

How a Leaflet Bore Fruit

At the close of the service one morning in the church at Chungju, Chosen, a woman came up to the platform and said to the missionary: "Will not the pastor stop at my house on his way home tomorrow?" Upon inquiry he learned that she was a former beer seller, notorious for her vile language. The next morning, as the missionary sat on the little porch in front of her store, she told of her conversion. "Some one handed me a leaflet one day as I sat here selling beer. I said I could not read it but he told me to have my son read it to me. After my son read it he said: "Mother, we must become Christians.' We talked it over and a few Sabbaths later I went to church and when the pastor asked all who wanted to believe to stand, I stood. Now my son and his wife and I all believe. We have stopped the beer business and expect to move away and farm for a living."

A Family Day in Japan

In North America, the observance of a special week in February as Father and Son Week has taken firm root in thousands of churches and Young Men's Christian Associations. This year for the first time the idea has been transplanted to Japan, and true to the genius of the Japanese, it has been modified into Family Day. By a happy thought it was decided to tie the observance up with boys' festival which comes on May 5th. Accordingly, a number of churches and Y. M. C. A.'s celebrated the occasion on May 4th or May 5th by special suppers attended by parents and children, mostly men and boys, by public addresses and special sermons, and by athletic and other entertainments. The festival bids fair to become an annual event and may in time give a Christian content to the boys' festival.

General Conference and Christian Endeavor

More than ordinary interest was manifested in Christian Endeavor during the late General Conference. The departmental and general sessions were well attended. With one exception the spakers were present according to schedule and all sought to inspire their hearers with a deeper desire to promote the training of young people and to attain our goals.

Even though time was at a premium by reason of numerous sessions and engagements the periods for social fellowship were not allowed to go wholly by default. If the rain did keep us from Indian Mound on Saturday morning we found shelter in the Island Pavillion where we enjoyed the delicious breakfast prepared by Brother E. A. Rowsey, Miss Kanauer and Miss Wilcox, members of the "eats" committee. An entertaining and uplifting program was directed by Brother Boardman, during which he called upon representatives of the several districts. Grouped in a circle all joined in sounding the note of patriotic loyalty by singing "America."

Almost every year witnesses a few changes in the personnel of the National Cabinet. Those of us who have been privileged to share their fellowship are always loath to sever official relations with colleagues whose friendship and fealty we had learned to value. But the chief purpose of Christian Endeavor is to train for service, and those who faithfully apply themselves in this school of training are soon recognized. Our Junior-Intermediate superintendent, Mrs. J. D. Kemper, was promoted to the superintendency of the Children's Department of the National Sunday School Association. Feeling that the older men were being required for membership in the general boards of church work Brethren Witter and Oberholtzer were released from the Good Citizenship and Quiet Hour Departments, respectively. Brother Lambert, under whose leadership the goals of the Life Work department were exceeded, declined reelection. We wish each of these former superintendents increasing success in their respective fields of labor, gratefully remembering their hearty cooperation and ever cherishing the pleasant memories of their association.

For Junior-Intermediate superintendent the Committee on Nominations presented the name of Miss Grace Buck and she was elected. When meeting with the Cabinet she insisted that other duties would not allow her acceptance of the new position and her resignation was accepted. According to the action of the Cabinet another was appointed to fill the vacancy and the new officers are as follows: President, J. A. Garber; General Secretary, G. C. Carpenter; Junior-Intermediate Superintendent, Miss Nora Bracken; Missionary, A. L. DeLozier; Quiet Hour, E. M. Riddle; Tenth Legion, E. A. Myer; Citizenship, A. E. Whitted; Life Work, Edwin Boardman. Before leaving Winona plans were formulated for the continuance of our Four-Year Challenge, and our Endeavorers may expect to hear from each of these officers in due time. All solicit the undivided support of each Endeavorer. Let us work together to make this our best year.

Push the Enlistment Campaign

September and October are devoted to enlistments. These are the months to work for your proportionate share of increase in membership asked for in the Four-Year Challenge. Look at your poster and see if you made the gains required in the preceding years. If not you must make this year's gain plus your losses. Once the number is definitely determined place it clearly before your society and seek continually to inspire every member with a desire to enlist new members. More than this, plan a systematic campaign for new members in which every Endeavorer shall have a part. This leadership falls naturally to the Lookout Committee, but the members thereof must be supported with good "fellowship." This enlistment campaign calls, also, for the organization of new societies: young peoples, junior and intermediate. District pride would seem to require alertness on the part of every church that has neither or that has one and could have another. Consider your needs and if they call for a Christian Endeavor society of either kind seek to provide for them with the organization of the same. By so doing you will supply a helpful ministry for your young people and give your church the standing it deserves in relation to the program of young people's work., It, too, is a part of the Four-Year Program.

Kentucky Mission Notes—The Matron

No one has responded to the repeated call for matron of the dormitory at Lost Creek. A good Christian woman can find here an opportunity to make her life a blessing to the number of girls who stay at the dormitory. Pray with us that the Lord of the harvest will send forth a laborer for this work.

School Desks

Between twenty-five and forty additional school desks are needed at Riverside. Does some reader know of a lot second hand desks in some unused schoolhouse, of which there are many scattered over the country? We bought those which are in use now at Krypton from the township trustee at Warsaw, the cost being trivial. Will some friend of this work help us at this time to find a number of desks that will help to met this need? We do not want to purchase new desks on account of the high prices and because we do not want to invest much money in this line. If you can secure such desks at a small expense let us know at once. Maybe your church or society would like to furnish the same. Such desks would be shipped to Haddix,Ky.

Prayer

It is the sincere prayer of many that Brother and Sister Cook may be enabled to continue their splended labors in the field where they have already accomplished so much and where the doors of opportunity for their serice are opened more widely than ever before. Will our readers make this a special object of intercessory prayer. Pray daily and our God will hear and answer. May His will be done, and His work be prospered, and His faithful servants be cared for in every way.

News From the Field

Attention—Pastors and Churches of Kanemorado District

The people of the Carleton church are preparing to entertain fifty delegates at the annual district conference which meets here October 8, 9, and 10. The good people here will be disappointed if less than that number are in attendance. The church is the most centrally located of any in the district and easily accessible by rail or auto.

Free entertainment will be furnished. Dinner and supper in the basement of the church and breakfast in the homes. Come to Carleton!

J. D. KEMPER.

Lost Creek, Kentucky

We have returned from conference with our faces set to the task before us for another year. Alone the task would be discouraging to face. But with his leading, it is not impossible of accomplishment. This task is to increase our spiritual and financial returns for the year. That we may claim to be a live growing plant, this must be done, if conditions are somewhat normal.

Spiritually now we have a body of believers that are standing by the services splendidly. But among this number there are not the ones from whom so much financial aid can be expected, for they do not have it. For that we will have to reach out among those who do not come to the services, and to do that we are now planning, or have planned. Already we have had some returns from this class.

The inland places, and by inland I mean off from the railroad, such as Lost Creek, do not have the money privileges that come to the places along the railroad. For the last few years there has been a considerable influx of money into eastern Kentucky through the coal operations. But that has done Lost Creek no good directly. In the inland places the people must be led to see the need of the regular services of the house of God. They have never had them. Where the coal operations are on, there are people who have come from places where they know the worth of such services and are thus more ready to help.

But this does not mean that the inland places are hopeless, by no means. Really it is here that we find possibly the purest Americanism of anywhere on the continent. Witness the volunteers in the present war from "Bloody Breathitt." Our experience leads us to feel that there is satisfactory response in the different activities of the church. Spiritually we have them. Also consider some cases financially: Take Sister Elizabeth Haddix's gift of last year as an example. I know whereof I speak when I say, "She gave her all." She did not have anything left to even buy clothes with. Soon thereafter she was compelled to try the rest cure for tuberculosis. Her parents gave her a roof and food, but no money to go on. She has been in great need. Since she has given her all to the church, we felt that the church ought to help her some, and we would have done it here had we been able. We are happy to report that amidst all her difficulties she is now improving. She was anointed in June and has steadily, though slowly, improved since then.

We have another illustration of the increasing willingness of the people here to give. During the month of June my father was very sick. The people here knew of it and in some way found out why it was that I did not go to see him before the end of the month. During our program which we gave on July Fourth, I was called to another room where some of our people were, and they there gave me $23, and told me to go to see my father at once. The next day I went. They say it was the easiest and quickest raised of any money they had yet tried to collect.

Pennsylvania Conference

All aboard for Johnstown, and from every section of this great state Brethren people will be headed in our direction. We are ready and await your coming October 7th to 9th. Everything necessary to your happiness and comfort has been arranged for. We are anxious for the time to come to show you just how glad we are to be your hosts this year. We want a lot of you to come because we want this to be the biggest and best Pennsylvania conference to date.

An unusual opportunity is afforded to us to attend the Brethren conference and the Pennsylvania State Sunday School Convention which convenes at the close of our conference. Every Sunday school in the Brethren churches of Pennsylvania should have delegates at both conventions. Both can be attended for one car fare. Let every church awake to this opportunity and appoint delegates and see that some one is here—don't be slackers.

Old Somerset Street church will do her best to make the week pleasant and profitable to all. Don't fail to come.

J. FREMONT WATSON, Moderator.

Two Years and a Half In Carleton, Nebraska

In justice to the Carleton church and for the satisfaction of my own mind I ask for a small space in the Evangelist. Mrs. Livengood and myself went to Carleton with a measure of hesitancy, because of the high grade of preaching that the place had been favored with.

We began our work the first Sunday in March, 1916. The church had been without a pastor for about eleven months, but from the very beginning the work went off auspiciously. I found a fine church building well equipped for all the services of the church, Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E.. The people were of a most excellent kind. All departments of the church were well organized, and during the first year we added to the membership 40 persons; during this first year N. W. Jennings conducted a revival meeting and the field was quite thoroughly worked and cleaned up. So completely was the work done that but one confession was had in the year and a half following.

It has been our lot to always have had a splendid people to work with; Lanark and Milledgeville, Illinois, I served the Lanark church about twenty-five years, and Milledgeville altogether about ten years, and with due respect for all, Carleton stands, shoulder to shoulder, and neck to neck with the other two churches. And I gladly say that the years spent at Carleton were filled with one continuous round of good cheer, harmonious activities and perfect co-operation between pastor and people, not even a ruffle was felt during our short stay.

One of the golden memories of our pastoral labors will always be the 2 years and six months with this Godlike Christian people.

Our going away was entirely of our own initiative, and to our own displeasure. Although we never were away from old Illinois very long at one time, our stay at Carleton was a mighty pleasant affair, and the dear good people of little Carleton have a strong pull upon our heart strings, and it was not easy to say good bye to them, not only of the Brethren church but of all Carleton.

May success follow the present pastor and wife and the Carleton church. We are thankful for Carleton's kindnesses.

BACK TO TENNESSEE

Haddix, Kentucky

I had the pleasure of calling on the dear Brethren at Limestone, Tennessee. It was a great pleasure after nearly 5 years' absence to meet with our dear brothers and sisters and many friends with whom I labored nearly 2 years and whom I loved. This visit came rather as a surprise as I was on a business trip to Bristol, Tennessee, and just stopped over a few nights, I say nights for I spent 3 nights and 2 days. I only preached one sermon Sunday afternoon. I would have preached at nights but they were holding a meeting at the old church just across the creek from our church, and we did not think it best to do so. We had a nice service and a goodly number out for such a short notice.

The Brethren are doing well and going forward with the work just as faithfully as though they had a pastor. This is a good field for the Brethren no doubt and would be a good place for one of our ablest ministers. I was very much pleased with the improvements that had been made during my absence of about 5 years. The church is strong spiritually and they are a happy band to work with. We have a nice church building. The aisle is carpeted nicely. A good cistern and church bell. Then best of all a splendid choir. This made it a great pleasure for me to preach for them; I only regret that my stay with them was so short but I only had five days to make my trip and get my business through. I left my home at Haddix, Kentucky, on Wednesday, September 4th, and arrived at Limestone, Tennessee, Thursday, September 5th. There I was met by my daughter and her husband, B. C. Smith and their little son Sharrell. After piling my suit case and a traveling bag into the wagon and adjusting the lap robe and rain coats and umbrellas, for it was raining, we had a happy ride, happy not because of the rain for it was a very cold rain, but happy because we were with loved ones. Then a distance of about two miles brought us to the Smiths' home, where I met with Brother and Sister T. M. Smith, who have helped greatly to make the church what it is. Then Friday to Bristol and returned to Smith's. Saturday I rested, Sunday I took dinner with Brother S. D. Arnold, another brother who has helped greatly in the cause of the Brethren at this place. Then I preached for them in the afternoon and left for home in the evening. May God bless the dear Brethren and sisters and all the good people that made my visit so pleasant.

With Sister Mary Pence with them this year, it is hoped that the work will prosper as Miss Pence is a great worker.

Looking forward for some good reports from the work.

I am yours in the hope of Glory,

THOS. ALLEN.

It is with much pleasure that we send in this report, for every dollar means a lot to us just now, as we are now meeting the heaviest burden of all in completing our building. One notably pleasing thing about the report is the number of "Repeaters," folks who don't just give once and call it "quits." But as long as there is a need, they continue to help. Another blessed feature of the report that fills our hearts with gratitude and increased responsibility, is the number of real sacrifices represented by it. One little mother writes, "I have no steady income, and have three children to support. I can't send much, but I believe so strong in the way the Brethren church preaches the WHOLE BIBLE, that I will do all I can. Enclosed find $5.00. If I can, I will send more later." Here is a little mother struggling to support her three children, yet she is ready to sacrifice more, for the blessed work of the Master. Here's another, "My husband is 84 years old and so blind that he can't feed himself any more. I am 74 years old, but we want to do what we can. Enclosed find $4. We would like to send more to help you to get started. But we always pray for the preachers, that they may be strong to preach the whole truth." And there are many more. But here is real sacrifice. Now let the rest of us who have never known what it means to really sacrifice for the Master's work, do our part.

We are doing all that we can on the church with voluntary labor so that the increased cost of some materials will not stop us. By buying our brick last year, we saved over a thousand dollars from what it would cost this year. But the Lord is helping us in all these ways in order that his work here might be prospered. We are now looking to you all to stand by us while we go onward with the work, that we may soon dedicate a strong Brethren church here in Spokane. To him be all the glory.

Zion Hill and Ankenytown

The work at Zion Hill is progressing nicely. We have been with the Brethren of this congregation one year. Many blessings came to us during the past year, for which we bless the Lord. We closed our first year's work with a revival lasting two weeks during the month of August. The weather was hot and the people very busy. Nevertheless, the good people gave to us their hearty cooperation, and with Jesus as our Captain we launched an offensive against the enemy of souls. We are glad to report victory. At the close of the battle we found that we had taken twenty-two prisoners from the devil. This brings the total number of additions up to twenty for the year. We wish to thank the Brethren for the help they so willingly gave during the meeting. The singing was splendid. The aid of your autos in making visits, was much appreciated.

Also we wish to thank you for the purse you gave us at the close of the meeting. We expect to continue our work at Zion Hill another year.

The work at Ankenytown is on the map. We have not been able to hold a revival campaign at Ankenytown this year. However, we are glad to report that the regular services are well attended. The Sunday school holds its own, taking everything into consideration. We are hoping to meet the requirements of a front line school this year.

Much of our time is taken up with our school work at Ashland. Therefore, we are handicapped to some extent in church.

We feel the need of a more thorough preparation for the work whereunto we have been called.

Praise God for the faithful laymen who give of their time and money to make the church work a success.

We owe much to the brethren at Ankenytown for their kindness. Last winter when Mrs. Lynn was in the hospital the Brethren and friends at Ankenytown sent us a letter which contained more than one hundred dollars. Your kindness shall never be forgotten.

We ask the prayers of the Brotherhood for a prosperous year in the work of the Lord.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

When I wrote last we were about to have special meeting for a week to prepare for Decision Day in the Sunday school. I spoke to the children in the afternoon and to grown people in the evening and when the appeal was made on Sunday there were thirty-seven in all who responded. Six of these were from the new Sunday school conducted by Brother Barrio in Pueblo Alberdi. Seventeen of the number came on Sunday evening and it seemed best to continue the meetings, which I did for a week longer when the total of those who came forward in public confession of their acceptance of Christ as their Savior reached sixty-seven. I expected to continue the meetings the following week in Pueblo Alberdi but a sudden change in the weather made it so difficult for people to come out that we decided to postpone the meeting there. We will have plenty of work to look after these who have already taken their stand for the gospel. We hope to enlist them in the Sunday school and Endeavor society. They require a great deal of visiting as well and it is in this work that I feel the lack of time more than in anything else. The spiritual atmosphere in general down here is so unfavorable to the Christian life that it is difficult to guard all the sheep so that not one of them may be lost. One of my little girls expressed the same idea recently with the remark: "It was easy to be quiet in school in North America, but it is hard down here."

We have had some of the coldest weather ever known here this winter, but it is now about time for spring and fruit trees are beginning to bloom. The country is very dry however, and much wheat has not sprouted. We now have two Sunday schools in the country, one near Las Accquias and the other near San Ambrosio. The latter is conducted by one of our young men who is teaching school in the country. Brother Atkinson also hopes to begin a Sunday school soon in Dehessa, the town of which I wrote in my last letter. He will doubtless write of the work there. Brother Bock also hopes to start out soon to visit the towns between this and Carlota and especially this latter place which is the next most important town for us to occupy.

We believe that we owe much of the blessing we have received to the prayers of the faithful colaborers at home and we beg a continued interest in all your prayers.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

After our canvass at Jones Mills we came back to finish our work at Mt. Pleasant. Brother W. A. Crofford of Johnstown is the present pastor of this congregation. The results of our work in this field were not what they should have been, nor what we had hoped they would be; but we did our best. We received $220 for Permanent Endowment. This came from three sources. We were well cared for in the home of Dr. A. D. Miller while we were in Mt. Pleasant. I shall remember the Millers, and the Bennetts, and the Stouts particularly in connection with my visit at this place.

From Mt. Pleasant we came to Uniontown via of Scottdale where we stopped off and had a delightful little visit with our dear Brother H. S. Myers and his family. This gave me the privilege which I had long coveted of becoming more fully acquainted with Brother Myers. Brother Myers does a lot of preaching but he is a quiet, modest man and the brotherhood does not hear much about it. And while we seldom hear from him through the columns of the Evangelist, still I found in him a man keenly awake and alive to the various interests of our denomination. I am glad to have been in the Myers home and shall go back again every time I am within reach.

As for the campaign in the Uniontown church, it is as much pleasure to report the results as it was a pleasure to execute the Campaign. I could say in a single sentence —"Uniontown went away over the top" and it would surely be the truth: But here is a whole lot more to it than just the mere bare facts. And so I want to tell my readers all about it.

Brother Ed Miller is the pastor at Uniontown as is generally known among us. Brother Miller has the implicit confidence and affection of his people, and I found the work in his church just as I expected to find it—in tip-top shape, and everything coming right along. Naturally his people were ready for the Endowment Campaign to strike in their midst. They had thought the thing through and their minds were made up. Consequently it was the easiest canvass I have made so far in the campaign. As for the results, they speak for themselves. Uniontown is not one of our larger congregations, but it is unquestionably one of our growing and prosperous congregations. And notwithstanding this congregation is confronted with the necessity of enlarging their building, and notwithstanding they have actually begun the execution of their program and would at this very minute be building if the Government had not tied up building materials, I say notwithstanding this, the Uniontown people came across in the most cheerful manner to the extent of $1,775 for Permanent Endowment; and there is enough yet in sight to run it to $12,000 or better. If I have made no mistake this puts Uniontown in the lead on the per capita basis. With what has been raised up to this writing Uniontown stands $15.00 per member. Certainly we are agreed that this result is highly commendable, and speaks well for the loyalty of both pastor and people to Ashland College. And when I say that $200 was the biggest individual gift it will be understood that the result was not gained because of one or two unusually heavy gifts. There were several $100 gifts, and an uncommonly fine lot of $50.00 gifts coming from many of the young people of the church. The Sunday school, S. S. C. E., Y. P. S. C. E. and Junior and Intermediate Departments all enlisted in a substantial way.

I was in this church from Sunday morning to Wednesday night inclusive and preached at the five services to good sized, and very appreciative audiences. I was accorded the most cordial treatment in the various homes into which I went, and in Brother Miller's home which was general headquarters, I was just like one of the family. Who could ask for anything better than that? As I have said, it was the easiest canvass I have made. The people were ready. They gave cheerfully, and they gave substantially. It was really four days of picnic. Even when I tried to be serious, I could not around "Brother Ed." And I want to add that while some of you folks may think you have seen broad smiles on Brother Ed's face, you did not see as broad a smile as I saw him smile when we announced the great result his people had achieved for Permanent Endowment. And then, to cap the climax, when we got home from church the last night, we found that sixty of his members had cut across corners and got there before we did and gave both their pastor and me a complete surprise. And thus the first celebration over the victory which had been gained was in the form of a rousing good social hour together. I thank Brother Miller and his kind family, and his loyal, united people for the good cheer they brought to my heart, and I pray that God may richly bless and keep them all.

Finally, have you made up your mind to buy a Liberty Bond in the next drive for the College? If you have not why haven't you? And remember, if you want to you can pay off the note you have already given with a Liberty Bond.

Campaign Secretary.

YOU COUNT IN ONE WAY ONLY

Never, so much as now, has the individual counted for so little.

Individual rights, individual privileges, individual responsibilities have all given way to the greater consideration, the welfare of the people as a whole.

For nations, not peoples or races, have taken in hand the destinies of the world. The individual has been pre-emptorily put aside.

Whether liberty shall live or perish from the earth is for determination in the aggregate. It is not for any one man to say.

The Kaiser soon is to realize this.

But there is one way in which you CAN count.

ONE WAY IN WHICH YOU MAY STILL MAKE YOURSELF FELT THROUGHOUT THIS STORM-TOSSED WORLD.

You can make your little individual contribution to the cause of freedom, of world democracy, of permanent peace.

You can buy a Liberty Bond.

You may otherwise be subordinated, effaced, shunted into comparative oblivion and made to feel that you no longer count.

BUT HERE YOU CAN TAKE YOUR LITTLE PLACE IN THE SUN.

It's a chance of a lifetime; THE CHANCE of yours.

Don't miss it.

Special War-Time Service

General Pershing's call for the best ministers the church can give to serve as chaplains has met with a gratifying response.

The Committee on Army and Navy chaplains of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is serving the churches and the government in the task of helping select chaplains.

For the convenience of those who wish to serve in this important field the Rev. Clyde F. Armitage of the Washington Office of the Federal Council will be at the following points on the dates given:

September 19, 1918 Fort Niagara, Youngstown, New York. Will interview candidates before noon in the Administration Building of Y. M. C. A.

September 20, 1918, Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Michigan. Will interview candidates before noon in the Administration Building of Y. M. C. A.

September 23, 1918. Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Illinois.

October 2, 1918, Camp Grant, Rockford,

Illinois. Will interview candidates about noon.

October 3, 1918, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana. Will interview candidates before noon in the Administration Building of Y. M. C. A.

Octbeor 5, 1918, Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky. Will interview candidates at the Headquarters of the Training School.

Arrangements for interviews may be made by writing to Mr. Armitage, 1112 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

A Very Special Offer of Tithing Literature

During the year 1918 the revised and enlarged pamphlet "How to Tithe and Why" will be sent gratis, postpaid, to all ministers who ask for it, in sufficient quantities to supply one copy to every family in their churches and congregations.

Our Dead

SELL—Susan Spohn Sell was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, June 1, 1838. While a little girl she moved with her parents to Highland County, Ohio. After a few years she moved with her parents to Marion County, Iowa, where she grew to womanhood and where on the first Sunday in April, 1858 she was baptized by Elder Jonathan Spohn. In the fall of 1865 with her parents she moved to Clinton County, Missouri, where she was united in marriage to W. B. Sell with whom she lived a peaceful life for over 51 years.

Her death occurred August 15, 1918. Her last words were "Jesus is with me; Praise his holy name."

She lived her allotted time, being eighty years, two months and fourteen days old. All her children were present at her death, except one living in Oklahoma. She leaves her aged husband, eight children, thirty-eight grandchildren and three brothers to mourn the loss of a kind and loving wife, an affectionate mother and grandmother.

The funeral was preached by Elder W. H. Miller of Independence, from the words, "Thou wilt be missed because thy seat will be empty."

men and women of his congregation and sends them out into the tasks of the week better fitted to answer America's call. He is fighting for the kingdom of heaven on earth, to help win its victories over the arch-enemy of the human race, the destroyer of bodies and souls. He is the soldier of mercy to those in distress the ever-ready soldier of service to those who need help. Back him up with whole-hearted support and a quick, generous increase in salary.

We have taken this page to speak for the clergymen of America in this supreme crisis of the nation's readjustment, because we know that they are the one great devoted, indispensable body of faithful workers who have no spokesman. Only in this way has it seemed possible to reach the individual consciences and hearts of millions of men and women who, in all our experience, have never failed to respond to any just call.—The Literary Digest, August 31, 1918.

NOTE.—A layman interested in the material welfare of ministers put a copy of The Literary Digest before my eyes and said, "Read this, it may give you a suggestion for an editorial." And the article to which he called my attention was entitled: "The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire." I read it and said, "That strikes a vital problem in the minister's life, but I feel a little sensitive about writing on the subject. Perhaps I ought not; it may be a false modesty that prevents me, but at any rate I think it would carry more weight if this problem were discussed by a layman." He replied, "I can't write, but this magazine puts it about right and if you will send it to the editor I'll tear the article out and give it to you." To this I consented and this I present it, venturing, as I do so, on the faith that this layman's concern is duplicated in many another loyal parishioner's heart throughout the brotherhood.—G. S. B.

Rich in Good Works

The world has never been richer than it is at the present time. Of course so far as the real elements of the world are concerned they are no different now from what they were when Adam first met the sun rising in the east or watched its gentle setting beyond the western horizon and with childlike simplicity wondered where it spent the night. What makes the world richer in one generation than in another is the extent to which that generation has followed the instructions of God in subduing the earth, that is in bringing its elements and its forces into practical use for mankind. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," but the Lord has given it into the hands of his creatures, made in his own image, for use while they live and to make more and more fit for the generations that follow one after another. The generation that lives for itself alone is a curse to the generation that follows after. "No man liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself," is not true alone of the moral relations of life but it is also true of the physical relations of mankind and many of the conveniences, or in other words, the blessings of life which are common to each generation are the result in a large measure of the work of the preceding generation. It is difficult for one generation to profit fully from the labors of that one generation for the fruits of a generation of workers ripen in the days of the generations that follow.

In the light of these principles it is somewhat difficult to understand why many people of real ability and who are especially gifted in mastering the forces of the world, especially as those forces are related to what we call the business world, can content themselves by laboring only for the rewards that the present generation can give. Yet it seems that an extremely large percentage of the men who are given to doing "big" things in the financial or commercial world are content only when they can see the fruit of their labor in the present generation; in other words, they are satisfied only when they can personally enjoy the rewards of their efforts.

The rich man that Jesus spoke of in the well known parable was a man of this type. It was no sin for him to earn riches or to accumulate wealth; his sin was in the selfish use to which he wished to put his riches. It is no sin for a man to make money or to accumulate wealth today, the sin that so commonly accompanies great riches is not in the riches alone, but in the use to which they are put. The man who has had the business foresight to take advantage of some of the changing conditions and forces of the world and who has profited thereby is not a sinner because of this, he only becomes a sinner when he fails to prove a faithful steward of the Lord and instead of using his wealth to bless mankind and to advance the kingdom of the Lord uses it for his own personal pleasure. The rich man in the parable planned only for his own personal ease and comfort. To him his wealth only meant that he was free from care and personal want. He had failed entirely to grasp the truth that after all he was only a steward of the Lord and that for his manner of administering that stewardship during his Lord's absence he would be called into account.

The curse of riches is great and it is as sure as fate if the riches are not properly administered, but the blessings of riches are equally great and also just as sure when they are administered in the name of the Lord and for the upbuilding of his kingdom.

The world has ever needed the services of men who have been blessed with the ability to master the forces of nature that make for wealth to consecrate that ability to the service of mankind, but it has never needed such services more than now. There have never been better opportunities for men of wealth to become RICH IN GOOD WORKS than right now. Of course it is not necessary that one must have great wealth to become rich in good works, but the man who has great wealth can so easily convert it into good works that the call is specially urgent to him. A rich man must use his riches for God if he would escape the experience of the man whose life has been described in the following verse:

"Wasted and all in rags his starved soul went,
And opulently paupered he grew old,
And stood with loaded hands and heart forespent,
A beggar with a million bits of gold."

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

The Fall Conference and the Program

The first full week of October ought to be a time of great moment for the program. The whole Mississippi Valley of Brethren will be considering the FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM. This is well. Perhaps we did not until very recently know what a handicap the exigencies of war would put on the churches. Absent for 5 months from my church here, I found a tremendous change had come in the departure of the boys to the front. If the war continues, we shall be compelled to see still more of this effect for as the call comes to the older, it will subtract still more of the leaders and we will suffer, correspondingly.

The War and The Program

Measured by the gifts of last year, I felt that the Program did not suffer because of the lesson the war had taught on giving. This year it will be different. This Liberty Loan will teach people how it feels to give till it hurts. Conferences will need to steam up so that it will not hurt the work of the Program. With the progress on the Western front continuing, we may be spared another loan but if we are not, it will take the most devoted and prayerful attention to our task to have any progress worthy of the success of last year.

One Front Line Church Last Year

The highness of our standard is attested by the fact that but one church attained Front Line last year. Yet, one Conference Moderator has written me that he will strain every nerve to have every church reach Front Line this year—1919. Look out, other districts. Have you any such ambitions? If you have not, you'll not attain. This is a "tip" for you in that I have let you on the inside. If one can do it this year, more can do it. If all can do it, we can map out a new one next year. Anyway, look out for the District that tries to reach the final Goals this year.

A Hand-Book

The finest thing the Program Committee decided to do for the success of the Program this year was the making of a hand-book. This is in progress. Very soon, the workers will have a full interpretation of the program and a working basis of uniformity will be more nearly established. I am sure that this book will be warmly welcomed and a great boon to all who wish to seriously work this program in their churches. It will come to you either in the state conferences or as the wall charts came last year and when it comes, you will be glad to search carefully and know much more definitely the dates and officers and organization of the Program.

Pray

Brethren, have you made this Program a subject of prayer? One great thought has been much on my mind lately, viz.: that there is soon to come a renaissance of dependence on God. This is one of the lessons that the proud nations will learn before the war closes. Do we have the spirit of importunate prayer? Is this program enough on the hearts of praying people to ask God continually to help us to win? I do wish I might have the word of many Brethren and sisters who pray that they have it on their hearts to do that thing during the remaining period of the Program. Now then, do it but pray that God will help us to do it.

BAME.

From the Editor's View-Point

Physician Heal Thyself

Without a doubt the human race without proper physical training will naturally become less vigorous, and as the avocations of modern life require less and less physical activity it is not at all surprising that the average man and woman of today is somewhat less vigorous than the average of a generation or so ago.

Health magazines and correspondence courses in physical training may do a great deal to overcome many of the weaknesses and physical defects most common to the present generation, but no physical training will take the place of the simpler habits of living and more health-giving occupations of our fathers. The modern gymnasium of the high school, college and Y. M. C. A. is a mighty factor in keeping the youth of the present generation even as fit as it is physically, and it does wonders in training the youth to perform many unusual physical feats, but that it can take the place of proper physical culture in forest and field, in workshop and upon farm will not be admitted. It is true that the reports from the army cantonments in the early period of developing the great American army stated that the young men of the cities were showing a better average as to their physical condition than the young men from the country and a great deal of the credit for this was given to the physical training received by the young men of the cities in the high school and Y. M. C. A. gymnasium exercises. It must be admitted that since so much of the farm work of today is performed by machinery that the farmer boy does not receive the same kind of physical training he did a generation ago. In many sections of the country it would be next to impossible to hire a young man to plow corn with a walking plow or to unload hay with an old-fashioned long-handled three-tined fork. Machinery has been substituted for muscle and the price is being paid in the lack of muscle.

So we have no criticism to offer on an honest attempt to make up through artificial methods what nature intended to be the normal development of the physical man, but that the gymnasium method of making men and women physically fit has failed is indicated in the statement by Dr. Willard Carver: "I have never found a physical director of a Y. M. C. A. that was a well man and have many times offered a gold medal for one who is not sick." So before those of us who received our physical training with ax and saw, pick and shovel, scythe and fork, walking plow and harrow, and plodding to school through miles of mud and snowdrift, are willing to admit that we have not been made physically fit through this system we shall look for better results in the fitness of those who are the directors and trainers in the modern systems.

Great Moral Forces

Much has been said pro and con in regard to the place occupied by the church in the development of modern civil or national life. While some would attribute to the church the forces that have been most potent in leading the world to its high state of civilization, regardless of the great lapse as indicated by the present war, there are others who rather regard the modern church as a product of rather than as a maker of modern civilization. It is true that the church does not have for its primary function the making over of nations and civilizations, but its effect and operation in the lives of individuals coming under its influences are such that they very naturally bring about these beneficial results to the entire world. We would not have a union of church and state, far from it, nor would we have the church become a recruiting agency for national armies, but the church can give that balance to modern movements that is necessary to make all things stable and enduring, and the confidence the real leaders of the world have in the moral influence of the church is indicated by the words of General Pershing who recently said, "We of the army think with great pride and emotion of the unflagging service and wonderful trust in us of the churches at home." The leaders in the world's work, whether in the shop or upon the battlefield, or in the legislative halls or in the executive branch of the government, have not yet felt inclined to renounce the help afforded by the church of Jesus Christ.

Man as a Creator

We know it is not popular to quote Shailer Mathews in a Brethren church or in a Brethren paper, but no matter how little faith one may have in his theological and Biblical views it must be admitted that he does say some very forceful things and that he does reach some striking and helpful conclusions.

The following statement from Professor Mathews might be interpreted by some in a way that makes it heterodoxical in character but we do not think it is necessary to so construe it. Professor Mathew said, "The God we must worship is not the God of a finished world, but a God who co-operates with mankind in the production of a new world." Now, we take it that this means nothing more than that while God may have perfected all the forces of a world system he has yet given it into the hands of man to apply those forces in a way that the world may in a very large sense be made over and be made to contribute more lavishly to the comfort and welfare of man. Professor Mathews does not say that man shall create a new world but that he with the help of God may produce a new world.

Considering the activities of man as one of the great forces in the world Marshal Foch said, "We must always seek to create events, not merely to suffer them." This thought implies a principle similar to that which underlies the statement of Professor Mathews, that man is largely the maker of his own destiny, the creator of his own environment. If one is not content with his environment or satisfied with his world he has both the privilege and the power to remake them to a large extent. Yet altogether too many people are content to consider the events of the world as something apart from themselves and with which they have nothing to do personally except to accept them or suffer them and to make the most of it instead of considering the whole world as a great tool or machine which has been placed in their hands and which calls for the exercise of all their powers to cause it to yield largely to their will and in a large measure to do their bidding. There are creative forces in man that are largely neglected but that when once called into action produce wonderful results in making events and in remaking the world.

The Rapid Changes of Time

Father Time has been represented as an old man with long white beard and a scythe on his shoulder with which he cuts down the present and makes it over into the past leaving room only for the future. It might have been well to so picture him in the days of travel by oxcart but in these modern days a new characterization of Father Time is needed. He is now a being that moves on the wings of the lightning so rapid and so great are his changes.

The world order changeth and he who does not accustom himself to the change soon finds himself so much out of his environment that to all practical purposes he is dead while he lives.

Someone has lately said, "Nothing is quite what it was a second ago." This statement can be taken in its broadest sense for all experience teaches us that while one may not be able to measure the change a second of time brings nevertheless the change has taken place and as the second is but the smallest measure of time but is still a part of the great eternity so the change wrought in this time may be the smallest change imaginable, yet it is a part of the great change that is constantly going on and is a part of the great world order which is not permanent.

It is futile to attempt to prevent this constant change and the only way serious friction can be avoided is to adjust one's self to the changing order and to accept the changes that come in a spirit of cheerfulness and to use them in some way to one's own personal advantage and for the advantage of the world.

A Plea for the Recognition of the Supremacy and the Universality of the Spiritual in Life

BY EDWIN ELMORE JACOBS, PH.D.

The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. II Cor. 3:6

It is one of the most significant facts in all the science of man, that in every race and condition, he is capable of being touched by making appeal to his life of ideals. That is to say, that, hidden away in every human breast, there is a desire to live up to certain ideals and to advance these however slowly it may be. Emerson's rather recent injunction to hitch one's wagon to a star, is but a modern way of expressing a very ancient fact. For no matter whether one denies God, immortality, and personal responsibility or not, still there is an idealistic consciousness capable of being appealed to. I consider this one of the most profound as well as one of the most hopeful aspects of the human race, for it has led men ever onward and upward.

Now if this idealism is properly nourished and allowed to blossom out into perfection, it becomes religious or better, it is the basis from which all religious motivation springs. Consider with me what this implies educationally.

1. To this factor in human nature, all education must be directed. When one says that education must be religious in order to be real education, one must mean that this idealism must be consciously touched for righteousness and for God. It passeth understanding just how a child can be educated and not be appealed to in this way. Hence, these days, we are estimating education, not so much in terms of mental content, as in terms of moral and spiritual reaction. To be educated, therefore, is more than to be informed, well-read, or to possess the ability to answer questions. No list of questions, however comprehensive can reveal much more than the memory content. To be educated, the mainsprings of action must be touched, the idealism of the soul awakened, and proper reaction under the stresses of life be assured.

2. This idealism is important moreover, when considered politically and nationally. Karl Marx and some others who seem to have a worm's-eye view of history rather than a bird's-eye view, have sought to interpret it in terms of economic endeavor. Thy say that the heart of the race may best be expressed by its struggle to gain a livelihood, that, if one were to remove the desire for gain, all activity would cease, that life is and ever has been, one vast untamed, eternal scramble for material gain with all that this implies. Pressed to the extreme, this philosophy would lead one to believe that the preacher preaches for his salary and nothing more. So the teacher, so all of us. But those who have what I am fond of thinking is rather a bird's eye view, held that when one has measured all one can by the norm of wealth, still there is something left over which can not be accounted for that way. Shailer Mathew's recent book on The Spiritual Interprentation of History is just this. This theory holds that all this is to be considered as only the technic necessary to the furthering of certain ideals which are expressive of the best within the human heart and without which technic, these ideals would be impossible of realization.

Say why, if you can, a milloin of men should have been willing to offer their lives for the liberation of some thousands of negro slaves, as they did in the 60's, if not motived by ideals rather than by hope of any material gain? Likewise, why should men brave the terrors of an unknown and savage world in order to set up such a government as we have in America, if not moved by what the world still calls today, the highest ideals? Why have men fought with wild beasts, beset with foes within and without, as heralds of the Cross if not moved with high ideals? Why should men never be satisfied with the present, a Galileo, a Savonarola, a Sir Isaac Newton, a Darwin or a Tolstoy, coming to the scene of action, in some cases enduring all the villainy which human minds could invent, yet pushing steadily forward, for something better, which better thing was in many cases only dimly discerned by them?

Why should there just now be so many millions of men ready to die for world righteousness? We say that there will be a new world after this war, yet no one knows just what the new world will be. Not a single man who enlists to-day knows definitely what this war is for, in detail, nor what will be achieved by it, but will rest assured that something better will come out of it. Is it to make the world safe for democracy? Perhaps, yet what does this mean? The man who penned those tremendous and immortal words, only used them because he could say nothing more definite. It is the age-old lure of the spiritual ideal only dimly perceived and blindly followed. Now we see through a glass darkly, now we know in part but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. The appeal right now to America, is to her deeply spiritual ideals, ideals which we have thought absent, but which were only hidden.

3. And moreover the whole Christian world, at least in England and America, is split up over just this thing, i. e., just what will be the final consummation of our spiritual ideals. Some say they will consumate in the immediate second personal coming of our Lord. Some say they will culminate in his second coming through a long period of years, that it will be processory. And there are various pagan doctrines bearing on the same general question. I am not concerned with which of these holds the greatest element of certainty, but I point out that the common denominator to which they can all be reduced, is that they all hold to some future goal, and moreover and doubly important, that this goal is idealistic and spiritual. That is the common spirit of them all, and the letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive. This points to the fact that the human mind is literally obsessed with the idea that the final and perfect goal of humanity is a spiritual one.

4. Now the soul of the human race has ever been best expressed, not by the material, but by the spiritual. The best things of the past civilizations, which make our heritage so full and rich to-day, were spiritual, not material. The material ruins of the Greek civilization to-day have small economic value, but how poor we would be if their legacy to us had been lost! And, moreover, this legacy is free. It is of such a nature that neither moth nor rust can corrupt and that theives can not break into it and steal, or they would have done so long ago! All this, because it is spiritual.

This fourth point needs stressing now because in America, material success has passed all bounds. Many have seen this and have mistaken the husk for the fruit. Our farms, our bridges, our railroads, our steamships, are only helps and scaffolding to the building. They are not the temple but the pity is that there are so many to-day with minds so piggish as to mistake the scaffolding for the building. The Brooklyn Bridge, the skyscrapers, the Hudson Tubes, are not the life of New York. They are only incidents in the life of New York! It is the spirit that giveth life!

Moreover the best expression of the race soul, from the days of the cave man on down, is perhaps in its theology, its myth and legend, and in its art. These three are all attempts to give expresion to the throbbing soul of mankind. And if one were to take from the Hebrew scriptures their religion, their legend, and their art, culminating in King Solomon's temple, there would be but the husk left. So all great movements of the human soul. Who would want to interpret Paradise Lost literally? Who would want to make our old legends, sagas, myths, fairy tales and folklore true? To seek to do this, no matter where such writing occurs, is to despoil all the rich spiritual content which they were intended to bear within their bosoms. They are attempts to express what is by nature spiritual, idealistic and etheric, for as Dr. Stanley Hall points out, humanity is ever more or less in the state of second breath.

5. To give this a more definitely religious turn, let it be said that here too the spiritual is important. At the college here, we are more concerned that the young person gets the correct spiritual viewpoint than he gets his chemistry or his geometry, for long after these have been forgotten or have proven worthless, the spiritual nature will be present, presing, imperative, dominant. It is true that all failures in life are spiritual failures, and the majority are of moral character. It is not at all desirable that there should grow up around our college a critically intellectual atmosphere, which is death to spiritual enthusiasm. Better no college at all than such a one, for it takes ten pounds of religion to carry one pound of education. Hence, the spiritual should hold sway in the lives of young people at Christian colleges for whatever of fullness and power and beauty a life may have, must be correlated positively with the spiritual. It is the basis of all true excellence. The soul of the race, your soul and mine, is best expressed in its idealistic and spiritual endeavors. Mr Carnegie will be immortal in the lives of countless thousands who have been touched through the books on the shelves of the libraries bearing his name long after he is forgotten as the founder and chief mover of the United States Steel Corporation. This not because the former has less of the material, but because it has more of the spiritual.

Learning to Know Young Men

BY NOLAN RICE BEST

The lament of the American church for many years has been its inability to understand the young men of these times. It has constantly bewailed its failure to reach them in any large mass. And now, by a colossal movement of Providence the church has suddenly come into the very knowledge and privilege which it has so deeply felt the want of. Into a vast army of crusaders, raised for his own world purposes, the good God has gathered the choicest flower of American young manhood. To that Army through the medium of the Young Men's Christian Association he has introduced on the most intimate terms a great company of leaders of the church, both lay and clerical.

Whatever the offishness with which American youth have hitherto regarded church folks, there has been no remaining sign of it in the welcome the soldiers—these same youth now clad in khaki—have given the Y. M. C. A. workers. Unlimited frankness and freedom have supplanted all the aloofness felt before. Barriers are all down. And if the church in these circumstances does not discover the American young man to the deepest depths, it will be from sheer incapacity to learn. The measure of what the Y. M. C. A. is doing here and now for the soldier and sailor in wartime is amply large enough to justify all its gigantic expenditure. But it need not be regarded as unrecompensed outlay. There are returns yet to be reaped from it which should outvalue the whole investment. What the church learns from the experience ought to make the coming history of religion in the United States vastly different from the history of recent decades—it ought to provide the secret of thronging the nation's houses of Christian worship with fresh and full tides of stalwart young manhood.

What, then, are church leaders, now among the troops in France, learning about the temper and quality of the young men of America whom they freely confessed beforehand that they did not know?

Perhaps the profoundest discovery of all is the capacity of the young Americans for friendship—the friendship especially of older men. There has been, of course, (and is being) expended on the soldier in France a vast deal of effort to entertain and accommodate him—to bring him things that he wants and afford him such personal satisfaction as are permissible under the rigor of military conditions. But it does not seem to be this sort of thing which wins the heart of the soldier to the "Y." The plain straight friendliness of "Y" men manifestly counts first in the popularity that the Association has attained. The fact, that at a Y. M. C. A. a fellow always meets (or so nearly always that exceptions can be forgotten) bright, cordial man-to-man salutation, spiced with a bit of cheery joke perhaps, and illuminated with an honest interest in how the fellow is getting on, is the best of all reasons for liking the Association in the midst of camp.

Undoubtedly at home the real explanation of the uneasiness which so many lads feel when they see the preacher coming is the idea that the preacher is after them to get them to do something. He wants to pull them to church service or to Bible class or to young people's society. But the same preacher in France looks different even to the same boys. He has come to France not to coax them into doing something for him, but just for the sheer sake of being with them—because he cares for them enough to want to go through what they are going through. The case is clearer, yet when camp breaks and the march to the trenches begins and the Y. M. C. A. man goes along hiking with the privates, not riding with the officers as he might; obviously nothing but outright liking for them could be bringing him thus, just of his own wish and will, to share their hardships and their dangers. There is friendship in all this which open-hearted American boys can appreciate, and they can give back friendship in return. Special gratitude rewards special favors in the secretary's service, no doubt, but underneath all else lies the common regard of his soldier friends for the simple fact that he has come among them as their friend—loving them before they loved him.

Another discovery of tremendous significance is the ability of these young gallants—the supposedly commonplace boys of our home communities—to absorb great ideals into their lives and live up to the call of them. The church has assumed an incurable sordidness in young America. The get-on "spirit"—the notion that nothing else matters if a fellow makes a success in the world, has been accepted as the ruling calculation of American youth. And the church has been asking piteously what headway it could expect to make, amidst such a generation, with doctrines of self-sacrifice and unselfishness. But here, square into the gloom of such meditation bursts the light of the greatest appeal for unselfish sacrifice that the world has known in ten centuries, and millions of young Americans leave everything else to follow that light in utter consecration of their lives, their possessions and their sacred honor.

Workers of the "Y" in France well know how perfect that consecration is. There have remained at home cynics, —not church men, Thank God—so skeptical of young American idealism that they still insist that something sordid and gross must be carefully embedded in America's purposes of war or our soldiers will not fight. They must be taught bitterness and hate and brutality or they will not make dependable battle material. But the Y. M. C. A. at the front is constant witness that such allegations are crassly unfair. American boys do not require to be debased in order to make efficient soldiers. The efficiency that already exalts them above any other troops that ever marched to war is directly founded in the superb idealism which keeps them conscious of being God's crusaders chosen to set free a menaced world. It is because they have come overseas on so great a mission that they submit themselves so willingly to discipline, accept so eagerly the tremendous tasks laid upon them, face so dauntlessly the hazards of war, and accept so patiently its hardships and its pains.

A third thing which through the wholly exceptional inlook of the Y. M. C. A. has been discovered in respect to American young manhood by church men in France, is the susceptibility of these magnificent lads to the dynamic of comradeship. The things that are impossible to one man alone become four times possible to two Americans together, and as comrades multiply the potential of their combined energy rises in an infinitely expanding ratio. A soldier's heart beats high with zest for the rashest venture if his fellows at his side are ready for it also. This is what lends irresistible force to the charge "over the top"—it is the swing of the common act for the common end. Besides there is more than force in comradeship; there are tender virtues in it too, and the soldier's instant readiness to dare everything and give everything for his "buddy" are too sacred to be described in any terms less hallowed than the Master's word: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend."

When therefore these churchmen from Y. M. C. A. service in France return to their churches in America, they will confess a sodden blindness if they again repeat the complaint about not being able to understand the American young man. An open book has been laid before their eyes in France. And what does the lesson say? It says that if the church in America wants the American young man after the war, it must win and hold them by three means:

It must show him genuine friendship—a simple, unaffected human liking for him and an uncalculating readiness to serve his welfare.

It must hold up before him the challenge of an ideal big enough to thrill him with a sense of superb use for his life invested therein.

It must create a comradeship for him as unlimited in what it asks as in what it gives.

And the only real question is whether the church believes that it possesses in the gospel and purposes of Christ material for meeting those three conditions.

The Good Manners of Today

BY MRS. MAX WEST

When Is a Child Well-behaved?

Children's Year has called attention to many needs of children which are problems for their mothers. Malnutrition and the bearing on the child's health of the relation between the inches of his height and the ounces of his weight are questions just beginning to be understood which Children's Year has brought before millions of mothers. But training her child to wear his good manners as if they belonged to him and were not borrowed for the occasion is a problem of no recent origin. Regard for the feelings and desires of others has always been the basis of good manners, but the expression of such regard and methods of inculcat-ing it are very different today from what they were a generation ago. Then "manners" in children consisted in paying rigid deference to their elders and superiors.

Nowadays children are treated more humanly and given much wider latitude in their relation with grown people. Older standards of conduct have very largely changed. Pessimistic observers are prone to regard the change as not altogether favorable, and to attribute to this same loss of deference to the presence and opinion of parents, teachers and other adults a corresponding loss in manners and behavior, and even a real loss of moral fiber.

It must be remembered that the rule "other times, other manners" implies generally. Life is a very different thing for most children of today than it was for their parents, certainly for their grandparents. With the wholesome and desirable growth of comradeship and association between growing boys and girls and their elders, the old rules of proper behavior must necessarily have given way to something less formal. The change has probably been in the direction of the development of strength of character and independent judgment in children. But that they have also lost something is perhaps equally certain. To remedy this loss by teaching them the rules of true courtesy is the business of thoughtful parents. Such an achievement may well be one of the valuable by-products of the Children's Year campaign which the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor and the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defence are conducting.

Good manners in children as well as grown people are the expression of an innate consideration for the rights, privileges and opinions of other people. Years of experience have crystallized this feeling into certain conventional forms of expression, which every child should be taught. The little habits of courtesy, which should be a part of every day life, are really the "outward and visible sign of inward grace." Few acquisitions are more valuable to anyone than that charm of manner which wins the immediate regard of everyone with whom they come in contact. To teach children good manners must be the work of every day and hour. "Line upon line" they will learn the little courtesies. Children are so imitative that very much of this will be unconsciously acquired through imitation of the habits and manners of their elders. "Thank you," and "If you please," an "Excuse me, please," come easily to the tongue if they are frequently heard, and the boy who sees his father rise when a lady comes into the room will instinctively follow that example, even with very little direct instruction. Good manners at table are so necessary to the comfort of everyone concerned that mothers will hardly neglect to watch and direct their children most carefully in this respect. It is very easy to teach children the right use of the knife and fork, to ask for what they want politely, and to chew their food quietly. To fail to do these things has condemned many a man as a boor and a nuisance. In other words, manners often make the man; certainly the lack of manners may unmake him.

The Line of Necessity

BY CLARENCE E. FLYNN

When a given course of action is considered or a particular step of progress is proposed many people are in the habit of questioning whether the thing is necessary. They do not inquire whether it is desirable, whether it is helpful, or whether it is lovely. The only question raised is as to its necesity.

The propounding of this question is not without its effect. The people who ask it often rob a movement of its power, and occasionally cause it to fail completely. By its use a chill is often brought upon spirits which would otherwise throb with warmth. The world is deprived of the influence of many a cheerful song, helpful smile, gracious act, and kind word simply because the person who might have given them stopped to make this ever-recurring inquiry: "Is it necessary,"

The people who ask the question would themselves be the least willing to have their own lives and fortunes subjected to its merciless test. They know full well, that it would removed from their little worlds many of the things which now seem best and sweetest. Landscapes would lose the mystic charm which now serves to lift them above the commonplace. Daily experience would be robbed of the glamor which now makes life seem so sweet and beautiful. The glory would fade from about the brow of friendship, and even friendship itself perhaps would perish. Lovely as all these things are, they do not belong to the list of things that are absolutely necessary. They would pass away, if life were denuded of all that the world could manage to get along without.

As a matter of fact, many of the most blessed things we know lie on the farther side of the line of necessity. If we were never to pass beyond that line, then the world and all that it contains would be reduced to the impoverished outlines of the barest actuality. There would be no place left for hope, ambition and dream. We should do no more work than is necessary, and each would become less than a peasant. We should love, help, and serve no more than is necessary, and all the joy of the unselfish and the sacrificial would be taken from life. We should have no more friends than is necessary, and one by one those who have been our greatest inspiration would depart from our ken. How poor a thing it would soon be to live!

Life would indeed soon be reduced to the level of mere existence. We would still be in the world, but the glow and the liveliness would have departed. Our tables would be bare, because we should eat only what is strictly necessary. Our clothing would be scant and poor, for we should wear only what one must. Our lives would be solitary, for association is a luxury and not a necessity. Kindness is unnecessary, therfore souls would shrivel and perish. A once cheerful world would have grown dull and dead, and the once joyful privilege of living would have suddenly been transformed into a grievous necessity.

It is the unnecessary that changes bare existence into throbbing and purposeful life. A mere earth is changed into a lovely world by processes which might have been dispensed with. A house is transformed into a home by graces which are not the children of necessity.

Even Bethlehem and Calvary were not necessary. The glory of their meaning comes rather from the fact that they sprang from good will alone. The power of the cross springs largely from the fact that it could have been avoided. We appreciate it because the Master faced it willingly.

No one cares for the friend who is a friend under the pressure of some necessity. We appreciate the friendship of those who are our friends because they simply want to be. We do not care for the gift offered by some one who felt the force of some compulsion. The impulse is to cast it from us in disdain. We love the gift made by the impulse of a kindly heart, not because it was a necessity but because it was a pleasure.

I once sat in a great gathering and heard a man with silver hair offer a bit of advice which sprang from a life of rich experience. "Let us," he said, "during the week that we are together, make it a point to be a little kinder to one another than is necessary."

Life had taught him that the finer graces and the sweeter instinct are not necessary things. They do not earn salary. They do not satisfy the hunger of the body. They are even sometimes discounted in the calculations of the short-sighted. They are, however, the beautiful things. They garland life and make it lovely. If the men in that gathering were to be kind to one another, it was desirable that they should be so for the sake of kindness, and not for that of compulsion.

This was one of the first principles to engage the attention of the Great Teacher. He said to a crowd of people one day that one gets no credit either on the books of heaven or in the courts of his own conscience until he has done a little better than was strictly necessary. It is a little thing to give the coat that is asked for, but it is a worthy thing to give the cloak which is not expected. It is insignificant to travel the mile that is requested, but it is worth while to go the second mile unasked. One deserves no thanks for having loved his friend, for that is easy, but he who learns to love his enemies has achievd something really worth while.

These points from the Sermon on the Mount simply state the old principle of the beauty and value of the unnecessary. It is the second mile traveled, the overflowing kindness offered, and the unnecessary act of goodness that sweeten and glorify the years. These things make of life more than a gloomy journey through a valley of trouble. They make it a glad procession across the hills of joy.

There is a higher law than that of necessity. Necessity may supply a skeleton for living, but we are not interested in skeletons until they are clothed with flesh and vitalized with life. It represents a framework for existence, but the framework of a building does not seem worth while until it has added to it the complement of walls and the beauty of decorations. It may represent the stage upon which the drama of life is to be enacted, but the stage is empty and bare until the actors come upon it and lend it the enchantment of thought and action. Beyond the line of necessity

The Educative Process in Religion

This is the title of Part II of our new Teacher Training Book. It is written by Dr. L. L. Garber, formerly Head of the Department of Literature and Education in Ashland College. Those acquainted with his Christian character and superior ability as a skilled educator will require no further endorsement of this excellent book. It follows the outline submitted by the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, and amply presents the "Teaching Process." Meeting the requirements of the International Sunday School Association, training classes will receive full credit for the completion of this part of the course. They may begin with it in stead of Part I, which is not completed as yet. Orders are being received by the undersigned. A more extended review will follow this preliminary announcement.

Meanwhile, let our schools organize their classes preparatory to the study of this satisfactory text from one of our own authors. A class in every school is the slogan of the nation-wide teacher training drive.

An Army of Five Million---But Untrained

This significant title stands at the head of an article by Arlo Ayers Brown, in a recent issue of the Sunday School Journal, published by and in the interests of the Methodist church. Dr. Brown makes a strong plea for a fuller and better training for the teachers of the Sunday schools of the Methodist churches. The article is equally applicable for all denominations, the Brethren included, with of course a change in numbers, but none in conclusions. A digest of the article appears in the 1919 edition of Peloubet's Select Notes, and it is here repeated with the fullest endorsemnt of the Editor of this publication. Our own people are just now being awakened to the need of better trained teachers, and not only better trained teachers, but better trained WORKERS in very department of church life and activity. No one who is informed as to the need of better trained leadership will for a single moment question the applicability of this article to the Brethren church and its activities any less than to the great Methodist church. There is an urgent call for leadership in every department of human activity, but especially is this true in the department of religious education. Those who today recognize the call heed its urgency and diligently set themselves to the task of adequate preparation to meet the demands which the future is sure to make upon them, will naturally and automatically fall into the places where such leadership is most urgent. Is the church wise in this day of opportunity that fails to heed the call? Is the Sunday school living up to its high privilege that does not set about earnestly to train its young people for the stupendous tasks which the future holds in store for them and to whom it will look for that leadership without which the cause of religion will suffer irreparable loss? A part of the article to which reference is made follows:

Can you see in imagination an army of nearly five million soldiers with four hundred and eleven thousand officers? Even in this day, when war is conducted on a scale never dreamed of, before, it is a vast army.

But supposed these five million are untrained? Perhaps their people do not believe in training, expecting to match the skill of seasoned warriors by stout hearts and faith in divine help. Would you expect them to win victories. If you were in control of the situation, would you let them go into the fight at all? Suppose also that not only the the five million enlisted men untrained, but that the four hundred and eleven thousand officers, almost to a man lack the preparation necessary for the undertaking. You know what answer you would make. This army is not fit for battle.

This is a parable, but it needs no interpreter. As much as we dislike to use figures of warfare, the fact remains that the kingdom of God is engaged in a death grapple with the organized powers of evil, and the Methodist Episcopal church has an army of nearly five million engaged or preparing to engage in the fight. But—the enlisted recruits are not trained for their work, and what is more appalling, less than one-tenth of their leaders are either properly trained or receiving careful training.

There are no words adequate to describe this need of the hour. Thinking people knew years ago that untrained men, other things being equal, were no match for trained workers. And our present life—industrial, professional, social—reveals everywhere the handicaps of unskilled labor in God's world.... Until the Sunday school officers and teachers are trained, what hope is there for improving the rank and file of the army?

The first task....is that of creating public sentiment ....To reply that the church has lived in the past without teacher training is no better argument than to say that telephones, telegrams and railroads are not needed because people for hundreds of years did business successfully without them. They may have done so in the past, but the man who tries to do business on a large scale today without them will go into bankruptcy.

Here is our problem. Scarcely any one will argue that teacher training is not needed, but few of them put it into their schools. They are busy at other things. It looks very much as if people were ignoring teacher training. They do not antagonize it; they simply ignore it. It ought to be possible to make teacher training as necessary to a Christian household as safety razors or sewing machines or many other articles which have come into general use because they were held before the public so vividly and constantly that multitudes began to try them.

When Moses was giving his final message to the children of Israel (Deut. 32:47), he made use of a compelling phrase in urging his people to obey and command their children to obey all the words of the law: "For it is no vain thing for you; because it is your life." It may be an exaggeration to use the same phrase in a plea for teacher training, but to the writer it appears to be a sober statement of the fact. There is no future for an army of five million incompetents, no matter how good their intentions may be, until they are prepared to do well the tasks appointed for them. Nor will the heavenly Father give aid to those who might prepare but are too indifferent to do so. The Christianization of this world will be done by consecrated followers who count no sacrifice too great if only they can do well their Lord's work.

REVIEW OF

About sixty new names were added to the Evangelist subscription list this week. While the greatest advance in the history of the publication was made during the last conference year, there is no reason why this advance should not continue through the year that is before us. While new congregations are slowly being added to the Honor Roll for the Evangelist we hope to be able to retain all the old congregations on the list, and so far we have not lost one. The last one to renew was the Ashland church. At the last business meeting of the congregation $120 was included in the yearly budget to continue sending the paper into all the families belonging to the Ashland church. This action was taken just as a matter of course and is a splendid acknowledgment of the success of the plan.

As we attempt to review the thought and the work of the church in these columns week after week we should remember that a great deal of the THOUGHT of the church never finds expression in the contributions that find their way in our columns in formal style. The real thought of the church is frequently expressed in personal letters as the thought contained in a recent letter with a renewal for the paper. This good sister says, "I am nearly forty miles from the church where I hold my membership. I was the second woman to step forward and unite with the church after Brother Isaac Kilhefner had organized it, and it is so dear to me. I don't get there very often so you can see why I love the Evangelist. I can hardly get along without it." This is real loyalty to the Brethren church as it was more than twenty-five years ago that this church was organized by Brother Kilhefner. We count it a great privilege to be able to minister to these isolated, but faithful members of the church through our columns.

The season for holding of the fall communion services of the Brethren churches is now on, and from time to time the announcement of such meetings will appear in the Evangelist. We are glad to lend our columns to this purpose, but we would like to have the pastors get their announcements into the office in good time to assure their appearance.

This week our youngest readers are favored with another letter from Dr. Florence N. Gribble in the name of her little daughter Marguerite. This letter was on the way nearly two months before it reached us, as Africa is indeed a far country, and Sister Gribble states that they have not as yet received any papers of any kind from America. There is always an element of isolation and loneliness to be considered in the work of foreign missions and our missionaries deserve to be remembered in the prayers of all who remain at home.

Albert Trent puts in an urgent call to all the Sunday schools of Pennsylvania to appoint their delegates to the great conference at Johnstown which meets next week.

Sister Fulkerth in a very brief communication from Turlock, California, gives their reason for making a change in pastors at that place. Brother Darling served the church faithfully for eleven years, but the condition of his health made it unadvisable for him to continue longer in this relation, but the church will not be without a pastor as F. J. Reagan, of Los Angeles has been secured to take the place vacated by Brother Darling.

N. W. Jennings writes from Oak Hill, West Virginia, where he began his winter's evangelistic work soon after the Winona Conference. For four years Brother Jennings has been devoting his whole time to evangelistic work and he has been remarkably successful. He will remain in West Virgina until the first of November.

The Brethren at La Verne, California, are awake to any opportunity to render service to the great King or to his children as services are required. The report from that place which appears this week shows how this is true. Their pastor, Brother Broad, seems to be resourceful and able to keep his people constantly at work for the Lord. When he concludes his evangelistic campaign among the miners of Arizona we hope our readers may be favored with a report of his work. One member was added to the La Verne church at a recent service.

If the Pennsylvania conference does not prove a success so far as attendance is concerned, it will not be the fault of the officers, for they are doing all they know how to do to awaken the people to a realization of their privilege as well as their duty in the matter. Especially the pastors of Pennsylvania should give immediate attention to the matter to which Brother Witter directs their minds. Brother Witter wants STATISTICS.

One of the pastors in attendance at the Winona Conference was J. Wesley Platt, of Lathrop, California. At the close of the conference he went on to Pennsylvania to visit his parents, and the time seemed long to the members of his congregation in California and according to the letter as it appears on another page there was eager longing for his return. It warms the heart of a pastor to know that he is missed by his people when he is away from them, but the church services were well kept up during his absence. An unusually interesting prayer meeting was maintained during his absence.

It seems somewhat strange that no one has yet volunteered to serve the Lord in the capacity of matron of the dormitory at Riverside, Kentucky. Brother Carpenter has made repeated appeals for some one to offer herself to this work, but so far to no avail. Is there not some pastor who can find a good woman in his congregation that he can persuade to take up this important work. It is an opportunity to perform real home missionary work.

This week our readers are favored with another contribution from the pen of Dr. E. E. Jacobs. Dr. Jacobs is one of the most appreciated contributors we have had during the past year and we hope that regardless of his many duties in connection with his work in the science department of Ashland College he may be able to continue his contributions to the Evangelist. Unusual force of thought finds expression in all that he has to say.

Around the Editor's Table

An Educated Ministry

Just recently we saw a statement in one of our exchanges as follows: "It is said that the shortage of educated ministers is greater now than ever before. Are the allurements of the world too great for Christian young men to resist?"

The expression "It is said" is a very indefinite one indeed, but yet a great deal of our beliefs as well as many of our actions are based upon just such indefinite statements. No doubt but that what "it is said" in this instance is true, but why should not the statement have some handle attached to it that carries some weight with it? If some interdenominational commission has looked into the matter, or if Mr. H. K. Carol has gleaned this thought from his gathering of statistics from the different churches of America let it be known. Or if the statement is based upon mere observation of the work of the church in a general way let that also be known so that the problem created by this asserted shortage may be intelligently dealt with.

But taking it for granted that the statement is true, and we have no real grounds for disputing it, there then remains something for the church as a whole and including the present ministerial force to do. The question propounded by our exchange, "Are the allurements of the world too great for Christian young men to resist?" needs careful consideration. Without a doubt the allurements of the world were never so great as now and greater powers of resistance to them were never requird of the Christian than at the present moment. Two contributions printed in the pages of the Evangelist last week show the trend of modern thought on these matters. The sentiment expressed in these contributions surely is one of the great controlling factors in determining the lifework of many a young man.

One of the thoughts advanced by these writers is that there must be a larger compensation granted to ministers in order to keep their ranks filled, but will that solve the problem?

The Minister's Compensation

Is the ministers compensation to be reckoned in dollars and cents, in wedding fees and congregational donations? If it is, then the problem of filling up the depleted ranks of an educated ministry will never be solved. We know this is one of the great problems in the ministry, few of the present generation of ministers know it any better than the writer for he has passed through it all, but after all is said and done, Is this the great thing? The ministry should receive a better financial support than it has ever received and especially in these modern days, when one almost is compelled to pay "profiteering" prices for the air he breathes, is this true. But we take it that the effective ministry of the church never was made up of men who had entered upon that holy profession for the sake of gain or even as a means of making a livelihood, nor do we believe it ever will be so made up. The effective ministry of the church through all the centuries has been composed of men who have felt "woe is me, if I preach not the gospel," and we take it that this will always be the most impelling force known to man to fill up the ranks of a real gospel ministry.

The modern church needs an educated ministry as the church of former generations did not, and it is true that the commercial world is calling for men of education and training as it has never called for them before and very naturally many of the most intelligent and the best prepared young men hear this call and are overcome by it. The church might overcome this difficulty by offering greater financial compensation to those who choose to devote their lives to its service, but we doubt it, for we do not believe the leak is altogether here. To our way of thinking the thing that is needed most is the establishment of higher ideals of life than those commonly accepted by the commercial and professional world. Life is not measured by money, nor is success measured by financial gain. "Man does not live by bread alone," but in the mad rush of modern commercialism this fact has been overlooked, if not entirely forgotten.

The Heroic in the Ministry

While the world may have passed safely through all the stages described in Carlyle's "Heroes and Hero Worship" it has not yet outgrown the appeal to the really heroic in the nature of man. It is true that the world of today has a different conception of its heroes from that held by the world of yesterday, but the element is there and in one way it has been called out by the development of world events during the past four years as never before. There is an element of the heroic in the appeal that influences ministers and business men to give up their work in America to accept posts of great danger in Y. M. C. A., Red Cross and other lines of war work right up to the front of the battle lines in Europe. This appeal has met with wonderful success and the very best of American ministers and American men of other professions and of business capacity have offered their lives in response to it.

The work of the ordinary pastorate does not call out the same heroic element that is called out by this appeal for war workers, but the world will not always be engaged in war, or at least we have reason to believe that the success of the allied armies will assure general peace for many generations to come; but there will always be heroic service demanded of mankind, and few classes of life-work will call out more of this element than that of the Christian ministry and service in both the home land and the foreign field.

The world has known no greater heroes than many of the pioneers in foreign missionary work or even many ministers of the gospel in the home land; and we doubt very much if these heroes of the Cross gave very much thought to the financial emoluments of their calling. While the present day church needs to be educated along the line of giving a better financial support to its ministry we do not believe this is the most vital thing in recruiting the depleted ranks, but rather do we believe the present ministry should so exalt the function of the ministry that the highest ideals of manhood and of service may be inculcated in the minds of the best of the youth of the country and that they may be made to feel that there are things in life that are worth more than money and things that money can not buy. The standards which the world has set up and which use money for their measuring stick need to be overthrown and it is largely the task of the church through its ministry to overthrow these standards, when an idol has been destroyed some other object of worship must take its place, so if America's worship of the money god is to be destroyed it should be substituted by a religion which gives its devotees opportunity to give expression to their religious natures in loyal, heroic Christian service.

A Difference in View-Point

One needs but to know a little of the German philosopher's view of Christianity to understand how the German people have been led with such apparent willingness into committing the grossest crimes of all history. If the leaders of German thought have no higher ideals than those to which their writings give expression it is no wonder that the common people have no higher standards.

Frederich Wilheim Nietzche was one of the most noted of modern German philosophers. How much has his philosophy affected the views and character of the Germans of today? Is not the answer written in the blood of the women and children, the old men of occupied France and Belgium? Are not the Lusitania victims witnesses to German adoption of Nietzche's faith?

Here is his indictment of Christianity:

"With this I conclude and pronounce my sentence. I condemn Christianity. To me it is the greatest of all imaginable corruptions. The church is the great parasite; with its anemic idea of holiness it drains life of all its strength, its love and its hope. The other world is the motive for the denial of every reality. I call Christianity the one great curse, the one intrinsic depravity, the one great instinct of revenge, for which no expedient is sufficiently poisonous, secret, underhand, to gain its ends. I call it the one immortal shame and blemish upon the human race."

Is it to be wondered at that a race of people brought up under the influence of such teachings of its leading philosophers should hold to such corrupt views of life that they may be led into the commission of any of the crimes that have been ascribed to the German armies? In the face of these conditions as they are, Is there not a strong appeal that may be made to the very best young men of the present generation to rise up in the strength of their young manhood strike a death blow to such heathenish philosophy and to substitute in its stead the philosophy and religion of Jesus Christ which the German philosophers have so despised? This is one of the heroic calls to the Christian ministry.

Factors in China's Crisis

BY SHERWOOD EDDY, LL.D.,
Secretary for Asia, International Young Men's Christian Associations

We have just completed a tour of the eastern half of China. We began with a busy week in Canton, the first of the twelve cities which we were to visit. Our work this year centered in the Chinese church and emphasized the enlisting of picked individuals in service rather than evangelistic meetings for multitudes. Hundreds of Chinese decided for Christ. On the last night of the series the Chinese pastors of the twenty-eight local churches sat on the platform. As the name of each church was called, the pastor arose, then his workers in the audience, then the new converts who had been won by them or had made the decision for Christ during the week. It was an inspiring sight to see each pastor lead out his little flock, twenty, thirty, forty or fifty going out to begin their weekly Bible class and to extend the work of winning the millions of China one by one.

It is this emphasis on personal work, vitalizing and organizing the Christians to go out and win their non-Christian friends and working with the indigenous local churches that is the distinctive feature of the campaign this year. Previously we have tried to win converts from the non-Christian community and hand them over to the church, but we found that the churches were often unprepared and many of the converts were lost, not being followed up and set to work in the church. This year we have got down to bed-rock and are working within the church itself, working out through a vitalized membership.

On the opening night we met twelve hundred Christians and held a daily meeting to train them in personal work. These newly aroused Christians were previously trained in personal work classes and went out each to win or at least bring a non-Christian friend into the "personalized" or covered meeting, where every non-Christian had some Christian worker who had brought him and would follow him up and talk with him during the interval between the two meetings. Anything which was accomplished, however, was only made possible by the century of missionary seed sowing which had gone before. The fields are dead ripe for harvest, and our part was that of a coolie or harvest hand called in to reap at the final ingathering. It was the men who had borne the burden and heat of the day during the long century before who did the real work.

A team of a dozen workers and specialists were busy night and day in interviews, organizing Bible classes, dealing with enquirers and hearing the confessions of sin. One man came in who had stolen some $800; he made the first payment of $100 toward the settlement of the entire amount. He was followed by others who had stolen money or who were guilty in other ways.

It is the belief of many that a new application of the method of personal work has been discovered and applied in the preparation for these meetings by the local workers which may extend throughout the whole of Asia, with incalculable blessing. We are filled with thanksgiving because of what has already been accomplished.

As a result of the preparatory work of Rev. F. N. D. Buchman and the personal work of the Chinese, several hundred decided for Christ in Canton, including most of the non-Christians in Canton Christian College.

Our experience in the remaining eleven cities, from Hongkong to Peking and from Shanghai to Changsha, was much the same as in Canton. In each city from one to six hundred Christians were organized for personal work and in each city from three hundred to a thousand non-Christian students, officials, business men and others have signed the decision card. More than half of these men are now studying in Bible classes and are being prepared for membership in the church. In one city more than one hundred and fifty have already been baptized and others will follow as they are prepared.

This awakening of the Christians to new activity comes at the hour of China's desperate material and political need. Everything that has been tried in the past seems to have failed. Classical precepts, moral maxims, calculating Confucian morality have failed and Confucianism, the very keynote of China's moral and social arch, seems to be crumbling. Ancestor worship, Confucianism, Buddhism, Taoism and the modern eclectic systems, all alike have failed to regenerate the nation. We do not deny that Confucianism, especially has laid noble moral foundations in the past, that it has been a splendid preparation for some adquate future fulfilment, but alone it has utterly failed to save China. Confucianism has produced a deeper moral consciousness than any other non-Christian religion which we have found in Asia. It gives precepts, but it has failed to give the necessary power; it offers doctrine, but not life; theory, but not practice. The whole life of China today and the backwardness of this one-quarter of the human race as sufficient proof of its pathetic and final inadequacy.

The trouble with China today lies at the very heart and center of the nation's life; it is radical and fundamental. Foreign and domestic loans, secular education, classical moral precepts and the religious systems of her great past, have all alike failed to save or satisfy the deep need of this great people. Many seem to fear that they are almost at the end of their resources and the leaders often seem to be morally bankrupt.

Never was there a time when things looked so dark politically or so bright religiously, so dark for the government or so bright for the Christian church in China as today. This nation has reached the position where a great religious revival is imperatively needed and it is in just that condition in which such movements have often started in past history in other parts of the world. It is our firm conviction that Jesus Christ and vital Christianity, diffused through a growing indigenous Chinese church is the only hope of this great nation.

Here is one-quarter of the human race, preserved where other nations have fallen, after four thousand years of noble history. Such a great past prophecies a great future. The crucial need of the hour is a living Christian church. It is just at this time of national need and crisis that the movement for personal evangelism, which has been spreading through the Chinese church, comes with such hope and promise. A group of Chinese evangelists, prepared by God, have begun the great work of reaping among their fellow countrymen, and bands of personal workers have been trained in the churches. Christ today is the only hope for China..

On the training ground in France I saw a mass of men charging together and heard the officer call out: "Keep together, keep together men; one man cannot take a trench." That irregular mass of men illustrates the need of the present hour. If one man alone forged ahead he was quickly overcome by the enemy, if he straggled behind he was not in the battle at all; those men who kept together captured the trench. It is just so in the church of Christ today; isolated endeavor or denominational, or sporadic efforts are not enough to meet the overwhelming crisis of the present hour. Our forces are too few and too divided and unorganized to meet the crucial and immediate need of one-quarter of the human race.

One hundred years of past effort of missionary schools and colleges, hospitals and institutions, churches and evangelism, have fully prepared China for a great united Christian advance. If we will keep together, and together with Christ go forward, we can "attempt great things for God and expect great things from God." God is ready, the non-Christians are ready. It would have been as easy in each city of China to have gathered audiences of several thousand a night as it was to get several hundred, so far as the non-Christians were concerned, and many of these men would have been ready to join Bible classes or to join the church if only we had been ready and able to receive them.

Now is the time to pray and work for China. In spite of all the awful need in the great war of destruction, we must furnish the constructive forces to save the Far East at this time of need and opportunity.

The Lone Starfish

BY ADA LORRAINE JEX

Selma flung open the living room door and running eagerly to her mother's side, she cried, "Oh, darling, look at this letter. it's an answer to mine and every single thing is even better than I hoped. They have taken me into the class, so that part is settled. Next, my room is to be near the University, so near in fact, that the windows overlook the Campus. Isn't that wonderful? Just think, in less than two weeks your country daughter will be living in New York, drinking in information and inspiration. Hurrah! I'll be famous in less than no time," and laughing at her own conceit, Selma waited joyously for a reply.

But no words came; instead the girl was surprised to see tears in her mother's eyes.

"Why, Lambie, you aren't going to miss me like that, are you?" she questioned anxiously.

"It isn't that, Little Daughter, though, of course, I'll miss you, every minute while you are away. How could it be otherwise? You are my right hand. But I wouldn't let any selfish need on my part stand in the way of your taking the Short-Story Course. Besides, I think the new life will do almost as much to develop your talent as the work itself."

"Then what is the trouble?" Selma asked.

"We won't talk about it now," Mrs. Pemberton answered. "Perhaps things will turn out better than I fear."

But Selma persisted. 'Please, if you don't mind, I'd rather know the worst now. Is there any reason why I shouldn't go to New York for the summer session?"

"Oh, my dear," her mother answered, "I'm so sorry Aunt Lucy is sick again, too sick this time to come here. I'll have to go to Burlington to take care of her, and I don't know what to do with Margaret during my absence. Lucy is too nervous for me to take Little Sister there. Besides, the doctor said the child ought to go to the seashore for a month or two this summer. A complete change is what she needs to build her up."

"Aunt Lucy will have to hire a nurse or go to the hospital," Selma filared. "The room at Cape Cod is engaged for you and Margaret. It's too late for you to change your plans now."

"Someone's plans will have to be changed," Mrs. Pemberton answered, sadly.

"Mine won't!" the girl stormed. "So much depends on my going to the city!" She broke into tears and left the room hurriedly.

Selma mentally repeated her decision all afternoon and evening. She knew Aunt Lucy couldn't afford to go to the hospital. She knew, too, that Margaret had never been well since that attack of scarlet fever the winter before. These things worried her. But in spite of them she told herself fiercely she would not give up going to the city. It was no selfish desire, the girl reasoned. For in her mind Selma had planned many wonderful gifts to the family when once her stories were accepted.

When night came her pillow was wet with tears. Sleep brought no rest, however, for she dreamed that Little Sister was ill. The doctor pointed a thermometer at her and kept saying, over and over, "She should have gone to the seashore! She should have gone to the seashore!"

A bird singing in a branch of the tree outside the window wakened the sleeper. It was later than usual and the sun poured into the room, showing up the worn spots on the carpet. With a vague feeling of alarm Selma sprang out of bed. Then she remembered her dream. Shivering, the girl ran to the heaped-up little writing desk and carefully penned a note to New York. Tearing the margin from one of her stories she wrote on the slip of paper, "My address after Thursday of this week will be the same as Sister Margaret's, Big Rocks, Cape Cod, until such time as it is thought best for us to come home." If there was heartache in every word, no trace of it showed in her face as she laid the paper at her mother's place at the table.

"What's this?" Mrs. Pemberton asked, as she entered with the coffee pot. Then, as she read, the tears brimmed to her eyes.

"How like my little daughter. Thank you," was all she said. But it was enough.

It was very quiet at Big Rocks. There were no boarders at the little farm house where the girls stopped. They spent their time in hammocks under the trees or else on the beach. Usually they went in bathing in the early part of the afternoon and then Margaret took a nap on the steamer rug her sister spread for her. At first during such times Selma, having made her sacrifice, was content to alternately watch the waves and the faint pink color which was beginning to supplant the pallor in the little girl's cheeks. But after a few weeks the pleasing sense of responsibility began to wear off and the hours dragged wearily. Selma had lots of time in which to write, but, although ideas flitted through her mind, she put them from her with a feeling of bitterness. "What's the use?" she thought. "I'd make the same old mistakes. If I'd taken the Story Course everything would have been different."

Then one day Margaret woke with a cold. Their mother had warned Selma to take no chances, so she sent for the doctor.

"Keep her in bed for a few days, and see that she is amused," he said.

"I'm so tired," Margaret complained during the afternoon. "I wish I had something to do."

"I'll read to you," her sister suggested. But the little girl shook her head.

"I know all the books we brought with us by heart. Tell me a story, please."

A half-formed idea had been hovering in Selma's mind for sevaral days, so she looked off at the sentinel pine tree which had suggested it.

"Once upon a time," she began, and Margaret listened, open mouthed, until she finally fell asleep.

Very tenderly the older girl tucked the covers closely. Then she pulled down the shade and tiptoed out of the room. By that time she herself was interested in the fanciful weaving of her little tale. So she thought it out to a finish, and wrote it that evening after kissing her sister good night.

Every day after that Selma thought and wrote stories, unmindful of whether she knew how or not, so anxious was she to please the child. Those that Margaret liked the best, Selma thought about the most and those that the little girl liked the least were either changed or destroyed.

One day in the middle of the story telling a lady dressed in white came down the beach.

"Good morning," she said. "Do you mind if I sit near you? The tide drove me away from my spot."

Looking around, she spread out a shawl and seated herself close to the girls, with her back against a rock.

"Keep on talking," she continued, "I have a book and nothing disturbs me when I'm reading!"

After that Miss Beacon came almost every day., She told the sisters that she had been ill and had come to Big Rocks to recuperate at a fisherman's house not far from their boarding place. She was vtry quiet and sweet, and it wasn't long before the girls watched eagerly for her coming. Sometimes they talked and at other times Miss Beacon read or embroidered, while Selma told Margaret stories. At first the narrator was embarrassed by having a grown-up listener but the feeling soon vanished and Selma's voice flowed on unaffectedly as if the litle girl constituted the sole audience.

"That's pretty," Miss Beacon exclaimed, as the story of the "Lone Starfish" came to an end. "It's very pretty and original, too. Where did you read that?"

"Why, sister doesn't read them! She makes them all up," Margaret cried proudly. "Some day she's going to be a great author."

"Are they really your own?" Miss Beacon queried.

Selma nodded. "They are full of mistakes, I know," she added humbly, patting Margaret's hand as she spoke.

"Yes," Miss Beacon agreed, "there are faults, of course, but they show plot and imagination, splendid characteristics. Now let's see if we can't 'doctor' the 'Lone Starfish.' Have you a manuscript copy?"

Selma opened her portfolio, disclosing a little sheaf of closely written sheets. Miss Beacon ran her pencil over the work, then stopped with an eager look of interest.

"This is the spot I wanted to find," she said. "The story really ends here, where the mermaid says good bye to the starfish.

All the rest is anticlimax, and she went on to give the reasons.

"Oh, yes, I see," the story teller cried. "Won't you please tell me some of the faults in my other things?"

"Gladly, since you really care," Miss Beacon answered.

After that she helped Selma almost every day. The girl wrote and wrote, and made every story as nearly perfect as she knew how. Then she read them aloud. Later, while Margaret took her nap, Miss Beacon criticised and give informal little talks on story writing.

At first, with so many new things in mind in regard to technic, Selma found it hard to express herself. But by the time September came she knew that she had improved.

Margaret was well and happy and running gaily about the beach when at last a letter came telling them that Aunt Lucy was so much better that Mrs. Pemberton was coming to take the girls home.

Miss Beacon was with them when they read the note.

'My, but I'm glad!" Margaret exclaimed, jumping up and down in her joy.

"So am I," Selma said, "but do you know, I'm sorry, too, in a way. I've had such a lovely, happy summer and learned so much! How can I ever thank you, Miss Beacon? I never knew anyone could know so much about story writing as you do. Even dear Miss Armstrong at school didn't begin to help the way you did!"

The lady in white smiled. "Well, I should have a little knowledge of the subject," she ceded. "However, the lessons in patience and sweetness you've learned have, I'm sure, been quite as beneficial as anything I've been able to teach you. Nevertheless, I'm glad of any help I've given."

Then her eyes twinkled merrily. "Now, be prepared for the biggest surprise of your life. You will have something to astonish your mother with when she comes." So saying, Miss Beacon took a magazine out of its wrapper. She looked through the index, turned to page twenty-four, and handed it over without a word.

The girl uttered a cry of amazement. Her own name, Selma Pemberton, stared at her in big black type and above it the words, "The Lone Starfish."

"Oh, Miss Beacon, what does it mean?" she cried in wonder.

"Mean?" rejoined Miss Beacon. "It means you are an authoress."

"And you?" Selma gasped. "Who are you? A wizard?"

No, just a strong and healthy woman, thanks to the sea air and something to rekindle the fires of my interest in life," Miss Beacon answered ,with a laugh. Then her voice grew grave. "Before that I was a broken-down professor of short-story writing in New York. Someone else had to take my place at the University this summer while I came to Cape Cod to recuperate."—American Messenger.

Our Youngest Readers

Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa

My Dear Little Friends:

Once more your little missionary wishes to write to you.

Two years and nine months old now am I but my little life is already full of rich experiences, and in spite of its monotony, I am still adding to them here in Brazzaville.

We are living now in a different house from the one in which we were living when I wrote you last. It is a square house, has a corrugated iron roof, and a cement floor, wide veranda all around its two rooms with fallen down walls—a very airy place indeed, you will say, much too airy for any place but Africa. And yet although it is Africa, and July, it is so cold here that I sleep at night in an all- wool sleeping bag, and am covered with my little wool comforter that dear Auntie Shank made me, besides, I sometimes awake at night in the airy little veranda bedroom in which we sleep, and if I do, I always call out, "Mamma, are you there?" And mamma says, "Yes, sweetheart." Then I lie down again, for if mamma is near I am not afraid, even though Daddy is gone, as he sometimes is. Sometimes when I wake early in the morning, I find Daddy's camp bed is empty and I say to mamma, "Where did Daddy go?" and mamma says, "Daddy went away to pray." I cannot understand about prayer, or why Daddy and mamma and Aunt Toddy (Miss Myers) and Uncle William (Mr. Haas) should pray so much, so often and so long to the dear Lord Jesus for the "open door." But mamma says whatever we ask our Heavenly Father in Jesus' name will surely be given us, although we must always be patient and wait God's time. I know what it means to be patient, for many times I have to wait for some one to play with me or to take a walk with me. But in the end some of the big, busy people always do play with me, or take me for a walk or a ride on the bicycle, and just so mamma says Jesus will open the door of Ubangi-Shari so that your missionaries, big and little may go in and tell the people about his salvation.

Last week a very sad experience came into my little life. Little Tare Ceder, about half as old as I am, died. Death is another thing I do not understand, for although mamma says my little playmate went to heaven, yet I saw them put in the ground the little body that I know and loved so well. It is hard for me to understand, too, and will be harder still for you, that Tare died because he didn't wear a hat! Here in Africa the sun's rays are dangerous even when it is cloudy and little Tare wouldn't wear a helmet. Although his mamma was very careful indeed, yet in some way, perhaps on the veranda, his little head was exposed and he died after two weeks of fever and pain. I think of this so much that often in the night I wake up, and say, "Mamma, Tare died." And then, "Mamma, Tare didn't wear a hat." Mamma and papa used sometimes to punish me for forgetting my hat, even on the veranda, but now they need not do so for I know why Tare died.

We love all of our dear friends in America very much and wish we might hear from you. I haven't yet had a single letter since we came to Brazzaville, and worse than that papa and mamma haven't had very many either. But we have kept writing just the same and we hope you have received all our letters.

Mamma says since it is more blessed to give than to receive it must be more blessed to write letters than to get them, even from our very dearest friends.

I still remember what snow is like. We have lovely white sand here which I play in every day. I call it my "snow pile." And then every day when mamma gives me my bath, I certainly do make the "snow" (soapsuds) fly, for I love to splash, just as I used to do when I was a little guest in your homes.

Do you know what a jigger is? Not as well as I do, I think, for I have had two since I came to Africa. They are like a tiny little flea. The mamma jigger burrows into my little toes, and lays her eggs there in a little sac which grows and grows until it is taken out. Oh, my, how that hurts! Every day mamma looks at my little feet when she bathes me, but I kick as hard as I can, for I am so afraid she will find one! Then when she does find one, she always calls Daddy, and they take it out, for it takes one person to hold my foot still.

Mamma says she has seen many little boys and girls whose toes have fallen off because the jiggers were not taken out, so I try to be brave. After it is out, mamma puts some medicine and a dressing on, and so far the toe always has healed rapidly. Sometimes they get "infected" and then there may be very much pain indeed.

Mamma and papa join me in sending love to you all. We are so glad that you are praying for us and for Africa, and for Jesus to get glory to his name through our being here.

Very lovingly yours,
MARGUERITE EDORA GRIBBLE.

A Queer World

A pin has a head, but has no hair;
A clock has a face, but no mouth there;
Needles have eyes, but they cannot see;
Elephants, trunks without lock or key;
A timepiece may lose, but cannot win;
A cornfield dimples without a chin;
A hill has no leg, but has a foot;
A glass has a stem, but not a root;
A watch has hands; but no thumb or finger;
A boot has a tongue, but is no singer;
Rivers run, though they have no feet;
A saw has teeth, but it does not eat;
Ash trees have keys, but never a lock;
And baby crows without being a cock.—Ex.

"Here's a nickel for you my man," she said to a frayed and ragged-looking individual who stood under the porch with extended hand. "I'm not giving it to you for charity's sake, but merely because it pleases me." "Thankee, but couldn't you make it a quarter and enjoy yourself thoroughly, ma'am?" —Exchange.

News From the Field

Pastors of Pennsylvania, Attention!

A few Pennsylvania churches have not yet sent their statistical reports to the statistician. Blanks have been sent to every pastor and where there is no pastor those blanks have been sent to the church secretary. Several appeals have followed the blanks urging a prompt response that we may have a full report from 100 per cent. of our churches. At the Johnstown conference the record of every church will be shown. Your statistician does not want your church to fail to have credit for making a report. Do you? If you need more blanks they will be sent gladly. Please send in the report from your church at once.

Credential blanks for the churches and Sunday schools of the district have been mailed to the pastors and superintendents. If you do not have blanks for your church or school a card to the secretary will bring them to you by return mail.

M. A. WITTER.

READY FOR JOHNSTOWN

Brother Superintendent, have you elected your delegates for the district conference?

If not, attend to it promptly. See that your delegates are equipped with credentials and the conference fee for your school.

Every Brethren school should be represented at the State Sunday school convention which follows.

Brother M. A. Witter, will furnish the credentials for our conference. See the secretary of your County Sunday School Association for credentials for the state convention.

Johnstown will be ready to welcome you, but we will be a bit crowded after the big convention opens.

Delegates to our conference will be lodged and breakfasted free in Brethren homes. Dinner and supper at their own expense at any hotel, restaurant or cafeteria in the city.

The rate fixed by the Executive Committee for entertainment of delegates to state convention is two dollars per day.

Delegates to our own conference can have their place for lodging and breakfast arranged for ahead by dropping a card with the name or names to Miss Sarah J. Cobaugh, 624 Somerset Street, Johnstown, Pa.

ALBERT TRENT.

La Verne, California

We are rejoicing that a young man of the congregation has taken his stand for the Master. Brother Broad has been giving fervent evangelistic sermons in the evenings and Joe came forward last Sunday evening. May God in a special way bless the young men who are brave enough to take their stand for him in this day.

We are all looking forward to our pastor's series of prophetical sermons which he is to start soon, for we feel the need of such as that now. He, however, is leaving us October seventh for a three weeks' evangelistic campaign among the miners of Arizona. God wonderfully blessed his efforts in this field a couple of years ago. While he is gone the pulpit will be supplied by the young men of the church chiefly.

The Sunday school attendance is more than gratifying. During the summer months when so many folks take vacations we thought we would really do well to get a hundred out for the enrollment now is about 125. The last two Sundays, however, have been nearer the 140 mark. The C. E. societies are all progressing nicely. Frequently the C. E.'s take charge of the Sunday evening services down at the Arcadia camp. Brother Broad is C. E. Pastor-Advisor for our union, so he advises as to what the boys shall get in these services and we believe they get what they are hungry for.

The church has recently purchased an additional 15 feet of land adjoining the church property on the east; so in case the distant future holds a new church home for us we shall have the proper sized lot.

The social life of the church is active and good feeling and fellowship prevail.

MRS. H. L. GOOD.

R. F. D. 1, Pomona, Calif.

Lathrop, California.

The brethren at Lathrop are looking forward with eagerness for the return of their pastor from General Conference. While he has been away we have held our services regularly each Sunday evening. Brother Platt appointed the first leader, and since then each leader names one for the next service. We feel that our meetings have been both enjoyable and profitable. The attendance has been good, last Sunday evening, September 15, it was exceptionally large. Our prayer meetings also have been interesting and well attended. One evening when studying 12th chapter of 1 Corinthians, we were reluctant to go home, a brother saying he could stay a couple hours longer, so interesting were the discussions.

Next Sunday, September 22, is to be a get together day at Ripon. The pastor, Brother Leatherman has sent invitations to all the churches in this district to meet with his church for Sunday school at 10 o'clock. At noon all to partake of a basket dinner in the grove by the church. At 2:30 services in the church and in the evening a grand communion. We are looking forward to a splendid time spiritually and socially.

Upon Brother Platt's return he will complete plans for a revival in Lathrop, for which we are praying earnestly. Brother Platt is especially gifted in the art of absorbing every good thing at conference and giving it out again to his people at home. So we praise God for the blessings in store for us.

Every department of our church is doing fine. Some of the goals were more than reached and we only had "one lost" to report. That one was the C. E. Now that vacations and hot weather are over we expect to maintain our C. E. regularly again.

SUSIE G. REYNER, Cor.

Oak Hill, West Virginia

Four years ago after our General Conference the writer started out from Winona Lake, Indiana, into the evangelistic work in our own church and I am happy to say God has blessed me with health so much so that I have not been off one day on account of sickness and for this and so many other blessings I do strive to send up a stream of gratitude unto him who is the source of all blessings.

I want to thank my brethren and sisters in Chirst for the interest you have manifested in me and the work which God has called me to do. You have cheered me with the good letters received and you have been a special strength to me, praying for me and the work of the church, and whatever may have been accomplished for good you have had a part in it and will share in the reward at that day, but the greatest reward to my mind is the joy that comes into the soul of one who brings a lost son or daughter to the loving Savior.

In the past four years you have kept your servant busy and I haven't had to solicit for one meeting in any way. When we started out we asked God to guide us in each field where he would have us go. We believe he answered our prayer and we have tried to be fair in that we have served the churches first on the list whether they be rich or poor, small or great, and by his help we shall continue to do the best we can to help the church and her grand work.

We will be in West Virginia until the first of November with brother A. B. Duncan and his people in the work. Pray for us and when we are through in these parts we will send in our travel notes. Your servant in the Master's work.

Christian Endeavor and the District Conference

Most of the district conferences seek to give due consideration to every department of church activity. Sometimes on account of the press of urgent business certain departments are allowed a very limited portion of time. This was true of the S. S. C. E. until the people thought that the work must be recognized because of the women's ability to earn money. Similar indifference prevailed concerning the Sunday school until it was found to be the most fruitful source of new church members. Christian Endeavor has been slighted, perhaps, by reason of her inability to increase numerously the church membership and to yield large sums of money. But are additional members and an enlarging treasury the only or even the chief phases of church work? Are not the new members to be trained and enlisted in the service for which they are prepared by nature and training? Is not such training to be provided for the young people of trainable ages who will possess the money of tomorrow and become the parents of the church's future membership? Should not the church assume full responsibility for such necessary training?

It is gratifying to note the growing tendency to accord Christian Endeavor the recognition which it deserves as a training school. The program of each of the approaching district conferences allows some time to plan for the larger development of the society; several of the program committees have been very generous. Recently the moderator of one of these conferences asked the undersigned to send data relative to the status of Christian Endeavor in that particular district, saying that he wanted to embody the intelligence in his moderator's address. A sympathetic and cooperative attitude like that manifested on the part of a conference official may serve as a rebuke for leaders who are guilty of indifference or neglect. Such a disinterested spirit that prompted this good brother to feel that the work of the young people is an integral part of conference business may be cultivated by others with decided advantage for all. Then delegates, both ministerial and lay, should remember their obligation to represent the whole church. It ill becomes any minister or layman to recite indiscreetly the difficulties experienced with the young people at home. In seeking help for the solution of our problems it is unseemly to indulge in ill-timed remarks. Being devoid of light and encouragement they have a disappointing and disheartening effect. Let all things be done unto the building up of the body of Christ, and give the young people a chance for they are important organs of the organism.

MISSION NOTES

The Washington, D. C., Mortgage Eraser

Brethren Church, Ashland, O.....	$ 50 00
Brethren Church, Huntington, Ind....	10 00
Brethren Church, Mexico, Ind.....	15 00
Brethren Church, Nappanee, Ind.....	50 00
Previously reported	653 50
Received to date of the $1,500 nec...	$778 50

All pledges should be met as early as possible. All ought to thank God that we are about to erase a mortgage of twenty years standing and thus enable the mission board to use that interest money to a better advantage for the Kingdom of God. One giver writes, "So much can be accomplished when all put their shoulders to the wheel." And we as a church have not begun to do what we can in home mission work. Another giver from the far southwest writes, "Thanks for 'Over the Top.' I hope that every pledge will come in promptly. I hope the enthusasm will not die with the closing of Winona Conference." Let this notice be sufficient for every giver of a pledge to know that payment is now due.

That Matron

Where is the woman who will give herself to this task? Brother Drushal writes that the need is more and more pressing. Surely somewhere in the brotherhood there is an able and consecrated woman who will volunteer for this service. May the Lord call forth this needed laborer.

The School Desks

About thirty or forty second hand school desks are needed at Riverside. Surely somewhere within shipping distance of Lost Creek there are the needed seats. Let pastors and interested friends of this work investigate at once.

G. C. CARPENTER.

Peru, Indiana.

Turlock, California

In justice to our beloved pastor, Roger Darling, who has served us so faithfully for eleven years the church wishes to say to the readers of the Evangelist and the brotherhood at large they accepted his resignation only on account of his failing health. The physicians advise a change so we are praying he may be restored to health if it be the Lord's will. We greatly rejoince that we have secured Brother Reagan of Los Angeles to fill our pulpit and we trust our church will still be as a light set on a hill.

MRS. ABBIE FULKERETH.

Pitiful Condition in South Persia

Relief work is being carried on in Kermanshah, Hamadan, Kazrin, Meshed and Teheran and in the districts of Kavaghan and Sultanabad. Plans are also being laid to send relief to the destitute mountain district of Shimran north of the city.

Kermanshah District

Mrs. Stead of Kermanshah writes: "Mr. Stead is still in Kerind. There has been absolute starvation there and children have come who look like famine victims in India in the missionary papers. The villages in that region have been utterly destroyed by the various armies passing through; so that the people are not only hungry but with out shelter also. I suppose the need is as great in other parts, as the British officers and men that are here now say they have never seen anything like the terrible condition along this road." Mrs. Stead speaking of another lot of orphans, says: "There is another squad coming along soon and for them I have to buy clothes. They haven't a scrap of clothes that can be put back on them, when they get their first bath. A bunch of rags around thin hips, and a piece of gunny sack over thin shoulders or heads is all they have." Mrs. Stead writes again: "The distress is terrible. People are eating dirt. Dead of starvation are carried into the streets and left until some one gives money to bury them."

Telegraphs from Resht to Teheran for Help

Mr. Murray telegraphed from Resht: 'City filled with people from mountains and villages dying for food and shelter. Ask Caldwell cable America for relief fund." I am happy to say that conditions in Resht have been much relieved so that 250 of the 500 tomans that were sent to Resht have been returnd to us for use elswhere. The reason given by Dr. Frame is "that the Jangalis (who have seized the city and are ruling there, their head being Mirza Kochek Khan), have appointed a committee to look after the poor and appropriate 10,000 tomans a month from their funds (raised by forced levy) for this purpose."

Similar Telegram from Meshed

A telegram says from Meshed: "Many thanks for ten thousand tomans received. Conditions are daily growing worse. Friends have secured us from a distance at least one hundred kharvans wheat at greatly reduced prices. Carpet and silk weaving industries paralyzed, throwing thousands out of employment. Very large number of formerly self-supporting artisans and laborers, shopkeepers and servants are now out of work. Thousands of families have already sold everything saleable in order to get bread and are now destitute and this condition is increasing daily. Even if this next harvest should be abundant, destitution would still continue till other economic conditions recover and many thousands of families will have no money to buy bread even though it should become ridiculously cheap. Besides the war, the Russian revolution and the failure of crops, the great dimunition in the number of pilgrims has robbed Meshed of an important part of its livelihood. There is a bad typhoid epidemic here. We are now following plan of giving one meal daily by ticket after investigation of cases. We can use advantageously and economically at least ten thousand tomans a month but can plan much more effectively if we have assurance of definite amount in advance."

Starvation in Hamadan

From Hamadan Mr. Allen writes: "Conditions here are very bad. The suffering is terrible the families without food and fire are legion. Rice we have just bought for 115 tomans a kharvar. Prices are exorbitant for everything. Hundreds of people have no work. The following incident may show the condition to which some of the people are reduced. The other day, when Mr. Edwards came home he found a man lying in the street in front of his gate exhausted from hunger and weakness. He had him brought into the kitchen where they warmed him up and revived him with some soup and food. While they were busy with him his wife came along her hands all covered with blood. When asked for an explanation she said that she had gone to get a little bread but had not been able, so she had been over to the slaughterhouse to get some blood to eat. The poor people even fight for the blood from the slaughterhouses. The man whom Mr. Edwards helped died. Every day we have to turn down appeals for help. There are hundreds that are not being reached, especially of the petty tradesmen and laborers who are too proud to confess their wretchedness."

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto me"

Stelzle to Direct Publicity Work for American Red Cross in Connection With Religious Bodies and Labor Organizations.

The Rev. Charles Stelzle has been invited by the American Red Cross to become Director of the Bureau of Relations with churches and Religious organizations and of the Bureau of Relatons with Labor organizations, in connection with its Publicity Department.

The Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has released Mr. Stelzle for this purpose and he has already gone to Washington to undertake this important piece of work for the period of the war.

Practicing the Art of Cultivation

BY MARGARET SLATTERY

TO realize what the art of cultivation can accomplish one needs to read carefully the increase in the producing power of certain wheat fields in our country during the past four years. He should study the reports of the modern miracles accomplished through the advice and instruction of the agricultural schools and colleges which have escaped from the thralldom of the abstract. And one should look just once into the faces of boys and girls of the rural schols who, having been instructed in the art of cultivation, have practised it and inceased the value and quantity of the output on their fathers' farms tenfold. It fills one's soul with hope to look into the bright, eager face of a fourteen-year-old prize-winner, holding side by side in his hand the stalks of corn, one small and meager, the other rich and full, made so by the art of cultivation which he has so patiently practised.

What cultivation of the soil has accomplished in the agricultural world it can accomplish in the religious sphere of life. If young America is irreligous today it is because we have sown the seed and left it to itself when we realized how much time and patience its development would demand. Like the boys, we have wanted something which would grow faster. In the soil of young hearts are the elements which make a sane, full output of religious life possible —but the cultivation is necessary and if we are to raise the type of our manhood and womanhood, imperative.

The part of the work of cultivation which rests directly upon the teacher is that which concerns us most. If cultivation is to bring about the very best results, home, community, school and church must enter into it, and the instructor in the art of cultivation must bring his influence to bear upon each of these. But the teacher must accept cheerfully Labor and Patience, the two essential implements in the art of cultivation. Then when the good seed prepared by love and life is ready for the soil he may drop it in and begin the cultivation.

The Teachers' Task

In order to cultivate with skill the little seed that pushes its way to the light the teacher must know what it needs as it develops—urging forward here, that through self-expression it may grow strong, restraining there, that it may not spread itself out and through over-expression become weak. Only loving personal knowledge of each individual life will make possible this guidance and restraint.

The teacher must know the environment in the midst of which the good seed is striving to climb to fruition, else he cannot know just what to drop into the soil to stimulate the seed in its fight for strength; he cannot know how to protect it from the growths that threaten to choke it.

The teacher must learn to use the mighty stimulus to growth which comes from the dew and the gentle rain of simple friendship. Seed which can come to fruition under no other conditions springs into vigorous life under the power of warm friendship. Many of those called giants in the realm of religious life, both today and in the past reached their sturdy growth because of friendship. And many a seed which might have developed and borne rich fruit shrivelled away in the chill of unfriendliness and misunderstanding.

The teacher must learn to use the great developing power of sunshine. How the seed grows by leaps and bounds when the refreshing rain has done its work and the sun breaks forth in all its glory! Young life loves sunshine, it shrinks from gloom, it blossoms in the presence of hope and expectation, it droops in the atmosphere of distrust.

The teacher must learn the value of experience in the work of cultivation. He must learn to consult those who have had wider experience than himself and have seen a world of broad horizons. He must come in contact as often as possible with those who are meeting with marked success in the realm in which he is interested and must go home to test the methods of which he has heard, just as the boy prize-winner walked miles to the agricultural experiment station to observe for days successful men at work and then with a package of printed material under his arm went home to apply the principles to his own little farm.

The teacher who longs to develop the religious life of his pupils, that it may yield the fruits of reverence, purity, unselfishness, Christ-like love and service must not only make connections and impress through varied repetition, but also learn this art of cultivation. And his labor need never be discouraging, for it is his joy to know that, if he obeys the law in the sowing of the seed and follows the directions in its nurturing, the Ruler of the Universe, the Lord of all harvests will himself give the increase.

"God's Word should be sown in the heart like seed;
Then men's hands must tend it, their lives defend it,
Till it bursts into flower as a deathless deed."

COMMUNION NOTICE

The First Brethren of Altoona, Pa., will observe Holy Communion on Sunday evening, October 6, 1918, at seven o'clock. Isolated members please take note. Brethren of like faith are invited to come and enjoy this feast of love with us.

W. C. BENSHOFF, Pastor.

Our semi-annual love feast will be held at Reliance, Va., Mt. Zion church, Saturday evening, October 26. All of like faith are cordially invited to attend these services.

S. P. FOGLE, Pastor.

Marriages

MOORE-STUTZMAN.—Sergeant Roy John Moore, of the 26th Company, Seventh Battalion, 155th Depot Brigade, Camp Lee, Virginia, and Miss Viola Wilma Stutzman, daughter of Mrs. Russell Moore, of Johnstown, Pa., were married Saturday evening, September 7, 1918, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. McCartney, in Conemaugh, by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church. The bridegroom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Moore, Johnstown, and has been in camp over a year. His bride is a member of the Conemaugh Brethren church. The best wishes of a host of friends go with these young people.

MOOSE-GILLIN.—Mr. William Moose, of Mineral Point, Pa., son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Moose, and Miss Pearl Gillin, daughter of Mrs. John Gillin, of Park Hill, Pa., were married by L. Garvin Smith in the parsonage of the Conemaugh Brethren church, August 14, 1918. The bride is a member of the Brethren church. The best wishes of a host of warm friends go with these young people for a happy and prosperous journey through life.

Our Dead

COBAUGH.—Daniel S. Cobaugh was born in Conemaugh, Pa., on August 5, 1865 and died August 29, 1918. He is survived by his widow, his father, two brothers, two sisters, three daughters, seven sons (one in service in France), two grandchildren and a host of friends.

For over a year he was a patient sufferer. Many times during his intense suffering he expressed a desire to depart to that other world, to be free from pain and with the Lord. He was a member of the Conemaugh Brethren church and continued in that faith until called home. Funeral services in the Conemaugh Brethren church by L. Garvin

NININGER. Nathan T., aged 70 years, died September 8 at his home in Roanoke, Va. Brother Nininger accepted Christ and united with the German Baptist church about 50 years ago. Later he became a charter member of the Bethany Brethren church of near Roanoke, and later when the Brethren church was started in the city he cast his lot with the movement of which congregation he remained a faithful member until death. The funeral service was conducted from the home by the writer assisted by Eld. P. S. Miller of the Church of the Brethren.

L. G. WOOD.

PETRIE. Cora was born April 22, 1916 and died August 20, 1918. She leaves her mother, grandparents and numerous relatives. Services conducted at the Carlton Brethren church by the undersigned.

MAIDEN. Chester Leroy, was born in Tama county, Iowa, October 16, 1904 and died at Calgary, Canada, September 14, 1918. He was aged 13 years, 10 months and 28 days. He leaves to mourn his early departure his father, mother, one brother, many relatives and friends. He was of a friendly, cheerful disposition and will be sadly missed by all who knew him. May those who are left to mourn be comforted in their hour of sadness. Services at the Carlton Brethren church by the undersigned.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

GARST.—Jacob Garst was born in Virginia but was brought to Indiana when two years old and has lived ever since in Wabash county. He passed away September 5, 1918 at the age of 76 years, 6 months and 26 days. He was a member of the College Corner church. He leaves six children and a host of friends to mourn his departure.

P. M. FISHER.

PETERS.—Melanchton Peters died at his home August 1, 1918. Brother Peters was born in Ohio, November 20, 1858. At the time of his death he was 59 years, 9 months and 11 days old. Brother Peters is survived by his wife and four sisters. Twenty-one years ago Mr. Peters united with the First Brethren church and lived a consistent Christian life. He always had the welfare of the church at heart. Four years ago his church called him to the deaconship. His Christian influence and fatherly advice will be missed by all who came in contact with him. Funeral services were held at the home and at Teegarden church by the writer assisted by brother C. C. Grisso, of North Liberty. May the Christ who was his light and guide through the shadow of the valley of death be our refuge.

lie the countless things which weave the web of splendor and throw the magic of enchantment about things. Necessity supplies the substance. The unnecessary add the the glory.

The proper question to ask about a course of conduct to be followed or a thing to be obtained is not, then, that as to whether it is necessary. It is that as to whether it is lovely and worth while. We need to remember that if all the unnecessary acts were left undone and all the unnecessary words were left unsaid the world would soon cease to seem a fit place in which to live. We need to remember that it is the will uncompelled that tames the wilderness, that it is the hand unconstrained that reclaims the desert, and that it is the kindness born of spontaneous impulse which brings into life the uplifting and the helpful.

Of course we could get on without all these things. We do not have to have the flowers; we could dispense with the moonbeams; our three meals a day do not depend upon the singing of the birds; the world could no doubt continue on its way if the wind never again whispered a lullaby among the trees. But this is not the kind of world for which the heart longs. The deeper hunger is satisfied only with a world made beautiful with the things that were whispered only into the more sacred chambers of the heart of man—the beautiful and unnecessary things.—In American Messenger.

The Red Triangle Men

TO THE WORKERS OF THE Y. M. C. A.

Their huts are brown on the western front
And pink in the Eastern dawn.
They stand and serve where the men lie thick
And the blinds of Fate are drawn.
Wherever the need of help is found,
Their footsteps gather and fall
In shell-raked village and shattered town;
And God looks down on them all.

Some of the men are college men,
Some hail from the nation's schools;
Each will give what he has to give
In the lands where the war fiend rules.
And few are young, and fewer fit
To answer the greatest call;
But each is doing his biggest bit;
And God looks down on them all.

Under the lee of the fighting line,
In tents that are pitched in haste,
They set the food and the steaming cup
Near the slopes where the red death raced.
There, where the guns in anger roar,
And the whistling bullets fall,
They serve—the Red Triangle men;
And God looks down on them all.

From the Editor's View-Point

The Value of An Ideal

Frequently idealists are spoken of as individuals without practical common sense and as being able to accomplish nothing because of this lack. It must be admitted that some idealists of the most pronounced type do lack in the sense mentioned and are thus prevented from carrying out their ideals.

One who succeeds in carrying out his every ideal and in developing his every plan can not have such very high ideals after all for it is only to be expected that one's ideals are just a little higher than the possibility of attainment. When one's highest ideals have been attained there is room for no further progress and when progress ceases life itself ceases for all practical purposes.

One of the saddest features of human life is the lack of ideals or if not a total lack of HIGH ideals. Low ideals are common enough and because of this life itself is altogether too commonplace with a vast number of men and women. One of the best things in all the world to spur man on to greater effort and to inspire him to develop the best there is in him is some great ideal he wishes to attain in his own life or to help others to attain it in theirs.

While some idealists may lack in the practical qualities that accomplish things in the world we can not agree with those who condemn all idealists. The Kaiser is reported to have said, "Wilson is an idealist and an idealist can accomplish nothing." One half the statement of the Kaiser is correct; Wilson is an idealist, but the other half of the statement of the Kaiser is altogether wrong, for it is now plainly to be seen that our President with his idealism will accomplish more for the world during his eight years in the presidential office than all the junker statesmen of Germany, including the Kaiser, have done for it in fifty years. The fact is the value of an ideal is inestimable and when hight ideals are coupled up with practical common sense there is no more potent force for good in all the world than this; and it is worth noting that the highest and most valuable ideals are Christian in character.

What Men Like

There is a difference between liking a thing and loving a thing, but in many instances the difference seems to be so slight that it is not easily identified. The very character of man is indicated by his likes and dislikes.

Many things in this world are worth liking, but there are some things that may be proper subjects for one's liking that are not at all fit for one's loving. We know the apostle says, "Love not the world neither the things that are in the world," but there is no reason why one should be at variance with the world and dissatisfied and disgruntled at his surroundings all the time. In fact there are many things about the world that most of us like and even in some respects we love them and still we do not feel that we are disobedient to the Apostle's teaching.

If it is ennobling to one's character to love the beautiful then it is ennobling to both like and love many of the things that belong to the world, for certainly God through the laws we attribute to Nature has made some of the most beautiful scenes that can come before the vision of man, and it is no sin to love the beauties of nature, and as the fall of the year comes bringing with it magnificent pictures of forests and groves colored with crimson and gold as no painter has yet been able with pigment and brush to color any of his reproductions on canvas there is no harm in standing before such scenes and in rapture born of love for the beautiful to exclaim, "What hath God wrought."

But there are other things that appeal to one's liking in the world and as stated in the beginning, these things reveal the character of the one who has the liking. Some people wonder why Charlie Chaplin succeeds so well with his foolishness in entertaining people and why so many people "like" his antics before the "screen." But Mr. Chaplin explains it in three words when he says, "I like people."

Repatriation

This is one of the problems that confront the nations of the world that have sent large numbers of their men out of their native countries to fight against the aggression of Prussianism over the rest of the civilized world. Of course, these men have not been expatriated in the sense of political banishment, but many of them by their absence from their homeland will become disconnected from the place they formerly held in the business, labor or social world and some decided steps will be necessary to make it easy for them to again take their place in civil life, for it is not to be expected that the world will continue under arms a moment longer than is absolutely necessary to guard against traitorous outbreaks of lawless people after peace has been secured upon the surface. A deep and abiding peace is to be desired just as quickly as the peace destroying elements in the political world have been thoroughly overcome, and then the problem will be to take proper care of those who have had part in making such peace possible.

But there seems to be another kind of repatriation that is not only to take place but that is going on even now. For some time it has been felt by many Christian workers that Jesus Christ has been expatriated, that is banished from the Christianity built upon his life and death, that the world has for a number of years been attempting to build up a religion based upon Christian principles but without the Christ who is the life of all such principles. "He came unto his own and his own received him not."

A moral system of a type may be built up without Christ, as moral systems have been built up in the past; and there may be much good in these systems which will have a restraining influence over the lives of men that will prove helpful in many ways, but the system will lack saving power as all such systems of the past have lacked it. Something more than moral philosophy is needed to lift the family of man to the place intended by the Creator. This something is undoubtedly Jesus Christ, though many leaders of moral movements seem to have overlooked it in the past. For a number of years there have been those who have been following the slogan, "Back to Christ," but it has not meant much to a large portion of people. However, it seems that at the present time the world itself is turning back to Christ as it has not done in a long time. We do not say that the world is turning with greater readiness than formerly to the church, but it is seeking that which the church has been endeavoring to give for nearly 20 centuries. The church may not have always followed the best methods in carrying on its work, but in the long run we believe that apart from the service which the church has rendered to civilization there would be very little demand at the present time for it to get back to the fundamental principles laid down by its founder Jesus Christ. Too long the world has tried to get along without him and too long has the church failed to lift him up before the world as the one and only hope of mankind, and to do this lifting in a way that all men are drawn unto him.

It is encouraging to note how Christ is again coming into his own, and to note how in these days of worldly uncertainty men are turning to him. The world needs Christ and it needs all that is true in what has been termed Christianity for nearly two thousand years, but there can be no real Christianity unless Jesus Christ is fully embodied in it and in its claims. But the world and the church are looking to him, and even so liberal a critic as Prof. Shailer Mathews has recently declared, "We are repatriating Jesus in Christianity." Let the good work go on; it is what Christianity needs.

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

Co-ordination and Co-operation

In the last issue of the "Woman's Outlook" which just came this morning, I find some mighty fine news. From the President's report of the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, I cull this much:

> "Last year we set ourselves to reach a part of our Four-Year Program goals. We attempted to reach a gain of one hundred and eighty new members. We find we have a gain of 224, thus surpassing our goal by 61. This we think is splendid and makes us feel that in 1920 we will reach our 2,000 members."

Now, I like that report because it shows so many good things. First, is the fact that a good organization has set a goal that looked big and then, went "away over the top." The program is not too big, either, this little note tells the rest of the brotherhood for the fact that they had more than won the first goal set, made them feel that the bigger one could be reached in 1920. That's the right kind of optimism because it is based on fact. It is not hot air.

"We Have, Therefore We Can"

Now, would not that make a fine motto for the girls for the remainder of the task? And since they did so well this year, ought not they feel that nothing can hinder them from winning in sure style, the larger, longer race to 1920?

And would it not be fine if the spirit of that report would permeate the whole church? Who is it for, The King of kings who absent on a journey has left the interests of the kingdom to our hands and who will, in due time return to take an account of our stewardship.

"We Have, Therefore We Can"

That is in harmony with the teaching of the Master who said, "To him that hath shall be given." There is no note of defeatism in the forward march of the Master. Germany thought there would never come that day in their history. They who for four long years braved the whole world caring not whom they might offend, have come to the note of defeatism; before this is in print, we are expecting almost anything from even Germany. Defeat is finally to come to everything ever launched save the work of Jesus Christ and that that interests his kingdom.

Now, Co-operation

But where is the co-operation in this? Well, that is my question. What I'd like and have been asking and praying for for two years is, that such good reports of success should be made on this page. There may be a very good reason why the organizations have not used this page more; there may be a very good reason why they have not heralded their successes in this way that I feel is the just right of the brotherhood to have it done, but I can not figure it out. In this I do not criticize the President of the Sisterhood nor any other, but I would like to say that this is not my page, my cause nor my task. It is "ours," and I hope that everybody will use it to the fullest for the success of the Master's big program for us that we have been emboldened to try out for HIM.

Program Page Is Our Page

People of the church, this page is "our" page. Every good report of progress would help others to progress and ought to be mirrored on this page. No better service can be rendered the brotherhood and the cause than that you should send me a brief sketch that it may blaze forth on this mirror of progress. Let us co-ordinate our tasks more perfectly and then we can co-operate more thoroughly.

BAME.

PRAYER. BY W. R. DEETER

"Lord, teach us to pray."—Luke 11:1.

Prayer is the golden key that unlocks the storehouse of God's grace and teaches us to know him.

Jesus had just been at the home of Mary and Martha, and had gone to a certain place and his disciples asked of him, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples." It was here that the Lord said, "After this manner ought you to pray, Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, etc."

Have you ever observed how free this prayer is of any material that can tempt to subtle self-inspection in the art of devotion? It is full of an overflowing of thought and of emotion toward great objects of desire, great necessities and great perils. Prayer brings us in communion with the infinite that we may receive strength and blessing in the time of need, when we feel weak and insufficient for the tasks that are before us. Prayer pulls the rope below, and the great bell rings above in the ears of God. God hears our humble petitions, though there may be some that scarcely stir the bell, because of languid praying. Others may give but an occasional pull at the rope. But he who is sure to win heaven is the one who grips the rope boldly and pulls continuously, with all his might and strength. He should pray "without ceasing."

Prayer is by no means a mere talisman through which we substitute our will for that of God, but it is more truly that communion of the mind with God through which our will becomes at last merged into his will. We believe there is nothing that can make our souls so pure and strong, nothing that can arm us so completely for the great conflicts of life, as to be alone with infinite truth, and infinite love through prayer. There is no joy, duty, conflict or sorrow for which we cannot be better prepared by prayer. There is little danger of too much time being spent in prayer. Bad habits are overcome by prayer; evil thoughts are rooted out through prayer; dark hours may be made light through prayer; midnight of prayer brings noonday of victory. True prayer is the reflection of God's thoughts back upon himself. "Men ought always to pray and faint not" is the admonition of Jesus, and this brings us to our first thought to know what prayer is.

I. Prayer Should Be Founded Upon the Knowledge of its Teaching.

Samuel Johnson once was asked what the strongest argument for prayer was, and he replied, "Sir, there is no argument for prayer." He impresses the fact that prayer is a native tendency. It is a practice like breathing or eating in this rspect, that men engage in it because they are human, and afterwards argue about it as best they can. Carlyle has said, "Prayer is and remains the native and deepest impulse of the soul of man." Man's praying denotes to us that he is akin to God. That which is within man that is immortal, therefore must be fed upon the eternal bread through prayer, to have sustenance through life in this world.

Prayer in ancient Israel was the office of the prophet. Men had not not reached the sense of personal religious experience. Their religion was largely external. They could approach their God with a gift as in sacrifice though even then the priest was generally the mediator; but when they sought to speak with him, and to beseech his favor, they felt the need of an intermediary who was able to secure audience with the deity. So Moses is represented as praying for Israel (Ee. 2:11-13; Num. 11:11-15). Samuel prayed for Israel in the presence of the enemy (1 Sam. 7:5, 8). When the people sought for a king they asked Samuel to pray for them, and he did. (V. 9.)

Many of the prophets break into prayer in their writings, as Jeremiah when Juda was afflicted with drouth (14: 13-22). Many of these writings represents an endeavor to spiritualize the worship in the temple. Isaiah says, "My house shall be made a house of prayer," and this thought was nobly expressed by Jesus himself when he cleansed the temple the first time.

It would be incorrect to say that there was no practice of prayer by the people before the exile, for Isaiah declares that their many prayers are useless unless accompanied by righteousness. The book of Nehemiah is a remarkable record of prayers of an active man of affairs. Judas the Maccabee also was a man who prayed and "kept his powder dry," as the heroic story repeated narrates. The book of Psalms is really a book of prayers and praises. They are the expression of Israel's faith and aspiration, many of them having all the elements of true prayer. They are personal yet representative, for the writer is always speaking for his people. They are the ascriptions of praise, for that is the spirit in which the devout soul ever communes with God. They are cries for deliverance, for peace, for care and thanksgivings. After the exile prayer became a more personal matter with the people, and Jesus fully emphasizes the need of direct communion with God for all people alike. The cry is still with us, "Lord teach us to pray," that we may know just what to pray for, and what not to pray for. Jesus knows our needs before we ask for them, but he wants us to ask, and if we ask in faith believing, we shall receive them. Prayer has righted many a man to do and act justly, and to keep in paths of righteousness. Prayer and worship are thus universal; that all people do "seek God, if happily they might find him." It is said that an ignorant African woman, after hearing her first Christian sermon, remarked to her neighbor, "There! I told you there ought to be a God like that." Somewhere in every man there is the capacity for worship and prayer, for the apprehension of God and the love of him. This, then, is the distinctive quality of man and the noblest faculty which he possesses.

Prayer has been greatly discredited in the minds of many by its uses during the war. Men have felt the absurdity of praying on opposite sides of battle, of making God a tribal leader in heaven, to give victory, as Zeus and Apollo used to do, to their favorites. Let us grant all the bitter, narrow, irrational elements that thus appear in prayer during a war, but let us not be blind to the meaning of this momentous fact: Whenever in national life a time of great stress comes, men, however skeptical, feel the impulse to pray. How natural Hezekiah's cry in the siege of Jerusalem! "O Jehovah, the God of Israel, that sittest above the cherubum, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; thou hast made heaven and earth. Incline thine ear, O Jehovah, and hear the words of Sennacherib, wherewith he hath sent him to defy the living God.... Now therefore, O Jehovah, our God, save thou us, I beseech thee, out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou Jehovah art God alone." II Kings 19:15-19.

Consider how the same tendency to pray in a crisis appears in the European war. Here is a passage from a Scotchman's letter, describing the infidel in his town, who never went to church, but who now sits in the kirk, and is moved to tears when he hears the minister pray for the king's forces, and for the bereaved at home: "It was then that my friend stifled a sob. There was something after all, something greater than cosmic forces, greater than law—with an eye to pity and an arm to save. There was God. My friend's son was with the famous regiment that was swaying to and fro, grappling with destiny. He was helpless— and there was only God to appeal to. There comes an hour in the life when the heart realizes that instinct is mightier far than logic. With us in the parish churches of Scotland the great thing is the sermon. But today it is different; the great thing now is PRAYER." So always a crisis shakes loose the tendency to pray.

The first time the people of the United States were called upon to observe a day of national prayer was May 9, 1798, by proclamation of President John Adams. A controversy had arisen between this country and France and all Americans were called upon to pray for a continuation of peace. In 1815, when the United States was about to make war on Algiers, President Madison proclaimed a day of prayer. During the Civil War three presidential proclamations were issued appointing days of prayer for peace. In 1865 the authorities called upon the people to pray for Lincoln, and in 1881 President Arthur proclaimed a day of prayer to mark the burial of President Garfield. In the autumn of 1914 President Wilson issued his proclamation for prayers on 'Peace Sundays.'

The fact that man never outgrows prayer proclaims to us that he has a knowledge of its intrinsic value, and the act of praying is the very highest energy of which the human soul is capable. And before the tendency to pray all the barriers go down. God knows what is good for us, and for it we pray. What prayer can do must be seen in the prayers. Prayer is religion in act; it is the very sword of saints. This brings us to the point that,

II. Prayer Should Be Prompted By Desire.

Alone of all beings here below, only man prays. Among his moral instincts none is more natural, more universal. The child inclines to it with eager docility. The old man betakes himself thither, as to a refuge against decay and solitude. Prayer comes spontaneously to young lips, which with difficulty stammer out the name of God; and to dying lips, which no longer have strength to pronounce it. Among all nations celebrated or obscure, civilized or barbarous—one meets at every step acts and forms of invocation. Wherever men live, in certain circumstances, at certain times, under the control of certain impressions of the soul, the eyes are raised, the hands clasped, the knees bent to implore aid or render thanks, to adore or appease. With transport or with fear, publicly or in the secrecy of the heart, it is to prayer that man betakes himself, in the last resort, to fill up the void of the soul, or to bear the burdens of his destiny. It is in prayer that he seeks, when all else fails, strength for his weakness, consolation in his grief, hope in his virtue. Since this desire is dominant in this life. As Paul says, we should "desire the greater gifts." Sometimes our prayers are unreal because they do not represent what in our inward hearts we sincerely crave. For example we pray against some evil habit in our lives, while at the same time we refuse to give up the practices that make the habit easy, or the companionships in which the habit thrives. We go through the form of entreating God to save us from our sin, but we do not want to answer enough to burn the bridges across which the sin continually comes. Our petition is a lame and ineffective whim without driving power.

Prayer has failed in some because it has always appeared to them as an obligation rather than a privilege. When they think of it they think of a duty to be done. Contrast with this the glowing words of the sixty-third Psalm. "O God, thou art my God, earnestly will I seek thee:..... My lips shall praise thee.....For thou hast been my help, and in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice. My soul followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me." 63: 3, 5-8. Prayer here is not a burden to be borne, an obligation to be fulfilled, something that is due to God and must be paid. Prayer is a privilege; like friendship and family love and laughter, great books, great music, great art, it is one of life's opportunities to be grasped thankfully and used gladly. The man who misses the deep meanings of prayer has not so much refused an obligation as he has robbed himself of life's supreme privilege—friendship with God. When a man responds to the desires of his inmost soul he will realize the great need and blessing of prayer in his life. He will "pray without ceasing." "Evening and morning and noon will I pray and cry aloud; and he shall hear my voice." "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up." Ps. 5:3. Paul says, expressing the desire of his heart for others, "I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands."

The first missionary tour of Paul and his companions was conceived in the spirit of prayer and furthered by prayer's POWER. We, too have prayed for missions. We have longed and desired for the gospel of Christ to be given to those who know not the saving grace of the Master. Perhaps we have had personal friends on the foreign field, and that fact has quickened our sense of obligation to pray for the cause. In our inmost desires we devotedly set our stakes for the triumph of Christ's cause in the lives of those who live in the dark lands. Our personal service in the church at home strengthens the "home base" to reach out continually for hungry souls. O, that we may greatly desire to break the spell of enchantments that makes the nations drunk with the lust of battle and draw them on as willing tools of death. May we pray for a quiet and steadfast mind, when others clamor for vengeance or aggression. May our sense of justice and our regard for the equal worth of others be strengthened in the name of the Redeemer. Grant to the rulers of nations faith in the possibility of peace through justice, and grant to the common people a new and stern enthusiasm for the cause of peace. Bless the soldiers and sailors for their swift obedience and their willingness to the call of duty, but inspire them none the less with a hatred of war, and may they never for the love of private glory or advancement provoke its coming. May our desires be for a better method of life's advancement to match our strength in a more effective way than in giving our life for a flag. May Christ's banner be our flag for life's endeavors. May we pray the strong Father of all nations to draw the great family together with an increasing sense of our common blood and destiny, that peace may come on earth at last, and the sun may shed its light rejoicing on a holy brotherhood of peoples. May the deep prayers of our life be set upon the things of God. May our hearts be not deceived when we tell him in pious phrases that we wish his blessing. Let us sink down into that human desire, which, when in tune with the infinite, will lift us up into the blissful sunshine of the saints of God, who are pure and holy in the divine love. O, that the cravings of our hearts may be satisfied in that we may desire that portion of his substance which falleth to us, from the great storehouse of God.

III. Prayer Should Be Bounded By Promise.

One of the strongest promises in the New Testament is found in that wonderful "promise chapter," the fourteenth of John, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." If we should then ask, "Lord, teach us to pray," he would teach us the elements of prayer. So numerous are the passages in the Old and New Testaments of promise, one can hardly read a chapter anywhere but what he finds them. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and faint not." Isa. 40:31. "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Phil. 4:6. The man that was swallowed by the great fish, was miraculously kept alive. He was in a strange dark, horrible place. He cried out in his distress and the Lord heard him. His prayer went up unto the Lord, into thine holy temple. Wherever we may be, and in whatever trial we may be involved, the Lord will hear our cry and come to our rescue. If any soul, like Jonah, feels in the very depth of torment, in feeling and apprehension, yet your cry will prevail with heaven, and you shall know that "salvation is of the Lord." A poor man's cry will sound through the telephone of Christ's mediation, in the ear of God, and he will respond to it.

A man who becomes accustomed to prayer, will have a stronger personality than those who do not pray. It was Mary of Scotland who said, "I fear the prayers of John Knox more than an army of ten thousand men." No wonder the promises of God were showered upon this great missionary. His prayers are living in the lives of others yet today. God opens the windows of heaven and pours out his blessing upon those who trust him, and whose faith is planted deeply in his promises. The impressions of a praying mother will live with her children all their life long.

To know that God keeps his promises is like the music that floods our lives, and this brings great comfort to Christians. What a never-failing source of comfort prayer is, will never be known to the individual till he has the experience in his own life. The history of each individual Christian, and the amount of comfort and blessedness he has received could be almost accurately recorded by a statement of his habits of prayer. Children in their disappointments, and youths in making their choices, mothers in their care-worn lives and fathers in their toil, statesmen in their heavy tasks and pastors with their perplexities, Christians of all ages and classes and in every variety of circumstances have tested and attested to the wonderful comforting power there is in prayer. Luther, when he was hard pressed with his toils, said, "I have so much to do that I cannot get along without three hours a day in prayer." General Havelock rose at four, if the hour of marching was at six, rather than miss the precious privilege of communion with God before setting out, because he believed in the promises of God. Matthew Hale says, "If I omit praying and reading God's Word in the morning, nothing goes well all day." These men as have all faithful Christians, found the promise and comfort there is in prayer.

What prayer has been to the individual it has been to the race. Think what volumes of prayer have gone up to God. Its blessing to the race can not be overestimated. It has been the source of untold blessedness and cheer to the people of earth. Could it all be put together, what a bundle of fulfilled promises it would make! Those who have made the true confession are going to have their prayers answered. One of the truest signs of answered prayer, and that a man grows in grace, is, that God increases and man decreases. The nearer we get to him, the more we will think of him, and the less we will think of ourselves. When we get near to God in prayer, how small we look and how large God seems! When Isaiah saw God, he cried, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts."

My friend, if there is anything in your life that is wrong, make up your mind that you are not going to let the sun go down before you confess it through prayer. Ask of the Lord to open the windows of your soul, and "teach you to pray," that the harmful thing may be removed from your life. Then you, like the Psalmist, can say, "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven"..... A fine element here to consider, is restitution. It would be folly for one to ask God to forgive something in our life, if we were unwilling to restore to another that which we owe. If I had five dollars in my pocket that I owed to another, and would not pay him, God would not answer my prayer, "forgive us

A FORTY-ACRE SERMON. BY LULU LINTON

The shimmering haze of midsummer in Oklahoma danced and gleamed on the golden shocks of oats in the big field just outside the west window of the two-roomed shack. The heat seemed to press down upon the roof and surge in at the open door.

Louise Weber laid down her pen and sat gazing out, away and away, across the golden fields, green fields, and brown fields, to where the far-off circle of jack-oak-trees made a blue-green line against the very bluest of skies.

After a time, she glanced back at the letter she had been trying to write. It was pitifully gay, and her descriptions of the wild flowers, wonderful rose-colored sunsets and distant views were so graphic that surely the reader of the letter could see them with the eye of imagination. She read it all over, to be sure it sounded very cheerful, then suddenly a great big tear, seemingly falling from a clear sky, splashed down upon a page, making a blistery blue smudge right in the middle of her gayest paragraph.

"Oh, dear, I'll have to do it all over again," she said wearily. Then suddenly a change of mind brought a look of relief to her face, and taking up her pen she wrote hurriedly:

"There, the secret is out! I couldn't make you believe that anything but a tear blistered this page—and I don't want to. My camouflage letters will do to fool other friends but you, my dear pastoress, to whom I have come with every joy and sorrow since my precious mother went away—you'll have to be my safety valve, for I've got to talk to somebody about this strange, new land. Oh, it is so big, and so different. I think I could learn to endure the week days after a while, for I am usuually so busy all day, and so tired at night that I have to sleep—but the Sundays! How I long to sit in the dear old home church, and listen to the well-trained voices of our choir, and hear my pastor's rich, comforting voice giving me the lesson I am to live by for the coming week. Yes, I remember saying that his sermon about doors of opportunity would last me for a lifetime, but it was easy to be optimistic and enthusiastic before I had tried to unlock any of the stubborn things.

The pitiful little church house here would make you weep to think folks ever tried to worship in such a place. The first Sunday morning out here, I said I'd be willing to walk five miles to attend the home church. The next Sunday morning Malcolm said he would walk ten miles to be there. Since then we alternate, raising it five miles a week. I'm not strong on calculations, but I'd judge that if our longing continues to grow five miles a week, and the walking stays good, you might expect to see us come down the aisle some Sunday morning next year. Now don't worry about me. I'll be as good as I can be, out here; but it's hard work without the usual accessories." She signed her name, sealed the envelope, and kissed the stamp. Of course it was a childish thing to do, but, somehow, she felt that the stamp deserved something for carrying her message to her best friend, so many miles away.

When she had closed her desk and sat idly rocking, the heat seemed more oppressive than before. She wandered restlessly into her combination dining-room and kitchen. Out of the open window she could look over the big forty-acre field that lay between their house and the little church. It has just been stripped of its wonderful crop of alfalfa, and the ground lay sere and brown, with the short dry stalks bristling over it.

"It can't come up, and make the second crop, and the third, that Malcolm is hoping for. And we can't ever build the barn and add the rooms to the shack. It is utterly hopeless, just like life itself," and her voice trailed off into sob.

She was just a girl. A tall slender slip of a girl, with big, brown eyes that were growing to look sad, with hollows under them, where her cheeks had rounded out so prettily. A worry line was chiseling a mark between her arched brows, and there was a fretful droop to the corners of her mouth.

She wandered to the other room and picked up a big monthly magazine. Turning the pages in search of something she had not read, she came upon a page of tempting summer dainties, done in colors. With a little moan she threw the magazine from her. She was so hungry! Oh, to be sure, there was plenty to cook, and her husband and the hay hands consumed vast quantities of green beans and fat pork, potatoes, onions, beets and cornbread. But her artistic soul cried out for things that were dainty and pretty instead of just substantials—lovely iced things, to cool her aching throat.

She had eaten less and less, until instead of being slender, she was in danger of growing angular.

The pump handle gave forth a melancholy squeak, and going to the door she saw the woman who lived in the next shack down the road. She had stopped to get a drink on her way home from a rented cotton patch. She was sun-browned, briar-scratched, stoop-shouldered woman.

"Hot work—choppin' cotton," she volunteered. "You're lucky that he don't make you help. Corn's beginnin' to curl a little today. Won't amount to much if it fires any worse."

"Won't we ever have rain?" Louise asked, glaring resentfully up at the brazen blue sky, where no hint of a cloud appeared.

"Oh, yes, it'll rain," was the good-natured reply. "It always has rained—at times. Seems like things'll get to the very worst, and then it'll up and rain and revive 'em all up again. 'Taint no use to worry. It don't bring the rain no quicker."

She went on down the road, her bare ankles showing brown and dusty above a pair of flat slippers.

But another hand was on the squeaky pump handle, a wee brawn hand of a little girl who had chopped cotton all afternoon beside her stoop-shouldered mother. She was an elfish-looking child, with big gray eyes and straight black hair, cut off squarely around her head. When it fell in her eyes she gave her head a toss to put it back in place. She lingered after drinking, for she was a talkative little soul.

"Whyn't you ever come to our Sunday school?" she asked.

"Do you have a Sunday school?" Louise Weber asked in surprise.

"Well, we have some. Me and three other girls went every Sunday for a long time, but nobody ever teached us, and two of 'm quit, but Florrie and me still goes. We like to go and just sit there on Sunday. Seems like it is dif'rent from other houses somehow. It makes you feel resteder. Florrie and me wondered if you'd teach us, and Florrie asked me to ask you today, so you'd have time to think up a nice story to tell us.

"Seems like if we had something to think about all week, it wouldn't be such hard work choppin' cotton. The lady that stayed at the Brant farm last summer told us nice stories, and she was just an old maid, and not pretty like you. I'll go over tonight to tell Florrie I've asked you, and maybe we can get the other two back. Mom will go, and old Mr. Steeples. When he goes we can have a prayer. It's always the same one, but Mom says that don't hurt, for it's a real good one. I wish your man would go, too. I think I could get mine and Florrie's brothers to go if he'd teach 'em, for they like the way he takes holt on a farm. Some folks that come out here are such tenderfect. Well, I got to be going on."

She slipped through the wire fence and out past the jack-oak-trees before Louise had found her voice to refuse the request. And, after all, did she want to refuse it, the favor asked by this work-worn woman child with the hard years of life before her, asking only for something different to think about, to lighten her burden?

"Maybe it's one of those doors," Louise said, solemnly. "It seems to need oil on its rusty hinges, but it's up to me to oil it—and push!"

Somehow the air seemed cleard, and the heat less oppressive as Louise went about her evening tasks; or was it just because she had something different to think about,

She had taught a class in her dear home church, and she was going over in her mind some of the stories she had told very well indeed. She did not broach the subject of Sunday to her husband when he first came in, for he seemed unusually tired. He seldom complained of the things that that vexed him, but this had been a trying day.

"The corn is firing, and I never saw weeds grow so fast in my life as they have grown in the cotton while we were busy with that alfalfa. The mules got out of that upper pasture today, and one of them didn't come back. We may have to hunt miles for him. Everything has gone wrong." He added whimsically: "If you'd just throw the skillet at me, and I'd go off on a drunk, it would make a grand climax."

"I've got a more unusual one than that, for this country, if you can just postpone your climax for a few days," she answered mischievously. "We're going to Sunday school on Sunday morning!"

"Where?"

"Right down the road, to the church that lies nearest," was the calm reply. He offered no objections, being glad of anything that would lift that worry line from the fair face opposite.

For the next three or four days Louise forgot to stand at the window and compare life to the sere brown field which lay between her home and the church, so she did not note its changing aspect.

On Sunday morning they did not lie abed late, as had been their custom, but were up and dressed, in clean, second best clothing, which somehow seemed almost too good, and were down at the church as soon as they saw that the windows were raised.

It was an unusual service for both of them. Only a handful were present, but the number exceeded any Sunday for months, for Maggie's little brown feet had carried the word to all she had time to reach, that the two new folks had promised to come.

A sun-browned man who had worked in the Weber's hayfield acted as superintendent, and a tired-looking little woman played the hymns as well as she could, on the wheezy old organ. Louise took her little class to one corner of the church, and told her story so well that the eager little faces brightened. Old Mr. Steeples prayed his one prayer, and when he repeated the precious promise that where two or three gathered together there was the blessed assurance of his presence in their midst, Louise knew suddenly why the house was different from other houses, and why Maggie felt rested after sitting in the sacred little place. She turned her tear-dimmed eyes toward the open window near which she was sitting, and when her tears had cleared away she saw something that caused her heart to quicken its throbs. The brown, sere fields had changed! All over its dry brown reaches the fresh green was springing up! Without moisture, without shade, out there under the pitiless, burning sun, it was smiling up at her, tender and sweet, as if it had had all the helps and encouragement in the world. No sermon she had ever listened to had ever touched her heart like this.

She had said it over and over, bitterly, that the field was like life was going to be—now she must take up its challenge, and make her life like the brave old field! All the sullen, bitter feeling toward this queer, new land seemed to slink away in shame before this big, beautiful sermon.

"You'll come all the time," Florrie was saying, timidly, touching the hand of her teacher.

"Yes, dear, all the time," Louise promised.

"And our brothers will come, if your man will teach 'em. They like him, 'cause he ain't no dude. He works. D'you reckon he will come all the time?"

"Yes, he will come all the time, too," Louise promised, with laughing eyes.

As they left the little church, where they had lingered in neighborly fashion after the services, dark clouds were rolling up, and just after noon a violent wind swept the country, bending the jack-oaks in the yard until their branches beat against the low roof, and the small house quivered and strained at its foundations. Then a torrent of rain poured upon the thirsty earth.

In an hour it had all passed by, and the sun was shining. The breeze, pure and rain-washed, swept through the windows, and Louise left her dishes to stand at the door, marveling at the wonderful change.

"Your state is just like a spoiled child," she said laughingly, "with its hot, sullen, unreasonable temper and its sudden tantrums. Then it comes up sweet and smiling like this, and you have to forgive it." She always called it "Your state," when she referred to their new location, for it had not been the land of her choice.

"And what about your state, my lady," he answered quickly. "She's a hundred years old; how do you account for her faults and failings?" Louise laughed mischievously. "Oh, she is old enough to be just a little childish. You can always make allowances for the foibles of a dear, refined old lady. But Malcolm, did you ever see such a change as the rain has wrought? It seems as if the fields were really smiling!" His eyes grew moist as he answered:

"Maybe it is the rain, but do you know it seemed to me that the light all over our acres was reflected from your face."

Malcolm did not pay trivial compliments, and she turned quickly, resolved to keep the light shining over those acres, if this true-hearted fellow had missed the sunshine of her smile.

The next day she wrote another hurried letter to her beloved pastoress, back home. She told all about their Sunday that had been different, and she added, reverently: "Tell my dear pastor that there wasn't any one in the little pulpit, and I don't just know the text, but I had the biggest sermon of my life—there was forty acres of it— and I suddenly saw what it meant to do your very best, without the usual accessories."—Sunday School Times.

The Sunday School

The Educative Process in Religion

This book by Dr. L. L. Garber is being heartily endorsed by our leading workers. The reader is requested to note the following:

Represents the Best In Scholarship

As Sunday school workers of the Brethren church we should be proud of the fact that we have a teacher training book written by one of our number. Having carefully read this book in manuscript, I hereby give it my hearty endorsement and bespeak for it a universal use in teacher training classes by our Sunday schools. The book represents the best in scholarship and is written in such a lucid style as to be easily comprehended. Professor Garber introduces illustrations in his own unique way in such a manner as to illumine every page. To be able to convey to the reader in an accurate way all that the author wishes to convey is the highest art of any writer. This Professor Garber has done in his book.

A trial of this book in your teacher training classes will bring your most hearty commendation.

REVIEW OF

We have just received a telegram from J. F. Watson, moderator of the Pennsylvania conference that the date of the meeting had been postponed. We suppose it is on account of the great epidemic that is passing over the country. We may receive more definite news before the paper goes to press and may be able to give out to the church the real state of the case. The city of Ashland is in the grip of the "grippe" at this writing with the public schools closed and business greatly handicapped. There has been only slight illness among the force of workers in the Publishing House, but we are not ready to boast lest calamity befall us.

As the churches in four conference districts have been preparing for their district conferences which are meeting this week, the pastors have neglected reporting their work and thus this number of the Evangelist is somewhat short in the matter of church news; but we trust after the conferences are over the pastors and churches will get back to their work in regular form once more, and will keep our readers informed of the progress the work is making.

George S. Baer reports a most highly appreciated series of special meetings conducted by Dr. J. Allen Miller in the Louisville, Ohio, church the latter part of August. These meetings were educational rather than evangelistic and proved of special help to the people who came to hear Dr. Miller's teaching. It would be well if every church could annually provide its members a series of educational Bible lectures such as Dr. Miller can give.

Miss Mary Pence writes interestingly and at some length of the work as it is at Telford, Tennessee. Though without a pastor for some time these workers have not been greatly discouraged but have conducted such services as they could with the help of the Sunday school and the prayer meeting and the meetings of the S. S. C. E. It seems that new life has come to the Telford church in some way. Last week Brother Allen wrote of his visit to this place and this week we have letters from Miss Pence and Willis E. Ronk, the latter having served this church as pastor for two years and was glad to visit these people once again.

A. E. Thomas has just closed a series of meetings at Williamstown, Ohio. We have had no report as to the accessions, if any were received into the church but we have had a report of the splendid sermons preached by Brother Thomas and of the high appreciation in which his labors are held by the people of Williamstown. From all indications it seems that more than usual efforts will have to be made during the coming winter to keep the work of the church up to any satisfactory degree of efficiency.

The great mistake made by many boys in leaving school before their high school course has been completed has been made clear during the past two weeks as a large number of young men have been refused entrance into the Training Corps of Ashland College because of their lack of a sufficient number of High School credits.

This week our readers are favored with a sermon by brother W. R. Deeter, who has served the Gretna and Williamstown churches the past two years. Brother Deeter is still doing work in Ashland to better prepare himself for the work he has felt called to do. At the present time he is not doing any pastoral work.

A request has been received from Roy S. Brumbaugh to change his address from Roann, Indiana, to Portis, Kansas, so we take it for granted that he has arranged to become pastor of that church. Brother Brumbaugh will find a field of opportunity here that will be somewhat different from his former charges in Pennsylvania and Indiana, but it will be the same old gospel story whether preached among the mountains or upon the prairies.

George S. Baer is now engaged in a series of meetings with the North Georgetown, Ohio, church and we hope to hear good reports from this meeting after it comes to a close.

This week we expect to begin work on the Conference Minutes and Brethren Annual. We try to make each yearly edition of this Church Year Book a little better and a little more accurate than the last one, but in order to do this we must have the cooperation of all the pastors and auxiliary societies and organizations of the church. We desire to make it as complete as possible. If any pastor or minister has changed his address during the year notify us of that change. We never did know as much as a man really ought to know so it should not be expected that we know every change in address that is made by our pastors in a year's time. If you want to be listed correctly in the Annual SEND us your correct address, and if you want your street address, if you live in a large city, send that. The street address is not necessary in a city of less than ten thousand inhabitants. A Brethren pastor that can not make enough noise in a city of ten thousand to make himself heard by all the postal clerks in the office isn't earning his salary. If through an error your name was omitted from the list last year, notify us of that fact, for we use the old list for copy in the new, making only such changes as are given to us.

A word to the conference officers needs to be spoken here. We have sent the lists of churches and their pastors as they appeared in the Annual last year to district conference officers for revision and we expect them to come back to us correct in every item. We do not know what small congregations may have gone out of existence or just where every preacher in a district is preaching. You must furnish us this information to make our year book correct. And the more nearly complete the reports are and the more accurate the records the more valuable will be the booklet and the more readily will it sell.

Brother Paul Miller gives a splendid report of the Spokane work and makes a strong appeal for co-operation on the part of the brotherhood.

Brother Beachler has had unusual experiences in his College Endowment campaign since his last report, but he is steadily going forward. He says some weeks ago we made him say he was treated with fine hospitality in one of the homes of the Jones' Mills congregation when he said all of the homes. We looked up his original report which he had written with a pen that week and it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to determine what he did say. Then for fear Brother Ed of Uniontown should die of apoplexy he asks us to state that the amount in prospect at Uniontown is $1,900 and not $12,900. The corrections are made and no harm done.

Around the Editor's Table

Government Orders

Two weeks ago we announced in these pages that the War Board had notified all publishers that if they want to be permitted the use of paper for their publications they must cut off their mailing lists all UNPAID subscriptions. We set about the task of notifying all delinquent subscribers and we believe with possibly a few exceptions we succeeded in doing so. We also stated two weeks ago that those who had been notified but who failed to renew their subscription in two weeks would be cut off from our list.

We regret very much to do this both for the sake of our subscribers as well as for our own sake, but ORDERS are ORDERS when they come from the military department of the United States, and in obedience to these orders we have gone over our whole mailing list and have removed the names of those who have not made payment. It nearly broke our heart to do it, but there is no alternative. We hope no one will take offense and that many if not all will have it in their hearts to renew at once.

This should be done for at least two reasons: first of all because in these distressing times the Publishing House needs every subscription it can possibly hold to tide it through the year that is before us; and in the second place there was never a time in the history of the Brethren church when its members needed to keep themselves informed as to the work and progress of the church, and to keep in touch with the spiritual forces of the world. So we implore every pastor in the brotherhood to urge from pulpit and in private conversation his people to be prompt in renewing their subscriptions.

Just now the American people are in the midst of the greatest Liberty Loan drive ever engaged in by any nation and the people are responding in a most remarkable manner. While we would not have the people give any less support to the government than they are, we would have them remain loyal to their church and its institutions as well. The church fills as important a place in the life of America today as it ever did and it must not fail in this time of crisis.

Master or Mastered

Men sometimes boast of being their own master, but it is a significant fact that many men who boast loudest about being masters of themselves are the most abject slaves.

At the time when Jesus said to his disciples, "If the Son shall make you free you shall be free indeed," the Jews declared, "We have never been in bondage to any man," though at that very moment they were in practical political bondage to Rome and they had been in bondage to sin and superstition and tradition for many years.

Man is related in many ways to the work of the world and whether he is the master of his world or the world is master of him depends almost entirely on the way he meets his obligations and tasks. We believe it was a part of God's original plan that man should be master of the world rather than that the world should become the master of man. One of the ways by which man becomes a slave rather than a master is the way of procrastination.

Some one has said, "Today's task left until tomorrow is master instead of mastered." This may be one of the reasons that the work of evangelizing the world is so difficult; the task has been too long delayed. But it can not be expected that the task will grow any lighter through any further delay, and it is indeed urgent that the delay be no longer prolonged; it is now high time that man should be master of the situation rather than the situation shall longer be master of man.

The Sin of Neglect

It is not necessary that one should commit some gross crime or that one should violate outright one of the great commandments of God in order to become a sinner. In the days of the Jewish Patriarchs sins of omission were reckoned with as well as sins of commission, but I am not so sure we give such sins the attention we should. I am inclined to believe that one of the most common as well as one of the most harmful sins of modern life is a sin of omission or neglect. One is able to do some good thing but neglects to do it and thus it becomes a sin to him.

When the apostle Paul wrote to his spiritual son he said, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee." These same words could well be applied to thousands of people today, especially to thousands of professed Christians who are doing no active service for their professed Lord and Master. It is not enough that one should profess faith in the name of the Lord, there should be the following after him, the doing the work that he appointed his followers to do.

While there is much that is beautiful in the parable of the talents, yet so great a shadow of sadness hangs over it because of the sin of one unfaithful servant that the beauty is sadly marred. We like to read about the efforts of the two men of faith and courage who did the best they could and who traded with their Lord's money with more or less success. We rejoice that their faithfulness brought them their reward. We like to have men commended for faithful performance of duty. But the story ends sadly because one man was a neglectful man; he may have felt that it was not worthwhile to make any effort with the meager means he had at hand and so he "neglected the gift that was within," and in this neglect wrought his own ruin. The Lord's judgment pronounced upon this neglectful and lazy servant may seem unduly harsh, but it only goes to show how highly the Lord values opportunity however small and how he measures accountability by the manner in which one accepts responsibility. Man is not judged by the things he hath not, but by the things which he hath, and if a man chooses to neglect to use the things that he hath he should not be surprised when such things are taken from him.

Fruit Bearing

A tree is planted in one's garden or orchard for one purpose only and that is that it shall bear fruit. Even a tree that has no other useful purpose than to ward off the sun's hot rays from one's house is a fruit bearing tree. It may not bear edible fruit, but if it accomplishes that purpose for which it was planted it is bearing fruit. The fruit of a shade tree is shade even as the fruit of an apple tree is apples. Fruit of its kind in its proper season is all that can be asked of tree or man, but it is somewhat more difficult to determine the kind of fruit a man's life should bear than it is of a tree; and yet, the Lord and the Apostles make it sufficiently clear in regard to what one's life should be that there need be no hesitancy in determining just what life should mean after all. Especially is this true of the Christian life.

In different epistles of the Apostle we have different aspects of the nature of this fruit defined; it is righteousness, light, the Spirit, the lips, work, etc. There is enough variety about it to break up all monotony that otherwise might be connected with it. Not many men are content to have only one kind of fruit planted in an orchard. They may specialize with apples or pears or plums, but to make the work interesting some fruit of each kind suitable to the climate and soil is desired, and the same is true of the Christian life. There are different aspects of life that call out the different kinds of fruit mentioned by the New Testament writers.

In an orchard some fruit may be sweet and some may be sour while some is only sub-acid so that individual tastes may be gratified; the fruit of the Christian life is also varied; some is called peaceable, some beautiful, some continuous—everbearing. This fruit bearing all has a purpose and one of the purposes is to reveal the fact that the Christian life exists. It is really the proof of life.

Most people who have fruit bearing trees in garden or orchard like to measure the fruit they bear and to tell the neighbors about it. Some years ago we knew of one orchard in the west that bore six thousand bushels of Ben Davis apples. Of course while the owner would not boast much about the kind of apples he had he could point with pride to the quantity his orchard produced. And even in the Christian life quantity has a great deal to do and in these days of "quantity production" in the industrial world it has still more to do. In the New Testament various expressions are used to indicate in a measure how much fruit we are to bear. We read of "a hundred fold," "much fruit," "more fruit," "abounding fruit," and then in solemn contrast to this in John 15:2 we have mentioned "no fruit."

From the attention given to the subject of fruit bearing by Jesus we are justified in believing that he is greatly concerned about the fruitfulness of our lives and that he is greatly disappointed when he comes year after year and finds "no fruit."

Items Gleaned from The Missionary Review of the World

An Army and Navy Church

The Baptist Union Council of Great Britain and Ireland has decided to form a Baptist Army and Navy church, from which men can be transferred at the close of the war to churches in their respective home districts. Forms of application and certificates of membership have been prepared and sent to Baptist chaplains. The constitution provides that the church shall include those serving in the forces at home or abroad who are already members of a Baptist church and others who desire to become members on the basis of a declaration of repentance towards God, of faith in Jesus Christ, and a desire to follow him and to do his will. Membership will be open to any candidates satisfying this requirement, though precluded by circumstances or conviction from making a profession of faith by bautism. A register will be kept of all who desire baptism as soon as opportunity permits.

Bibles by the Million

The World's Sunday School Association has supplied, from the opening of the war in 1914 to the end of 1917, to the soldiers on both sides, approximately 1,500,000 Bibles, Testaments and portions.

Since August, 1914, the British and Foreign Bible Society has distributed, including several hundred thousand which the American Bible Society supplied them, over 7,000,000 Bibles, Testaments and portions, not only among the troops of the British Empire and her allies, but also among their foes, and in the ranks of their bitterest enemies. The National Bible Society of Scotland has circulated over 3,000,000 scriptures among the men of war since August, 1914.

Since America entered the war the American Bible Society has issued, in special bindings for the army and navy, 2,231,81 Bibles, Testaments and portions. This has meant an average output of over a thousand volumes every working hour, of every working day, during the twelve months.

Soldier Comment on Camp Life

In order to reassure those who are anxious about moral conditions in the camps, the pastor of the Dudley Street Baptist church, Boston, gives the following quotations from two among several letters he has received:

"From a Southern camp: I want you to know that I am keeping up my Bible-study, prayer and church attendance. The men of my battery are a lot of fine, clean moral fellows. I don't know just what would happen to a man who brought disgrace upon his fellows by his actions. We are standing for the best things. I do not find the rottenness in the army I expected to discover. Men in the army, the same as in civilian life, find companionship according to their desires. If a fellow wants rottenness he can find those who will rot with him; if he wants clean living, he will find those who would die before they would stain their souls or sacrifice their morals."

From one in the Aviation Service: "The fellows in my corps are a very clean lot, and very easy to get along with. I am delighted to learn that the moral conditions incidental to army life are far better than I was led to suppose by what I had heard and read previous to my enlistment. The men with whom I am associated come from some of the best homes of our country; and while some fellows use a good deal of profanity, still I think we average as high in morality as any bunch of fellows to be found in civilian life."—C. E. World.

Southern Camp Pastors

Members of the Methodist Episcopal church South, in the state of Texas, have appropriated $70,000 for the work of camp pastors. Thirteen thousand dollars has been raised for this same purpose in Virginia, according to Bishop Walter R. Lambuth, chairman of the War Work Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This money will be used for the salaries of camp pastors and for the erection of tabernacles outside the camps. Already six tabernacles have been erected in southern camp communities and eighteen camp pastors are working among the various cantonments. These camp pastors cooperate with the Y. M. C. A and Red Cross, so that there will be no duplication of effort. "Distinctive evangelistic work is also being accomplished by these pastors," said Bishop Lambuth.

Training School for Chaplains

Training schools for chaplains have been established at several points—one at Fortress Monroe, Va., another in Texas and one at Louisville, Ky.

The Training School for Chaplains conducted by Maj. Alfred A. Pruden, a chaplain of the Coast Artillery Corps, at Camp Taylor, is modeled on the lines of the Reserve Officers' Training School. Stress is laid upon military affairs rather than upon theological instruction. All candidates have had the necessary theological education. Lectures are given to the chaplains on international law, military law; and military rules and regulations, and conferences are held under the direction of experienced chaplains on general subjects connected with their work. In addition to the special instruction there have been hold drills both in marching and in horsemanship.

According to the Federal Council of Churches, the faculty of the training school includes representatives from the Episcopal church, the Methodist Episcopal, the Baptist and the Roman Catholic. Among the candidates are members of at least three Roman Catholic orders and several Protestant denominations, all working and conferring together.

The course covers a period of five weeks and during instruction the candidates receive salary and wear the uniform of a private o the United States Army.

Facts Worth Quoting

(Selected from the Missionary Review of the World for September.)

The Christian natives of the islands of Aniwa in the New Hebrides, which was Dr. John G. Paton's special field, not only pay the salaries of all their teachers but contribute regularly for the mission hospitals and other objects outside the islands.

The heathen population of the New Hebrides is steadily decreasing; the Christian population is actually increasing in many places. The death rate decreases with the advance of Christianity in any section.

The John D. Wells School in Seoul is one of the missionary institutions giving their students valuable training in Korean industries and at the same time assisting the boys in the expenses of their education.

Paraguay, a country nearly as large as Spain, and with a percentage of illiteracy of over sixty, is practically without any organized missionary work. It deserves to be called "the neglected land of the Neglected Continent."

With every Oriental woman student in America the Young Women's Christian Association maintains friendly relations, through visits from a special secretary, invitations to summer conferences, and in other ways.

In twelve cities in China where Sherwood Eddy recently held his remarkable series of meetings, large bodies of Chinese Christians had been prepered to do personal work, and the selected non-Christians who were brought to the meetings and there signed decision cards are now being trained in Bible classes for church membership.

Churches representing ten different Presbyterian bodies at work in China have united to organize one General Assembly for China, and representatives of the British and American Congregational missions are to take their place in the organization.

One of the most remarkable instances of Christian internationalism which the war has produced is the sending of a deputation to the Allied armies at various points in Europe by the Young Men's Christian Association of Japan.

The present King of Siam is disregarding the guarantees of religious liberty established by the late king, his father, and in many ways is promoting Buddhism. In both Siam and Ceylon Buddhism is now being emphasized as the national, and Christianity as a foreign, religion.

About 400 camp pastors, representing the leading Protestant denominations and serving the various training camps throughout the country, are rendering valuable service in connecting the men in camps with the churches in the surrounding communities.

Though the total membership of the Christian church of all branches in Japan is only about 300,000—half of them being Protestants—a Japanese educator has expressed the opinion that there are in all Japan 1,000,000 people who follow Christ in their hearts.

The Salvation Army in Germany and Austria has been wiped out by an order of the Kaiser, all the real estate and other property belonging to the organization having been confiscated months ago. Over 100,000 Salvationists are fighting in the Allied armies.

A BIRTHDAY IN A WINDMILL

By Felicia B. Clark

Maria woke up early in the morning and heard the big wings of the windmill creaking dolefully. Her parents lived in the mill, by the side of the canals in Holland. Every time the great wings moved, grain was ground into flour. The peasants and farmers for many miles around in the flat green fields divided by tiny streams instead of fences, brought their wheat and rye here to be made into flour.

The storm beat about the windmill the machinery creaked and Maria was greatly disappointed. It was a shame that today, of all days in the year, the rain should come! To be sure, there were not many days when it did not either rain in Holland, or else there was a mist.

Maria went to the window at nine o'clock and looked out.

"It's my birthday," she said gloomily, "and now there's to be no picnic or anything!"

"I wouldn't cry about it," said her mother, clattering around the room in her big wooden shoes. She wore a brown dress, very much patched and a head-dress like a white night cap. "I see the girls coming now."

Maria clapped her hands with delight, as she watched Bertha and Magda walking over the sand dunes. After all, they would have a party, even if the sun did not shine.

The two girls threw off their dripping oilskin hoods and coats. They were twins and looked exactly alike, with flaxen hair in flat braids over their heads and gowns that fell to their feet, clad in wooden shoes, which they exchanged for slippers taken from a big linen bag.

Bertha carried a package, and when Maria opened it she found a large cake made of raisin bread. On the icing were the letters of her own name, Maria.

"But where shall we eat it?" asked the "birthday girl" in despair, for the rain beat worse than before on the window panes.

The three forgot how stormy the weather was when they began to play with the dolls, which were much handsomer than any one would have thought to find in a windmill. It was only on festival days, like birthdays and Christmas that Maria was allowed to play with these two dolls which had belonged to her grandmother and had been bought in Amsterdam.

"Now, your birthday feast is ready," the mother said, leading the girls into a very large room that had five walls and five windows. It was just the shape of the windmill.

"Oh!" exclaimed Maria.

And "Oh!" exclaimed Bertha and Magda in just the same tone of voice, with blue eyes round and big, and exactly alike.

On the walls were blue Delft plates and platters—all very old. The table was set with the best things and there were some cherry blossoms that father had gone out into the storm to gather.

Best of all, in the very center of the table was the cake that Bertha had carried so carefully through the rain. Around it were eleven candles, all lighted.

"It looks like a Christmas tree!" Magda said and that made every one laugh and feel comfortable.

How jolly it was to sit around the table and eat such good things! The mother could never tell Bertha and Magda apart and called each by the other's name, creating a perfect gale of merriment.

When the candles had burned down, Maria cut the cake, a big slice for each and just then, father came in for his share. They had some raspberry shrub in small glasses that were said to have been brought from Venice by some great grandfather who was a sea-captain. They were so precious that Maria was afraid to touch them for fear they would break. Only on very special occasions were those quaintly formed, rose-colored glasses used; never before on Maria's birthday.

When father stood up and said, "We wish our dear Maria much health and happiness and God's blessing throughout her life," in the strange foreign way, the "birthday girl" turned red. Everybody stood up around her and touched their glasses full of raspberry shrub to hers and said all sorts of nice things. Maria was beginning to realize that she was no longer a really little girl, because she was now eleven years old, going on twelve.

Days are short in Holland even in the spring so Bertha and Magda put on their oilskins, and after curtseying to Maria's mother went home.

Maria flung the door wide open and let a ray of sunshine in that peeped between the clouds.

"It was nicer than a picnic," she cried, flinging her arms around her mother's neck. "I thank you so much, dear Mamma. After all, I suppose people can be happy in storms as well as sunshine."

And then the big wings on the windmill waved from side to side and creaked as if they were saying: "Very true, Maria, very true."—American Messenger.

WHEN FLORA PROMISED

By Cora S. Day

Elsie stopped in the door of the living room and looked the surprise that she felt. She had expected to find no one there, for Mrs. Allen had gone out; but there, settled cosily in an easy chair with a book, was her sister Flora.

"Why, Flora!" Elsie began. "I thought you had gone over to Elizabeth's long ago! Didn't you say last night that you and Elizabeth were going this afternoon to see the new girl in your Sunday school class?"

Flora glanced up absently, her smile a bit vague. "Oh, I believe I did sort of promise I'd go." She yawned. "But I'm so interested in this story and the book's due at the library tomorrow. I'd rather finish it this afternoon than see a dozen new girls. Anyway, Elizabeth won't mind waiting until tomorrow to go, if I explain; and the girl doesn't know anything about it, so it will be all the same to her."

"She has lived here three weeks, and been in your class every Sunday since she came," Elsie said quietly. "I am afraid she will think you are not very sociable girls here in her new home town, if they are all as slow as you and Elizabeth.

But Flora had plunged eagerly into her story again and made no reply; so Elsie said nothing further. She knew Flora would resent or ignore any additional urging of her duty to keep her promise. It was not the first time Flora had broken a promise, when it pleased her whim or suited her convenience for the time being to do so. Elsie was sorry to see this one as lightly set aside as many others had been.

Estelle Bayard, the newcomer, had enrolled in their Sunday school as she had just reminded Flora, promptly upon her arrival in the village as a resident, and had been assigned to the class nearest her age, in which Flora and Elizabeth were members. Elsie, who was older and teaching a class of small boys, was glad to see a new member added to the little village school. She had liked the new girl's appearance and manner and had been pleased at the prospect of closer acquaintance with her for Flora.

"But I'm afraid she will please herself about getting acquainted or going to see Estelle, promise or no promise," Elsie thought regretfuly, and went about her own affairs.

The afternoon passed. Flora finished her story just before twilight. She laid the book aside and sprang up with sudden animation.

"I'm going down to Elizabeth's just for a minute," she announced, getting her hat and hailing Elsie from the hall on her way out. "I want to get a new piece of music that she said I might have to try over." Some prodding of memory—or was it conscience?—

made her add: "We will not have time to go to see Estelle now. I'll ask Beth if she can go there tomorrow." Away she went, brisk and alert enough when she was intent upon her own plans and pleasure. Elsie looked after her with a knowing little smile.

Flora is going to find out some day that she can not always suit herself regardless of other folks' plans or wishes," she thought. "Elizabeth only makes her worse by giving in to her without a murmur whenever Flora pleases to upset any of their settled plans. I wish she would stand up for her rights and make Flora keep her promises after she makes them so freely. Only, I suspect they wouldn't stay chums long, then."

Flora hurried on her way without stopping, until she reached the last crossing between her home and that of her friend. There she had to halt and wait for a big motor truck to pass. It was heavily loaded and going at a rapid pace; the driver no doubt anxious to get home before dark. As it swung round the corner Flora caught her breath sharply—for the huge vehicle skidded as it struck a treacherous muddy spot.

The gasp ended in a scream at sight of what happened so quickly that she could scarcely believe her own eyes. A little runabout had turned the corner coming toward the truck. As the big truck slipped, the little car made a frantic effort to dodge it, failed and struck it with a crash that overturned the lighter car and brought startled hearers running in every direction. Of the two people rescued from the badly wrecked car, the man who had been driving was but slightly cut and bruised; the young girl with him was taken from beneath the overturned car unconscious, and carried home in a serious condition. And Flora, standing as if rooted to the spot, looking on with horrified eyes, saw that the man was Mr. Bayard and the girl Estelle, his only daughter.

Flora never quite remembered going on to Elizabeth's home, nor how she told the story. She never forgot how Elizabeth looked at her and said when it was told: "If we had gone to see her this afternoon as we had planned, that would not have happened. For mother called on Mrs. Bayard this afternoon and she was telling her that Mr. Bayard was coming home early to take Estelle out in the car because she was so lonely and nervous and unhappy. Mrs. Bayard explained that Estelle was quite ill just before they moved here, and hasn't yet got back her strength and spirits. She has been fretting, too, because none of us girls came to see her and get acquainted. And now—isn't it too dreadful, to think we—"

Flora stopped her with a tragic little gesture. "It is my fault, not yours," she said, facing the truth squarely at last. "If I had come as I promised, you would have gone with me no matter what else had to wait. You have always kept your part of our plans. I am the one who broke them for any little thing. I've been selfish and careless and untruthful in word and deed." The confession was almost tearful.

"But you didn't know—you didn't think" —Elizabeth began sympathetically.

"I know now. I'll never forget again. I'll think of that dreadful scene—that poor girl —every time I am tempted to break a promise. I'm going to do better. I wish I had begun sooner."

The anxious days of uncertainty over Estelle's chances for recovery—days that lengthened into weeks—helped Flora to remember and grow strong in her good resolve. Then the injured girl began to come slowly back to health and strength; and when she became able to see visitors, she had no more cause to complain that her new girl neighbors were not friendly. Elizabeth and Flora became her close friends. "I've such a lot of broken promises to make up for, and poor Estelle was the chief victim of my worst fault; I feel as if I couldn't ever be half nice enough to her," Flora confided to Elizabeth once. "Do you really think I've improved any in the promise line?"

"You really have," Elizabeth said with a laugh, yet there was a note of real earnestness and satisfaction in the light reply "Once upon a time when Flora promised, I always wondered whether she meant it. When Flora makes a promise now, I know it is as good as done."—Selected.

Good Citizenship Sunday

For seven years now Christian Endeavor has promoted the observance of Good Citizenship Sunday, the date being the third Sunday of October. But the Endeavorers have not thought of taking a sabbatical rest. On the contrary, extended efforts are being made to have the most general and enthusiastic observance in the history of the movement.

Special attention will be given to the mobilization of the Christian Endeavor Army of Universal Patriotic Service. As these suggive words indicate the aim is to enroll all Endeavorers in one or more kinds of patriotic effort open to them as Christians who desire to promote the highest interest of the nation. The Endeavorer may pledge himself to any one of eight lines of patriotic activity, such as, Conservation, Production, Relief Work, Christian Conduct. In a word he promises to do his best in helping to "keep the home fires burning." The aim is to enroll one million of such people. The Brethren Union should supply 2,500 or 3,000. Entire societies may be enrolled by a standing vote. This will enable the society to qualify on Point 5 of our Four-Year Challenge, the words "Army of Universal Patriotic Service" having been substituted for "Peace Advocates."

Then the day may be used to stress civic responsibilities of immediate urgency. In some states, Ohio for example, there is a Prohibition Campaign which calls for wholehearted support. Make very clear the duty of the society in furnishing speakers, supplying singers and providing personal workers, all of which will help to produce the needed number of votes of the right kind. Continue, as the need demands, to inform state and National representatives of your wishes respecting nation-wide prohibition. Some are willing to allow prohibition while continuing the war for Democracy, but they would have us to discontinue the war for prohibition. Endeavorers must see that it is both continued and won. Like King Autocracy, King Alcohol must be forced to capitulate on the terms of unconditional surrender. Once the law is enacted it will have to be enforced. This calls for the election of duty-performing officials, many of whom may be chosen in the November elections. The day is full of possibilities for the stimulation of Christian citizensip, enthusiasm and service. Develop them to the utmost.

Our New Citizenship Superintendent

When the present superintendent of the Citizenship Department came to Ashland several years ago, some one inquired as to his fitness for an office in the college society. Immediately another replied, he has been an active Endeavorer. Subsequent events amply testified to the truth of the statement. Having recognized him as a dependable worker his fellow students were always glad to entrust him with responsible positions. A similar attitude has prevailed among his colleagues in church work. In his pastoral relations he has been generally known as a young people's pastor.

Christian Endeavor, therefore, claims Brother Whitted not only as one of its contributions to the church, but as one of its leaders. We are very happy in the privilege of welcoming him into the leadership of our National Union, and earnestly ask all Endeavorers to give him their undivided support in promoting the interests of the Citizenship department.

Endeavorers Serving As Citizens

We are living in a peculiar day. A day of great opportunity. A day of great responsibility. A day in which the call to serve is stronger than ever before in the history of our country. Thus it is a day when the word citizen means more than it ever meant. To bring the young of the land to a realization of this fact is our great task. With this enormous task confronting us we have designated Sunday, October 20 as Good Citizenship Sunday.

Since the beginning of the great world strife, and particularly since we have been drawn into this conflict to lend our aid in protecting humanity and right, our minds have been largely turned toward patriotism. We have shown our love for the cause of humanity and justice and to the country whose laws have protected us in many ways, in the lavish giving of our wealth, in many different kinds of service and even to the greatest sacrifice of all, the surrender of the very best of our manhood to shed, if needs be, their blood.

This has all been done so willingly. Shall this love continue? Shall this whole-souled service be forth coming? We answer every one it shall. In view of this fact we have deemed it wise to set aside Goal 5 in our Christian Endeavor Challenge and insert in its place a new goal having for its name, "The Universal Army of Patriotic Service." The figures in the challenge remain the same, which means we are asking for an army 3,500 strong from the ranks of our Endeavorers. This goal will undoubtedly be easily reached, as every true Christian Endeavorer should be a true Christian patriot.

There are many ways in which we can be of great service in these days when there is such dire need. Here is how the Endeavorers of one city served. "The interest that the Endeavorers of Glasgow, Scotland, take in floating Christian Endeavor work may be seen from the fact that last year they sent out 9,235 hand written letters to sailors, 91 parcels of literature, 656 texts cards, 470 tracts, 8 book bags, 8 sailors' Bibles, besides stockings, scarfs, mittens and other articles. Besides this they gave more than $80 to the troop ship work that is being carried on by British Endeavorers. The aim of these Endeavorers this year is to provide 10,000 hand-written letters for sailors." Of course you may not be able to do this kind of work in your locality, but there is a service awaiting you if you only find it. Let us as a band of Endeavorers some 3,000 strong, make this year count for good to humanity because of the unrestricted service given.

Dean Miller at Louisville

One of the most significant series of meetings that Louisville church has had for years was the week of meetings for instruction and inspiration held by Dean J. Allen Miller, August 18 to 25 inclusive. Dr. Miller came at the invitation of the church to preach a series of sermons dealing with some of the disturbing problems of the day. Every church realizes the danger of unguided thinking or misguided thinking during times of stress. I say "misguided thinking," because there are all kinds of false "isms" and pessimistic propagandists seeking to carry away the minds of the people. This danger is ever present, but it is more pronounced during war times. And there is scarcely another man in the entire brotherhood whose experience and studies in the field of theological learning would enable him to speak with the authority that Dean Miller can. He used his well-known powers of exegesis and interpretation in a remarkable way, and refuted some of the popular errors in a clear and convincing manner. He set forth the Christian attitude by constant reference to the scripture toward God and his work, toward the world and the affairs of men, toward the facts of sin, judgment and the coming kingdom of Christ in a frank, constructive manner that has had a wholesome influence upon our people. And this report has been delayed sufficiently long to enable the pastor to observe that the beneficial effects of these sermons will be abiding. I believe the churches generally ought to have special services for instruction as well as for evangelism. I believe thoroughly in the latter, but I am convinced that the former is equally as necessary, for religious zeal without knowledge is one of the great weaknesses of Christian people today as it was in the days of the apostles. The faithful pastor does not fail to instruct as well as preach evangelism, but he needs the help occasionally of specialists in both avenues of church interest.

Our people were so well pleased with Dr. Miller's sane, constructive and inspiring teaching and felt so highly profited by the entire series of meetings that they not only gave him a generous offering for his services, but are expressing a desire for his return another summer.

With all the drawbacks the church has had much for which to rejoice during the past year. The winter being most severe for this region froze over the Sunday school a few times and put the prayer-meeting into winter quarters. But after all we think we have had as good a year in this line of work in point of interest and attendance as at any time since the starting of the church. The officers and teachers are rarely ever absent and all try to do their share of the work. Our offerings are good. Some time back we had a talk on "Tithing As a Method of Giving," and some literature on tithing and giving was placed before the school. At this time we have six tithers in our membership. Can another church of the same number of members show as many or more tithers? Our church is a very good example of liberal giving. It is always ready to meet all needs. Some of us feel we should give as much when we do not have a pastor to pay as when we do have. It is our aim to take a special offering once each month for purposes wholly outside ourselves. We will let the offerings for the National work of the brotherhood come in the proper month and at date set. In this way we have an opportunity to pass on our tithe money, free will offerings and other money consecrated to the Lord's work, elsewhere. In October, for instance, we want our special offerings to go to the Armenians.

Another thing being done through the Sunday school is the distribution of religious tracts. These are kept in the rear of the church and are free for anyone to help themselves, to send to soldiers, or to give other friends. Many of these tracts have been read and sent out to France to the boys "over there." Many people will take time to read a tract who will not read a religious book.

Twice our Sunday school has taken its part on the program of the County Sunday school singing convention and each time our singing has been considered the best.

We are sending a delegate to the State Sunday School Convention which is to meet near here soon.

The S. S. C. E. has placed its "mite box" and started forth for another year with plans and aims to do more than in the past. Its first work is to procure a special line of tracts to be distributed locally. We are to be a prayer band for the Gribble party and our other missionaries. We will have a season of prayer with each devotional meeting for this purpose.

Our prayer-meeting came forth with new life after the winter blasts. It is not largely attended and almost exclusively by members, but it has been one spiritual feast this summer. Members take it turn about leading these meetings. Varied subjects of interest and vital importance are discussed to our edification and the glory of God. Those not present miss much.

Since there has been no preaching service since our pastor left us a year ago, we had cause to praise the Lord that three Brethren ministers appeared recently in rapid succession. Brother L. G. Wood conducted our communion and three other enjoyable services; later Brother Allen, of Kentucky, preached one good sermon during a brief visit, and last brother Willis Ronk stopped over with us and notwithstanding both fire indeed one night and rain two other nights he held for us some good services which we enjoyed together as in the days when he labored for us here. We praise God for each of these visits and all the great spiritual gifts he has bestowed and is ready to give. Those of you who know the power of prayer will you not pray that a pastor for this church and unpastored community may be raised up, and that we here may be led in our efforts for him that his will may be done. May Christ be formed in every reader of the Evangelist.

MARY PENCE.

Telford, Tennessee, No. 2

Doubtless there are those who are waiting to hear again from the work at this place. The writer discovered while at Conference that he would have a few days free before going to Roanoke for a meeting, so he wrote to the Brethren at Telford saying that he would make them a visit and if convenient would preach a few days. Having worked with these dear people for over two years, I was very anxious to look over the field and visit friends there.

Upon my arrival I learned that the Conservative Brethren had a meeting in progress. This at first seemed unfortunate, but proved to be far the best as many of our people as possible cooperated with them and met with a hearty welcome. The writer had the privilege of preaching for them on Sunday morning, September 15. There seemed to be a spirit of friendliness existing between the people of all denominations. During all my labors there this spirit was conspicuous for its absence, with the exception of a few individuals here and there. This has been one of the greatest obstacles to the growth of the growth of the churches in this community and I pray to God that its final elimination is at hand.

The members of our church have not only remained faithful, but have gone quietly on their way trying to do their work. I have never met anywhere a more sincere and devout people and I feel that God is working out his will in and through them. It was a great pleasure to visit with these people again and to preach to them several days last week. I pray for God's richest blessings to rest on these people as they continue to serve their Master. WILLIS E. RONK.

Spokane News

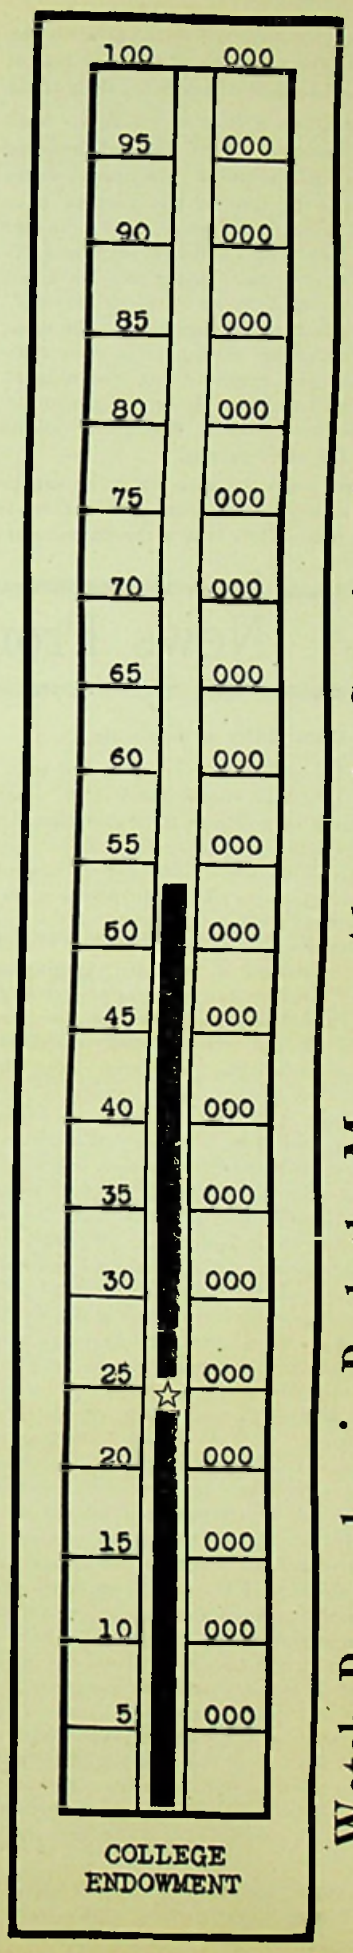
Our building campaign was dated for Sept. 22-30 and went off with a bang. On the first day of the campaign, we "went over the top". We aimed at reaching $1200 during the week but went over that amount the first day. The amount stands now between twelve and fifteen hundred dollars, the exact amount I do not yet know. If any one doubts as to whether Spokane means business, just come out here and catch a little of the spirit.

Now the Mission Board voted Spokane $2500 at conference, for our building, if Spokane would raise the rest. Spokane is raising all she can and knows where she can get the rest. But we NEED THAT TWENTY FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS FROM THE BROTHERHOOD NOW! We need this building now. If you are intending to give to Spokane at all, DO IT NOW! Winter will soon be here in this country, when it will be too late to lay brick. If we build now we can save about $3000 in cost of construction. This is made possible by being able to buy materials cheap if we buy them now, because we spoke for them last year, but they will not be held any longer. Then again in another year the government is likely to stop all constrution work that is not entirely war-work. The work here demands larger quarters now. So it is imperative for the life of the work here to complete now. This by God's help we are going to do.

If you haven't the money, just get out a couple of liberty bonds and mail them to 2404 N. Wall St., Spokane Wash. and see how much better you will feel. Those liberty bonds can do a work for the Lord as well as for the country, if you will let them.

We want to thank all those who have given in the past and have made possible the work that has already been done. And in the full assurance of faith we want to thank all those who are going to make the completion of the work posible, for it is surely going to be done. "Now then let's do it."

R. PAUL MILLER.



CAMPAIGN NOTES

I came from Uniontown to Masontown in the hope that I could complete the canvass there which we began before National Conference but which we could not complete at that time because a number of the Masontown people were away. However, heavy rains which made it imposible to get out to country homes prevented me even on my return, from making a final windup of our Masontown work. But we accomplished enough more, to run the Masontown result up to $2600. And both Brother Shively and myself felt that enough was yet in sight to make the $3,000 mark not seem an impossibility for Masontown. I am glad to say that what was done by the Masontown people was done in a most cheerful spirit and Ashland College has many strong backers in this congregation.

As usual, I found Brother Shively in work up to his chin. But those of us who know Brother Shively best know that that is the ways he is always loaded. No "rusting out" for Shively; he prefers to "wear out." On the second night I was at Masontown. It was my privilege to attend the semi-annual social meeting of Brother Shively's class of men. On this occasion the Ladies' class were guests to the men. I tried to address these two classes along the line of some of the ways Organized Adult Bible Classes may render practical service to the church. I believe the evening was not only enjoyable but profitable as well. And I may add that the Masontown Sunday school still holds the distinction of giving the largest gift to the cause of Endowment of any of our schools thus far canvassed. The school as such, and the various classes ran the amount to $565. Brother Joseph Kratz is the superintendent of this school and he is striving steadily to lead his school forward to larger and better things.

From Masontown I came to the Highland church in Washington County. I had never met any of the members of this congregation, but we were not long about getting acquainted. This is a rural church and Brother H. S. Myers is the pastor. I preached five times at this place and had very appreciative audiences. The rush of work among the farmers naturally hurt our attendance some. Brother Tombaugh is to hold a meeting for these people in October and I tried to make my work there contribute something to a preparation for his coming. This is not a large congregation and when all the conditions are taken into consideration the result here is really larger than it may appear. We raised $155; and if others yet respond from whom we still hope to have responses the result will go close to $200. The Moores, and the Garretts, and the Theakstons, and and the Grables are names which I shall remember particularly in connection with my canvass at Highland.

The churches in Green county were next visited. I shall say frankly that this is a hard field to canvass; and the results fell far below what they should have been for the amount of time and energy expended. This circuit comprises three churches—Aleppo, Sugar Grove and Quiet Dell. There are some people in this charge who have a vision to see the real importance of Ashland College in its relation to the future of the Brethren church. But there are a lot more on this charge who seem unable to see that there might indeed be some connection between a refusal to help endow Ashland College on the one hand, and a hard job to get a pastor in the years to come on the other hand. But I personally firmly believe there is a real connection right at this point. The result in this field only went $100. The same work in other fields has frequently netted several thousand dollars. And in fairness to all concerned I am bound to say that of the small sum I did get, aside from a few dollars loose offering at Quiet Dell, the balance came from the other two points. It will be a small star Quiet Dell will get on the Service Flag for Permanent Endowment.

Brother W. T. Hilbert is the pastor in charge of this circuit. I had never met Hilbert before, but he looks good to me. He is yet a young man and his people tell me he can preach. I have no reason at all to doubt it. He got his college training in the Bridgewater College. As I see it Brother Hilbert only lacks about one thing, and I told him that so often that he knows I am not joking. He ought to go to our conferences to get more fully acquainted with his brethren in the ministry, and also allow his brethren to get acquainted with him. And then he ought to go to Ashland College for a year or two to get in touch with Dr. Miller and other of our men there. And I am led to feel that Brother Hilbert is going to consider very seriously the matter of getting to Ashland in the comparatively near future.

The next report will come from Berlin and the two outlying churches.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

Report of the Meeting of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches Held in Washington, D. C., on Sept. 24, 1918

The General War-Time Commission of the Churches, constituted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, met for organization on September 20, 1917. On September 24, 1918, the second annual meeting was held in the New York Avenue Presbyterian church, Washington, D. C., for the purpose of surveying the activities of the past year and to confer concerning the work of the Christian church in all its branches so far as it relates to the war.

This meeting was one of considerable significance, bringing together as it did members of the Government departments and representatives of the denominational war-time agencies, for conference concerning matters of vital interest to religion at the present time and in the future. There were in attendance 218 representatives of 29 different denominations. In addition to officers of the Federal Council, there were present representatives of the American Bible Society, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the War Camp Community Service and the Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War. At various times during the session there were present the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Frederick P. Keppel, Third Assistant Secretary of War; Colonel Brown, representing the Adjutant General and detailed in charge of matters relating to army chaplains; Charles Frazier, in charge of matters relating to Navy chaplains; Major Bascom Johnson, associated with the Commission on Training Camp Activities, particularly in its campaign against liquor and social vice; Major Axton and several other army chaplains.

There were addresses by the Bishop of Oxford and Rev. Arthur T. Guttery, President-elect of the Free Church Council of England and Wales, who are in this country on a mission under the direction of the Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War, and Professor Harry Emerson Fosdick, recently returned from overseas.

1. In the course of the discussion the attitude of the Government toward religion and the spiritual interests of the soldiers, and of the nation, was clearly set forth. Secretary Daniels in his address contrasted the days of the Spanish War when, as he said, mothers were more fearful for the morals of their sons than for their lives. In this war, however, he said that the Government of the United States has laid stress upon the truth we so long refused to face—that if a man is to shoot straight he must live straight. Secretary Keppel also emphasized that it is now recoginzed that men and officers are better fitted to do the hardest part of their work by encouraging the spirit and an interest in higher things.

With reference to offers of voluntary assistance in this direction it was explained that there was embarrassment in the multiplicity of such offers, requiring the War Department to act as coordinating agency. He stated the policy of the Government to be a readiness to accept any kind of voluntary assistance in an emergency but an unwillingness to continue indefiitely to receive from voluntary sources that which it is the duty of the Government to furnish itself. This principle directly affects the camp pastor situation. Chaplain Axton spoke in highest praise of the assistance rendered by voluntary chaplains and camp pastors at a time when the regular chaplains were not prepared and were not sufficiently numerous to do the work, and further stated that in his opinion the recent order of the War Department relating to this matter should not be construed as intended to elimiate camp pastors and voluntary chaplains but rather as a limitation to prevent overlapping and duplication of effort. The General War-Time Commission arranged for a conference with Secretary Keppel concerning the status of camp pastors, at which there were present representatives selected by the denominational commissions. As a result of this conference, provision has been made for the appointment of a small committee to confer with him and other members of the War Department concerning the whole question.

With regard to the regular chaplains, Secretary Keppel declared that the exceptional man serving as chaplain will have such an opportunity as no minister ever had, and that the War Depeartment will assure him of securing this opportunity.

Secretary Keppel also granted an interview to a committee desiring to present to him certain problems relating to the welfare of negro troops, in which it was learned that the War Department is earnestly endeavoring to overcome the effects of race prejudice in the army and to avoid discrimination against negroes. Negro officers, both commissioned and non-commissioned are to be provided as rapidly as the material is available.

2. In certain matters the Government is not only willing to accept but earnestly desires the help of the churches. It seeks the cooperation of the churches in its endeavor to secure the best qualified men for services as chaplains, and, while it now agrees to provide the chaplain with such equipment as typewriters and adequate means of transportation, it looks to the churches to supply them with such distinctly ecclesiastical equipment as communion services. It is also highly desirable that chaplains should be provided with a fund of $100 or more to be used at their discretion.

Major Axton called attention to the services rendered by the General War-Time Commission in serving as a bond of connection between the chaplains and the War Department on the one hand and the churches on the other, thus helping to rescue the chaplain from his isolated position and making him conscious of the hearty support of the churches, which he deserves in an important and difficult task.

In the matter of the suppression of social vice, the Government also looks to the church for assistance. It is recognized that the conditions in the army arise out of conditions in the community. If the results of its interest in this matter, inspired by the moral issues of the war, are to be conserved in the reaction which may be expected after the close of the war, it is necessary to arouse the community sentiment; and this can be done only with the assistance of the churches. With this in view, there has recently been organized a Joint Committee on Hygiene and Sex Morality, of which Rev. Paul Moore Strayer is chairman, which represents not only the General War-Time Commission but also the permanent Commission of the Federal Council on Church and Social Service, and it will continue its activities after the war is over. The membership of this committee is as follows: Rev. Paul Moore Strayer, D.D., Chairman; Rev. Worth M. Tippy, Secretary, Dr. Anna R. Brown, Dr. George A. Coe, Dr. Milton J. Exner, Rev. John P. Peters, D.D., Dr. Daniel Poling, Rev. Gaylord S. White, Rev. B. S. Winchester.

In industrial communities which are arising about the great munition plants and shipyards, both the Government and the corporations are seeking the assistance of the church in caring for the workers, both men and women. Locatons have been provided in these new communities for church buildings, and it is desirable that the denominations should cooperate in the maintenance of such churches. In order to meet the situation there has recently been constituted a joint committee representing the War-Time Commission and the Home Missions Council, in recognition of the responsibility of the home boards in this matter. This committee is constitued as follows: Mr. John M. Glenn, Chairman, Rev. W. P. Schriver, Vice Chairman, W. T. Demarest, Treasurer, Rev Alfred Williams Anthony, D.D., Secretary, Rep. Worth M. Tippy, D.D., Executive Secretary, Rev. Howard R. Gold, Assistant Secretary, Mrs. J. S. Allen, Mrs. Fred S. Bennett, Rev. Charles A. Brooks, Rev. William Adams Brown, Rev. David D. Forsyth, D.D., Rev. Charles E. Burton, Mr. Shelby M. Harrison, Rev. Hubert C. Herring, Rev. S. L. Morris, Rev. H. A. Weller, Rev. Charles L. White, Rev. Warren H. Wilson.

3. In his address the Bishop of Oxford said that it is the duty of the churches to support the conscience and character of the nation in the present crisis. This duty, however, he said, is not exhausted in affording consolation for the loss of life and the assurance that the sacrifice of these lives shall not have been in vain. There are certain definite things which the church can do by way of preparation for the days after the war by outlining a program through which the church can approach the new problems that are arising. While organized to meet conditions existing in times of war, the General War-Time Commission and the denominational commissions are not forgetful of the deeper problems involved which will continue to be with us after the close of the war.

The work of the Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War was described by its secretary, Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, to be the creation of public sentiment in support of our representatives at the council table concerning terms of peace, in order that the fruits of victory may not be lost, and the development of an intelligent appreciation of the value of having the world organized for right and justice. Secretary Daniels declared his confidence that the world will be saved from Prussianism, but he also said the world would not be worth saving unless the spirit of Christ permeates and predominates it.

Reference has already been made to the endeavor to conserve the moral values of the campaign against vice after the war, and, in connection with the work in industrial communities, attention was called to the importance of developing out of this movement a message from the churches for the workingman in the time when peace shall have returned. In his address Dr. Guttery described how war-time conditions are accelerating the progress of democracy in Great Britain.

Realizing that the time has come to begin thinking out what shall be the postion of the churches with reference to many questions after the coming of peace, a committee has been organized at the suggestion of the General War Time Commission, by action of the Federal Council of Churches. This Committee is known as the Committee on the War and the Religious Outlook. President North, of the Federal Council, described its purpose to be "to study quietly as we may, deeply as we should, those deep spiritual implications and those practical questions that have to do with the conditions of religious life." He stated distinctly that while organized by the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council this is not to be considered a committee of the Federal Council. The committee is left to develop its own organization and its own program. The chairman, President Henry Churchill King, after determining with other members the questions which it is desired to study, has gone abroad to make a personal examination. For the present, communications meant for the committee should be sent to the vice-chairman, Rev. William Adams Brown. The other members of the committee are: President Henry Churchill King, Chairman, Professor William Adams Brown, Vice-Chairman, Bishop J. W. Bashford, Mrs. Fred S. Bennett, Miss Mabel Cratty, Mr. George W. Coleman, President W. H. P. Faunce, Rev. Harrye E. Fosdick, Rev. Samuel G. Inman, Professor Charles M. Jacobs, Bishop Walter R. Lambut, Bishop Frances J. McConnell, Rev. Charles S. McFarland, President William Douglas Mackenzie, Dean Shailer Mathews, Dr. John R. Mott, President E. Y. Mullins, Rev. Frank Mason North, the Very Rev. Wilford L. Robbins, Dr. Robert E. Speer, Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, Rev. James I Vance, Rev.Henry B. Washburn.

4. It was natural that in a meeting of representatives of many denominations the note of interdenominational cooperation should be emphasized. The existence of the General War-Time Commission in itself is evidence of such cooperation in creating an agency through which the denominations can work together in common tasks without sacrifice of principles, and this cooperation has been evident in all the work which the commission has undertaken. The commission also furnishes the churches with a common means of expression through which they may exercise the right which Dr. Guttery claimed for the Christian church, of raising its voice to give expression on all matters that affect the commonwealth.

Cooperation of the churches in war work to a greater extent was proposed by a committee which is at work upon plans for a joint financial campaign. The conduct of the proposed campaign was raised to a higher plane than that of mere financial necessity by the appeal of Bishop Henderson, who declared that an interpretation of the function of the church is needed more than funds and that the time is ripe for the church to seize this opportunity to make history for Protestant leadership in this country.

Denominationalism in France, said Dr. Guttery, is at the present time an impertinence, for the church has been forced to the policy of the single front. Dr. Fosdick declared that prejudices are melting in the fires of this troubled time. We are pitifully divided, he said, and have an immense amount to learn out of this war; and after the war church federation will be an international necessity to meet the demand for some way in which the church of America may speak to the churches of Britain and France.

Survey of Nursing Resources by the American Red Cross

To ascertain the nursing resources of the country, the American Red Cross, at the urgent request of Surgeon General Gorgas, U. S. A., endorsed by Secretary of War Baker, will undertake to make a nation-wide survey during the month of October. The Red Cross has requested the aid of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches in bringing this matter to the attention of the ministers and churches of the country.

This will be the most complete survey of nursing resources ever made. In order to carry out the work, the Bureau of Nursing survey of the Red Cross has been instructed to set up the machinery for this undertaking. The importance of the work is indicated by the following statement from General Gorgas: "Because of the increased military program, it is necessary that there should be immediately available definite information as to the number of graduate nurses available for military service; also supplementary nursing personnel, trained hospital attendants, and all others who are qualified to render aid under the direction of graduate nurses in the care of the civilian population."

It should be clearly understood that the survey is to include not merely registered trained nurses but all graduate nurses, pupil nurses, ungraduated, trained attendants, practical nurses, midwives and women who have taken Red Cross coruses. It is the desire of the Surgeon General to have this information available, not only that it may be drawn upon for the needs of the army, but also that the civilian population may be protected. It is, in a word, to make possible the mobilization of all possible nursing forces in the country to meet present and future needs. It does not, of course, mean that all those who may be discovered will be called upon to offer their services at the present time.

Valuable aid can undoubtedly be given by the pastors and churches throughout the country. In many cases pastors will know of members of their churches who have formerly been trained nurses. Through the women's societies of the churches it may often be possible to conduct inquiries among the members of the church and congregation to discover those who have had some nursing experience.

our debts." Or, if I felt that I needed to confess to God something, and refused to do it, there would be no use for me to pray. Men who are cheating other men, men who are cheating themselves, cannot pray, expecting answer from God. What we want today is a revival of righteousness—a revival of uprightness. God delights to answer prayer, for he has promised to do so. But do not deceive yourself. Perhaps you wonder why your prayers are not answered. If you are living a dishonorable life, God will hide his face from you, and will not hear. Remove the obstacles in your life and God will do the rest. You will then know for a surety that God's promises are true and steadfast. May we each day pray God that he may teach us the things most needful. Help us to understand his will and word more perfectly from day to day. Why shan't we pray. Why should we not lift our hearts to God for his blessing and promise. May God help us to leave our burdens and cares behind and continually ask of him, "Lord, teach us to pray." Amen.

Does It Matter What a Man Believes?

It has been a contention of Brethren from the very first that it does make a difference what a man believes. The relation between creed and conduct always has been strongly emphasized. We have ever insisted that a real and genuine faith will issue in a real and full obedience to the commandments of the gospel. To show this vial connection between life and belief let me quote first from Elder Peter Nead. He was the theologian of the Brethren in the middle of the last century. In writing on faith he insists first upon its necessity and then with emphasis upon its content, or what he calls pointedly, "the thing to be believed." I quote from him: "No relation in which we stand in the material world—no political relation, or relation to society, can be changed by believing, apart from the acts to which that belief or faith induces us....Thus when in scripture, men are said to be justified by faith, it is because faith is the principle of action, and as such, the cause of those acts by which such blessings are enjoyed. But the principle without these acts is nothing, and it is only by the acts which it induces to perform, that it becomes the instrument of any blessings to men." I also wish to quote briefly from Alexander Mack in support of the statement that Brethren always have held to the importance of the content of belief and its vital connection with life. Mack as is well known was the founder of the organization known as The Brethren. He writes: "Should ten vain professors be examined according to the scriptures, it would appear that each one would be governed by a peculiar faith, and not one of them would correspond with the scripture, for there is only one true and unfeigned faith according to the scriptures, and all they who profess this faith are of the same mind." Again he writes: "And if in your associations you should come in contact with men who appear more holy than John, with more fiery zeal than Elias, more wonderfully miraculous than Moses, more mild, meek, humble, and spiritual than Christ, our crucified Redeemer, as it is recorded in the New Testament, and desire to lead you away from keeping the simple commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ, you may be assured in your heart that they are false prophets and deceitful workers."

That the relation between creed and conduct is direct and unmistakable is evidenced by the facts of human history. Take the belief of the church at any particular period of persecution and one can readily trace the connection between the unspeakable atrocities committed in the name of Christ and the hard, narrow and fanatical creed. Witness the work of the Roman Inquisition and the horrible instruments of torture it invented. Take the fine and noble Puritan character and mark how it was marred and vitiated by the severity and the unsympathetic character of its belief. An illustration immediately at hand can be drawn from the great war. The barbaric and nameless cruelties of the Hun shown toward helpless and defenseless women and little children are but the logical outcome of the things believed, as Nead calls them, and the ideals held, as Mack would put it. So I conclude that another wrote the truth when he said, "Nothing can contribute more to the weal or woe of human society, therefore, than the spread of a high or low, good or bad, worthy or unworthy belief. If character matters anything, belief matters everything.

There is another consideration that needs to be noted here. It is this—real belief always becomes settled conviction. Settled conviction develops character. This is both the will to believe and the will to act. Want of conviction is in truth want of character. Another has put it tersely, "No conviction, no character." And this is synonymous with bad character. "Brethren have always plead for conviction. Our faithful ministry has always discerned the essential and basic necessity of conviction as the groundwork of a spiritual and effective Christian life. Belief without conviction remains fruitless and effete. But belief to become conviction must in its content be worth while.

What then should be the content of belief? Does it matter what it is? Can belief be of any worth apart from content. We have been told that we must cease to be dogmatic. Brethren have called it "doctrine" and the preaching of our distinctive beliefs is "doctrinal preaching." We have been told that we have had enough of this kind of preaching and this "narrow sort of belief." But what shall one believe if not a dogma, And what shall one preach if not "dogmas?" A "dogma" is a thing believed, a proposition, an opinion, a truth, especially a truth of the Christian faith. How can any one preach anything without being dogmatic? One who preaches any truth he believes with conviction and earnestness is dogmatic.

To Brethren it must ever be one of the first essentials of a good preacher and pastor that he believes strongly enough the gospel to preach it with conviction. This means not only those things which all Christians hold with more or less tenacity of faith but also those beliefs which we hold in particular. What makes a Brethren preacher? Is it the fact that I seek to preach a clear and distinctively New Testament conception of God? Is it because I preach the doctrine of sin? of faith and repentance? of the new birth of the Spirit? Is it because I stress the person and work of Jesus Christ as atoning and meritorious and proclaim all the benefits of his gracious salvation, Is it because I hold strenuously to the doctrines of the godly Christian life, the fruitful service and ministry of love of the children of God, and the realities of the life to come? May I not preach all these and more and not be any more Brethren than if I had never heard of the Brethren church? But are not all these teachings essential to a full proclamation of the gospel and does not a Brethren preacher preach them? YES. He preaches all this and MORE. Now, unless I utterly misapprehend the position of the Brethren church two things stand out in great boldness and prominence which mark a Brethren preacher. The first is this,—THE GREAT UNANIMITY WITH WHICH WE ACCEPT THE GENERALLY ACCEPTED TRUTHS OF PROTESTANTISM. But these do not make us BRETHREN any more than they make us Methodists or Baptists or Lutherans. What divides many Christian denominations we do not think at all sufficient to do so. Things which divide others, to put it in other words, would never keep us from even organic church union with them. The second is this,—THE GREAT CONVICTION

Where Are We At?

The congressman who a number of years ago in a period of maudlin alcoholism during a speech he was trying to deliver in the House at Washington, lost track of what he was trying to say and then remarked, "Where am I at?" coined a phrase that has become famous and that has endured long years after the name of the congressman has been forgotten. But it was an expressive phrase and one that a great many people, either drunk or sober, are frequently prompted to use.

So rapid and so great have been the many changes in every phase of human existence during the last four years that scarcely any of us do know where we are or whither we are going. Business, education, religion have all passed through such transformations that it is no wonder men ask in amazement, "Where am I at?" At the end of each week or before the next pay day arrives a great many men gaze into the depths of an empty purse and say, "Where am I at?" Only a few years ago when a number of the textile mills of England closed down because of the war the cotton growers of America thought there was nothing except bankruptcy and ruin and starvation before them. To meet this emergency and to prevent its direful consequences an organized effort was made to have people buy cotton whether they had any use for it or not, and the slogan, "Buy a bale of cotton," was cried all over the land. The President set a good example by himself buying a bale and others following the distinguished leader did likewise. But the war has gone on and instead of proving the ruin of the cotton industry the said industry has gone forward by leaps and bounds until today instead of responding to the slogan, "Buy a bale of cotton," the average American householder must look into his purse twice before he hands out to his wife sufficient money to buy a BALL of cotton.

Yes, these are days of rapid change and men change with the days, for only a few days ago a group of congressmen from the south who four years ago would have been glad to have the President or Congress fix a minimum price on cotton called upon the same President to protest against any fixing of a maximum price upon the same commodity. How geography and climatic conditions change one's views! We are certainly justified in asking the old, old question, "Where am I at?"

Barrels of Booze

One of the greatest obstacles standing in the way of thousands of good, loyal Americans becoming as enthusiastic as they would like in their co-operation with our own people in raising Liberty Loans and in food economy is the way England handles the liquor problem, or rather the way the liquor forces handle England. It is anything but encouraging to many Americans to curtail their own consumption of grain that the allies may be fed to learn that as America shuts off extravagant habits England becomes more prodigal in the use of grain to manufacture alcoholic liquors.

One of England's great daily papers recently said, "As America sends us grain, it looks as if she is closing her breweries that ours may stay open. It is very doubtful if, supposing the circumstances were reversed, we should do the same." Another London daily is even more emphatic as it says, "This country looks with admiration and envy upon the sureness and ease with which America attacked a problem that baffled our nerveless statesmen and timid House of Commons. Owing to the lack of courage among our leaders the trade in alcoholic liquors in the United Kingdom has actually benefited from the war, and owing to the war many declining brewery businesses have been set on their feet again financially. What a lamentable contrast there is between our feeble futilities in dealing with a superfluous trade and the clear and decisive action by the American President and Congress."

It has been shown that such an impetus has been given the brewery interests in England the last few years that greatly enlarged dividends have been declared. One brewing company that declared no dividend in 1916 declared a dividend of fifteen per cent. in 1917. Its profits had increased approximately $170,000. Because of this increased business brewery stock has advanced from 300 to 900 per cent. in England. And we are informed that distillers are nearly as happy as the brewers for they have reduced the alcohol in whiskey by one half and then have doubled the price. But neither diluting the liquor nor raising its price has proved an effective temperance measure.

The drink bill in England last year was more than double what it was four years ago, or, in round numbers it was $1,295,000,000. But not satisfied with this enormous waste the British government allowed for the first quarter of the present year an increase of twenty per cent. over the quantity manufactured in the corresponding three months of the previous year. It is no wonder that Premier Lloyd George said that, "Drink is doing us more damage than all the German submarines put together." It is strange that a man with the strong personality and with the great powers of leadership possessed by Lloyd George should have so little influence in this matter. But when it is known that a large portion of the brewery interests in England is in the hands of the members of the House of Lords, some of the strangeness of the situation is removed.

Over Confidence

Many a good cause has been lost because those who have espoused it have been over-confident of their success. Confidence is essential to success but over-confidence is a hindrance. The men who make their way in the world are men who have an easy self-possession that assures all with whom they do business that they know what they are talking about and that they understand their business thoroughly; but there is a confidence that is sometimes overdone, and then instead of being the help it should be it is the hindrance it should not be. One who possesses an overconfident spirit is frequently taken unawares or off guard and is overthrown before he becomes aware that an assault has been made upon him.

There is some danger to the prohibition cause this fall from this very spirit of over confidence. Of course, we expect the prohibition cause to win, we have been expecting it to do so for the last thirty years, but the danger now comes from a tendency to slacken up on our endeavors because we think the cause has made such headway that there is no stop to it. It has made great headway and we do not believe there is any stop to it, but it is possible that it may be checked in its forward march, that it may be held up for a season because some will think that victory is so surely won that they can afford to slacken up on their efforts to accomplish prohibition. But the fact remains that "there is many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip," and many a victory has been plucked from the hands of the victors because they have been caught off guard. They have been so confident of success that they have failed to see the insidious plans formulated by the enemy to meet just such an emergency. Even now some few prohibition advocates are so sure that the cause of prohibition will win in the fall elections that they are letting up on their vigilance and resting on past achievements and future hopes. This will not do, it will not win an election. The prohibition workers need to have confidence that they will win, but at the same time they should remember to make the "election sure" no opportunity should pass unimproved that will help in any way to win every election in favor of prohibition in November.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

The Hand Book Is Ready

Before you read this, many of you will have received the Hand Book of the Four-Year Program Committee. It is almost as perfect as it can be made, we think, as an answer to what the Program asks. The secretary has again outdone himself in the compilation of a work that reflects keen thought, and we feel it is a credit to him and the Committee that has such a secretary.

Now, we believe that there are a good many more, than those to whom this booklet has been sent, who will want the booklet, and we are glad that enough have been printed so that all who will likely ask, will be accommodated. They will be a good deal better used in the hands of members, even though they may not have official connection with the Program, than lying on a shelf, somewhere. Ask the secretary for a copy to see if the program is being carried out in your congregation.

is a common word used when we find a book filled with good suggestions. Well, that is the word to be used in describing this. For instance, under Goal 1, are given six suggestions that will help one to know if he is winning according to rule. Under Goal 3 are given all the subjects for the year. When is a recruit a RECRUIT, is answered under Goal 6 so that you will know and so we shall not recruit recruits and not know it.

How Well We Succeeded

Just how well we succeeded the past year is shown in the charts that the Conference ordered printed after seeing how well it had been all worked out by Secretary Goughnour. It will be well worth your while to pause and spend a good deal of time on the booklet and worth the while of any pastor or congregation to find that proper interpretation will help to win some of the goals.

"How can we reach Goal 1 if we do not have prayer-meetings?" Find it in the booklet under Goal 1 What is the Budget System and when do we win Goal 7? Find it on pages 15 and 16. When will our C. E. win Goal 15? Get a whole two page explanation on pages 26 and 27.

Indispensable

That's what the booklet is. You will not get along with the program as you ought without a careful use of it during the year. Carry it in your pocket so that you can "peep" into it at any time. Pray over the work of the church as she buckles down to the task and for your own, especially.

Reverses

How full of reverses are the times! How terribly hard to get along at all. This week, we can have no church services. This week, Pennsylvania recalled her conference; this week, Indiana had to discontinue hers. Pray that the Lord will stop this triumph of Satan so that the PROGRAM may succeed. BAME.

THE HAND BOOK

The Four-Year Program Hand Book for 1918-1919 is printed and is now being distributed. This is the first pamphlet of this kind that the Brethren church has ever issued. It tells a congregation everything pertaining to all the Four-Year Program goals. The secretary who compiled the data, is almost willing to offer a prize of $5.00 to any person who discovers a question in reference to the Program that is not answered in the Hand Book. However, he begs everyone to remember that he says "almost."

Its Distribution

Enough copies have been sent to each District Director of the Four-Year Program to provide a copy for each pastor, S. S. superintendent, S. S. C. E. president, and C. E. president in the district. These directors should send out these copies at once. If any pastor, superintendent or president does not receive a copy within a week after this notice appears, he should write to his District Director for one. Their names and addresses are as follows:

Illiokota,.....B. T. Burnworth, Lanark, Ill.
Indiana.....W. T. Lytle, Flora, Ind.
Kanemorado.....A. E. Whitted, Morrill, Kans.
Maryland-Virginia.....L. G. Wood, Roanoke, Va.
Michigan.....J. H. English, New Troy, Mich.
N. Calif., Wash. and Oregon.....J. W. Platt, Manteca, Cal.
Ohio and Kentucky.....Geo. S. Baer, Louisville, Ohio
Pennsylvania.....W. C. Benshoff, Altoona, Pa.
Southern California.....A. V. Kimmell, Whittier, Calif.

It required about 800 copies to provide for all the congregational officials mentioned above. The secretary has about 400 copies on hand. If any one in the church anywhere wants one of these Hand Books, a request will bring it as long as they last. No charge is made for the booklet.

The Land of the Fig Tree Sign

BY DR. E. M. COBB

Among the hills of Southern Indiana, along the Ohio River, more than forty years ago, while I was a stripling of a boy, the old pioneer missionaries from the north land frequently visited my father's home, and how I used to beg to "stay up" and hear these men of God talk to my parents and grandparents about the Land of Promise, which was the home of the faithful Jew, the land where the Bible was written and the land to which our Lord would return and reign; so deeply was planted in my soul the ardent love for that country and its history, with which it is so pregnant and replete, that this seed-thought being propagated in later life by my association in the ministry with the younger set of godly men, finally became a part of my very tissue, and became a reality; and for the last fifteen years I have been lecturing, preaching, talking and showing hundreds of photographs taken by myself in "The Land of the Fig Tree Sign."

Jesus said, through Matthew's Hebrew Gospel, (Matt. 24:32-35), "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh; so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things"—false Christs, false prophets, false doctrines, apostasy and lethargy—"know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily, I say unto you this race shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my WORD shall not pass away."

What is his Word? The word to which he refers is the scriptures regarding the Jew who is the living miracle of God, and this land which is, which was and which shall be the home of the Jew; this land which, when looking at a Mercator's projection, is the geographical center of the world, surrounded by bodies of water and possessing a climate, soil and products which, taken together, make it one of the most enviable spots on the earth for his chosen people, and has been the bone of contention from the days when the allies of the East marshalled together under the leadership of Chedorlaomer, to the days when the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns made of it a field of carnage under villainous, bloodthirsty and tyrannical reign of his Imperial Majesty, the Beast of Berlin; this land which is equally dear to Mohammedan, Jew and Christian; this land which is the home of the Bible, the Talmud, and the Koran; this land which is known as the site of the temples of the Jews under Solomon, Zerubabel and Herod; the site of the Mosque of Omar of the Mohammedans and the site of the Cradle and Cross of Christianity.

The "Land of the Fig Tree Sign" was first given to the Jewish nation ensemble in the orginal contract signed by the Jehovah of Hosts. (Ex. 6:2-8) "And God spake unto Moses and said unto him, 'I am the Lord; anl I appeared unto Abraham, and unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God almighty, but by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them. And I have also established my contract with them and given them the land of Canaan, the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers———and I will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you a God: and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God, which bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians. And I will bring you unto the land, concerning which I did swear to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it to you for an heritage:' signed "I AM THE LORD."

Then the original deed to these people is as follows: (Gen. 12: 1, 2, 7) "Now Jehovah had said unto Abraham, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and I will make they name great; and thou shalt be a blessing:....and Jehovah appeared unto Abram, and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land; and there builded he an altar unto Jehovah, who appeared unto him."

Beside the original contract and the original deed, there seems to have been as well, an abstract of title containing a certificate of inspection, or a real survey by civil engineers (Gen. 13:14-17) "And Jehovah said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, 'Lift up thine eyes and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westeward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it: for I will give it unto thee."

To be sure there is a feeling on the part of some, even now, to advocate the theory that it would be wrong to dispossess the present tenants to give the Jew a home; but who are the present tenants? Who is the Turk? But a very few centuries ago he was as unknown in the Levant, as he was in Europe. His home was in the heart of Asia. As a villainous usurper, he, with vast hordes, swept to the southwest with unsheathed saber, conquering the highlands of Armenia, the fertile valleys of the Euphrates, the plateaus of the Lebanon and ante-Lebanon ranges, the Land of Palstine and the great peninsula of Asia Minor, and swept like a flood over Pontus, Paphlagonia, Bithynia, Mysia,, Lydia, Caria, Lycia, Pamphilia, Cilicia, Galatia, Cappadocia, Lycaonia, Pisidia and Phrygia, where were planted the original seven churches of Asia. Later, he crossed into Europe, but since has been driven therefrom, except a little more than the city of Constantinople. As touching Palestine, he never colonized it. There are no Turks there today who are residents of the Holy Land, except a few government officials who by misrule, corruption, stagnation and oppression, have forfeited any claim of conquest, which the Turks might have asusmed. Even now, the unspeakable Turk is bent on extermination of the Jew, who is the rightful and indisputable owner of this territory; but the sentiment of all mankind, and the will of God is, that THE TURK MUST GO.

There is another who, in my humble judgment, has a stronger claim than that of the Turk, and he is the Bedouin Arab, the real son of Ishmael, who is leading a nomadic life in the Jordan valley, the table lands of Bashan, where succulent grasses are furnished their roving herds by the waters of the Hieromax River, and Gilead beyond Jordan, and on the north border of the Beersheba Desert. To prove that these sons of Abram, by the bond woman, and other Syrians, who are residents of the land, have no legal or inherent right, I wish here to quote a further provision for the wise old Abram, who, in my opinion, suspected just such a difficulty: this is found in connection with the offering Abram made. (Gen. 15:13-17) "And he said unto Abram, know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in the land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them 400 years; and also that nation whom they shall serve will I judge, and afterward they shall come out with great substance. And thou shalt go to thy Fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age. But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again, for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." Remember these Amorites were the posesssors of all the best parts of this land before God's people ever received it by this "special" grant by Jehovah, which title supersedes any Amorite claim.

Even the Moslem himself, without any shadow of a doubt, is excluded by the wise provisions made for Abram. (Gen. 17:7, 8, 20, 21) "And I will establish my contract between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting contract, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God.....but as for Ishmael, I have heard thee; behold I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation. But my contract will I establish with Isaac, which Sarah shall bear unto thee at this set time in the next year."

As a matter of fact, in order to exclude everyone of whatsoever tongue, or people or nation, Abram appends this codicil to his will: (Gen. 25:5, 6) "And Abraham gave all that he had unto Isaac. But unto the sons of the concubines which Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts and sent them away from Isaac his son, while he yet lived, eastward, unto the east country."

After the original contract given unto Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, by Jehovah and re-affirmed to Moses, was now transferred, it seems by Moses at the command of Jehovah just before the death of Moses to Joshua, at which time the contract seems to assume the magnitude of a national title; (Num. 27;22, 23; Josh. 1:3) "Now, after the death of Moses, the servant of Jehovah, it came to pass, that Jehovah spake unto Joshua, the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying, Moses, my servant is dead; now, therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. Every place the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses."

Many are the attempts which have been made to colonize the Jews elsewhere than in the land which was given them by the Lord, such as Argentina, Brazil, Canada, and in the western part of the United States, covering Oregon, Colorado, North and South Dakota, Kansas, Utah and Colorado, North and South Dakota, Kansas, Ueth, and Idaho. But every successful Jewish colony, outside of the Holy Land, has been, pure and simple, the results of philanthropy, either to improve economic conditions or find homes for Jewish refugees. But in almost every case, the result, in the last analysis, was absorption—that is, absorption of and the amalgamation of the colony, but not the individual. The colony of the Jews is always lost through the social, religious, educational, economic, industrial or political conditions which constitute its environment, but the individual Jew is never lost. The negro amalgamates with his white superior, and the red man flees before the civilization of his superior race—but the Jew, the son of Abraham, the child of God, and the possessor of this land, is just as distinctively Jewish today as he was the day that Abraham was circumcized. This Jew is a miracle of history, and of God. He has been persecuted, scattered, scorned, buffeted, outraged, murdered, hated and legislated against; he has been without a national home, without a capital, without a government, without a temple or priesthood. He has been the subject of a republic, kingdom, empire and monarchy—and even now is a citizen under every flag that is floating above the battlefield of Europe, and, regardless of the fact that he is shooting his own blood brother across the trench of no man's land; yet he is faithful and loyal to the government under which he lives, under whose flag he fights, and by which he is often cruelly persecuted.

There is not a nation, civilized, half civilized or semi-barbarous, but that the Jew is there handling the finance, assisting in the making of laws and speaking the tongue of the people he serves. Yet, wherever he is found, whether he be a pack peddler going from door to door with his trinkets to sell as a vender, or whether he be a baron whose check would be promptly cashed in the magnitude of the Third Liberty Loan, yet he feels that in his veins flows the blood of Abraham, which is superior to the royal blood of all the crowned heads of the world. These experiences in various countries, under all circumstances and conditions under various forms of government, among all systems of religion, are slowly but surely fitting him for the great day that's coming when he shall be an integral factor in the making of a new kingdom which is promised him, and for which he has been looking so earnestly for centuries, in the land that is given to him as an eternal heritage by the Jehovah of Hosts. Be it remembered that today there are 19 Jews in the House of Lords in England, and the finance of England has been controlled by Jews since the battle of Waterloo. The Jews in France held the progress of the Government at bay until the Dreyfus case was settled, and he had received justice and was re-instated in the army. Thus, you see who rules France. In Germany there are over 400 professors who are Jews; one-third of all the students at Berlin university are Jews; and, in America, we have millions of Jews in New York, most of whom have come in recent years. That is but one state. Just look at the statistics from other states. Do you think that Judaism has been dormant? Who are your lawyers? Who are your judges and teachers? Who owns the banks and controls the industries? Who is our last Supreme Court Justice? Brandeis. Who has Wilson appointed as head of the Commission to re-establish the Hebrew kingdom at the close of this international struggle? Henry Morgenthau. Do not forget that this is the fulfillment prophecy. (Deut. 28:7-13) "The Lord shall cause thine enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thy face: they shall come out againts thee one way, and flee before thee seven ways. The Lord shall command the blessing upon thee in thy store houses, and in all that thou settest thine hand unto; and he shall bless thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. The Lord shall establish thee an holy people unto himself, as he has sworn unto thee, if thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways. And all people of the earth shall see that thou are called by the name of the Lord; and they shall be afraid of thee. And the Lord shall make thee plenteous in goods; in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the Lord sware unto thy fathers to give thee. The Lord shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give thee rain unto thy land in his season, and to bless all the work of thine hand: and thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow. And the Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the Lord thy God, which I command thee this day, to observe and to do them."

The Jew is a cosmopolitan and possesses a certain astuteness which makes him the master of the honest Aryan. Selfishness and lack of personal courage are his chief characteristics. Self-sacrifice and patience are altogether foreign to him. Haman was not far wrong when he said to Ahasuerus, (Esther 3: 8, 9) "There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the peoples in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and their laws are diverse from those of every people; neither keep they the king's laws; therefore, it is not for the king's profit to suffer them." So he offered nearly three million dollars to exterminate them. He is not wanted anywhere. As God promised him centuries ago, if he went whoring after other gods, he would scatter him among the nations, and he should become a hiss and byword; and even unto this day he has worshiped Baal, Ashtaroth, Mrs. Eddy, Theosophy and Pastor Russell; and it is, therefore, not improper to hear the man who once wore the phylactery bearing the sheen of El Shaddai to be called in ridicule, SHEENEY. The land of Palestine has been practically devastated for two thousand years. No civilization has flouirshed for any length of time. One invader has blotted out the work of another, and each possessor of the land always endeavors to destroy all traces of his predecessor. In traveling through the land, one sees how the forces of nature, the ravages of time and the hordes of the invader have torn down the mountains and filled up the valleys; thus the land has lain fallow for thousands of years, and old terraces and planting have been the very testimonies of the truth of the words of Jehovah.

In these days when German propaganda, through the philosophies of Heidelberg and Leipzig have been disseminated throughout the earth, the press, pulpit and platform have practically ceased to proclaim the unadulterated word of God, the Lord must have at least some agent to say to the world that his word is true, and so this "Land of the Fig Tree Sign" has, while wonderful changes have come which were favorable to the Jew in all Gentile countries, remained as it was.

Palestine has seen more changes in the last fifty years than in the five hundred years previous. Up to 1867 a Jew was not allowed to own land in Palestine. When I was there in 1902, there were but eleven colonies; but now there are forty-five colonies containing fifteen thousand Jews, and their agricultural projects are a success. There are three times more Jews now in Palestine than Ezra and Nehemiah brought from captivity. The exports from the port of Jaffa are three times what they were when I was there. No finer dates of Deglet Noor and Birket-et-haidje varieties can be grown than are grown at Gaza. I met George Maleek at Jericho with a caravan of twenty-eight camels laden with apricots, nectarines, figs, raisins and peaches that would do credit to Fresno County, California.

Within the last few years Jews are allowed to purchase land in Palestine, and not only that, but the Sultan has lifted the embargo upon Jewish emigration to "The Land of the Fig Tree Sign" as suddenly as he placed it there, and apparently without any good reason or explanation, which is perhaps better explained by "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith Jehovah."

The "Evangelical Christian" in a recent issue says: "The new Jewish commission is probably now at work in Palestine, actually planning the establishment of a Jewish state, the restoration of the ruin wrought by the war, the development of her natural resources, including the utilizing of the great water power of the Jordan. Their work is being done with the approval of British and American authorities.

Fund. When the first battalion of the new Jewish reigment paraded the streets of London, they were given an enthusiastic reception and were permitted to carry, with the Union Jack, the Zionist flag with the shield of David, bearing the inscription, "If I forget thee, O, Jerusalem, let my right hand forgets its cunning," and the bands played, "The Hope," now recognized as the Jewish national anthem.

Dr. C. I. Scofield, rightfully I think, recognizes the fact that Jewish history past, present and future, naturally falls into seven well defined epochs; the first of which comprises about six hundred years from the call of Abraham to the making of the unconditional contract above referred to. Under this contract the family became twelve tribes; but the period closed with the Egyptian bondage.

The second period extends from the exodus from Egypt to their establishment of the Jews in their own land—the land of "The Land of the Fig Tree Sign." It was during this period that they secured their national unity under the reign of the fifteen judges.

The third period covers the time of the kings from Saul to Zedekiah, and includes the establishment of the contract with David, confirmed by the oath of Jehovah, yet to be fulfilled, in the personal reign of the Lord Jesus Christ of the dynasty of David, on the throne of his father David in Jerusalem.

The fourth period, that of the captivity, followed, extending in a larger sense, to the present time. The fifth period, that of the restoration of a remnant of Judah, seventy years after the captivity of Judah, began and extended to the year 70 of the Christian era, when, as predicted by Christ the city and temple were destroyed, and the Jews again scattered—has been called the second Hebrew commonwealth. It was that, in no sense, however, for, from the conquest of Nebuchadnezzar to the present moment, the home of the Jew has been trodden under foot of the Gentiles.

The sixth period is the one in which we live—from the final dispersion of the Jews A. D. 70, to the yet future regathering, conversion and restoration of the whole nation to the land—not of Judah and Benjamin only, the "Jews," but of "all Israel" (Romans 11:25, 26).

The seventh period is wholly prophetic and wholly glorious. It is the age to come, when Israel will be subjects of the Messiah in the thousand-year reign, generally called the Chiliad or Millenium, which was contracted to David and his seed by the Lord God himself, a kingdom of the dynasty of David and of the son of David whose dominating characteristic will be spirituality, whose administration of justice will be infallible because based upon absolute knowledge; whose ever blessed motto will be peace, peace everywhere, even in the heart of the beast; a kingdom in which the subjects will know each other and know their king—when Israel shall be restored, partly believing and partly unbelieving, and yet to be converted when comes the Glorious King of life and light to "The Land of the Fig Tree Sign."

To stand, on Friday evenings, at the wailing place in Jerusalem, as I have done, by the remnant of the old wall which still stands, and see those old refugees stand there with portions of the scriptures in their hands and chanting, amid tears of sorrow and joy, the promises of God concerning their return to their own land, is pathetic and a beautiful miracle of faith. For instance (Jer. 31:7, 10) "for thus saith the Lord; sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel. Behold, I will bring them from the north country and gather them from the coasts of the earth , and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together; a great company shall return thither. They shall come with weeping and with supplications will I lead them. I will cause them to walk by the rivers of water in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first born. Hear the word of the Lord, ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, "He that scattered Israel will gather him and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock."

In traveling from Damascus to Beersheba on horseback, finding the stranger inhabiting the land, noticing that God's people—the Jews—were strangers in the land, and noticing that from one end of the land to the others it was desolation, desert and disease, we could not help but think of what God said nearly four thousand years ago (Deut. 29:22-29) "So that the generation to come of your children that shall rise up after you, and the stranger shall come from a far land, shall say, when they see the plagues of that land, and the sicknesses which the Lord hath laid upon it; and that the whole land thereof is brimstone, and salt, and alkali, and that he is not sown, nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein, like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, which Jehovah overthrew in his wrath; even the nations shall say, wherefore hath Jehovah done thus unto this land? What meaneth the heat of this great anger, Then men shall say, because they have forsaken the contract of the Lord God of their fathers, which he made with them when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt. For they went and served other gods and worshiped them, gods whom they knew not, and whom he had not given unto them; and the anger of the Lord was kindled against this land to bring upon it all the curses that are written in this book."

As I stood upon the top of Dr. Dunn's house north of Jerusalem, with my field glasses in hand, and beheld the carriages following the new boulevard outside the city, I was surprised and delighted beyond measure to have the doctor read to me while I was looking, (Jer. 31:38-40) "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord from the Tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner. And the measuring line shall yet go forth against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath. And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the Brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse gate toward the East, shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more forever." There is not a civil engineer in this country, who can make a set of blue prints any more accurately than this prophecy written twenty-five hundred years before the fulfillment. The fact is that these identical spots are places at which the boulevard turns in compassing that new portion of the city which is being built outside the walls and in which a large portion of the residents of the Holy City abide in safety.

In the parable of the fig tree, remember Jesus said, that "this race shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." In compassing the city several times upon the back of a burro, we found every gate standing open, save one. The gate in the east wall facing the Mount of Olives is walled shut—inside and out. The Mohammedans know that the Christians look for the return of the Christ, according to the gospel, to the spot whence he left; to prevent his entrance to the Holy Place, they have several hundred years ago, walled this gate shut. How significant when we read from Ezekiel's prophecy, (Ezek. 44:1-3) 'Then he brought back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary, which looketh toward the east; and it was shut. Then the Lord said unto me; this gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord, the God of Israel hath entered in by it, therefore, it shall be shut. It is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread before the Lord; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same."

The fig leaves are surely putting forth, and the season is well advanced, for when one stands and looks at the Beautiful Gate, which at one time was overlaid with the gold of the Queen of Sheba and the gate where the blind man sat and asked alms of Peter and John, and sees it walled shut inside and out, and its pillars overlaid with gilt in imitation of the original gold, his eyes will unobtrusively rise above the wall and scale the Mount of Olives in the distance beyond and behold the spot to which the King shall return to reign when he enters this gate, when he comes to the "Land of the Fig Tree Sign."

Outside the wall one day, while seated upon a Mohammedan grave to rest and read and meditate, a son of Ishmael slipped up behind me and endeavored to take my life with a dangerous looking knife which he had concealed. Escaping his anger we lay down upon the ground near the beautiful gate outside the wall to rest and reflect. When all had become quiet, I heard running water, as it were, falling over some rocks, and knowing that there were no rivers in Jerusalem because it stands on the tops of four mountains, and knowing also, that there are no water works installed, I called the attention of my traveling companions to this running water. They were equally dumbfounded. Upon investigation we were unable to solve the problem. Failing, as we did, we repaired to the city and sought information from Mousa Tanus, Jameel Nissaire, Demetrius Tados, Saleem Stphan, Tewfick Farrallah, and even our own Dr. Selah Merrill, Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States of America, but all to no avail. We again were compelled to return to the never failing source of information—the guide book of that land, which is the Holy Word of God (Zech. 14:12) "And it shall be in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea; in summer and in winter it shall be." What a satisfaction. As we stood outside the wall and looked east toward the north end of hinder sea (Dead Sea). sixteen miles away, our view was obstructed by one thing only—the Mount of Olives. Jerusalem stands 2700 feet above the level of the ocean. while the bosom of the Dead Sea is fully 1300 feet below the level of the ocan, making a fall of 4,000 feet in sixteen miles. The canyons leading down from Jerusalem to the Dead Sea are perfectly adequate to contain the torrent of water that is to run down and fill up that country from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem; but we were unable to figure how the water, as prophesied here, was to overcome this obstacle of the Mount of Olives, which is some hundreds of feet higher than the Temple platform; but we read again, in the Word of God (Zech. 14:4) "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the East and toward the West, and there shall be a great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north and half of it toward the south." That settles it. That answers the question. That certainly once for all, does away with this post-millennial method of spiritualizing prophecy. When this mountain is divided according to the Word of the Lord, which is so reasonable and so apparent, and this water from the Mount of Moriah, flowing both ways, to the Mediterranean west, and to the Dead Sea east, filling up that great alkali sink-hole, which is the lowest place in the world and which has no outlet, and which is evidently the extreme north end of the Gulf of Akaba, then will be fulfilled that scripture which says (Zech. 14:10) "And it shall be lifted up and inhabited in her place, and men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction. And the great inland sea of commerce will be provided and a port for all the great east country in Gilead beyond Jordan, and a commercial waterway connecting the great seas, making Jerusalem also an enviable place as the capital of the world. "When the Lord shall be one and his name one, and when his word shall go forth from Jerusalem, and he shall be King over all the earth;" when that great new temple of Ezekiel shall be built upon the top of Mount Moriah, where have stood other Jewish temples in the days gone by, and when, after Anti-Christ shall have deceived the nations and Israel, and when the two witnesses (Rev. 11:3) shall have borne testimony to his iniquity, and when the KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS shall have come at the head of the armies of heaven (Rev. 19:11-16) to establish righteousness in the earth, then and only then, shall peace reign upon the earth; and then and only then, shall "The Land of the Fig Tree Sign" come to her own, and blossom again as the Rose of Sharon; and then shall the Shekinah of the Great Jehovah, which appeared at Eden's gate to keep the way of the tree of life; which flickered as a lambent flame on Mount Horeb, as Moses' celestial credential; which hung as a stupendous canopy over Mount Sinai, when the law giver was God's stenographer; which marshaled the hosts of Israel for forty long years through the wilderness of Sinai; which dwelt as the very presence of the Jehovah of Hosts on the mercy seat between the Cherubim in the tabernacle and temple; and which, after centuries of eclipse, flashed forth on the Mount of Transfiguration, showing the glorified Christ in the kingdom that is to come, and which now in reality comes as the very clothing of the Bride of Christ who is with him, and who is to rule and reign with him one thousand years on the throne of his father David in "The Land of the Fig Tree Sign."

Impromptu Flashes

BY W. J. H. BAUMAN

My, O my! How weak and mean we human mortals are when left to ourselves.

Jesus said: "Without me ye can do nothing. Let us pray.

He also said, "Ask, and ye shall receive." Let us continue to pray.

He also said, "In all things give thanks." So, when we pray, let our hearts overflow with thankfulness.

Well, at least three-fourths of our recent conference was splendid.

Perhaps it might be well to be somewhat guarded along theatrical lines at our conferences.

Say, don't you think it would be a pretty good idea if we would uncover our own faults before we talk so much about those of other people? It is said that "open confession is good for the soul."

O tattler! Thou art a despicable and brutish fiend.

Is it not as easy to pray for a wrongdoer as it is to parade his faults before the public gaze. However necessary that may sometimes become when public welfare is at stake.

There is an incomprehensible difference between a willful and a helpless sin.

Ancient Biblical doctrines and modern progress along lines for development, should join hands.

Age for counsel, youth for action, is a splendid motto.

Merit does not of necessity have its center in old age. Neither in youthfulness, but rather in usefulness.

Wisdom should be regarded as a valuable jewel in the pulpit. Self-exaltation and cowardice—twins—are detestable intrusions.

Fondness to criticize is father to the tattler.

The present manifold and literal fulfillment of ancient prophecies should waken up the church and drive lukewarmness into the lower regions its natural home.

The devil isn't at all particular as to the methods he employs to get you. He would just as leave lead you through the streets of human refinement as to drag you through the slush of slums.

The church of today might learn a great and exceedingly important lesson in the school of worldly enthusiasm. Jesus meant something when he said: "The children of this world in their generation are wiser than the children of light."

Say, dear reader, why do you attend church anyway? Is it to worship God or to simply be entertained.

Enlargement of vision in things spiritual should be earnestly and prayerfully sought after by every professed Christian.

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

The epidemic of Spanish Influenza or "La Grippe," whichever it may be that has been sweeping over the eastern portion of America has played havoc with the lives of many of the young men of the country. To combat this disease drastic measures have been taken by the health officers of many of the states where it has been most in evidence.

As announced last week the Pennsylvania Brethren conference was postponed. Monday night we started for the Indiana conference and upon arrival on Tuesday morning learned that the Indiana health officials had forbidden public meetings within that state. A sign was posted by the conference officers in front of the church stating that this meeting was not open to the public, and then the delegates present proceeded to give their reports which were acted upon, new members of the various boards and the new conference officers were elected and the conference adjourned at noon. It was indeed a short conference, but it was the best that could be done. And as for the Iliokota and Kanemorado conferences we have had no report, but we trust their meetings were not interfered with.

Among the many meetings interrupted by the closing orders from the health officers of the states were the Rally Day programs by a number of Brethren Sunday schools; but the Johnstown First Brethren Sunday school beat the influenza and had its Rally Day on September 29. This school more than reached the goals set for the day. The missionary offering of $268.35 was especially commendable. The Rally Day Program published by the Brethren Publishing Company was used in this service and the secretary of the school reports it most satisfactory. Getting out this program was an experiment for our publishing house and it was impossible to know how many to print. Two editions were run off the press and even then we were obliged to return the money to a few schools that were late in getting orders in because we sold out both editions completely. Another year we hope to get a similar program out at least one month earlier and to print a sufficiently large edition that all Brethren schools can be supplied.

Brother Carpenter's report this week is a little longer than usual, but it is an unusual report. It should be read from the beginning to the end for many things are revealed in it. The great need of work yet to be done among the mountaineers of Kentucky is revealed by the first item of the report and also by the statement concerning the Jackson Federal Court. Then the combination need as stated in connection with the announcement of the lack of a matron for the girls' dormitory at Riverside, and also for more seats for the pupils should certainly find a response somewhere in the church. Surely there is a capable woman somewhere in the church that will feel the call to do this great work at Riverside. Then Brother Carpenter's announcement concering the payment of pledges given at the Winona Conference should be heeded, especially in the case of those given for the Washington, D. C. church. This matter should not be allowed to drag. And lastly, what Brother Carpenter reports about the work at Muncie and Peru, Indiana, is indeed encouraging. The work at these points is going forward.

Just the way in which interesting bits of news may be made from the little things that are constantly occurring among the churches is indicated by the brief report of the work or doings of one Sunday school class in South Bend, Indiana. Well indeed does the writer remember when this efficient teacher spoken of as a girl confessed Christ at a Thursday night meeting at Flora, Indiana, years ago and requested baptism the same hour of the night. This was during the period of dark days for the Brethren church in Flora, and one could at that time hardly prophesy the great future for the Flora church nor of the efficient workers that should go out from among her numbers. This item from South Bend should be a fruitful suggestion to other churches and schools, as such items are appreciated. Just the other day one of the leading laymen of the Flora church said to the writer, "Why don't our pastors or some church correspondent from the churches report more frequently?" He expressed an opinion that there should be at least a quarterly report or bit of news from every church in the brotherhood, and we agreed with him perfectly. These reports need not be long but they should be frequent.

Is there another Sunday school in the Brethren church that can equal the record made by the school at La Verne, California, during the three hottest months of the year? The report from this school as given by Sister Good is certainly good and we only wish there might be many other schools that are able to make similar reports of their extra exertions during this time when too many schools go on a vacation. The average attendance of this school as compared with its enrollment was remarkably good. The work of the Christian Endeavor society as well as the work of the church proper at this place also seems to be in a specially worthwhile condition.

Last summer we received a small order for Sunday school supplies from a new point in Michigan where there is no Brethren organization, and this week we have a report from that point. It is the desire of our contributor that some way may be opened up to organize and build up a Brethren church in this place. The name of the place itself is very suggestive of a Brethren work being accomplished there. The Sunday school is a good way to start such a work and we would advise our sister to continue this work until something more can be done.

Sister Boothe reports that N. W. Jennings is doing a splendid work for the Lord in Oak Hill and Salem congregations, West Virginia. Brother Jennings expects to spend about eight weeks in this community and then we have a promise of a full report of the meetings.

It cheers the hearts of the older brethren in the ministry whose days of active service are over to be remembered as Brother and Sister Swihart have been just recently. Not much earthly compensation was given preachers during the days of greatest activity by Brother Swihart and the remembrances he receives in his old age are greatly appreciated.

W. J. H. Bauman asks us to inform the brotherhood that his address is now Morrill, Kansas.

Another splendid article from the pen of E. M. Cobb appears in this issue. Only a few days ago we received a letter from an isolated sister in which she expressed her great appreciation of Brother Cobb's last doctrinal contribution. We have many isolated members of the Brethren church who are constant readers of the Evangelist and if our pastors but knew it they can preach to larger congregations of isolated members of the Brethren church every week through the columns of the Evangelist than they scarcely ever do in their churches.

Albert Trent makes a special announcement to the churches of Pennsylvania in behalf of Brother Watson who is under quarantine because of the Spanish Influenza. It is hoped the epidemic may pass away soon and that the conference which was postponed may yet be held this fall.

The widespread effect of the Influenza epidemic is indicated in the reports from George S. Baer concerning the closing of a meeting at North Georgetown, Ohio, and of L. G. Wood, of Roanoke, Virginia. This seems to be satan's inning, but the time will come when the children of God will again come into their own and we trust they may be able to completely rout the forces of the evil one.

Live Coals

The writer has heard his aged mother tell of the experiences of the pioneers of nearly three-quarters of a century ago and of how thy had to to make up for the things so common now but which were then entirely lacking on the frontier. With common matches used by the billion all around us and with electric and gas lights almost everywhere some of us forget that there are still those living among us who in the days of their childhood had none of these things, not even an oil lamp, but depended entirely upon flint and steel and the tallow dip and the old grease lamp.

The home fires were supposed to be kept burning in the old fashioned fire-place the year around, but sometimes, in spite of careful banking up the coals at night when morning came there were no coals upon the hearth, and then some of the children were sent hastily to a neighbors to borrow a few live coals. Of this experience I have heard my mother tell, but to us of the present generation it seems like a tale of the middle ages, and yet this very performance is repeated morning after morning in some sections of the world even today.

It is said that upon the table-land of Asia Minor, the women may be seen at the dayn of day going out into the open and looking around at their neighbors' chimneys. They are looking for a chimney from which smoke may be arising and upon the discovery of such a one they make their way toward it to borrow "live coals" with which to kindle fires in their own homes. They cannot see the fire from a distance but they can see its smoke and thus they know it is there.

This principle holds true in one's Christian life. There are many who let the fires of their Christian activities die out over night or during the week and there are others who have not as yet kindled their fire. Where shall they go to get the live coals necessary to start a fire in the hearth of their own hearts? Do you say they shall go to Christ? But who is to show them the way except those who have the fires of his love burning perpetually in their hearts, the incense from which rises above them even as the smoke rises from the oriental chimneys and invites the neighbors to come for live coals. The Christian should always be in a position to furnish a few live coals to those who may need them to kindle their own fires, and we take it that many of us are being watched by our neighbors more closely than we realize and our own lives are in the balance and are being constantly weighed by them. It is a pertinent question to ask ourselves, Would our neighbors come to us to thus borrow a few live coals? If not, why not?

Some years ago when it fell to the lot of the writer to raise the money to compensate an evangelist who had been conducting a union evangelistic meeting a friend who found it impossible to be present on the Sunday morning when this was to be done, handed us a check, signed in blank, with the statement: "I will not be able to be at the meeting in the morning, so here is my signed check and when you begin raising the money just fill in the amount you think I ought to contribute and it will be all right." This was a great opportunity and a great confidence, but neither were to be abused or both would be destroyed.

Each one of us has such a friend at all times who, though he has not given into our hands any checks signed in blank, has given us eternal promises of confidence and trust, if we have first learned to trust him and to take him at his word. Jesus Christ has placed at our disposal all the rich store of his promises, and his promises are sure. They provide for every contingency, every adversity, every difficulty that can happen to man. They are the "exceeding great and precious promises" spoken of by the Apostle, and they are left at our disposal, so if we suffer from spiritual poverty or famine it is because we have not the same confidence in our Lord that he has in us and we fail to get into line so that we may claim these promises. Of course some of us would rather receive their fulfilment in our own way, but we must accept the Lord's way if we would receive the full benefit of all his promises.

Religious Democracy or Democratic Religion

It is contended by some that while the world is being made "safe for democracy," the church is developing a contrary tendency. A religious publication of Chicago declares that an episcopacy in the church stands in the road of the "democracy which characterized Jesus Christ and his disciples." This journal declares that, "In the name of efficiency, many denominations are getting more centralization of ecclesiastical power. How easy it is for a seeming democracy in religion to become an oligarchy and at last a tyranny is only too well illustrated by the history of the church." Following this same line of thought this paper further states:

> Those who hold the social view of religion insist that religion shall always embody the highest ideals of the social structure. Should the church of Jesus Christ these days fail to convince the world that it is a truly democratic institution, then we may look for new religious organizations to arise (as proposed even now by some literary men), and if these were democratic and in other ways serviceable, one could imagine an era of eclipse for Christianity.
> Our task is to define what true democracy in religion is. Certainly it could involve no coercion of opinion. There must be room for the free expression and activity of lay as well as clerical elements in the church. There must be the respect for human life of every sort and the sympathy without which no individual and no church can claim to be democratic in spirit.

WITH WHICH WE HOLD TO AND PREACH AS ESSENTIAL PARTS OF THE GOSPEL WHAT OTHER PROTESTANT BODIES DISREGARD, NEGLECT OR REJECT. And here may I mention our Trine Immersion as Christian Baptism, our Communion Service including the Feet-washing, the Lord's Supper and the Communion of the bread and wine. Let me say at once though, for fear of being misunderstood, that these latter elements of faith do not make one Brethren in and of themselves. To state our contention in other words it takes the WHOLE GOSPEL as the content of one's faith to make one truly Brethren,—shall I not say CHRISTIAN? And it is just because we believe in the apostolic and patristic baptism as instituted by the Lord himself that we insist upon Trine Immersion. We believe it and must therefore preach it or be false to our profession. For the same reason we believe and practice the Communion as instituted by the Lord Jesus himself and we must preach and teach it or be traitor to him whom we profess to believe. For the same reasons we believe and teach and MUST PREACH repentance, faith, the divinity of Jesus Christ, holiness, the consummation of the age, or any New Testament doctrine. But this makes us dogmatic. It makes us doctrinal preachers. Mark the words and their order— belief, conviction then character. Also these in their order, the truths of the Gospel, their unequivocal acceptation then their fearless proclamation to men. This means that character cannot be divorced from conviction and conviction grows out of one's beliefs. Therefore it does make all the difference possible what a man believes. The issues of life grow out of a man's beliefs. And the second truth indicated in the underscored phrases is just as pointed and singly dynamic, namely, one will not preach with fearless and undaunted confidence what he does not fully accept. Therefore the fullest acceptance of the whole gospel is essential to the proclamation of a message that will convict, convert and save sinners. DOES IT MATTER WHAT ONE BELIEVES? From a Brethren point of view it does. MILLER.

FOUR MAXIMS FOR MISSION STUDY

By Mrs. Eva C. Wade

A mission study book is the most concentrated curriculum in existance. Under one simple and unassuming cover lie courses in geography, history, psycology, etymology, mathematics, agriculture, ancient and modern languages, sociology and theology. Its themes range from ancient cults and religion to the modern development of civic consciousness; from Oceanica to Oshkosha; from moral aims to immoral pagans. Its pages teem with foot-notes and references, and its bibliography lists fascinating books that expand the curriculum to the proportions of a correspondence school catalogue. Therefore it may well be that both teacher and student of mission study books stand rather appalled before each fresh volume as it is hurried from the press and pressed upon the hurried. And, in such perplexity, it has been known to happen that all of these courses represented in a given book were taught in "spatter work" method without any particular reference to the title which would indicate the chief reason for the book's existance, and the real missionary theme.

1. "Major in Missions"

Doubtless you recognze the need of this from those painful moments when you conducted a review and discovered a full knowledge of the irrigating systems of Utah but no clear perception of any Mormon doctrines or evoked enthusiasm concerning silk worm culture in Japan without any hint of interest in Christian education of the Japanese. All of which proved that you had not "majored" in missions," and had not definitely set for yourself and your class a great missionary truth around which all these other most interesting truths should center. In this connection it is well to urge the value of reading prefaces, forwards and dedications in books. Like the bibliography, they seem non-existent to some leaders who beiove in a course of teaching, unhampered by the narrow restriction of author and authorities, as cultivating more fully the imaginative faculties of the students. However broad your field of learning or whatever tempting bypaths of instruction you find, remember in this case your definite business is to magnify the great, vital impulse of Christian missions and explain its manifestation in this particular field under discussion. However discreetly you word it to encourage the uninterested or the uninformed, let your central theme be clearly the one which animated those who provided this book for inspiration and instruction. And let this theme be repeated and made familiar as the various parts of the book are studied and related to it, thus naturally making evident that you "Major in Missions."

2. "Clear Outlines Required"

Written as these books are by fine and fallible people with fine and true purpose, they do not pretend to be the final word on any subject, and none of them bear the classic phrase "Noli me tangere." Nay, brave souls have even dared to differ from some statements made therein just as they would from theological volumes or scientific bulletins. These books are guides to independent thought and further research by both leader and students. Therefore a clear and complete outline of the special missionary truth presented in this book may well show rearrangement, addition or subtraction of material foud in the book. And the ability to do this and not weaken the legitimate authority and appeal of the text book is one of the things that make a good leader. A good, clear outline of book and chapters is one of the most valuable contributions a leader can give to a class, or better still, one of the most valuable contributions a leader can elicit from a class, keeping in mind the fact that an outline does not mean a recapitulation of every paragraph heading in the book, but a simple, coherent analysis of the book and its teachings.

3. "Making the Study Book Live"

Imagination is being cultivated these war times, when we must people the fair plains of France with our loved ones and follow them with our dreams and prayers. Make your far-off jungles, rice fields, mountains and islands real and your dates of history alive with personalities that made them remembered. Take your training from any child for he can make vivid either Joan of Arc "a lady in a uniform like my sister in the motor corps," or Dorcas "a nice lady sewing things like my mother at the Red Cross." And take heed to the homely old saying, "All is grist that comes to his mill" and apply it to this job of making your book alive to the class. There is no source too unlikely to yield ilustrative material, no student in your class who can not give some contribution to clearer understanding of the subject. Even the girl who has no talent but the making of paper dolls made a whole chapter vivid by her paper costumed dignitaries and prelates; and the other one, who was a devotee of the movies, came out with unexpected reinforcement of facts concerning scenery as shown in a recent educational film. And, making the study book live before your class, make sure that the truth of the study book will live and find fruition through your class for the final maxim is—

4. "Make Your Class Count"

For that is your final test as a leader and the final test of your teaching. Does your class count for anything more in the world's sum of Christian knowledge, understanding, sympathy and effort? Has something more of Divine force and zeal been freed for service through your class? Have you helped them make those intangible things public spirit or the awakening of Christian conscience? Have you stirred a sense of individual duty or the power of united forces? Have you made the master of life's great school more real? Then indeed has the crowded curriculum been worth while.

TO WIN IN MISSION STUDY

1. Adapt mission study to local conditions. A large lecture class will in many places stimulate interdenominational interest, and lead to the formation of smaller groups for more thorough work. In other communities neighborhood groups can meet in homes, usually in the evening, for five or six consecutive weeks, without a preliminary course of lectures.

The midweek prayer service is a capital place for men and women to discuss the books either in a preliminary period or during the hour. Variety in time, place and method should be always with a view of reaching the greatest possible number of individuals.

2. Recognize prevelant aversion to mental effort. If the word "study" causes terror or disinclination, call the gathering an "investigation committe," or "discussion class," or, as at the recent Blue Ridge Conference, "World Citizenship Class."

3. Prepare simple and clear outlines, usually in plain sight on blackboard or poster. Make discussions or questions logically follow the outline. Text books should be owned and marked. Assignments should be definite and condensed.

4. Discourage usually a one-day treatment of mission study books. Six consecutive periods (one to each chapter) will result in jaded minds in the audience. This leads to mental and spiritual indigestion. Instead of conservation, it is usually dissapation and distraction. Prayer has too small a place, posters and 'methods" are often crowded out, and the sale of literature is much less than in a class that meets for several consecutive days or weeks.

5. Push publicly early and persistently. Optimism as to value of class, popularity of book, personnel of subscribers to the course, and general charm of the plan will be a decided help. There is nothing like joy to make things go. Optimism is the condition of succes.

6. Allow no substitute to take the place of the "real thing." A missionary reading circle, a monthly missionary meeting, and a one-day relay development may all treat of the same mission study text book without exhausting its interest, or excluding the group study of the topic among those who are willing to give time and thought in exchange for profitable dividends on the investment.

7. Arrange finances without collections. Tickets procured in advance are more dignified.

8. Link missions with current events and world reconstruction. The war furnishes points of contact in vocabulary, strategy, sympathy and general education. Desire for guidance in prayer, information, generosity and patriotism is an asset today in the mission enterprise.

The Value of Education

As Seen through the Eyes of Ma Kaw, a Burmese Girl

Ma Kaw's mind is just bursting with excitement and anxiety. She is going to Normal School! Her little bundle of clothes and precious keepsakes is all ready, but can she ever get over those ten hundred miles?

Her mother and grandmother could neither of them tell whether a letter was upside down or not, and that no one in all the world could possibly be more educated than Ma Kaw who has finished the seventh grade. Then, too, none of them has ever seen a railway train or a steamboat, and though even the old grandmother could tramp over the mountains, that one thousand miles could not be traversed on foot.

In Ma Kaw's country on the border between Burma and China, when a woman goes from village to village she finds a companion to travel with her, but riding on a train costs money, and so Ma Kaw must go alone. How her heart beats at the thought, and how she wonders what the train will be like! But as she considers the hundreds of new things that have come into her life in the mission school, she makes up her mind that living or dying she will accomplish this new and terrifying adventure.

Her teacher has told her just what to do almost every moment of that long journey, and so on a Monday morning she starts for the nearest normal school, that she may return some day and be a teacher in her own old mission school.

Leaving her mountain home, followed by half her family, who never expect to see her again. She has a small wooden box containing a few clothes and a bamboo mat about two by four feet, in which her blanket and pillow are rolled up. She must spend the time from seven in the morning until five in the evening on the river steamer, and must have her mat to sit on. As soon as she gets on the steamer she seeks a place on the crowded deck. Seeing a family group all spread out—food box, babies and all, she puts her mat down by them.

At five o'clock she leaves the steamer and goes up the sandy bank of the old Irrawaddy to the wonderful iron horse she has heard so much about. She gets a coolie to carry her box, and then taking her bed and food box she follows the crowd. The train is full, but she finds a seat in a coach marked in several languages "women only." It is decorated also with the picture of a Burmese woman to show the meaning to those who can not read. Oh, how thankful she is for that mission school that has taught her so much!

For the sake of the teachers she has just left she determines to let not one bit of fear creep into her heart. All night she sits in her seat, and gets a few little naps. The next morning at six o'clock she must get on another iron horse. She wonders if there will be many, and how she will know which one to take, and whether the women's coach will be easy to find.

All night people have been getting on and off. Many interesting, even exciting things have been going on. And now there is a long train ready and headed for Mandalay, in the midst of a hubbub of coolies, fruit sellers, and so forth. Even rice and curry and ice cream can be had, and, while everyone seems to be eating something, there is a constant pushing and crowding to get a good seat. This time MaKaw gets a seat by a window, and is delighted to observe the strange people and novel sights.

Just before our friend reaches Mandalay she must make another change—and this time cross the old Irrawaddy on a ferry to take the Rangoon train. She finds the ferry boat so crowded that she has to hunt for even a place to stand. Women are there with bundles, pots and kettles on their heads, and babies strapped on their backs; priests are everywhere with their yellow robes and big fans to shield them from the gaze of women, followed by small boys who carry their belongings and wait upon them.

A big bunch of Chinese carpenters with their tool boxes take up much space, and everywhere are piled high great bags of rice, tins of oil, baskets of fruit and vegetables. Here a teacher from the far away normal school sees our girl all alone, and going to her introduces herself. But Ma Kaw has among her travel rules one commandment that tells her she must not talk to strangers on the way. Therefore although she has not had a real meal for nearly two days, and the stranger has asked her to have a dinner with her and her niece while they wait for the Rangood train, nevertheless she refuses and goes on her way alone.

Another half day and a night, on a train crowded to the utmost with people, boxes, baskets of rice, eggs, chickens, fruits—just everything, everywhere—and our little mountain maid must take another train and another ferry. Then, oh then, those hundreds of miles at last lie behind her. Now it is not only thankfulness that fills her heart, but also the realization that her family, her teachers, and all her school friends are very far away. An awful homesick wave dashes over her. But she overcomes it, and gets herself and her belongings into a wagon that is going to the school.

The adventure of a long and dangerous journey is over, but the horizon of mind and soul is just beginning to expand. The results for Ma Kaw and for her country, Burma, are such as only God can measure.

"HIT THE LINE HARD!"

By Ernest Bourner Allen

An audacious Ohio high school boy once wrote to Mr. Roosevelt, then President, asking him for a suitable slogan for his football team. With characteristic generosity Mr. Roosevelt replied, and in his letter gave the team this war cry:

"Don't flinch!
Don't foul!
Hit the line hard!"

It might prove a good slogan for some churches, for some Bible classes, and for some men.

Courage, Christian courtesy, and vigorous initiative in action are qualities which make for progress in the Kingdom of God.

What line of wickedness are you hitting hard today? What line of self-content? Does any foe of Christ fear your brave battling?

Here are five lines which need to be "hit hard" today. The un-American saloon, the world-wide war madness, commercialized vice, unregenerated pleasures, and the unconverted pocketbook. Do any of these lines reach near your door?

Good Literature to the Front

When you go to church on Sunday and try to recall all the things for which you should be thankful, don't forget to mention good books, magazines and papers. What a large place is occupied in our lives by the stream of literature which pours into our homes. Then let your imagination play around the fact that across the seas there are communities of people won to Christ through your gifts and prayer and those you have sent them as missionaries, practically destitute of reading material. In connection with my foreign travels I have made it a point to examine the libraries of our native pastors. It has been pathetic in countries like Turkey and India to find only ten or twelve inches of books. And yet we expect these pastors to be the leaders of their nations intellectually, spiritually, and in practical ways. We are asking them to make bricks without straw and often without even clay. As for the laity, the men, women and children on our foreign fields, the possession of even one book is a note-worthy thing.

When this crying need has sunk into your consciousness, try to picture the vast populations of heathen people who have learned to read and who might be led to Christ and all the good things which come in his train if we could only furnish them with suitable books and papers. The keenness of Oriental people to read helpful literature is one of the outstanding facts of our times. In Tokyo there is a street a mile and a half long, lined with book shops on both sides, and these shops are thronged at all hours. There is nothing like this in London, New York or Boston. In China the book is almost worshipped by the intelligent classes. In Moslem lands it is the same way. Clearly, literature furnishes one of the most effective approaches to non-Christian people. It is strange that the mission boards are not making larger use of this agency. The case is rendered stronger when we consider that in mission lands the forces of evil are making an extensive use of literature for the corruption of men's bodies and souls. The foreign book market is being flooded by skeptical, atheistic and even obscene works. In India books are being sold whose titles no publisher would dare to print. Clearly the time has come when the boards must bring their literature departments to the front. Here is one of the greatest fields for the unselfish investment of money. Gifts for literature work will count tremendously for the Kingdom. And it is a field practically unentered by those who stand ready to help in every good enterprise. I covet for such the opportunity to spread Christian literature among non-Christian people.

CORNELIUS H. PATTON,

Our Youngest Readers

The Growing Rabbit

A young cotton-tailed rabbit a few days before leaving the nest has well-nigh the equipment of the race. His fears of the unusual is considerable. His leg muscles are strong. He washes his face and all the long fur from his nose to his cotton-tail; he knows how to dig; he turns his long ears or lifts his senstitive notsrils in the direction of sound or odor. He is very silent, seldom using his high-pitched voice and always moving softly on his padded feet. He crouches motionless to escape an enemy without having observed that his coat matches the ground in color. He does all these things without having been taught. He wanders only a little way from the nest. If he attempts even to cross the road, he may find himself in a wheel rut so deep for his diminutive size that he has difficulty in scrambling out.

In his play he practices the simple activities of his later life. It is endless fun to hop and hop, though sometimes the distance covered is so short that he goes up and down like a bobbing mechanical toy wound up. He is continually at the game of jumping with light, high springs over his companions' backs. He tests everything with his nose and then with his teeth. He cautiously pokes his head into every hole he finds. At the slightest sound or near movement an instantaneous spring of the hind legs lands Bunny two or three feet away, where he "freezes," looking remarkably as if made up of several pieces put together—the round body, the head jointed into that and four little pegs set in underneath for legs. He is continuously getting more or less seriously frightened and jumping away in some unexpected direction, crouching on the ground or racing to the nest. If there proves to be no danger he often gives a series of high, short jumps as if he were a rebounding rubber ball, or shakes himself off his feet so that he wavers in the air a moment before regaining his balance. He never goes round anything that he can crawl under and what he cannot go under he tries to climb over. He stretches up beside a stone and after finding that he cannot possibly scale it, he jumps up, and immediately down on the other side. Then he does it all over again and again, and still again before something else attracts him.

But in a week or ten days more Bunny has changed from babyhood to youth and according to the customs of his race is living an independent existence. He has his own "squat" at the edge of the woods, where he sits and nods with open sleepy-looking eyes. He is solitary in habit except in the late afternoon and at night when he eats and plays with the other rabbits of the neighborhood and probably has again the warm taken-care-of feeling of the nest as he touches noses with some of his baby companions.

His teeth have grown so sharp and strong that they urge him to bite every tough twig, lichen and piece of bark. His claws are longer and sharper and with the increased development of his leg muscles give him some slight means of defense. His ears have increased in size. The gray fur of his cotton-tail and about his nostrils has become white. A wild look has taken the place of the baby expression in his wide black eyes (the brown iris wholy contracts at night). He dashes at breakneck speed in curving lines, to stop with alarming suddenness. He makes every movement, if only to turn his head, with startling alertness, an expression of joyousness and freedom.

As to his eating, he disdains ragweed, mustard, amaranth and many other plants; but he often takes a nibble in passing of curled dock peppergrass and pigweed. He may take more than a nibble of plantain and mallow. But how he does like clover! He hunts for it among the grass and weeds and sits down in contentment when he finds a plant. He buries his head in it and greedily eats the flowers first, sticking out his slim, long tongue at the right, then at the left, and wiggling his expressive mouth and nose with great satisfaction as he finishes. After disposing of a leaf he chews the stem down to the ground. He may even dig up the roots. Sometimes two young rabbits get hold of the same clover and the two heads tug and pull with never an effort to use the hands in the contest. One surprising thing about Bunny is that he never uses his front feet to manage his food but instead awkwardly pulls and pushes it about with his mouth and head.—Selected.

A Friendly Woodpecker

In the Isabella County Courier, of Mt. Pleasant, Michigan, we find this account of a woodpecker coming to the relief of a mother robin:

On Friday last occurred a peculiar incident in the garden of a Main street home. A cry of distress from the birds sent the man of the house to find out the cause, and he discovered a baby robin being mauled by a cat. The animal was driven off, and the bird placed in a comfortable position, and the man watched the mother robin feed it and care for it for two hours. Here is the strange part of the story. During those two hours the mother robin never left its charge for a moment, and the food for the baby robin was provided at very regular intervals by a woodpecker from which the mother robin took and fed it to the baby robin, which recovered, as might be expected, after such excellent nursing.

Kindness to Wild Animals.

(Below we print the prize-winning essay, which received a silver loving cup in the recent contest in the schools of Melrose, Mass., offered by the Humane Society of that city. It was written by Emily Eldredge, of the seventh grade of the Washington school.)

From the time God said unto Noah, "And of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the Ark, to keep them alive with thee: they shall be male and female," to the present day, there have been both domestic and wild animals on earth. It is a natural impulse with people to be more kind to domestic than wild animals. Kindness to wild animals, however, is quite as essential as kindness to those domesticated. Sometimes the greatest kindness that can be shown to a wild animal is to shoot it. This is only when it is caught in a trap or badly wounded.

Many people have hunted and killed, just for their own selfish pleasure, certain kinds of our animals until some species are nearly extinct. Practically all the buffalo left in the country are in the zoological gardens. Furthermore, deer were being killed in such large numbers, that many legislatures were obliged to enact laws restricting the shooting of deer to a very short season.

In spite of the fact that there are such laws, and game wardens, paid by the State, to enforce them, hundreds of deer are shot every year out of season.

One dark night in July, we looked from a camp on the shore of Moosetookmeguntic Lake, and saw a light moving in the virgin forest on the opposite shore. The light and an occasional echo of a shot told that the poachers were at work. They work mostly at night, and use a very bright light to blind the deer so they can shoot it. There is a standing offer of reward to any one who can convict a poacher.

We visited Soule Island Camps the next day and saw a little fawn, that, we learned, was found in the forest where the lights were seen the night before.

The deer seemed to fascinate us, for we went over to see it many times, and on our last visit, in September, found that the deer was gone. We asked about it and were told this story.

It slept in a boat-house and awoke one night with the smell of smoke in its nostrils. The door was shut so it bounded gracefully through the open window and went to the porch where the owner was sitting. It went up to him and softly rubbed its head on his shoulder. The man looked up and saw the roof of his boat-house in flames. He ran down, quickly unloosed his boats, and pushed them into the lake. Just as he got out the roof fell in.

In this case, as in many others, kindnes to animals, as to men, had its own reward. The deer was rewarded with the greatest kindness that can be given a wild animal in captivity—its freedom.

News From the Field

HOME MISSION NOTES

Still "Bloody Breathitt"

On September 14 at Whick, where two of our workers conducted a Sunday school for a time, Elijah Robers, County Game Warden, was assassinated. "The Jackson Times," kindly sent us by brother C. N. Akens of Riverside, states that seven shots were fired and five took effect, the murderers hiding in ambush. Mr. Roberts was a good man and did his duty as an officer of the law, directing his efforts against violators of game and election laws and heading recently several raids on moonshine stills. He was known to have some enemies because of his law enforcement, having secured a number of convictions resulting in the imprisonment of the offenders. The law abiding citizens of the county are worked up and are determined that justice shall take her course. "Beautiful Breathitt" is yet quite "Bloody," although marked improvement over past conditions is quite evident.

Jackson Federal Court

"The Lexington Herald" says of the September term of court, "The Bolin case, where a moonshiner sat as a member of a grand jury without his being called and drew his pay after trying to stave off indictments against some moonshiners will be heard. Besides this case there are one of sedition, two of slackers, twelve moonshining cases and eight postoffice cases in which embezzlement or rifling of the mails is charged." In the midst of such communities our mission workers are laboring to bring the gospel light and thus drive out sin which has become so strongly entrenched among the mountain people. The Lord bless and encourage and strengthen our faithful laborers as they give themselves in his service.

Matron and Seats

The need of a matron for the girls' dormitory has not been met. The seats for school use at Riverside have not been found. This notice ought to bring immediate results. Surely the matron is somewhere "hiding among the stuff" and surely the seats might be found. Pray and try.

Muncie, Indiana

We just learned that the Brethren congregation of Muncie, led by J. L. Kimmel, are worshiping, not in their tent, but in "The Little White Chapel." Whatever their temporary quarters may be we like the name. It ought to strike as popular a chord among the public as did "The Little Brown Church," the term by which the First Brethren church in Peru is quite generally known. May the Lord richly bless the Muncie brethren in "The Little White Chapel."

Peru, Indiana

Plans are on foot in Peru for a simultaneous evangelistic campaign in the federated churches of the city, the same to begin November 10. "The Welsh Evangelist" from South Bend, brother A. E. Thomas, will lead the campaign in "The Little Brown Church." Let the brotherhood pray for a great victory in a place where the victories are not easily won.

The proverbial "Summer Slump" missed the Peru Sunday school during the very hot summer months. A new and novel and timely "Submarine Chaser Race" to Berlin and back helped to keep up the interest, and the results during August and September leading up to Rally Day on October 6 were hightly gratifying. The average attendance for the race was 97 and the average offering was $7.91. October is "Rally Month" and something doing every Sunday. What is the use of having a Sunday school unless there is something worth while being accomplished. There were four confessions and at least five will be added to the church. "Soul-winning" is the "business" of our Sunday school and all plans and methods must help to that end. Two special programs were given on Rally Day, on which day the Sunday school attendance was 107 and the offering $16.18.

G. C. CARPENTER.

Over the Top For Johnstown

The First Brethren Sunday school of Johnstown observed her annual Roll Call and Rally Day, September 29, 1918.

The goals set by the officers to be attained were 500 present and $100 offering for missions. The results attained were 510 present and $268.35 offering.

We used the programs published by the Brethren Publishing Company and found them most satisfactory.

It was a great day in the old Somerset Street church.

M. C. BOLE, Secretary.

Agreeably Surprised

We have recently been very agreeably and unexpectedly surprised, and in justice to the donors we wish to express our thankfulness through the medium of the Evangelist, as follows:

First, for a letter from Galveston, Indiana, from a sister whom we baptized near Bunker Hill, Indiana, many years ago when she was but a little girl, and although Viola lives isolated from her home congregation, she has remained faithful to her covenant and God all these years. This letter had a five dollar bill in it and the question was asked how near our birthday anniversary was at hand.

Next, we received a letter from another sister of the Loree church who was also baptized by us nearly forty yeare ago and became a charter member of that congregation where she still resides and stands firm to her profession. This sister asked me to send her several dozen brooms which she volunteered to sell for us. All such favors are highly appreciated by us.

Thirdly, here comes a letter from the secretary of this, the Loree congregation, with a twenty-five dollar check enclosed, with a brief sketch of their recent Home Coming. Says they had a large crowd and a good time and dinner was served in the basement and the afternoon was devoted to speeches and prayers for our soldiers. Then an offering was taken, this accompanied with such complimentary remarks of the work done there many years ago which something like false modesty forbids us to repeat.

After all, brethren, you may be sure it is a source of great satisfaction to know, as one member said, that we have not been forgotten. Our thanks to you brethren.

J. H. and LUCY SWIHART.

South Bend, Indiana

We would ask for a small space in the paper for a few words from the Ladies' Bible class of the First Brethren church of South Bend, Indiana.

I can say we have a class of ladies as much alive as any in our school and think I can safely says as much so as any class in our city. We have as our teacher Miss Maud Wingard, who is a most efficient teacher.

On September 29 we had Rally Day in our school. Our class went "over the top." The attendance was 53. The attendance of the whole school was very gratifying.

We have our class meetings each month at the homes of the members with a business session and social hour.

Recently we held a prayer meeting with one of our ladies who is an invalid and blind. We took with us our pastor Brother Rench who preached a little sermon for us. Such meetings are a great help to all present. This is only one thing that I will speak of at this time, but we are always busy helping others wherever we can. Our object is to win souls for Christ and the church. My prayer is that we may ever be found in the work for Christ.

A MEMBER.

Roanoke, Virginia

Our revival campaign was launched Sunday, September the 22, with Willis E. Ronk at the helm. The first week was the week of the Roanoke fair, which hindered the attendance somewhat, although the attendance was very good. By the beginning of the second week the Spanish influenza became an epidemic in the city and never before were there so many sick folks in Roanoke. The Sunday following the State Board of Health ordered the closing of all gatherings until further orders, which brought our meetings to an abrupt close, but all felt that it was a wise step in the right direction. We have no conversions to report, however, a sister was baptized in the first week of the meeting. The success of a meeting is not measured by the number of confessions that can be counted. This meeting was a success and our people are gratified with results. Brother Ronk was fully able for the occasion and brought great messages of the constructive type which struck deep in the lives of his hearers. In each of his messages he struck hard the note of loyalty to the OLD BOOK. The interest increased until the end and if we could have continued longer no doubt a number of conversions would have resulted. Now when the epidemic is over we shall try to gather fruit from the seed sowing. While in Roanoke Brother Ronk made friends both for the church and himself.

Telford, Tennessee

In response to an invitation from the Brethren of this place I reached them on Friday, August 2, preached that evening, conducted their communion on Saturday evening and preached Sunday A. M. and P. M. to good and appreciative audiences. Through the efforts of the loyal souls here the work is not only holding its own but actually gaining in power and influence. This is a country mission point but a mid-week prayer service is maintained with good attendance and interest. A splendid Sunday school is also on their program. Very nearly their entire membership attended the communion, which shows the growing and deepening of the spiritual life. I agree with Brother Allen in saying that it is a real pleasure to meet with these people. Remember us in the needy field of the southeast at the throne of grace.

L. G. WOOD.

Oak Hill and Salem

We are in the midst of one of the most interesting revivals Salem has ever enjoyed. Brother N. W. Jennings has been with us almost five weeks working in his usual earnest way and God is blessing his labor. A number of converts have been baptized and a greater number await baptism. We are thankful for answered prayer. More than one home is being made happy on account of God's Holy Spirit being on the throne. I imagine Satan himself regrets his defeat because souls are coming to Christ who have been in his service so long he thought they were secure from the Holy Spirit; but God said, "No, you are mine and I need you to work in my vineyard."

All who know N. W. Jennings know he doesn't shun to declare the whole gospel and he has been giving us some of the best messages we have heard for some time, but give God the praise for delivering through his servant the message that has helped to bring so many souls to Christ. He is to be with us still for a few weeks and we ask the brethren to pray for us. All especially who have preached for the Oak Hill church, who know us and who know the opposition we have to contend with and who know how badly we needed the revival, pray and pray earnestly that the revival may continue that the church may be built up and that we may all meet together around the great white throne where we will know no more heartaches, no more discouragement, no more sorrow for lost souls, but, thank God for his redeeming love; we will have eternal peace.

When the meetings at all the points are over we will send another report when we will be able to report the total number of conversions. Baptism again Sunday afternoon. Pray for us.

ESSIE BOOTHE.

Revival Meeting

Evangelist A. E. Thomas, of South Bend, Indiana, closed a series of stirring messages September 26 at the Williamstown Brethren church. Brother Thomas is an earnest and forceful speaker. He holds his audience spell bound as he delivers his strong gospel sermons. His service was very successful considering the great disadvantages under which he labored. It being a very busy time among farmers. This hindered his visiting and personal work also. He instilled in the members a spirit of more earnest and efficient work. In a word, he is surely a live wire.

W. D. HUMPHREY.

Epidemic Closes North Georgetown Meeting

We began an evangelistic campaign at North Georgetown, Ohio, September 29, with brother A. E. Thomas as evangelist. We were permitted to continue services but one week because of the Spanish influenza epidemic. Schools were closed, Liberty Loan meetings were called off in the township and churches closed. A splendid and promising interest was being created and it was a great disappointment to have to stop so suddenly, but there was nothing else to do under the circumstances. Besides, on Saturday night when we had planned a big patriotic meeting, we had the record rain of the year and there was such a continued down-pour all evening and night that no one could get out.

But the week of meetings did a great deal of good in the way of giving spiritual uplift to the members. Brother Thomas preached very good sermons and was rapidly winning the community to himself as was evidenced by the increase in attendance from night to night. Every day was spent by evangelist and pastor going in and out among the people and in the evening the pastor, for the want of a better one, assumed the role of song leader while Sister Thomas and brother Leander Stoffer gave valued assistance in singing the gospel in duet form. Then Brother Thomas would come on with a message that gripped the heart and convicted men of sin, of righteousness and judgment. We believe if we could have continued without interruption that a great blessing would have been brought to the North Georgetown church. But even as it was, it was not without good effect. We hope, however to be able to have Brother Thomas back with us again sometime when conditions are more favorable. Pray for the Brethren at this place.

GEO. S. BAER, Pastor.

PENNSYLVANIA CHURCHES, NOTICE

Brother J. F. Watson, Moderator of the Pennsylvania Conference, requests the writer to state through the Evangelist, that he is receiving numerous letters of inquiry as to what will be done regarding the work since our District Conference has been called off by the State Board of Health.

Brother Watson can not reply to these letters at this time as he is under quarantine on account of Mrs. Watson and their son Dick having been stricken with the Spanish Influenza.

As soon as conditions permit he will get in touch with the pastors of the state and by their help determine on the course that may seem best in the interests of our state work.

ALBERT TRENT.

Johnstown, Pa., October 10, 1918.

Long Beach, California

Since our conference in July closed and our pastor, L. S. Bauman and family have left for the General Conference and an extended evangelistic campaign, matters have been going on about as usual at the First Brethren church at Fifth and Cherry. Elder F. J. Reagan took up the pastorate in the place of Elder Bauman. He has ministered ably to the church. He has fed us on the "Word," which is the power of God unto salvation, and a goodly number have heeded the call; several entered the church. Our services have been well attended, the house has been filled both morning and evening, notwithstanding the fact it was vacation time.

We look for brother H. V. Wall and family back soon; they attended the General Conference, also N. H. Neilsen our church clerk. The Walls are making an extended trip through the east and are to go to Kentucky to look over the mission work there being carried on by the Brethren.

We regret to have Brother Reagan leave us as we all love him but it had been prearranged that Elder Bell, our National Moderator take up the work of pastorate of the church October 1 for a period of six months. He was to spend the winter here in California; knowing this it was arranged to have him look after the flock here in the absence of pastor Bauman.

Our membership has been greatly afflicted of late; many have been sick and some have been obliged to go under the surgeon's knife, but all that have, are doing well and are apparently on the road to recovery. We regret to report that Sister Chaffee was suddenly called home to glory, leaving her husband and three little girls and her many friends to mourn their loss; some day we will understand why.

The Sunday school is doing good work. Promotion day will be observed soon and there will be a large class to be promoted from the Primary department.

We are planning for and looking forward to a great year's work; trusting in his promises to the faithful we shall not be disappointed. During these distressing times the world over it behooves us to be up and doing for the forces of satan are not asleep day nor night but are after us from every angle. Yours in the blessed hope, A. H. KENT.

Brethren, Michigan

Dear Editor:—I am sending a letter to our dear paper. Please publish it if you see fit.

Since writing last spring we organized a union Sunday school. Our general attendance is 25. We have in our treasury at present $7.61. Brother Brower from the Roann church is our superintendent. Our brother Thomas Howell of Dowagiac having heard of our condition here through my brother C. A. Stewart, volunteered his services and came and preached Sunday morning and evening and Monday evening. Brother Howell thinks there is an opening here to start a church, if only we could get financial help. If the Lord wills and we can get financial help somehow we will try and have some brother come and hold a couple weeks' revival. There is a chance for something to be done if only we get busy and put our efforts forth. Brother Howell was liked by all who heard him.

We are hoping and praying that there may be a way opened for us somehow.

We ask all to pray for us that we may succeed in building a church. As we have been without a church house so long we feel the need of one.

MRS. ELLEN TRITTEN.

La Verne, California

Our Sunday school superintendent is rejoicing over the school. Here are a few figures that explain why:

Enrollment, 172; average attendance, 118 (for the three hot summer months); per cent. of attendance, 69; average collection, $4.13. This means an honorable mention in The Sunday School Times for summer attendance. For the same quarter last year the average attendance was 91.

We are equally jubilant over the Christian Endeavor society here. At the San Gabriel Valley Union Rally held at Monrovia three of our members were installed as Union officers and Brother Broad was again chosen as Pastor Counsellor. Our own meetings are interesting and full of good things.

The third quarterly conference was held Wednesday evening after prayer meeting. Judging from the smiles on folks' faces things moved off satisfactorily to all. The pastor in his report was especially elated over the summer congregations. Another precious soul came out for Christ Sunday evening.

MRS. H. L. GOOD.

Pomona, California.

COMMUNION NOTICE

The First Brethren church, of Huntington, Indiana, will observe Holy Communion on Friday evening, October 18, 1918. All of like faith are cordially invited.

J. W. BROWER.

The First Brethren church, of Fremont, Ohio, will hold their communion service Sunday evening, October 20. Let all the members come and worship together in this blessed service. Others are also invited. "Thus ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come."

H. M. OBERHOLTZER, Pastor.

Our Dead

CLAPPER.—Perry A. Clapper, aged 41 years, received injuries in an automobile accident, September 26, which resulted in his death. Mr. Clapper who was secretary-treasurer of the American Construction Company of Cleveland, had gone with Captain Simonson, president of the same company, to inspect some work and was returning home when their machine was overturned and the skulls of both men were fractured. Just how the accident happened seems not to be known.

Mr. Clapper was born near Louisville and was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Cicero Clapper. He graduated from the Louisville high school in 1897 and taught school for four years. Then he went to Cleveland where his rise in the business world was rapid. At his death, aside from occupying the most responsible position in the American Construction Company, he was private secretary to H. M. Hanna, Jr. Both positions required more than ordinary ability to fill and by his death a very promising business career was cut short.

He was the second child of a large family and at the death of his father nearly 22 years ago, he became like a father to the younger brothers and sisters.

From early life Mr. Clapper was an earnest Christian and one of the "stand bys" of the Louisville Brethren church in its dark days. He filled practically every position in the church from time to time, and was occasionally called to fill the pupits of North Georgetown, Middlebranch and Louisville. When he went to Cleveland he did not lose himself to all Christian activity because there was no Brethren church there, but connected himself with the Franklin Avenue Methodist church, where he was choir director, trustee and Sunday school superintendent.

Survivig are his wife who was Miss Sadie Keim and two daughters, Dorothy and Elinor; his mother, Mrs. C. Clapper of Louisville and the following brothers and sisters: Joseph and Harvey Clapper, Cleveland; Mrs. Frank Painter, Mrs. N. C. Ross and Frank, Louis and James Clapper of Louisville.

Funeral services were held at the Lakewood Methodist church in Cleveland, Revs. Fuller and Gage officiating. Burial was made in Lakewood cemetery.

GEO. S. BAER.

BRAWNER.—Harriet A. Brawner was born August 10, 1860 near Colona, Iowa, died at her home near Williamsburg, Iowa, September 22, 1918, aged 58 years, 1 month and 12 days. December 28, 1879 she was united in marriage to Samuel Brawner, and thus together they trod life's journey nearly 39 years bearing the burdens of life together, also sharings its joys and pleasures.

A number of years ago, she as well as Brother Brawner were received into the pleasant Grove Brethren church. She remained true to her faith to the end of life, living the Christian life of love and service. Loving the church and her service, being ever present when she could at all services. She loved to read her Bible and found comfort in the promises of the Master. The words of the text being found in a chapter especially loved by her.

She leaves to mourn her departure, a loving husband, nine children, 20 grandchildren, a brother and sister residing at Long Beach, California, besides many other relatives and friends. Services by the writer at the Pilot Grove church, using John 14:1 as a text.

WM. H. MILLER.

HAUGER.—Jesse M. Hauger was born in Buckeye City, Ohio, September 25, 1892, departed this life at Camp Sherman, Ohio, October 2, 1918, age 26 years 7 days. He was a member of the 36th Co., 9th Training Batallion, 158th Depot Brigade. At the age of twelve he was baptized and received into the Brethren church. During all his sickness he bore up bravely and was kind and considerate with those who administered to his needs. Before the end came he spoke often of his love for the Savior and his willingness to trust all to him. On June 23, 1917, he was united in marriage to Fanny Lavern Carter.

Those who mourn are the sorrowing wife, father, mother, one brother, two sisters, and other near relatives and friends.

May God comfort the bereaved ones and sustain them by his grace. The funeral service was conducted by Brother Owen, of Ashland, Ohio, assisted by the writer.

G. R. PETERSON.

BOWMAN.—Sister Adelene Bowman, wife of Rev. John S. Bowman, departed this life September 26, at the age of 47 years. She was a faithful wife and mother, as well as an active worker in the church. She labored in the cause of Christ by the side of her husband among the churches of the valley and in the vicinity of Roanoke. Through her kindness and faithful service she made for herself many grateful friends as well as set an example for those among whom she ministered. She was in failing health for some six months during which time her husband was constantly at her bedside. Besides her loss to a host of friends and to the church, her helpful presence will be missed by her life companion who is still in the active ranks of the ministry, her two sons, and two daughters, an aged mother, five brothers and two sisters. The funeral services were conducted from the Mt. Olive church, for a number of years her fraternal home, the writer officiating.

W. S. CRICK.

CASHMAN.—William McKinley Cashman was born at Roaring Spring, Pa., January 7, 1896, and died at Nevers, France, September 3, 1918, at the age of 22 years, 7 months and 26 days. Brother Cashman enlisted in Company B of the 49th Engineers on April 8, 1918, and left for France two months later.

The immediate caues of his death was pneumonia. Brother Cashman was for a number of years a member of the Brethren church at Altoona, Pennsylavnia. He was a true Christian young man. He gave his all for Christ. Few were more devoted to the work of the church than was he. No task was too difficult. He was always ready with a word of testimony. He continued his religious activities after entering the military service, teaching the Bible and conducting prayer meetings among the soldiers. It was his ambition, when through with this military warfare to devote his full time to preaching the gospel.

Brother Cashman is survived by his wife, his parents, two brothers and two sisters and many friends. A service in memory of our departed brother was held at the church of which he was a member Sunday morning, September 29. The large crowd which assembled was a testimony to his life in the community. A brave and true soldier has passed. He died on the field of battle fighting for his King. All that is mortal of one whom we all dearly loved, rests in a beautiful cemetery "over there" there to await the trump of God at the last day. May the Lord comfort the bereaved friends.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

GIBSON.—David P. Gibson, a faithful and prominent member of the West Independence Brethren church, peacefully departed this life September 15, 1918, at the age of 55 years, 8 months and 18 days. He had been a patient sufferer for several months and realizing that the end was drawing near, he comforted himself and family with the thought that he was prepared for his departure and enjoyed the hope of everlasting life.

He was united in marriags to Miss Susan Leedy August 8, 1895. This union was blessed with one son and one daughter, both of whom, with the wife are still living.

He united with the Brethren church at West Independence, Ohio, in June, 1896, under the pastorate of brother M. S. White.

The funeral services were held in the Brethren church at West Independence, conducted by the writer, assisted by brother S. M. Loose and brother M. S. White. His place will be greatly missed in the home and in the church. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

Marriages

PENCE-RODGERS.—At the home of the bride's parents, near Port Republic, on July 27, were united in holy matrimony, George M. Pence and McKinley B. Rodgers. The bride is a member of the Brethren church and a teacher in the local schools. Mr. Pence resides on a farm with his parents. Both young people are highly respected and we pray for them a happy married life. Ceremony by the writer.

W. S. CRICK

HARRELL-ULRICH.—Mr. Thomas L. Harrell, of Huntington, Indiana, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Harrell and Doris A. Ulrich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ulrich, of Huntington, Indiana, were married by J. W. Brower in the Brethren church September 21, 1918. The bride is a member of the Brethren church. The best wishes of a host of friends go with the young people.

HEIMBAUGH-DIEHL.—On Sunday evening, September 15, at the home of Brother and Sister Elmer Heimbaugh occurred the marriage of their daughter, Belva to Louis Diehl. It was a very pretty home wedding, the ring ceremony was used, the house beautifully decorated and a wedding supper served. These are both most estimable young people and have the best wishes of many friends.

B. T. BURNWORTH.

DEETER-DEETER.—On Saturday, September 28th, two young people from the same town and of the same name, but not of the same family, journeyed to Louisville, Ohio, where they were united in marriags by G. S. Baer their former pastor. They are Perry L. Deeter, son of the late Isaac Deeter, of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and Sunday school superintendent and deacon in the Brethren church of that place, and Miss Mabel Ethel Deeter, daughter of Allen Deeter, also an active member of the same church. Both are highly respected young people of their home community where they will reside amongst a host of friends who wish them much happiness in life's journey together.

The Educative Process in Religion

In this book which constitues Part II of our First Year Book in Teacher Training, Dr. L. L. Garber presents a scholarly treatise of the educational process involved in religious development. He generously employs the accepted principles of psychology and the approved methods of pedagogy, but judiciously gives them a non-technical dress and an evangelical application. Its discriminating references to current theories, its appropriate allusions to the best literature, its inspiring conclusions embodying practical instructions to the teachers of religion, combine to make the work of surpassing value to the beginner and the scholar. It is lofty in conception convincing in argument and concrete in style. The book is permeated with clear thinking, stimulating ideals and Christian zeal. It merits the widest possible study by parents, teachers, ministers and all who have to do with religious education.

Observe Good Citizenship Day

It is possible that in some communities no public meetings will be allowed on October 20th on account of the influenza epidemic. Should any of our societies experience a condition of this kind we urge the Endeavorers to retain the Citizenship Day program and to present it with added enthausiasm as soon as public health conditions will allow. The intervening time will allow you to make fuller preparation. Despite the unfavorable circumstances we must "carry on." Too many vital issues are involved to permit our plans to go by default. Keep the Citizenship program intact and substitiute it for some other topic at a later date. Endeavor to enroll every Endeavorer in the Army of Universal Patriotic Service, helping us to attain Point 5 of our Four-Year Challenge. A full report of your meeting with the number enrolled should be sent to our National Citizenship Superintendent, Rev. A. E. Whitted, Morrill, Kansas.

The S. A. T. Corps in Ashland College

After considerable delay the U. S. Military authorities have designated a Training Unit in Ashland College. The Unit will be organized on Monday, October 21. At the present time the College is closed because of the epidemic but there is no doubt that the school can be reopened on Monday, October 21. To obtain this Unit there must be a minimum attendance of fifty young men of military age. This is a fine opportunity for the young men of the Brethren church of military age and there ought be no difficulty in going far beyond the minimum. The establishment of the Unit means the recognition of the academic standing of the college and our young men of high school education ought to seize the opportunity of attending college. If accepted all expenses will be paid by the government. Write the president for particulars or be present at the time indicated for induction into the Unit.

A Prayer for Full Surrender

BY GEORGE S. BAER

Surrendered I would be, dear Lord,
My time, my talents, all.
Just take me, use me as thou wilt,
In station great or small.

My will, O Lord, I would give o'er;
My plans and hopes to Thee,
My heart so clings to selfishness!
I would surrendered be.

True service to thy people, Lord,
As thou didst give, I would.
So humble me that I may go
Where thou wilt, "doing good."

Thy help! my Lord, I seem to halt
Where duty leads me on;
That monster, Too-Great-Sacrifice
I see. Bid him be-gone.

O saving Lord, there's naught to fear,
For thou dost hear my call.
There is no loss, but all is gain
When I surrender all.

From the Editor's View-Point

Your Eye on the Ball

Very small and apparently insignificant characteristics in the life of a man are frequently determining factors in his success or failure. Some few men may be so evenly balanced that they have no peculiarities, but it seems that most men who have done things worth while have some few peculiarities which mark them as being just a little different from other men.

The old saying: "Straws show which way the wind blows," may be applied to human life and human endeavor. Because straw is light the movement of the winds is readily indicated, though that movement may be slight indeed; but because a light breeze may seem content to toss bits of chaff or straw here and there it is no sign that the wind lacks the power to uproot great trees, to overturn immense buildings or to drive monster ocean-going vessels to certain destruction.

The pent up forces of human nature are sometimes hidden by the mildest of external appearances but yet a carefull observer may distinguish the little signs that to a trained mind are sure indications of reserve power and determination of purpose that will not brook defeat. The way a man plays a game or takes his recreation may easily determine the way in which he will fight a battle. President Wilson's caddie that follows him about the golf links only recently spoke better than he knew as he commented on our president's manner of playing. His remark: "He didn't lose any balls during the whole eighteen holes. He keeps his eye on the ball," is significant. The point is not so much in the fact that he didn't lose any balls, but that he KEPT HIS EYE ON THE BALL. After the ball once rises from the ground keeping one's eye on it will not change its course but it will enable one to judge the effect of a certain stroke and moreover it will enable one to see where the ball lands. Mr. Wilson has had and still has many critics. And perhaps he has blundered a few times as our President, but we venture the assertion that he has "his eye on the ball," and that when the great game is over he will be able to tell many of his "caddies" where to look in the tall grass to locate a few balls that they thought were lost.

Total Depravity

While belief in the doctrine of "total depravity" has been somewhat on the wane for a number of years we feel that there has been quite a revival of this belief since August 1914; and one of the strangest things about it is that the evidences that have been forcing this belief again on a somewhat skeptical world have come almost altogether from a country that for years has ranked highest among nations in the matter of culture and learning. But from the day that Prussian soldiers first set foot on Belgian soil, in direct violation of sacred treaty rights and in the face of the most earnest protest backed up by the bravest resistance of the little Belgian army that history of centuries records, and began the most stupendous course of rapine and murder the world has known until the very present which is marked by the same spirit of ruthlessness the civilized world has experienced it has been demonstrated that learning and culture will not remove the depravity of human nature. And each repeated act of atrocity only makes it more clear that the ancient prophet in Israel was correct when he said, "There is none righteous, no not one, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

While the invading Hun has seen and recognized the doom of his dream of world dominion and must realize that sooner or later he must do more than request an armistice to arrange for peace, that he must fall upon his knees and beg for it, yet the depravity of his nature is leaving its marks along his line of retreat with a devastation as complete and ruthless as it did along his line of advance.

The whole world has been suffering from a shortage of available fuel and while Germany held under her iron heel the mining districts of northwestern France there was not much hope for relief from this shortage, but whatever hopes had been revived in the breasts of the people, as the German armies were being gradually driven from this territory, were cruelly blasted when an examination of the mining properties of this district revealed still more of the depravity of the Hun who had determined that what he could not carry away he would destroy and proceeded to act upon this principle in destroying the mining properties and in turning water into the pits until the conditions of the mines is such that the minging engineers declare it will rquire two years' time to put the mines again in shape to supply the people with their most common needs. The total depravity of the invaders is shown in the report that of ten thousand houses which furnished homes for the people of the mining town of Lens not one house has been left standing. Yes, the old doctrine of total depravity is easier to believe now than it was four years ago. And the cure? There is but one cure—the Man of Sorrow who walked the shores of Galilee is the one Great Physician with the only infallible remedy; and this remedy is entirely ineffective when used as an external or local application. It is a remedy that must be taken internally and individually so that the heart, out of which are the isues of life, may be completely renewed.

Who's Afraid?

This used to be the challenge of the small boy in the face of apparent danger and as he would show his playmates and boy companions his fearlesness in its presence, and, so long as an insurmountable fence stood between, he might even boldly approach and taunt a savage watch dog that was safely kept on the opposite side of the fence, for he was not afraid; but should a weak spot in the fence develop there would be a sudden shange of valor and swift heels would be resorted to as a means of safety. The retreat might be too precipitate to permit of many dignified movements or operations, but in a moment like that all thoughts of dignity are cast to the winds by a boy, though grown up men who are not in immediate personal danger may try to cover up their fears with carefully planned and executed movements of dignified retreat.

For fully a year the United States had declared that a state of war existed between Germany and America the German people were encouraged with the "Who's afraid?" of their leaders. These leaders knew that the American dogs of war were fierce in attack when once they pounced upon the enemy; but was not the fence of the great Atlantic ocean between? and did not America lack the necessary ships to enable her to cross that fence? Her ladders are too short, they will not reach the top, we are perfectly safe cried the German leaders as they spurred their people on to greater endeavors to reach Paris or the sea. But they had reckoned without taking into consideration the resourcefulness of America's "big" men, men who had learned to do what other men had pronounced impossible, and as transport load after transport load of America's alert young manhood landed upon the shores of France the German leaders were compelled to revise their calculations, and even after more than a million men had been safely landed they still went about saying, "Who's afraid?" and in some instances told their people there were not more than 20,000 Americans in France. But do they keep up that braggadocio spirit now? Hardly, for the echoes of the American guns on the western battle front have been reverberating through the streets of Berlin and we are told that "Berlin fears the Yanks now." The magnitude of the American achievements is just now dawning on their slow minds and they are realizing that they went too far in taunting the great watch dog of freedom and democracy.

Contributions

Boys Or Booze

By GEORGIA HOPLEY

A poster hangs in the windows of Columbus saloons bearing this disgraceful and deceptive inscription:

"Do not surrender your liberty at home while our boys fight for freedom and democracy over there. Vote wet November 5th."

The poster is illuminated with a picture of Uncle Sam, Liberty and Prohibition, duly labled. Prohibition is clad in ministerial garb with a Uriah Heap expression. Liberty is insulted with the utterance. "There is not room for us both, Uncle," while Uncle Sam is outraged in the representation of a look of shame at the remark made by Liberty.

The posters doubtless appear in the saloons elsewhere. They are an insult to Uncle Sam and to Liberty. They are an insult to Prohibition and to every patriotic citizen where the poster appears.

The highest national authority has declared for a "bone dry Nation in July 1919" and the poster is a flagrant disregard of the dictum of that high authority.

The time is at hand when the great National evil, the liquor traffic, may be wiped out of existance, by a concerted action, regardless of party, sex or creed,—and the responsibiltity rests most heavily on the people of Ohio since those in a position to know say, "As Ohio goes so goes the Nation, for if Ohio writes Prohibition in the constitution it will be for all time."

There are many who do not realize that the declaration of the President means only "War Prohibition" and after the war is over there is every reason to suppose the conditions will be far worse than they are now, or have been.

Newspapers who do not take a stand for Prohibition are carrying a page of advertisement of the Anheuser-Busch Brewery which the company announces "Missouri's Largest Industrial Institution."

The following is clipped from the page advertisement:

"We wish to express our gratitude to our dealers and the thousands of loyal friends whose cooperation and support have been an invaluable asset to this institution. We asure them that after the war Anheuser-Busch again will take its place among the important and indispensable industrial institutions of America."

This is the hand writing upon the wall to which thousands of people in Ohio are indifferent, stupidly, cruelly, criminally indifferent.

We are moved to tears when we sing "Keep the Home Fires Burning till the boys come Home" yet last winter many stoves in Ohio were fireless and the schools closed for lack of coal while the Breweries contiued to run, consuming a pound of coal for every pint of beer made.

Every energy has been put forth by the people for the conservation of food, while each month, acording to Mr. Hoover, 3150000 bushels of grain have been used by the brewers for the manufacture of drink, to ruin our boys and cast a gloom over American homes.

Last winter during the shortage of sugar in Columbus when the first car load arrived according to the statement of Mrs. Florence Richards, state president of the W.C.T.U., the breweries were the first to be supplied.

The page advertisement of the Anheuser-Busch brewery further says:

"As an American institution, founded by Americans more than 60 years ago, and continuously owned and operated by Americans (incidentally Anheuser-Busch seems to lack the true American accent), Anheuser-Busch has unmistakably expressed its Americanism by subscribing to more than $3,000,000 of Liberty Bonds and the contribution of $500,000 to the American Red Cross and other war relief organizations of the United States and the Allied cause."

We freely admit here is where Anheuser-Busch rings true in their statement. No one will doubt for one moment that in the sixty years of profit from the hard earnings of their patrons it is an easy matter for Anheuser-Busch to contribute thus liberally while their patrons, many of them with the spirit of patriotism burning within them, with their boys at the front and eager to contribute to the war relief subscriptions are humiliated by their financial inability to do so, owing to the sixty years of active service of the Anheuser-Busch brewery.

It is an easy matter to realize what the boasted subscription of $3,000,000 of Liberty Bonds will mean financially and the home which have suffered to make this investment possible.

Still further these destroyers of homes, happiness, health and hopes of heaven announce.

"Mr. Busch also has arranged to lease to the government for the period of the war, one-third of the 26 acres of floor space of the new $10,000,000 Bevo plant." (Bevo being a "soft drink".) Realizing what government prices are it will be seen the interests of the brewery have been safe guarded during the period of war.

And the closing paragraph of the advertisement is "Anheuser-Busch is ready to sacrifice everything except loyalty to country, and its own honor, to serve the government in bringing this war to a victorious conclusion."

Will the Christian people submit to such high handed infringement on the rights of the people, the rights of our boys? Every public gathering, every secular and religious publication should ring with arguments, pleadings and petitions for not war prohibition, but absolute, nation-wide prohibition.

Never has there been a campaign of such vital importance not only to the men but to the women, to leave no stone unturned for the overthrow of this cancer in the home, to show appreciation of the boys over there by preparing for them, on their return, a country worth fighting for and dying for.

Ohio is the birthplace of the four leading temperance organizations—the Women's Temperance Crusade, The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Prohibition Party, and the Anti-Saloon League—and incidentally leads the nation in the sale of War Savings Stamps. It is eminently fitting, therefore, that the state should lead in this fight in behalf of a dry nation on the return of the boys.

A man of unimpeachable character is available to lead the state in the present crisis. At the close of the war, when the great reconstruction period in industry is upon us, more significance than ever will attach itself to the leader in the affairs of state. Never before in our history will there have been such great need for a protective defence against foreign invasion of our industrial security.

All differences on other questions should be forgotten, every patriotic citizen of Ohio—man or woman should stand shoulder to shoulder for the home and the boys against the saloon and alcohol. Let us not so soon again realize the awful results of the lack of precaution, lack of equipment.

Pepper and Salt

By A. SHAKER

The attention of the writer was recently called to a contribution in the church paper of one of our sister denominations upon the subject: "The Use of Musical Instruments." We will confess to a slight reluctancy to shaking out any pepper and salt over this subject because of the advanced age of the contributor of the article referred to, though we presume he will never see what is written here.

We will also confess that such contributions or such attempts at argument get under our skin with a little of the irritating properties of pepper and it is but natural for us to try to get it out of our system in some way. More than twenty-five years ago when the writer was superintendent of a little (Progressive) Sunday school where the church was granted to the River Brethren one Sunday in each month and the privilege to hold a protracted meeting was also granted them, on one occasion a good brother from Pennsylvania was holding such a meeting and very naturally was opposing things progressive and up-to-date. The writer was a very young man for a Sunday school superintendent and perhaps did not realize fully the gravity of the situation, but on a Sunday morning when the evangelist was present at the Sunday school session the superintendent selected the liveliest songs he could find in the song book that gave the best opportunity for the school to follow a good organist in a live song service. We then requested the entire Sunday school to remain for the preaching service and most of them did so. The preacher was pleased with the unusually large congregation and considered it an opportune moment to press home some of the truths (?) that rested heavily upon his heart, and he had not gone far into his subject until he paused and said: "Do I dare preach the truth this morning? Will those of you who are willing to have me preach the truth please hold up your hands?" We knew there was a trap in the request but we were game and up went the hand of the superintendent and instantly many other hands followed.

This was the preacher's opportunity and figuratively speaking he jumped onto that little church organ with both feet and proceeded to play a tune that would have astonished even Paderewski himself. Like the aged writer of the article we referred to in the beginning he quoted David and said much that meant little. We have known our brother by reputation for many years but we never had the privilege of meeting him. However, we will venture the assertion that his musical education will not permit him to tell the difference between "A minor" and a "drum major." His every attempt to differentiate in the uses of various musical instruments reveals the fact clearly. It is true that some musical instruments are better suited to some types of music than others are, but our brother fails to recognize that it is the character of the music more than the character of the instrument that produces certain emotions that either meet his approval or disapproval. Of course a brass band is suited to lead a parade or a procession on a patriotic occasion, but a brass band can also produce about as mournful a funeral dirge as one cares to hear. The writer well remembers conducting a funeral service many years ago in which a brass band led the procession along a country road and the mournful tones from the brass horns, the sliding trombone, the great tuba and the bass drum had quite a noticeable effect even upon the cattle in the fields.

Our good brother says the orchestra is an important factor in the opera, the theater, and to lead the dance. It is not generally used for popular worship by the popular churches, etc.; but all of us know that the livest Sunday schools in the country have drawn upon the musical talents of their young people and maintain a real interest in the work of the schools through the organization and use of an efficient orchestra. Our brother says, "The violin is especially adapted to lead the dance and to arouse lively emotions. It appeals to the feet. Let there be a company in the room when the violin begins to play and notice how the feet begin to tap on the floor." This is all the rankest nonsense, for as stated previously it is not so much the character of the instrument as it is the character of the music that is produced upon it that affects the emotions. Our brother says the violin is not suited to inspire sacred emotions, but he fails to realize that there is no musical instrument made that will as nearly approach the human voice in its ability to give out the feelings of the soul as will this maligned and much abused violin. There is no instrument made that has the power to bring the tear to the eye under the skillful manipulation of a master musician like this same little instrument, the violin.

While our brother commends the use of the piano in the homes of all people or the substitution of the phonograph where the piano can not be afforded, he must never have heard the ivory keys manipulated as a master of rag time can manipulate them or he would hesitate before making such a recommendation, and as for the phonograph, we will confess that we know of no better way to get cheap music, rag time, vaudeville, dance music and all such into the home than by that road. Many who can not learn to perform acceptably upon a musical instrument personally can easily satisfy low musical tastes in this manner just as readily as those who have a taste for better things can secure records of the classics as sung and played by the masters of music. But as for the effect of the violin or phonograph on the feet we would not turn our hand for the difference. It hasn't been very long since we were entertained with a group of others in the home of a brother in the church represented by the writer of the article we are reviewing, when a most expensive Edison was put into use and we noticed both the hands and the feet of some who were present mark time to the rhythm of the music played. No, it is not the instrument but the type of music produced upon it that prompts the feet to go.

Our brother asks the question, "If the Lord wanted instrumental music in worship, why did he not make provision for it when he gave the elaborate system to Moses?" We are of the opinion that after four hundred years in bondage in Egypt, many of them spent in making bricks without straw, there was not much musical ability left among the Hebrew children. But by the time of David they had had time to develop their musical talent and David saw an opportunity to provide them a method for giving expressions to religious emotions on their "instruments of ten strings," etc. The preacher to whom we referred in the beginning of this article said, "It is true that David used musical instruments in worship, but David did many other foolish things also." Such a statement might satisfy a prejudiced mind but it has no weight as an argument. And when our brother says David said: "Praise him with the timbrel and the dance;" therefore, if we introduce instrumental music into worship we must also introduce the dance on that authority—the two go together, he is not only using poor logic and begging the question, but he is giving a misinterpretation of the scriptures, for if he will refer to any good commentary he will find that the term dance as used in the verse he quoted does not express any thought of foot motion but is the name of a certain type of musical instrument sometimes called the pipe. The statement our brother makes when he says, "The New Testament is very specific in ruling out instrumental music when giving directions for worship," is absolutely without foundation. The fact that Paul said to the Ephesians, "Speaking to one another in hymns and psalms and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart," is no argument against using a musical instrument to lead the singing. If the efforts that are sometimes made by some of our aged brethren to "raise the tune" and the discords that follow in its wake are melody, then we do not have a right conception of the nature of the sounds that please the Lord. Of course there are many things not mentioned in the New Testament which we would not allow,—"keeping a saloon, for example," as our brother says; but when he classes the use of a musical instrument in religious worship with the saloon, he but expresses the thought of a narrow and bigoted mind. Th eNew Testament is also very specific in ruling out the use of electric lights in churches according to this kind of argument, for does not Jesus say, "I am the light of the world." Then theonly light we should use in our churches is the light of Jesus.

The fact is, our brother is attempting to make a new order conform to an old, and he fails to comprehend that the old order changeth and that unless we can adjust ourselves to the new order we "are dead while we live."

There is no evil in any musical instrument of itself, and the evil that comes out of one is but the expression of evil emotions in the heart of the musician who performs or composes the music, and as for the vehicle of expression of these evil emotions there is none that can be put to viler use than that of the human voice. No musical instrument constructed by the hand of man has ever been prostituted to more unholy uses than has the human voice in singing the thoughts and expressing the emotions of evil hearts. Let us not be so particular about washing pots and kettles and let us give more attention to keeping our own lives pure and clean.

The Disclosed Jesus

It was said of Jesus that "He could not be hid"—and it was true. In a real sense no life can be a concealed life. As long as life touches life there must necessarily be disclosure. And that is one of the things that give seriousness and sacredness to life, for no man liveth unto himself, nor indeed can he.

But in particular it was the service life of Jesus that could not be hid. He did not try to hide it, for He went about doing good. No wonder that the common people heard Him gladly. He was their true, helpful, sympathetic Friend, and they knew it. As the Rev. Robert F. Coyle, D.D., so aptly says of this phase of the life of Jesus:

"Go through the Gospels, follow that incomparable life, and see how He was always surrounded by need and suffering and sorrow. When it was reported that the Stranger from Galilee had arrived, the blind came groping out to put themselves in His way, and lame hobbled into the road along which He was most likely to pass, and those who were too weak and ill to walk were carried into His presence, and when there was no other way to get to Him with some poor, palsied criple, because of the crowd, they would tear a hole in the roof and lower the stricken man down at His feet.

"Life for Jesus was like passing through a hospital or spending his days among the enfeebled and despairing. He created His own environment, and did it by the warmth and sympathy of His mighty heart. It is not hard for some people to hide from the distressed and the poverty-pinched and the crying and the sad-hearted. No poor human derelict ever drifts into their harbor. No beggar ever stumbles up their steps. No man who is sinking in the black waves ever cries unto them to throw out a life line. Their house gate is a break-water against which the billows of woe, surging up from humanity's great sea, dash and roll back into the troubled deep. If no unfortunates, no wrecks, no tramps, no down-and-outs ever come to our door or find their way to our office or place of business for a little help and a little cheer, it is not much of a compliment to our humanity, much less to our religion. Jesus could not be hid. The world's bitter grief drew Him as the magnet draws the steel. And this is really the test of the Christianity of a Church. If either the one or the other can easily hide away from human need and hold aloof from human heart-ache and sorrow, it is evidence enough that the Spirit of the Master is not there, for where the Master is there is no hiding from any life that is wounded, or from any back that is breaking beneath its heavy load, and no shrinking from service."

When The Siren Sounds

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

The best advertisement for religion that has been introduced into America within a generation is the noon-tide Daily Prayer For Victory.

This idea of everybody devoting a minute a day, at high noon, to a prayer for our country's cause, has appealed to the popular imagination.

Congress has endorsed it. The Rotary Clubs of the nation are promoting it. Religious leaders, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, advocate it. The Red Cross is to observe it in all of its meetings. The newspapers have reported it. The motion pictures have featured it.

Church bells, fire bells, and factory whistles, in many communities, call the people to pray. In Washington a great siren, which was formally and solemnly dedicated, sounds for the duration of the prayer minute.

Every Christian with a sense of strategy appreciates the possibilities of this Prayer Minute Idea. It thrust religion into the thoughts of all the people. It advertises the place and power of spiritual forces. It creates thought and discussion on the unseen verities. It introduces the heedless to the idea of our common reliance upon God.

This simple usage creates a tremendous opportunity for the churches. They may magnify the Minute for Prayer. If properly promoted locally, the observance of the rite may be made general and permanent. Only active, far-sighted, resourceful and persistant effort can accomplish the full success of the Victory Prayer, as a religious observance. Left to itself, the idea is likely to lapse.

So pastors and religious organizations, such as Sunday School associations, Christian Endeavor Unions, Young Men's Christian Associations, Laymen's Movement Committees, etc., should put themselves aggressively behind the daily observance of the Victory Prayer. Aligning themselves with the Rotary Clubs, the Red Cross, and any other interested bodies, they shoud seek to make this Prayer Minute as spectacular as possible, so as to hold the people's attention. The Washington plan of a publicly-installed siren is a good one. Placards should be posted in all public places calling upon everybody to pray at noon. In stores and offices, signs should be placed saying—"In this office (or store or shop or school or mill) we pause a minute at Noon to Pray for Victory". Little cards, to the same effect, could be used by individuals to hand to the person with whom one may be conversing when the noon hour strikes.

As a matter of common responsibility and concerted effort, the religious leaders of every community should call upon the editors of the local papers to ask them to publish a daily reminder of the Victory Prayer. The ministers themselves might arrange to supply every day a fresh form of prayer, brief, definite and popularly-phrased. Such a daily department, two or three inches long,would not occupy a tenth of the space given every day to news of sports. Unless the men and women who are known as active workers in the churches definitely make this representation and request to the newspapers, how will the editors be made aware of the real public interest in the subject?

To alert persons, a hundred methods of promoting the buttressing the religious sentiment in our land; and for Daily Victory Prayer will present themselves. The point to be urged is that this usage is an unusual opportunity for turning the thoughts of all the people to God, in whose hand alone is victory and guidance.

The Horror of Heathenism

BY CARLETON LACY

The horror of heathenism is upon me ("heathenism" we call it in China, where it sends bound-footed women on weary pilgrimages, to knock their heads before a loathsome god, and outrages childhood in gruesome ways. In America it wears a silk hat and carries a silver-headed cane and goes by another name. In Germany it is Kaiserism.) I am in Kienchang City, one proud of its literary prestige, now satisfied to sit at the gambling table and exploit its children in the sweat shops. This is the twentieth of the second month, and for twenty days, just four miles outside the city, a hideous orgy has been taking place.

In the ninth month of last year a six-year-old girl died. Her father was a vegetarian. He had a bad reputation in the neighborhood. A child victim of his anger is still unrecovered from an ugly gash in her neck which was intended to end her life. There are other tales about him circulating among the country folks.

He had little money—he wanted more. He was "religious" and preferred not to work. Then his daughter died. His lust for money and influence and power grew ingenious. Instead of burying the child's corpse he announced that it was spirit possessed. He made a tiny shrine for it and set in place of the wooden idol. Then he set to work in the advertising business. Through four months he worked on his scheme, spreading the report of this newly come god.

The cold weather kept the corpse from rapid decay, while the credulous people gradually came to accept the father's declaration that it would not rot, for it was the dwelling of a mighty spirit. Day after day the incense fumed in front of the dead child. The occasional curious visitors began to come in little groups of superstitions worshipers.

The old vegetarian got his money bag ready. He set up a stock of incense and idol paper. Each worshiper became a publicity agent. The rough mountain path became a well-worn road. The avaricious father engaged a secretary, a treasurer and a property manager. The business was in full swing—with the body of his dead daughter as the capital investment.

Then the girl's mother appropriated thirty coppers of the ill-gotten wealth. In his rage her husband drove her from the place—and she is still a homeless, childless woman.

For the past twenty days literally throngs of worshipers have been kneeling before the decaying corpse. Some days the receipts are said to be as high as ten dollars—never less than three or four dollars, each pilgrim giving a copper cent. Old women, all the way from Fuchow, 140 li (forty-seven miles) away, come tottering up the long hill road and kneel and bow and pray for ten, twenty and thirty minutes before the stinking form.

A few days ago, at earnest request, the police were sent to suppress the whole business. They found stone-cutters and wood-hewers on the ground.

A good subscription had been taken and the erection of a temple to house this god had begun. The old father, always sitting there on the job, explained that the subscribed funds had not as yet been collected, and that he had a considerable sum invested in the material, and with part of the day's receipts in their pockets the police left him to go on with his nefarious business.

Today our pastor visited the "sacred hilltop." He explained to the avaricious father and the crowd of prostrating worshipers the folly and wickedness of what they were doing and warned them against the serious physical danger to which they were subjecting the whole region. The women rose and argued and one by one left. The proprietor mutely bowed him off the place.

The weather is rapidly growing warmer. While the best medical men in the country are courageously fighting plague in the Cangtse Valley—while the best educators obtainable are doing their utmost for the enlightenment of this race—while the world is fighting desperately for the end of lustful self-aggrandizement —"heathenism" still has its way. The police have received their little bribe; a group of crafty schemers have a paying steady job, while the worshipers increase in number and the temple goes up; the conscienceless father is making his fortune.

Paul lived in a heathen world when he warned Timothy that "the love of money is the root of all kinds of evil."

The latest report from Kienchang is that, in response to repeated requests and perhaps because the warm weather was causing decay to set in more rapidly, the man had consented to plaster over the corpse with mud, as they plaster over the wooden frame of an idol. Then it is to be set in a big water jar, which will be placed in the temple for worship. Word also came into the city that on the day following our pastor's visit one of the four members of the company died quite suddenly—due to the evil influence of the pastor's remarks. He had insulted the God.—China Christian Advocate.

The Cry From the Four Winds

"How long is it," asked an old Mohammedan woman in Bengal, "since Jesus died for sinful people? Look at me, I am old, I have prayed, given alms, gone to the holy shrines, become as dust from fasting, and all this is useless. Where have YOU been all this time?"

That cry was echoed from the icy shores of the farthest Northwest Territory. "You have been many moons in this land," said an old Eskimo to the Bishop of Selkirk, "did you know this good news then? Since you were a boy. And your father knew? Then why did you not come sooner?"

It was heard in the snowy heights of the Andes. "How is it," asked a Peruvian, (South America), "that during all the years of my life I have never heard that Jesus Christ spoke those precious words?"

It was repeated in the white streets of Casablanca (North Africa). "Why," cried a Moor to a Bible-seller, "have you not run everywhere with this Book? Why do so many of my people not know of the Jsesus whom it proclaims? Why have you hoarded it to yourselves, Shame on you."

It is the cry from the four winds.
How shall we answer it?
Read Proverbs 24:11, 12.

A Wonderful Opportunity

A Baptist minister, fifteen years in the pastorate, became Religious Work Secretary in one of the huts at Camp Beauregard, in the southern camp. His contract was for a limited number of months but his work was of such success and promise that he was urged by the camp Executive Secretary to remain. He wrote home for a six-months' extension of his leave-of-absence, saying: "When I tell you that I had more conversions of young men under my preaching during the first four weeks in camp than during all my previous ministry, you will at once perceive an occasion of humiliation as I review my past work and a warrant for the growing demand of my conscience, that I remain longer in this blessed work.

The first time I dared to call for decisions I worked myself almost sick with anxiety. Suppose these boys should prove indifferent. Suppose I should have the old, heart-rending experience of no response, even though my very soul had been put into the appeal. You can imagine my feelings. And you can imagine my joy, the intoxication of spiritual victory that came, when eighty men marched to the front, sixty of them in reconsecration and twenty in a definite surrender to Christ. Now the thing has become a consuming passion. I expect to see decisions. There is a new motive and a new charm in preaching. Follow-up work is a pleasure. Personal work is a constant treat. Almost any day I can find some boy who seems to have been waiting for me, who is ready for the great surrender. Night after night I come with happy heart to the questions on my report sheet:"Personal Christian life interviews," "Decisions for Christian life today," "Follow-up interviews," thankful to God for such an opportunity.

Open Air Inspirational Meeting at Camp. At these meetings the Y Huts have been too small for the crowds in attendance. There have been thousands of conversions.

Too Good to Hear Alone

A missionary visited some Singhalese villages in Ceylon, stopping at one house, only one woman was to be seen. "We sat down and talked with her. Suddenly she sprag up and said 'This is too good to hear alone; I must find some other women.' In a short time she returned with five."

"Too good, this Word, to hear alone," thus thought
Samaria's daughter standing by the well;
And hastening village-wards she quickly brought Others to hear what Jesus had to tell.
"Too good to hear alone and I must share,
With other folks the gladness of this Word."
So spoke a daughter of Ceylon, who ne'er
Before the gospel of God's grace had heard.
And we, who know the power of Jesus' name
And countless precious Gospel blessings own
Can we account ourselves as free from blame
Whilst myriad souls in heathen bondage groan?
Oh, may these women make us feel some shame
And deem that Word "Too good to hear alone."

The Sunday School

World's Sunday School Convention Pilgrims

Every one of the thousands of American who have been delegates to the great World's Sunday School Conventions at London, St. Louis, Jerusalem, Rome, Washington or Zurich will be interested to know that an organization of all these delegates was recently effected at a reunion of World's Convention pilgrims at the Statler Hotel, Buffalo, during the International Sunday School Convention. Some 231 pilgrims representing every World's Convention were in attendance.

The enthusiasm ran high at the pilgrims' banquet. Mr. E. K. Warren presided. Reminiscences of the famous voyages to London, Jerusalem, Rome and Zurich were given in brief messages from Dr. Joseph Clark, Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, Mrs. J. Woodbridge Barnes, Rev. E. M. Fergusson, D.D., and other pilgrims. Mr. Poling Chang of Tientsin, China, Mr. M. L. Swinehart of Korea and Rev. J. L. McLaughlin of the Philippines spoke of the encouraging Sunday school outlook in their fields. Sunday school motion pictures of the Philippines and Japan, taken by Mr. McLaughlin, greatly delighted the company.

Fourteen members of Commission No. 4 which, with Mr. H. J. Heinz, circled the world in the interest of Sunday school work in 1913, sang "On to Tokyo," as a challenge for the next World's Convention following the war.

The new World's Sunday School Convention Pilgrims' organization will be open to any who have attended either in America or abroad any World's Convention and who shall send their name and address and the convention attended, to the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York. There are no dues or obligations. All registered pilgrims will receive the World's Sunday School News and will be advised of the Tokyo convention.

The officers of the new Pilgrims' organization are:

President, E. K. Warren; Vice President, H. J. Heinz.

Convention Vice Presidents: London, Rev. E. Morris Ferguson, D.D.,; Jerusalem, Rev. Joseph Clark, D. D.; St. Louis, Marion Lawrance: Rome. Prin. E. I. Rexford, LL.D.; London, Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner; Washington, Fred A. Wells; Zurich, James W. Kinnear; Secretary, Frank L. Brown; Treasurer, W. G. Landes.

Already over three thousand inquiries concerning the Tokyo Convention have been received in the office of the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. This convention is looked forward to as a history making event.

Ten Cardinal Points for World Winning

To an audience of 4,000 at the great World's Sunday School Association Mass Meeting at Buffalo during the progress of the International Sunday School Association convention the following were stated as cardinal considerations for the new World Sunday School program:

1. We can never make the world safe for democracy until we have reached the 400,000 of the world's children, and have trained them in the principles of the Book.

2. The organization to accomplish the task of reaching this vast constituency is the World's Sunday School Association, with a membership of 35,000,000—3,000,000 workers in 300,000 Sunday schools.

3. This association can only function in this great task, as the American Sunday schools shall make it possible both with money and workers.

4. This great objective can be realized in any generation when we shall address ourselves adequately to the task.

5. It can be done in this generation if we shall will to do so.

6. Every school in America is a unit in this great Association task.

7. This great work cannot be accomplished upon the present budget of the Association, which is $42,000 per annum. This amount is now distributed in caring for the Sunday school budgets of the six fields which are the special responsibilities of the World's Sunday School Association, namely, Japan, Korea, China, the Philippines, the Moslem field and South America.

8. Any serious attempt at our task would require a budget of at least $260,000 per annum. This can be realized through a continent-wide endeavor to finance our unified program of religious education.

9. We shall need to supply 100 trained native secretaries and missionaries for the Sunday school task in the world's great centers outside of America during the next few years.

10. The Tokyo Convention, which will fall within one year from the conclusion of peace, should be the occasion for the launching of this great program and for the sounding of the note of world unity and brotherhood through our Sunday schools which will be heard the world around.

Mr. Moody has said, "If we can win one generation we have put the devil out of business," and Dr. F. B. Meyer has shown the way—"If the world is ever to be saved it must be through its childhood."

Jerusalem A Real Refuge for the Destitute

Beginning October first Rev. Stephen Trowbrindge, Sunday school secretary of Moslem lands, representing the World's Sunday School Association, will begin his special work of relief in Palestine under the direction of the Red Cross society. He has been loaned temporarily by the World's Sunday School Association because of exceptional ability in previous relief work that he directed at Adana, Turkey, and Port Said. During the past months Mr. Trowbridge has been actively engaged in this relief work in Palestine dispensing money and other aid for the Armenian and Syrian Relief Fund, towards which the Sunday schools in America have been contributing. Thousands of refugees have been saved from starvation. Many have been provided with employment in Jerusalem. A photograph recently taken by Mr. Trowbridge shows a group of Syrian refugees from the villages between Ramallah and Nablous. The destitue people are seated on the steps of David's Tower, Jerusalem.

Nablous is the site of ancient Shechem. This is the location of the remnant of the Samaritans now numbering only 163. Of these 24 young men have been conscripted by the Turks. They have been assigned to clerical work and when last heard from all were safe. These Samaritans are being cared for in every possible way by a committee of the World's Sunday School Association, of which E. K. Warren is chairman.

REVIEW OF

The days of tribulation are upon the land and business in general is greatly interfered with. Much of our mail went out late last week, not because we did not have it ready for the mails; but because seventeen employees of the Ashland post office were off duty at one time on account of the epidemic of influenza, the post office authorities notified us not to bring our publications to the office until the last of the week as they could not send it out if we did. Then to add to our woes the "flu" struck our working force at the Publishing House and Just as the November Teachers' monthly was ready to go to press we were left without anybody to run it off. After searching "land and sea" for another printer we finally found one who went to work on Monday morning, but he is a stranger to our equipment and we can not tell how much our work will be delayed this week. But all we ask is your patience and your prayers and everything will come out right in the end. We are doing our best under existing circumstances, and angels can do no more.

Orion E. Bowman serves notice on the pastors and the churches that it will not be long until the time for the missionary offering shall be taken for the work of the General Board of Missions. The date set for this offering is either the Sunday before Thanksgiving Day or the Sunday immediately following. The offering last year was good, but a better one is needed this year to enable the board to carry on the work that is under its care. Brother Bowman also furnishes a report of the contributions from September 1 to October 12.

There will be no excuse for any pastor or any church to remain ignorant of the plans and aims of the Four-Year Program committee as it endeavors to lead the church on toward the goals set for this great program. A most splendid Hand Book has been prepared and sent out to all the churches and their pastors to help them understand what they are expected to do. This book is splendidly gotten up and should prove of great value to all who have any desire to help the church win the goals.

The Dayton church has passed through enough different experiences since the Winona Conference to avoid all monotony in service and worship. First of all there was the leaving of Brother Bell and family for California and the work at Long Beach. Then there was the coming of Brother and Sister Cobb to take charge of the Dayton work for at least a year. The last day Brother Bell spent with the Dayton church was a memorable one and his start for the west was made pleasant by the personal attentions received from the members as he cranked up his Ford for the journey. There have been several additions to the Dayton church since Brother Cobb's arrival upon the field. The preparations for the revival meeting that has been advertised to begin next Sunday have been interfered with by the influenza, but it is hoped the quarantine may be lifted before the 27th. Great things have been planned for and prayed for for this meeting.

The first installment of Brother Jennings' winter travel notes makes its appearance this week. It will be seen that since the meeting of the General Conference Brother Jennings has been in West Virginia. The meeting at Oak Hill resulted in twelve accessions to the church, while at Salem a two weeks' meeting resulted in fifty confessions while at Gatewood, where the meeting was closed after two nights because of the epidemic, five accepted Christ in the two services that they were permitted to hold.

S. C. Henderson has closed his work at Hamlin, Kansas, and has begun his duties in his new field at Flora, Indiana. He writes interestingly of the work done at Hamlin where he served two different periods of time as pastor, but one of the best things he has to say about the work is that in reference to the helpfulness of the Brethren Evangelist in every home as it is in the Hamlin church, and we are glad to say he will find the same condition existing in the Flora church for this church, too, is one of the number that has placed the Evangelist in every Brethren home by the budget system. Brother Cone has taken up the work at Hamlin and Brother Lytle has gone from Flora to Burlington, Indiana and will include the Darwin church in his charge.

Pastoral changes are being made on the Pacific coast as well as among the eastern Brethren churches. The first Brethren church of Los Angeles has been without a pastor for a short time. Their former pastor, F. J. Reagan has gone to Turlock to take up the work that Brother Darling was compelled to lay down because of failing health and N. W. Jennings has been called to the First church in Los Angeles and will enter upon his duties as pastor with the beginning of the new year. In the meantime brother Harry Toler has been ordained to the ministry in the First church of Los Angeles where he has been acting as supply pastor for some time. Brother Toler has also been carrying on missionary work in a needy part of the great California city.

The report from Loree, Indiana, is the last one Brother Lytle will give from this place as he has closed his work with this congregation to take up the work mentioned in aother item on this page. Brother Lytle enjoyed a big day at Loree as the concluding day of his ministry with these big hearted people, it being their annual home-coming day. The Editor who was pastor of this church twenty-four years ago was sorry that he could not accept the invitation to be present on this occasion, but other duties were too pressing. Brother C. A. Stewart who has been called to succeed Brother Lytle, will find this a splendid field for his ministry.

The weekly bulletin of the Dayton church announces an evangelistic campaign to be opened on October twenty-seventh with Brethren Bauman and Stout of the Pacific coast in charge. This team has worked together west of the Sierras on numerous occasions with great success and we shall expect to hear of great things done for the Lord in Dayton. Brother E. M. Cobb is also on the field as generalissimo of the occasion.

Pastors should also remember that the financial success of this publication depends almost entirely on them. Two years ago we sold out the entire edition and though it was not large enough to pay for itself the General Conference had allowed us a bonus to cover the loss. Last year the bonus was withheld, and we printed FOUR HUNDRED extra copies, expecting increased sales to make up the balance of the cost, but almost the entire extra four hundred copies are lying in the attic of the Publishing House, a dead loss to the CHURCH, for the Publishing House belongs to the church. We know some pastors could not sell lemonade on a hot day in August while others could sell ice cream in January, but we expect all to TRY to sell at LEAST ONE Annual for each ten members they have in their church.

The Strength of a Conviction

C-o-n-v-i-c-t-i-o-n spells strength. Many people, especially many Christian people, are sickly and weak because they have no convictions. It has been said, "Too many of us lack the strength of our convictions." But the thought is not well expressed for one can scarcely have a conviction worth the name without being stronger because of it. In fact, the greatest source of strength to many people is their conviction.

The world has ever suffered from leaders of great power and personality who have succeeded in gathering around them many followers who were almost willing to die for them, when all the time they were being led astray and into paths whose end is disappointment if not destruction. The leaders may have been perfectly sincere but they were just as surely mistaken; yet they had strength and power in an unusual degree, and the source of this strength and power was nothing more nor less than deep-seated conviction.

One of the strangest characters developed in American political and social life in the last generation is Eugene V. Debs, yet intelligent and well informed men who listen to his greatest speeches can readily see that Mr. Debs is building his hopes on a false premise, but as they try to account for his great sway over the minds of large numbers who listen to him they must realize that it is largely the result of his own deep seated convictions. His arguments are shot through and through with sophistries but they are cleverly hidden from the untrained mind and the earnestness of the speaker's manner carries conviction with every word.

Of an opposite type are some of the most forceful preachers of the gospel, who, in spite of education or theological training, succeed in evangelism and win thousands of souls to Christ. They have a strength that is not of the schools it is true. Then wherein is their strength? Some will say it is simply the strength of God whose Spirit is in them and whose servants they are, but it is more than that, it is the strength of a conviction that must find expression or outlet in some active work for God. Some men may lack the courage to express their beliefs, but when a belief becomes enough the part of a man to become a conviction his courage will grow and if given a half chance to develop its powers it will manifest itself in some way commensurate with the depths of the conviction of the man. Dr. Henson, the little giant of the Baptist pulpit of a generation ago, used to say, "Some preachers could not think of throwing a brick-bat, it would hurt their dainty fingers." There may be times when a preacher should throw a brick-bat, though such times come at very infrequent intervals, but if he is possessed by the power of a deep-seated conviction he will not know that he has any fingers when the time comes to throw. Many of the old time preachers were strong because of their convictions and the courage born of them that made them fearless to preach the truth without considering the harm or persecution that might come to them because of it.

Marginal Notes

Not many Bibles are sold these days that do not have a well worked out system of marginal references, and in addition to these printed references a great many Bible students have filled their Bibles used in daily reading or study with "marginal notes." These marginal notes may mar the appearance of a nice, new page, but if a page is kept only for the sake of its appearance no real benefit can come from it. In the case of many devoted Bible students the marginal notes found in their Bibles are almost a library in themselves and years after the notes have been written they will be a sure index to the working of the mind of the writer and will reveal the process of the unfolding of truth after truth to his growing and developing and ripening mind.

If some of the young Bible students of today could have access to the marginal notes of some of the old preachers of a former generation it would prove a mine of wealth to an immature but budding and growing mind.

But there is another way of writing marginal notes that is quite common to most men and one of the strange things about this writing is that it is mostly done unconsciously by the writer. There is a margin to every life, moments or hours that are not charged with any special duties or tasks, and the way these undesignated or unappointed hours and moments are spent is all written down on the margins of one's life and in after years, even in after generations these marginal notes will be read by those unborn at the time of the writing and the lives lived long years before will be as the pages of an open book that have been marked over with pen and ink in an attempt to give permanency to passing thoughts.

One of the sad differences between the marginal notes of a book and the marginal notes of a life is that while the notes in a book may be carefully erased, the notes in a life are permanent and the black stains of sin written there can be obliterated only by the blood of Jesus Christ who cleanseth from all sin.

The New Era

The present world crisis is everywhere recognized and while a few people may think it is mostly if not altogether a military crisis, yet it is believed that most of the people realize that this crisis is more than military. The churches see this crisis as a "new era" dawning for the world, at least one church, the Presbyterian, has already set in motion the wheels of a movement bearing the phrase, the "new era" for a title. This movement has for its purpose the "harmonizing of all agencies" of the church by dealing first with the "fundamental teachings and motives of Christianity." The next step of this church is a promotive one as the movement it has inaugurated seeks "to arouse the church to the needs of the age, and to do her duty to meet these needs, and to arouse her to furnish the means required." The "New Era" is looked upon as a challenge to the whole church to renew her faith and knowledge of her Lord, and enter upon a new obedience to his will, new fellowship in his sufferings, and a new sense of the power of his resurrection."

The leaders of this movement in the Presbyterian church are so impressed with its importance that they generously invite their evangelical sister churches to join them in this forward movement. The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia observes:

> After the war is over a new era will be upon the world. Men everywhere are endeavoring to forecast this era, and determine its needs, and the means and measures of meeting these needs. No man or set of men are competent to make an accurate analysis of the forces and conditions which all feel confident are now approaching and about to assert themselves. Some are confident that it will be chiefly political, and its leading questions will be those of Nationalism and Internationalism. Others speak of it as fundamentally a question of righteousness. But the conception of righteousness presented is rather that of the Jew, 'the righteousness which is of the law,' not the righteousness of the Christian, which is 'the righteousness of God by faith in Jesus Christ'; it is rather an indefinite abstract—righteousness growing out of the faculty of conscience, which recognizes the existence of right and wrong, without any law or knowledge of the will of God to determine what is right and what is wrong. But the more rational and comprehensive view of this crisis and the coming era is that of a renewed conflict between Christianity and heathenism. The outburst of heathenism has manifested itself in its terrible atrocities and its determination to rob mankind of liberty and to subject them to the cruel powers of a world-imperialism. Christian states have risen in the divinely appointed use of the sword to check and subdue these physical and military outrages. When this is accomplished it will be the duty of the Christian church to reconstruct in faith and morals the new age on the basis and through the power of the fundamental truths revealed by Jesus Christ. This will require the development in the church of a renewed knowledge of the fundamentals of the faith. The generation which is now passing neglected the work of instruction in these fundamentals, and gave itself to a mechanical administration and nervous action, with weak convictions. When the church is thus renewed in her faith and knowledge of her Lord, she will be ready for the response to the pressing appeal of the New Era. Then she must be shown the great needs of the age and the world, and her duty to meet them.

Introducing New Ideas in India

An agricultural or industrial exhibit may be a great factor for Christian advancement. The people of Africa and Asia who have perverted ideas of the degradation of manual labor, or primitive ideas of methods of work need to be taught how to live and how to work. They must be stimulated to attain independence and a civilized manner of living if they are to become strong, self-respecting Christians.

India has been one of the last countries to adopt modern methods of agriculture and scientific ideas of sanitation and sociology. Their poverty and caste system have handicapped them and their religious ideas have hindered their acceptance of scientific ideas and methods of life. An encouraging sign progress is noted in the exhibition held last April in Gwalior. It was the largest and most interesting ever held in central India. All the arrangements for the Agricultural Exhibition were in the hands of the North India Mission of the Presbyterian church, with which Prof. Sam Higginbottom of India is connected. He writes:

"Mr. Don. W. Griffin, with his tractors actually plowing, his harrows harrowing, his pumps pumping, his fine crops of pedigreed wheat and grain, proved an attration superior to the wrestling arena of the exhibition. Dr. Kenoyer in his beautiful research laboratory, with experiments of all kinds that the Indian farmers could see and understand, his charts, microscopes, seed-testing, was more popular than the Indian juggler who makes the mango tree grow and bear fruit under a gunny bag. Mrs. Wisner, with her demonstrations of fruit canning and vegetable preservation, showing the people of India a cheap, sanitary and easy way of saving food, was much more popular than the nautch girl.

"The Maharajah brought the ladies of the palace to learn her methods. As he was a 'mere man' he could not go in under the canopy, which was kept strictly purdah (for ladies). The fruit and vegetables were grown in the palace gardens, the jars were made in the state pottery, common Indian cooking vessels were used and the little Indian portable stoves gave the fire for cooking and sterilization. Thus attention was drawn to the fact that India could do these things for herself just as well as depend upon Europe and America for preserved fruits and vegetables.

"Mr. Arthur Slater from Etah had the best poultry show ever seen in India. The first prizes and grand championships were not by imported birds, but by birds bred in India from imported stock. Mr. Slater has good reason to be happy over the outcome of his years of labor to introduce better poultry among the low caste converts as a way to improving their economic condition and fitting them to pay the salaries of their own preachers and teachers."

This is all very important in the future of India, as it is distinctly an agricultural country. The latest figures show that India has nearly four million more acres under wheat than in 1915, nearly as much extra under rice, while the area under cotton has increased over four million acres; in the same time her increase in acreage and in yield per acre of sugar shows that she will soon supply her own needs and have a surplus. Thus India is helping to feed a hungry world. It is good sense and good religion for America to largely increase the number of American agricultural missionaries at this time. There has been a complete revolution in missionary thinking on the subject of the importance of agriculture and industry in the past ten years. These are now recognized as part of the liberating gospel of Jesus Christ. Missionary bodies all over India are considering the establishment of schools for traning mission leadership in rural education in each climatic area. This will do much to help India to help itself and the industrial training of Christians will help to develop a strong self-supporting church.

Another sign that new ideas are taking root in India is the increasing spirit of social service, in which Brahmins, non-Brahmins, government offcials, merchants, educators, Y. M. C. A. secretaries, missionaries—men of different color, caste and creed, work side by side. Recently thousands of people flocked to see an exhibit conducted by the Social Service League in Madura and all religious barriers seemed to be set aside. There was no charge made for admission, as the purpose of the exhibit was purely educational. A very prominent place was given to health and sanitation problems. These practical demonstrations are of especial value in India where climate and environment are so conducive to disease and where low standards of living make infectious maladies prevalent. Mr. E. E. Saunders, the Australian physical expert, threw such enthuisasm into the organizing of health propaganda and training for high school boys that the municipal authorities endorsed a model play-ground scheme for Madura.. India is awakening to the need for better material conditions. She must also become more conscious of the necessity for spiritual life.

Unhappy Russia

Only strictly censored news comes from Russia, so that few realize the awful reign of terror that prevails there. Famine stares the people in the face; the civil courts of justice are suspended; the police do not pretend to preserve order; large sections of Petrograd have been reduced to ashes; the military forces are under no adequate control, and use their power to pillage and to oppress the people. There is great danger of Jewish massacres; indiscriminate slaughter takes place in the streets and the Bolsheviki seem determined that if they can not rule Russia no one else shall do it. Already two German ambassadors have been assassinated and an attempt was made on the life of the Bolshevist Premier Lenine. There is no prospect of educational facilities being open to the people this winter and religious services are impossible for the Bodsheviki are bitterly opposed to the educated classes and to the churches. Everything is in disorder, and there is no human help adequate to cope with the situation. A recent cablegram from Dr. George a Simons, the Methodist missionary in Petrograd (written as he was about to leave the city) gives the following view of conditions:

"Economic conditions growing appallingly worse daily. Many members and friends of our church, also some Americans, impoverished, starving. Morally obliged to help, but quite unable, having no funds for food to distribute. Now without Embassay and Consulate, Red Cross leaving shortly. American citizens and interests under protection of Norwegian Legation. Latter very accommodating. Cholera epidemic almost exterminated, thanks to efficient medical agencies. Atheism and agnosticism most rampant now among workmen whose anti-Christian animosity directs itself against Russian church as possible reactionary agency. Our conviction is that Russian Christianity will thereby become purified, finally surviving socialistic persecution. Majority workmen and peasants sober-minded and gradually awakening to facts. May future reunited Russian be Christian democracy like America, or, for and by entire people, with untrammeled press, all classes sharing blessings of liberty, equality, fraternity. Our opinion that the heart of Russian nation beats warmly for America.....May Christian America not abandon Christian Russia. Need your prayers."

But America and the Allies have not lost hope for Russia. The darkest hour will be followed by dawn. Already with the help of British, American and Japanese forces responsible government is being established in the north, near Archangel, and in Siberia. The power of the Bolsheviki is waning and the Russians are beginning to see the hopelessness of attempting to reach idealism through anarchy. Russia's need is for sane, strong, God-fearing leaders. After the reign of terror there will be a great opportunity to show the people that their only ground for hope is in Jesus Christ. There will also be a great demand for evangelical Christian education.

In the meantime the Russians are more ignorant of conditions in the outside world than outsiders are of the real state of affairs in Russia. The newspapers printed there are in the hands of the Bolsheviki, and print false statements to show that all the world is in upheaval; that England and Holland are starving; that China and Japan are in the throes of revolution; that America is threatened with an Indian uprising and that every nation is as hopelessly embroiled as Russia. Now is the time to lay plans for constructive Bible work to follow the establishment of order and to prepare for the education of Christian leaders.

Christian Endeaver in Latin America

Christian Endeavor has followed the flag of Protestant Christianity into Latin America. Our society has been introduced by missionaries and fostered by them because of its possibilities as a training-school for the church.

Mexico has long had Christian Endeavor societies. By 1896 there were so many societies scattered throughout the republic that it was possible to hold a national convention at Zacatecas, which was attended by missionaries from every part of the country. Two natives walked two hundred miles that they might attend the meetings. Since the revolution, which created hard feelings toward America, the work of missions in Mexico has progressed under difficulties, and the Christian Endeavor society has suffered also. Nevertheless our latest figures show 142 societies in Mexico.

A Protestant convention was held in Mexico City last July which was attended by Endeavorers from four or five states of Mexico. They decided to reorganize the national Christian Endeavor union, and the work is now under way again as in former years. This news comes from Mrs. Bertha de Valasco, Mexico's national Junior superintendent.

Secretary Galbardo, general secretary of the Mexican Christian Endeavor union, tells us that Mexico has been divided into eleven Christian Endeavor districts, and a superintendent has been appointed for each district. A book with Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting topics for both Junior and Young People's societies is to be prepared, and plans are afoot for a national Christian Endeavor convention next summer.

As late as 1900 there were only two societies in Brazil, but in a few years they grew to more than sixty, most of them in the enterprising province of Sao Paulo. The Anglican society of Sao Paulo, Dr. Clark found when he visited the city, conducts a seamen's reading room, where sailors of all nations may find a welcome and read books and papers in their own language. Some of the Endeavorers have done a great deal of earnest missionary and evangelistic work, holding meetings in the city and suburbs.

In October, 1916, the Christian Endeavor societies in Brazil numbered thirty-five. Since that time they have more than doubled, and there are now seventy-seven societies, thirteen of them Junior societies. Besides these, there are societies that are not enrolled in the national union. The societies are found in all except four states of Brazil, and in these four states organizations are under way.

Miss Lora James, a missionary to Brazil, who formerly belonged to the Southern Presbyterian society at Rocky Mount, N. C., found a small Christian Endeavor society when she arrived at her field at Recife, Brazil. There were other societies scattered around the district, but there was no organized union work. Miss James organized the work, strengthened weak societies, and formed new ones. So successful was she in her work with Endeavorers that reports of it reached the government, and she was offered a position as principal of the School of Domestic Science, a large state institution. She accepted it and in her important post is doing a large work for Christian Endeavor.

At Cristobal, in the Canal Zone, there is a Junior Christian Endeavor society; at Pedro Miguel there is an Intermediate Christian Endeavor society, and at Balboa a Young People's Christian Endeavor society. In the society at Balboa the average attendance is fifty, about one-fourth of whom are soldiers.

For years there have been Christian Endeavor societies in Venezuela, but the only one from which we have recently heard was organized some years ago by a missionary, Rev. T. J. Bach, at Maracaibo. Before Mr. Bach and his wife started for this field, the Christian Endeavor society at home gave him a wedding present of $35, which was invested in a small printing press. When he arrived at Maracaibo, he used this press to print tracts and a small paper. The printing enterprise grew until today the printing establishment, presses and stock, is valued at about $7,000. There are in connection with this mission an organized church, a Christian Endeavor society, a Sunday school, and a bookstore.

Columbia, South America, has eight Christian Endeavor societies, and Chile has fifteen. There is one Christian Endeavor society in Dutch Guiana, and there are two societies in the Argentine Republic. Perhaps there are more in these countries, for Christian Endeavor has a surprising knack of growing quietly. In Costa Rica ten Christian Endeavor societies are reported, and three in Guatemala. One interesting piece of work has been done by Porto Rican Endeavorers who have formed a Christian Endeavor society among the American soldiers who guard the detention camp on the islands of Taboga.

The Brethren have a thriving Christian Endeavor society in Rio Cuarto, Argentina. It was organized by our pioneer missionary, C. F. Yoder, and he says the society is one of the best means of development in making native Christians.

News From the Field

NOTICE TO PASTORS

At the National Conference this year, The Missionary Board of the Brethren Church was authorized to ask for a Thanksgiving Offering avering 30 cents per member or a total offering of $7500.00

A number of advanced steps were taken at the conference looking towards enlarging the church extention work of our beloved church and we are asking that every church arrange to have a special offering taken at Thanksgiving time so that we can meet the added expense of the new work thus planned.

Will every pastor co-operate and thus help us go over the top with the greatest Thanksgiving Offering yet taken.

ORION E. BOWMAN, Secy-Treas.

DOINGS AT DAYTON

The first Brethren church of Dayton, Ohio, is now under the care of Eld. Edward M. Cobb, recently from Los Angeles, Cal. who was called by the unanimous consent of the church to take the place of W. S. Bell during his leave of absence for one year from Sept. 8th. last. On Saturday evening Sept. 7th, the congregation gave a "Farewell" to the Bells, and a "Welcome" to the Cobbs in a very interesting program and with a representative hearing and appreciative responses. A fine purse was contributed by the men of the church for the pastor, and the women likewise remembered Mrs. Bell with a purse and a pair of "Thermos" to aid and accompany them on their trip. This all showed how the people loved their pastor and made him almost wish to cancel his coast-trip, but as his successor was on the scene and such a hearty welcome accorded him and his good wife this forestalled any change.

On Sunday, 8th., Brother Bell gave his farewell messages to large audiences both morning and evening, and Elder and Sister Cobb were received into church fellowship by letters from the Compton Ave. church of Los Angeles. The First Brethren regular church calandar of the 15th., says, "Promptly at 7:15 last Tuesday morning (the 10th), "Henry Ford" gave his first puff on his journey of 2738 miles across prairie mountain and valley to the land of the poinsetta and bouganveilla, loaded to the guards with smiles, large Bells, small Bells, army cots, smuggled goods, excess baggeage, and "God bless you's" and the departure was made amid the well wishes and "good byes" of a group of friends, and neighbors at that early hour. A very pleasant and helpful rest and vacation is our wish."

The Bells reached Long Beach, California, October 8th and Brother Bell will be in charge of the First Brethren church while elder L. S. Bauman is doing revival work in the eastern churches for six or eight months. Brother Bauman is to conduct a revival campaign at the First Brethren church of Dayton, beginning October 27th, according to plans scheduled, and Mr. R. P. Stout, of Pasadena, is to be the singer.

Elder Cobb, the new pastor has taken over the charge in a very vigorous way and there is no let up to doing great things for the Dayton work. Already several people have been received into church fellowship by baptism and consecration. The attendance upon all the church services is increasing and the people appreciate the sermons and effort of Dr. Cobb to advance the best interests of the Master's cause in our midst. Scheduled cottage prayer meetings have been held in preparation for the coming revival with fine attendance until at this writing the "Influenza" ban has blanketed all public services. But we hope this distress will soon have passed and that the Lord's work may not long be interfered with by this dread malady which is carrying away thousands of our "boys" as well as many scores of our citizens to untimely graves. May everyone pray that the "King-Over-All" will very soon remove this dreadful scourge from our land and save our fellowmen from its further ravages. May we be humble before God and implead his grace. May the Brethren everywhere pray for us as we pray for you.

Publicity Agent.

THE HAND BOOK

As district director of the Four-Year Program of the Maryland-Virginia district, I have sent copies of the Hand Book, to all Pastors, in sufficient numbers to supply all Sunday School Superintendents, Christian Endeavor Presidents, S.S.C.E. Presidents and other Congregational Keymen, with a copy. The Four-Year Program committee has certainly supplied a very complete Hand Book on the work, that is easily understood. There are two Report Cards in each Book one to be filled out and sent to the district director, in January and the other in July next. These two reports from each congregation are absolutely necessary in order to succeed. Nothing so retards as "No report". If the officers of any congregation in the district for any reason fail to receive a copy of the Hand Book, drop me a card and I will supply you. "Now then do it;"

Yours for the Four-Year Program.

TRAVEL NOTES

On September third we rounded the last curve and dashed into the beautiful little town of Oak Hill, W. Va., which rests like a pearl amid the majestic hills lying in all shapes and sizes. One could not help but think of the many molds of God through which they passed, and the golden sunlight which kissed their earthly brow so many times.

The writer felt perfectly at home in the hills and with the many good people of God nestled in these ever growing hills of beauty. Thirteen years ago the writer helped brother A. B. Duncan and people in a campaign of soul winning at Oak Hill. The meeting was short but God gave us a great victory. In the twelve nights seventy-seven souls came to the blessed Christ. The writer never felt better or more proud of the saving gospel of the Son of God than he did when he gripped the hands of so many of these converts who said we are still working and fighting for our blessed Master.

The last campaign was well attended from the first night to the last, but we found the field well gleaned, only about twelve lined up with the church, but the pastor and others said the meeting was far reaching along many lines. One thing we know we tried to glorify God in each service and we felt his loving presence each time we congregated in his house. We have some jewels in the Oak Hill church that can always be depended upon. We had our home with Dr. Duncan, a son of A. B. Duncan, the pastor. Dr. Duncan is not only on his job in his practice, but as a church member he is a real soldier with a whole heart in the work. This was the second time I had the pleasure of staying in Dr. Duncan's home. His good wife used her auto in many ways helping in the meeting. May the God of all grace continue to bless their home and keep them in the sunshine of his love.

Salem, West Virginia

Salem is about four or five miles from Oak Hill where we put up our second fight with the devil. The meeting was short, only two weeks, but God stretched out his mighty hand and rebuked sin and the wicked one and flooded our souls with his white light from heaven, and got great glory to himself. Even fifty souls stepped out on his side and in a public way confessed Jesus as the Son of God and their Savior, the most of whom have been baptized and received into the church of the living God. All glory be to God and his Christ. The brethren and sisters at Salem lined up with the pastor and evangelist in the good work and God was pleased to put his stamp upon the efforts. Where union is, power dwells. While at Salem we had our home with brother James Duncan another son of the preacher. The home was an ideal one in which to abide as brother Arch Lynn and Brother Hazlett will bear me witness. While at Salem, like at Oak Hill, we visited from house to house and shared the blessings of hospitality in many homes. Salem is a great field for our church but they need a church building so very much, and I feel sure after the war ends a nice house will go up to the glory of our God.

Gatewood Next

On Monday evening, October seventh, we opened up fire on the old man of sin. The church was about full and three souls came to Jesus and on Tuesday evening the church full and two more came into the light of salvation. On Wednesday morning the health officer called up the writer over phone saying on account of the Spanish Influenza all schools, church services and all public gatherings must be closed until they could put the harness on the plague, so the curtain had to fall until the monster is harnessed. May the wisdom of God be given to the physicians and nurses all over this and other lands. Should our meeting have continued at Gatewood, I am certain we would have had a great victory, but at present it is all off and we will have to live in his great will and simply wait. We cannot say at this writing just when we will open our next campaign. We shall visit our people in old Virginia for a while and perhaps by that time the way will be opened again. Our next meeting from Gatewood was to be at Mosy with Brother Coleman and people. Mosy is also a field for our people. I trust I will be able to get back some good day. While in West Virginia the writer assisted in several funerals. Brother W. S. Coleman's daughter passed away to the sunny land and little Elmore Carlton. Sister Backus, a splendid member of our church, was the mother of little Carlton Backus who also went home to be with him. May God comfort these dear ones.

Brother A. B. Duncan is the father of the work in these parts. He is seventy-six years young, but still busy about the Master's business. Brother Duncan is respected by all the good people, however, he feels that a younger man should come and take up the work in a field where any young man with a vision and push can constantly bring souls into the kingdom of God. The field is great and the harvest is ready. May God send the reapers. May he bless Brother Duncan and Coleman and their flock and keep all in his name. Your servant in the church of the living God,

N. W. JENNINGS.

HAMLIN, KANSAS—FLORA, INDIANA

On September fifteenth we closed our second pastorate with the Brethren at Hamlin, Kansas. Both pastorates at Hamlin cover a period of nearly four years. It was in this church and the Old Pony Creek church that we began our work in the ministry and we shall always have a big place in our heart for our many good friends in Brown county, Kansas. We did not resign our work because we had to get out, but because we wished to get on a larger field. On Friday evening prior to our closing service, the church and friends tendered the pastor and family and brother and sister Grant Berkley, two of the Hamlin church's faithful workers that were moving to Seattle, Washington, a farewell reception. We were glad to have present Brother and Sister Stuckman of Falls City, and Brother and Sister Whitted, Morrill's new pastor. The S. S. C. E. presented the pastor's family with a box of beautiful silverware. At the closing service we were greeted with a crowded house.

During the past year the Hamlin church has made some visible progress. We like many other churches were confronted by several handicaps. The war called several of our young men into service. The Red Cross and other forms of war work took much time from some of our best workers. Yet the Hamlin church ranks as one of the star churches in our Four-Year Program. We want to acknowledge the Brethren Evangelist, that went into every home in the local congregation, as a good assistant to the pastor. The church met every missionary and benevolent offering in the Four-Year Program. The Sunday school is well organized and doing good work in spite of an urgent need for more room and equipment. They will soon have a Teacher Training class ready for their final examinations. The mid week service was well attended for the most part during the year. The Junior C. E. did some excellent work under Mrs. R. C. Berkley as superintendent. The choir and Sunday school rendered several fine programs during the year which fully sustained the reputation these people have for good programs.

We are glad to announce that the church has chosen brother George Cone, of Udell, Iowa, to be our successor and who is now on the field. We know that Brother and Sister Cone will find a good and worthy people at Hamlin and we are confident that they will be able to do much good. The church should have an evangelistic campaign in the near future.

On our way eastward we stopped at Mt. Etna, Iowa, for a short visit with Mrs. Henderson's people and had the pleasure of assisting brother G. T. Ronk in a Love Feast and preaching for the little class of Brethren recently organized at this place. They have no pastor, but they have a good, growing Sunday school under the leadership of brother Jacob Thomas. They have good prospects for a church here before many years.

On October first, we arrived in the beautiful little city of Flora and found several brethren waiting to welcome us. We shared the hospitality of brother John Humberd's home while we were getting located in our new home. We are very favorably impressed with the work and the fine class of people here. They know how to keep a preacher from getting homesick. They have one of the prettiest little churches that I have ever seen, and it reflects great credit to the congregation and my predecessor, Brother Lytle has accomplished a great work in Flora and has left a lasting impression on the hearts of the people. He very kindly made all the arrangements for the Indiana conference which met at the Flora church in a rather abbreviated form on October 7-8. Our people are very much disappointed because the conference had to be brought to such an abrupt close to comply with the order issued by the Indiana State Board of Health on account of the scourge of Spanish Influenza that has been sweeping over the state. However, we were glad to welcome all our brethren who came and hope that the Brethren of Indiana will assemble with us again in some near future under more auspicious circumstances. We had planned for a big Rally Day last Sunday but have postponed it until a later date. We covet the readers' prayers for us and our work at Flora.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

Though we have been without a pastor for over two months the interest and attendance seem to keep up well. Our former pastor, brother F. J. Reagan, after serving the Long Beach church for two months has begun his new work as pastor of the Turlock church. We hope that he will have fine success in his new field of labor.

The new Ministerial Examining Board for this district had a meeting recently and considered the matter of ordaining brother Harry Toler to the ministry, the First church having called him to the ministry several months ago. This committee recommended him to the church for ordination and the following Sunday morning an impressive ordination service was conducted by brother Isaac Ross and the writer. During the time that we are without a pastor, Brother Toler is bringing the messages to us each Sunday morning, and he has been privileged to speak also engaged in mission work in the city at to splendid audiences every Sunday. He is 606 East Fifth street where he has been able to reach a great many needy people. A Sunday school has been conducted there for some time and although it is not very large, it fills a need in that district.

Brother Toler took a great many of us by surprise last Sunday morning by bringing with him to Sunday school and church a young woman whom he introduced as Mrs. Toler. Mrs. Toler has been brought up in a Christian home and has excellent qualifications for a preacher's wife. We certainly welcome her to our midst and we feel sure that she will be a blessing to Brother Toler and to the church.

Dr. H. A. Dowling, formerly secretary of the State Sunday School Association for Southern California, at present connected with the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, has been our preacher on Sunday evenings and also leads us in Bible study on Wednesday evenings at the mid-week prayer meetings. Brother Dowling's assistance at this time when we are pastorless is very much appreciated. For several years there has been a feeling of friendship between him and our church that seems to grow stronger and stronger.

Brother Joseph W. Cline of the Church of the Brethren was with us one Sunday evening and brought us a live message that was very much enjoyed and appreciated by all who heard it.

At our Sunday School Workers' conference in August we had arranged to have brother John C. Beal, patsor of the Compton Avenue church with us and he spoke to us on the subject of efficient teaching. His address was very timely and we believe will bear fruit.

At a recent business meeting our congregation unanimously called to the pastorate of the First Church brother N. W. Jennings, who will take up the work January 1, 1919. There is much to do and so few who are really interested enough to deny themselves the time and energy and money necessary to drive the work to a successful issue.

Yours in the great cause of winning souls from darkness to light,

A. P. REED.

LOREE, INDIANA

After having served this congregation for five years we were made glad to see the real apprecation shown toward us on our last Sunday and our last communion on September 22 and 23. On Sunday we had a great day as this was the time for the annual Home Coming and Brother Menaugh who had served these brethren for a number of years gave the morning sermon, following the Sunday school which started the spirit of the day. The noon hour gave us a splendid opportunity to spend an hour of social fellowship around tables wonderfully loaded down with the bounties that the Lord has so wonderfully blest these brethren with, and a fine time was enjoyed by the large number present. The afternoon was the memorial service for the boys in training and abroad and at this time five new stars were dedicated and placed upon the service flag, then came the regular fellowship service in which after a short program the following brethren responded in behalf of the absent pastors who had once served this church. Brother J. M. Fox spoke of Brother Swihart and Brother Summers; brother Walter Shinn spoke of Brother Hopkins and Brother Streber spoke of brother A. E. Whitted.

Brother Menaugh was there to speak for himself and many an incident of past experience was brought out to guide the thought of all to a higher plane in Christian service. The evening service was the final sermon of our pastorate and a goodly number were present to bid us God speed in our new field of labor.

The communion service was well attended and proved to be a spiritual feast to the souls of those present.

May God richly bless these brethren and be with our brother C. A. Stewart as he takes the work to lead these brethren who have "proven themselves in all things" as we served as pastor.

W. T. LYTLE.

INDIANA CONFERENCE REPORT

The Thirty-first Conference of the Indiana Churches, met in annual conference at Flora, Indiana, October 7-8.

The opening session was held on Monday evening, when after an inspiring song service led by E. A. Myer, of Flora, Rev. H. H. Wolford led in prayer.

Rev. C. E. Kolb, Moderator, made a brief statement of our conference program having to be eliminated and nothing but real necessary business would be transacted by committees on account of the epidemic of Spanish Influenza.

Rev. W. T. Lytle introduced the conference pastor, Rev. S. C. Henderson and made a short welcome address to which Rev. Henderson made a very timely response.

Moderator Kolb appointed the following committees:

Credentials: J. A. McInturff, John M. Humberd, Homer Anderson.

Committe on Committees: G. W. Rench, H. H. Wolford and C. C. Grisso.

Moderator Kolb gave a brief moderator's report, offering some suggestions as he observed both the work and the various needs of the church.

W. T. Lytle, District Goal Director gave a report of the Indiana District on the Four-Year Program, which was placed in a committee's hands.

J. L. Kimmel, secretary of the Mission Board made his report, which was placed in the hands of a committee to report later.

The Committe on Committees reported as follows:

Committee on Nominations: W. T. Lytle, J. A. McInturff, John Wisler.

Committee on Report of Evangelists and Four-Year Program: H. H. Wolford, C. A. Bame, Mrs. U. J. Shively, E. A. Myers, S. C. Henderson.

Committee on Conference Location: U. J. Shively, W. E. Thomas, Sylvester Whetstone.

Committe to Consider Report of Mission Board: J. A. McInturff, S. C. Henderson, C. C. Grisso.

This evening session adjourned to meet at 8:30 A. M. Tuesday.

Tuesday Morning, 8:30

The opening song was led by C. C. Grisso. Scripture and prayer, G. W. Rench.

Nominating committee reported the following:

Moderator, G. W. Rench, South Bend. Vice Moderator, J. A. McInturff, Goshen. Secretary-Treasurer, C. C. Grisso, North Liberty.

President of Mission Board, W. T. Lytle, Burlington, Indiana, and recommended that a committee be appointed from the ministerium to draft rules by which our conference mission work shall be carried on and that this committee report at next conference.

Stundent Fund Board for Five years: Ellsworth Clingaman, Roahn, Ind.

State Evangelists: C. E. Kolb, Nappanee; H. H. Wolford, Elkhart; W. E. Thomas, Milford. Recommended that the state be divided into three districts by the Board of Evangelists who are to co-operate with the District Goal Director, W. T. Lytle and that a written report be filed with the conference secretary each year.

District Delegates to General Conference for 1919:C. F. Davis, Peru; John Wisler, Nappanee; Henry Rhinehart, Flora; Cilton Horner, Goshen; Albert Clark, Flora.

Recommended that we elect only five district delegates to the General Conference of 1919 and that the secretary of the District Conference be instructed to notify the delegates of their election.

The above reports were accepted with the recommendations after being acted upon item by item.

Treasurer of Mission Board rported and the amount on hand showed a balance of $381.55. The report was accepted.

A motion prevailed that the Mission Board allow the expenses of the board incurred during the year, also the expenses of J. W. Brower for moving, this being allowed out of the general fund.

A provisional invitation to hold conference at the Goshen church in 1919 was accepted.

Committee on Committees reported the names of H. H. Wolford, J. A. McInturff and W. T. Lytle to draft rules and regulations concerning work of Mission Board. The report was accepted.

Henry Rhinehart, treasurer of Student Fund reported the amount of fund $583.50. The report was accepted.

Dr. R. R. Teeter represented the Publishing Company in the interests of the Brethren Evangelist and Sunday school supplies.

Mrs. U. J. Shively made a verbal report of the interests of the S. S. C. E. in the year's work urging the co-operation of pastors in the work. A motion prevailed that the Sunday school officers continue in their several offices for the ensuing year.

Christian Endeavor work of the Southern District was reported by E. A. Myer and the Northern District by Miss Cora Culp.

A motion prevailed to re-elect all of the present Christian Endeavor officers.

W. T. Lytle, acting treasurer of conference made his report of total receipts for 1918 conference $46.54. The report was accepted.

Credential Committee made its final report showing total of 43 lay delegates and 14 ministerial delegates. Total number of delegates 57. The report was accepted.

Committee on Recommendations of Mission Board. Secretary reported as follows: We recommend the acceptance of the report, and also the recommendation of five cents raise per capita for district missions. The report was accepted.

A motion prevailed that all ministers furnishing credentials accompanied by the regular credential fee shall receive their membership cards signed by the moderator and secretary of conference.

W. T. Lytle, newly elected president of the Mission Board, reported the budget and apportionments being based upon the statistical report of 1918. Per capita, 35 cents, budgeted as follows: Huntington, $700; Peru, $360; Muncie, $400; Teegarden, $100. The report was accepted.

This concluded the general business "of a real necessity for the good of the district." Therefore the adjournment of the Thirty-first Conference of the Indiana churches was made possible at 12:15 P. M., Tuesday, October 8.

Closing benediction by G. W. Rench.

C. E. KOLB, Moderator.
W. T. LYTLE, Acting Sec'y.

Ohio Conference Rally and Bible Institute, Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio November 25 to December 1, 1918

THEME; The Demand of the Present Crisis on Our Churches for Christian Leadership

General Invitation

At this critical time when the world is looking to America for democratic leadership, and America in turn must look to her indoctrinated people for an intelligent Christian leadership that alone can make democracy safe for the world, the American churches have a responsibility that is not only civic, but spiritual as well. If this great responsibility, not new to be sure but now more patent and urgent than ever before, is to be adequately met, the ministers and laymen of our churches must take upon themselves their full share of it. Believing that many of our co-workers, regardless of conference affiliation, share these gripping convictions and will welcome an opportunity to prepare for more effective service

We cordially invite you to share in a conference and Bible Institute of Ashland College to be held at Ashland, Ohio, November 25 to December 1, 1918, for the consideration of the demand of the present crisis on our churches for Christian leadership.

The foregoing forms an invitation that has been issued to the Ohio conference in particular and the other district conferences in general. It doubtless will be very attractive to Brethren people for a variety of reasons. Ashland is the recognized "hub of the church." The College represents not only the interests but the investments of substance and life of an increasingly large number of faithful communicants. Not a few of them have longed for an opportunity to learn more of the school and its work through personal contact—that opportunity now knocks at your door. Here is a most appropriate time for parents to visit the son or daughter who will scarcely have time to return home during the brief Thanksgiving recess. Others will be eager to visit student friends. Add to the satisfaction of this parental and friendly desire the spiritual ouplift and cultural development that will accrue unto all sharing in the strong daily program.

DAILY PROGRAM

The forenoons of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday will be devoted to class room work, consisting of lectures, recitations, and conferences. The following courses will be offered:

I The Individual and His Religious Education.

1. Child Nature and Child Nurture.
2. The Adolescent and His Difficulties.
3. Problems Confronting Youg People and Adults.

4. A Survey of the Needed Oragnizations and Materials.

This course will be presented by Professor J. A. Garber, and is open to all. With proper study the course should enable the student to complete Part I of the First Year's work in the new teacher training course. Those expecting to take the examination should read in advance one of the standard texts.

II The Minister and Theological Problems by Dean J. A. Miller.

1. The Christian View of God and the World.
2. The Person and Work of Jesus.
3. The Doctrine of Salvation.
4. The New Testament Church.

III Modern Philosophy in its Relation to the Christian Ideal of Life and the World by President W. D. Furry.

1. The Christian Ideal: A Defininton and Defence.
2. The Failure of Materialism.
3. The Spiritual Interpretation of Natural Evolution.
4. Philosophical Idealism and Christianity.

IV A Study of Bio-social Problems by Dr. E. E. Jacobs.

1. The Evaluation of Scientific Theory, General and Specific.
2. Changed and Changing Viewpoints.
3. Present Day Bio-social Problems.
4. The Present Social Emergency. Conclusion.

V The Church at Work by Professor J. A. Garber.

1. The Minister in the Pulpit and Parish.
2. Enlisting Laymen in the Purpose and Program of the Church.
3. Helping Young People to Discover Themselves and Their Life-work.

Departmental Sessions

Simultaneously with courses II, III, and IV, which are chiefly for ministers, there will be the following departmental sessions:

1. Women's Work by Miss Maud Billman and Mrs. J. A. Miller.
2. Sunday School Activities by A. D. Gnagey and Others.
3. Expert Endeavor, Dyoll Belote, Leader.

Evening Services

Following a period of inspiring congregational singing Dean Miller will give a demonstration in Bible study both as to method and content. All will be interested in learning how to acquire and impart the deep truths of the Word. The closing service will consist of a sermon by Doctor G. W. Rench, his sermons being instructional, inspirational and evangelistic. These services will begin on Monday evening and continue over the following Sunday.

Special Notes

According to the foregoing schedule there is no provision for class room work on Saturday forenoon. It is thought that the ministers will want to return for their Sunday appointments. The time will be used for examinations on the part of those completing courses. Afternoon and evening services will be held as on the preceding days, and a great day of three services will follow on Sunday. All who can are urged to remain for the climax on Sunday night.

There will be no registration fees, but a free will offering will be received at the evening service. Entertainment will be provided at the lowest possible rate. The Ashland Brthren are planning to provide lodging and breakfast free. Dinner and supper may be secured at reasonable prices. The church committee on entertainment consists of J. L. Hamilton, E. L. Pershing Cables War-Time Commission of Churches That He Relies on Churches to Keep Spirit of Patriotism at White Heat

The following cablegram from General Pershing has just been received by Dr. Robert E. Speer, Chairman of the General War-Time Commission of the churches in response to a cablegram expressing the loyalty of the churches and the assurance of their confidence and hearty cooperation which was sent by the General War-Time Commission of the churches at its meeting in Washington, D. C., on September 24.

"Many thanks for your cable of confidence. We rely on the churches at home to keep the spirit of the people white hot with patriotism and courage until victory has been won." PERSHING.

Our Dead

THE PASSING OF RUTH KREITZER

To see a child of God, yet in the purity and innocence of youth, but rooted and grounded firmly in an abiding faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, walk calmly and confident out upon the promises of God, which span the dark chasm, we call death, smiling as if meeting the Savior face to face, and shouting in a clear, audible voice and with almost a last breath, "Oh, there is heaven," is a scene which surely confirms one's faith in John's vision of the Holy City. Such was the passing of Ruth Kreitzer.

It was during the epidemic in Dayton, that I was almost continually at a funeral or anointing service, or bedside prayer, that the order came to close our churches. This we did. On Sunday morning I had called the deacons together for special prayer and was just starting for the appointment, when long distance called me away from the meeting I had planned with such keen anticipation to the bedside of Ruth Kreitzer in West Alexandria, leaving brother L. S. Bauman in charge of the meeting.

Ruth said, "I am so glad you came in time, Brother Cobb," and said twice she wanted to go home. I asked her if she was at peace with all men and she replied, "Yes, indeed, and Jesus too." After which I asked, "Ruth, are you fully resigned to the will of our heavenly Father?" and she said, "Yes, sir, and I want to go home." In the prayers that followed brother Frank Wright and I prayed audibly, while Ruth was really talking to Jesus, I could hear her. Then she was SO happy.

After an hour she called for Brother Wright, her Sunday school superintendent to pray for her which he did after which Ruth, in a clear, firm audible voice, ardently poured our her soul to Jesus whom she seemed to see standing just across the river, and oh I wish the whole church could have heard that prayer for her widowed mother and two soldier brothers, and her church, Sunday school superintendent, her employer. It just seemed that she could not cross without first leaving her benediction upon the ones she had loved and served.

Then she wanted Brother Wright to pray again, and he tried to pray softly, so as not to worry her, but she immediately took him by the hand and said, "Frank, pray so I can hear you," which of course he did and then she prayed again—and such a prayer for herself, to go home, and at the conclusion of the masterpiece of a petition, she exclaimed in a clear, round intelligent voice, smiling as she said it, "Oh, there is heaven," and her faith became sight and she went away and I believe Jesus took her by the hand and led her up from the river to the pearly gates which open to the streets of pure gold, and oh how she will enjoy that music up there.

Yes, Ruth is gone from us. We laid her away under the falling leaves today. She was assistant to the postmaster of the village and he told me by the grave with tears in his eyes, that he believed his post office was one of a very few where the Holy Bible was constantly open and staring the workers in the face. Between mails she studied it whole heartedly. Yes Ruth, like Enoch of old, walked with God, and I want to tell you that no one in the village will dispute that statement, for the man who drove the hearse told me so.

What a record, girls. She was a little over twenty-three. As the casket was silently lowered amid a profusion of flowers, a stranger who stood beside me said, "Mister, there goes the queen of West Alek." And such was the passing of Ruth Kreitzer. The writer tried to console the friends with John 11:28.

MY MOTHER.

God's best gift to mankind in a temporal sense is a good mother. If God ever created an angel in human from to dwell on earth, my mother was that one. She lived for her children and my father. Our joys were her joys; our sorrows were her sorrows; our cares were her cares; our children were hers. Her last words to me were for my pesonal comfort. She daily remembered each one of us children in prayer at the throne of grace. She was always cheerful under the most trying circumstances. By her self-denial in her daily life and by her scrupulous care in the nurture of her body she lived to be nearly eighty years old. She professed and lived a most devout Christian life. Her Bible was her daily companion and her daily reading was of a character to build up her soul. God has taken away from us children a strong arm of support. Mother made me what I am. God bless her memory and may she not be the only mother.

BUGBEE.—Lena Bugbee died at North Liberty, Indiana, September 20, 1918. She was a member of the Advent church. Funeral services by the writer at the home of her sister.

ROSS.—Henry Ross, of North Liberty, died September 22. He was a member of the M. E. church. In the absence of his pastor the funeral services were conducted by the writer in the M. E. church.

LIGGETT.—Mary Liggett of the North Liberty vicinity passed away October 4. She was a member of the U. B. church. Funeral services by the writer.

ZENTS.—Henry Zents died at the family home near North Liberty, Indiana, October 9, 1918. He was a member of the Brethren church for many years. Funeral services by the undersigned on Friday, October 11, at the family residence.

KILMER.—Bertha Estella Kilmer, wife of our esteemed brother L. Lemuel Kilmer, passed to her eternal reward on October 10, 1918, aged 36 years, 10 months and 28 days. She was united in marriage to L. L. Kilmer on September 2, 1903. To this union four children were born. Two daughters, Claribel and Kathryn survive. Sister Kilmer united with the Christian church early in life and during the pastorate of brother R. R. Teeter was received into the Brethren church at Nappanee. She was very active in the various auxiliaries of the church especially the Sunday school, having been primary superintendent and teacher at different times. Just two weeks before her death she was unanimously chosen teacher of the Young Ladies' class. Her going was peaceful after two days' battling with a stubborn attack of influenza. Peace be to her ashes until the resurrection morning when the Lord shall call his saints to meet him in the air. May the Lord tenderly care for the two daughters and the bereft husband in their hours of sorrow and loss. Funeral services from the family home by their pastor, the undersigned.

C. C. GRISSO.

KALE.—Alice M., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Kale, was born in Fulton County, Indiana, April 6, 1903 and died October 9, 1918, at the age of 15 years, 6 months and 3 days. She died at her home near Tiosa, Indiana. A few days ago she contracted the Spanish influenza and only lived a few days. She leaves to mourn their loss, her parents, 5 sisters and 3 brothers. A short service was held at the grave by the writer.

ORA E. OXLEY.

WALTERS.—Samuel A., husband of sister Mattie Walters, died in Beaverton, Mich., September 26, 1918, aged 34 years 23 days. He was the father of five children and died full of faith and after a wonderful assurance had come that he was going home to Jesus. He was a member of the Lutheran church. Funeral by the writer.

The New Testament Church a Church of Aggression

The New Testament church, like its Founder, was not satisfied unless it was bringing things to pass. It could not be contented and wage simply a defensive warfare. The greatest religious campaigns in all history are recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. Paul's Missionary Journeys are models in New Testament evangelism. They were "Great Plans Gloriously Executed." Modern evangelism can do no better than study those old models, for they have never been excelled. Twentieth century evangelism has never approachd first century evangelism in either plans or execution. Paul refuses to be surpassed, in plan or execution. As some one has said, wherever he went he either had a revival or a riot. And sometimes he had both. He was the most bitterly hated by the multitudes and perhaps the best loved by the few. And it was not his loose morals that made him his trouble. O no! It was the doctrine he preached. He "was set for the defense of the gospel." That was what they had against Paul. Modern evangelists seem to be afraid of the very thing that made Paul the success that he was. Rather than change their plans they find it easier to preach a half-way gospel.

To illustrate the propagation of his own kingdom Jesus says (Matt. 10:34): "I am come not to send peace, but a sword"— a figure evidently familiar to his immediate followers, if not familiar to us now. Jesus was put to death through mob violence. The strife occasioned by the Christian religion began with Jesus, and where the pure comes in contact with the impure, the truth with falsehood, there must be strife. Victor Hugo exclaims: "Sacrifice to the mob! Sacrifice to that unfortunate, vanquished, vagabond, shoeless, famished, repudiated, despairing mob; give it thy ear, thy hand, thy heart. The mob is the human race in misery." "The millennium lies far across dismal swamps where noisome reptiles hiss and crawl; beyond mountain ranges over whose icy summits only the eagle's shadow sweeps; across arctic's vast and desert isles, beyond tempestuous oceans, rank with dead men's bones, and rotting hulls of ships. Many heroes of the cross will spend years in fever swept districts, living in garrets and huts of straw, and at last in the gray-hair of age, file along, not with crowns on their foreheads and robes trailing gracefully, but in plainest attire and perhaps marching in rags, to that solemn retreat, the grave." Every step has been a battle. The memory of every victory has been tinged with strife and conflict. Coronation? Yes, but in that land where strife is o'er.

It is clear that Christ expects his orders to be carried out, mob or no mob; hence the favorite figure of St. Paul is the military figure. "So fight I, not as one who beateth the air." "I have fought a good fight." "Thou therefore, endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." "No man that wareth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." Horace Bushnell, in his great sermon on "The Military Discipline," says, "Does not every military commander know that, letting his men go home once a month, and come back with their heads full of family and business cares, unmans them practically, for the time, and so far incapacitates them for any brave, high-handed service? The only way to make great soldiership, as he well understands, is to take his men completely out of the home world, and have them circumscribed and shut out by drill, as being mortgaged in body and life for their country. Trained to flinch at nothing and suffer anything, he makes them first impassive, and so, brave. And under this same law it is that all Christian disciples are required to strip for the war, throwing off all their detentions, all the seductions of business, property, pleasure and affection. All such matters must now drop into secondary places, for the understanding is, that no one gets the great heart, or becomes in any sense a hero, till his very life is drunk up in his commander, and his supreme care to please him that hath chosen him to be a soldier. In just this drill too have all God's mightiest witnesses been trained."

To do the work of God requires a militant church. Combativeness is a marked characteristic of the New Testament church. How can a church be apostolic without its clear declarations of faith? Mere morality is about all you hear in the average pulpit. Honesty, sobriety, generosity and kindness are the four rounds of the moralist's ladder, but no ladder like that ever reached heaven. What if a man is good? Is that proof that he is religious? Goodness is one thing, religion is another. Jesus met a good man once, and he told him that he must be born again, or he could not see the kingdom of God. Don't forget that in the kingdom of God that it is religion that counts. It takes a ladder with four more rounds to reach heaven. The moralist must add faith, repentance, confession of Jesus and baptism with the laying on of hands to his little ladder before it can reach high enough to change his guilty past. And right here is where Paul broke with his kindred and friends. "Whom ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." That was what brought down on his poor head the ire of his neighbors and friends. That was what made his religion a constant battle. And out of the realm of the moral, into the realm of the religious will occasion strife in any community. Make people see that their boasted morality is but filthy rags in the sight of God, and you have a nice little conflict on hands. Set up the plea in the average community that their thinks don't count in matters of religion—that it is what God thinks,—and you will have all sorts of conflicts to maintain your position.

I knew of a preacher in a strong militant church who resigned his pulpit to preach in a union church (the sort they say we must have after the war). "To earnestly contend for the faith became distasteful to him. Now, a union church is generally no church—and the preaching is in harmony with the church. He preached lovingly, kindly, generously for more than a year, when an old acquaintance asked him what he would do if some John B. Gough would come forward to confess his sins. He said he had not thought about that. Think of it! Going through the forms of representing Jesus Christ here in this sin-cursed world, and then not thinking what to do for a whole year, if some one should come to break with his guilty past! It is said that a young soldier was on examination for promotion. The committee asked him this question: Suppose you were lead-

Feminine Citizenship

While citizenship does not of itself guarantee the right of franchise or of suffrage, yet it does carry with it certain responsibilities that should be patriotically observed, but there are other responsibilities that can hardly be imposed without conceding the suffrage right.

Theodore Roosevelt recently said in commenting on the present labor and war situation in America, "I would register the young women just as much as the young men." While the young men have been registered primarily for military service the registration also carries with it the information regarding the work or occupation or lack of occupation of every man registered; but in the case of the suggested registration of young women we take it that it would be primarily for industrial purposes. But here is one of the things that we contend the government has no right to ask of its citizens who are denied the right of suffrage. We will not say that the young women of the country should not be registered, but we do insist that any class of citizens that is under such obligations to its country is entitled to a voice in the government of that country. And furthermore we insist that many of these nonfranchised citizens are considerably more patriotic than a large number of those who oppose the granting of suffrage to them.

What Do You Read? And Why?

This is the age of the printed page and men are reading more today than ever before in the history of the world; but it is not an improper question to ask, What are we reading? Is it simply the glaring headlines of the morning daily? or do we add to this a hasty perusal of the sporting section of the paper?

In the days of Solomon the statement was made, "Of the making of books there is no end." If that statement could properly be made three thousand years ago, what could not be said of the present day? We know that many of the new books that come off the press each year are brought out for commercial purposes only. Not many of the popular books, those that are classed among the best sellers are written from any other motive than a commercial one. The authors of such books cater to public taste rather than attempt to mold the taste of the public and quite naturally tell their readers what they know they want to hear rather than what they know they ought to hear.

But while much of the reading of the present is careless reading and without any purposeful object on the other hand there is a great deal of constructive reading being done. Men of action and men of purpose recognize the value of classified knowledge and information as never before. But many people are at a loss as to what kind of reading will prove most helpful to them. It is taken for granted that the ministers ofany community will be among the best read men of the neighborhood. They may not read any more than some other men do, but their reading is supposed to be more orderly and systematic, and yet there are many preachers who hesitate to invest in new books because they have been so frequently misled in their selection of books. On the other hand some men have been extremely fortunate in the choice of their reading matter and have found it most helpful in their lives and to their work.

Only recently we have had a personal letter from a brother of wide experience and much reading in which he suggested that it would prove interesting to the readers of the Evangelist if a goodly number of our pastors and others as well, who have found a helpful book or magazine article recently would write to the Evangelist and tell about it. Surely the Brethren pastors are reading some of the good things that are constantly coming off the press and when they have found a golden nugget it is only proper that they should pass it on. We would be glad to devote a column of the Evangelist each week to the subject: "Books I have Read," and we would welcome contributions from our pastors and others as well from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Who will be the first to contribute such an article?

The Church As a School of Patriotism

The church has been accused of many evils that never were a part of it, and it has been blamed for many wrongs that it never committed. That the earthly organization known as the church has its weaknesses, its faults and its limitations can not be denied, but that it is a source of weakness or of corruption must be denied. The church has had enemies from the very beginning and it is far from being free from them now and these enemies have ever been and still are ready to make accusations against it and it seems only proper that defenders should rise up to protect the church from the savage onslaughts of bigoted and narrow-minded men who would pit their puny human wisdom against the oracles of God.

For many years men of this type have sought to make it appear that the church is a weak and effeminate thing with no power to accomplish real and lasting good, and there have been those who have stood ready to contend that the church is a detriment even to the morally good taste of a people; but recently the church has received some of the credit that has belonged to her from the beginning. We must confess that the church has been called upon many times to perform many functions that were never intended to belong to it but it has seemed that no other agency among men could do as well. We believe that the church generally stands as opposed to war though there may be times when even the church is compelled to believe that a war is inevitable and that it must be fought out to a righteous conclusion. It must be rather humiliating to some of the critics of the church to have such men as General Pershing say, "We rely on the churches at home to keep the people white hot with patriotism and courage until victory is won." This is a direct recognition of the moral influence of the church and is an acknowledgment of the fact that moral forces are after all greater than physical forces.

The Last Call

Before an other copy of the Evangelist reaches our subscribers the fall elections will have been held in a number of the states of America and in many of them vital issues will be determined. Many of America's voters have been hidebound in the past and party ties have been stronger than the ties of principle; but we believe a better day has come upon us and that today the people are more willing to consider a principle as against party. There are a number of states that will elect legislatures this fall that will be called upon to pass upon the prohibition amendment that is up to the states for ratification, and in some of the states the vote will be directly upon the question of prohibition in the state.

Very little public campaign work can be done on account of the prevailing epidemic but this need not interfere with the real work of the prohibition campaign. We believe the greatest thing that can be done to win the election in Ohio is to get the vote out. This is the last call. Will you heed it?

ADDRESS

BY DR. JOHN R. MOTT

Director General United War Work Campaign

We have come here this afternoon, not in the interest of any one organization or of any seven organizations, but solely in the interest of those men and boys who make up the American army and navy. And yet it is a most happy and significant circumstance that those seven great patriotic societies, the Young Men's Christian Association, The Young Women's Christian Association, the National Catholic War Council (working especially through the Knights of Columbus), the Jewish Welfare Board, the War Camp Community Service, the American Library Association and the Salvation Army have blended our plans, our purposes, our sacrifices, in the national interest and for the great cause that embraces the best of the world today.

When our President, that one who sees both sides of the shield, I think, with steadier eye than any other man living, that one who realizes, certainly as no other American, the situation as it is today, that one who has on his mind and heart every waking hour—and those hours are many each day—the vital interest of the republic, that one whose heart interest, as I can testify from many a conversation, is with each one of these seven societies, when that great leader of ours, and the one I think of in a unique sense as the leader of the world, said to us, "The difficulties of your going forward with seven separate appeals are far greater than any difficulties that might attend your blending your efforts and going forward together," that so far as my knowledge goes settled the matter once for all with every leader, member and loyal friend of any one of these organizations. We trust our President. The American people have never parted company with him in this war in any one of his proclamations or requests, and the last one in connection with which they would part company with his leadership would be this one which seeks to unite all the forces of righteousness and unselfishness on behalf of the manhood and the boyhood of the nation who are seeking to bear the impossible strain of this greatest struggle. Certainly we will follow our leader to the end.

Therefore, after the President had indicated his desire, the responsible leaders of all these seven societies came together and adopted that splendid Memorandum of Agreement that will go down through the years because of its breadth, because of its solidity and as guiding principles. We appointed a committee of thirty-five known as the General Committee, composed of five men and women of each of the seven co-operating societies. A small Executive Committee was then appointed of one from each of the seven, together with the chairman of the General Committee. I was asked to assume the burden of serving as chairman of these two committees and as Director General, and consented to do so on one condition and that was that I be regarded during this campaign as the servant of all. My condition was not only accepted, but every one of the thirty-five said, "We wish to be in the same catalog in the interests of our boys and men and in the national interest."

There are manifest advantages in this co-operative arrangement of which we do well to remind ourselves in order that we may carry every man, woman and child of the counties of Wisconsin with heart and conviction into this campaign and that there may be no mental reservation or pausing of will, but intelligent, open-minded and hearty allegiance and co-operation. I need not linger to say that one advantage is that the co-operative arrangement will make possible large economies. A plan that brings all together in one campaign from the nature of the case means a great saving over seven successive drives conducted within the short period from the end of the Liberty Loan until the middle of January as was contemplated. It will mean not only a great saving of money, but even more the conservation of the time and energy of many thousands of the busiest and most intelligent of the business men and professional men of the country who give their time to every patriotic endeavor of this kind no matter what its leadership. And even more the fact that we have now come together will in my judgment if this war lasts—and I think it is going to—mean the saving of tens of millions of dollars by co-operative arrangements that do not involve any compromise of principles, but prevent unnecessary duplication in the expenditure of effort and money. Anything in a time like this, which we must curtail, deny ourselves and husband resources and make them all count, which will save tens of millions is not without its marked advantage.

This co-operative plan will make for higher efficiency on the part of every one of the seven societies. It stands to reason that a plan that calls upon us to pool all our experiences will result in finer efficiency in each one of the societies because each one of these organizations has a splendid history, it has traditions of which it is properly proud, it has principles for which it would stand and fight, it has a philosophy and methods which have made possible great achievements. That leads me to remark that this plan of co-operation makes it easily possible for the strongest of these societies to help those who might not call themselves so strong. Some organizations that may not in the popular view be called so large, or so experienced, in the light of the teaching of history of the world often are among the most useful societies. You take it among the nations, how true it is that some of the smallest and even some more obscure nations have lighted the way for the larger nations. A nation is not to be judged primarily by the number of its people, or the extent of its geographical area, or the magnitude of its industrial establishment, or the number of its millionaires, but by the character, the genius, the spirit of the people. By this abiding test any organization which is characterized by reality, by open-mindedness, by serviceableness, will be helpful to any other organization no matter how old or experienced that society may be. The advantage of this co-operative plan is that it makes possible the helping of the weaker organizations by the stronger. No man or organization was ever made weaker by being called upon to assume added burdens, and the weakest organization will gather momentum and courage from association with the others.

The bringing together in common action as well as common plan of all these societies is bound to promote better feeling all over the United States of America. Say what we may as to the fine co-operative spirit which I have found existing in every one of these organizations, the fact remains that with the best of intentions we have all been living in separate compartments, each one by itself, because we are all intense, we are all busy, we have all got more than we can do, and it follows that we do not see as much of each other as we might otherwise, and therefore there has been quite a large zone of ignorance and that has resulted in prejudice and misunderstanding and at times even bitterness. Our new fellowship with one another is going to generate an atmosphere in which we will all come to loathe to differ from one another, but it is quite another thing to generate an atmosphere in which we come to resolve—that is, come to make up our minds—that we will take the initiative in trying to understand those people from whom we differ, it may be, quite sharply. That will be a good thing for the nation.

Moreover, this plan of associating all of us together is going to promote religious unity at a time in the world when this means more than will appear on the surface. This arrangement stands not for undenominationalism, but for interdenominationalism. There is all the difference in the world. Undenominationalism, which would try to reduce ourselves to the lowest common denominator, says, "I will obscure, I will hide, I will minimize, I will apologize for that which is most distinctive to myself and my creed." Interdenominationalism says the very opposite of that. It says, "I will hold fast to that which is most distinctive of us." One of the finest things in that splendid letter of the President which summoned us to co-operate is the sentence which I think I can give exactly. With his usual felicitous phrase and with his finest penetration, he says:

"In inviting these organizations to give this new evidence of their patriotic co-operation, I wish it distinctly understood that their compliance with this request will not in any sense imply the surrender on the part of any of them of its distinctive character and autonomy, because I fully recognize the fact that each of them has its own traditions, principles, and relationships which it properly prizes and which, if preserved and strengthened, make possible the largest srvice."

What a splendid principle! In other words, the President says that such an arrangement is not one that causes that which you most value about yourself to disappear, but something that will strengthen and preserve it. Thank God we have lived to a day like this and have got an arrangement that preserves everything that is good in every one of us.

This co-operative plan will promote the solidarity of the nation. I have made five visits to the warring countries since the war began and I think I realize what is involved in this struggle. We are far from the end of it. Well may our hearts stand still this afternoon as an American people when we remind ourselves of the price to be paid by our country before a military victory is achieved, before which there can be no foundation for treaties of peace on a basis of justice which we must have for the maintenance of our ideals and principles. Anything, therefore, which will lead this cosmopolitan nation, this land of many races and of many religions to find its unity, its deep solidarity and extend it, is in the national interest and in the interest of the cause for which our boys are laying down their lives.

Were I to mention another advantage of this plan and of its practice it is this, that it opens up boundless opportunities for all of us—opportunities for largeness of soul—how the people will expand under this conception; opportunities for illustrating genuine catholicity of spirit—how rare it is in the world after all; opportunities for exercising the finest leadership in the sense of that sentence in the Bible, "He who would be greatest among you shall be the servant of all;" boundless opportunities to forget ourselves and to magnify others and to serve. What vistas open up on every hand to expand us and our nation. So I say when the people back home remind you that there are some things that may have caused mental reservations or some difficulties they see in the united campaign, remind them that difficulties are an added attraction and not without their great advantages.

We have a real difficulty and that is to get at least $170,500,000. I emphasize those words at least advisedly. I want to give some reasons why we must have more than $170, 500,000, and when I think who you are and whom you represent and what you have got to do before the 11th of November, I am anxious to carry every man and woman with me. I am going to give reasons which I believe will convince every open-minded person that we cannot get along with merely $170,500,000. My first reason is because of the great expansion of the American army since the time that three or four of the largest of these seven societies assembled the data underlying their budgets, which budgets were approved by the War Department as part of this $170,500,000. I was one of those parties. I was on my fifth visit overseas awak back in March, April and early May. General Pershing and other leaders over there said, "We shall not have more than a million American boys over here by March 1." We shall have almost two millions by November 1. And when I got back here and talked with our military authorities, not one of them believed and expressed himself that by the middle of next summer we should have more than three million and a half men under arms or more than two millions overseas, and yet within a week I had a conversation with General Crowder in Washington. I said, "General, you will not be calling men up over 36 before summer?" He replied, "I shall be calling men over 36 before the end of January. We must have four million eight hundred thousand men before the end of next summer." In other words, we must scrap that budget because we must do for the four million eight hundred thousand the same as we are now doing for the two million overseas and the one million at home, or the opportunity will be taken out of our hands and we shall have to give way to other agencies that can do this work.

That leads me to a second reason why we must have more than $170,500,000 because of the most incredible growth of the American navy. We had 70,000 men in the navy at the time America entered the war, and now we have over 300,000 men and boys, nearly all of them volunteers. When we entered the war the British navy was, of course the greatest navy as it still is. Our navy is now larger than the British navy was then. When we joined the struggle we had 200 ships in action; by Christmas we shall have 2,000. We talk about the dangers of the boys in the trenches, but I would remind you that all of our boys over there in our navy—and we have more than many people fancy—all of our boys in the navy are in the front line trenches. They are in the mine strewn fields with the lurking submarines on every hand. They are taking their lives in their hands and by their ceaseless vigilance in the presence of death they are making it possible for our army to get over there with its remarkable record and for our army to be supplied. I am ashamed to say that the plans of none of our seven organizations at the time did justice to the American navy, and our conscience will not rest until we have included those boys. Therefore we have got to surpass the $170,500,000.

This war, unlike previous wars, is not a war of armies and navies, but a war of entire peoples, and that involves in a very unique sense the great industrial part of our nation and the allied nations. It is a war of machines, and in this plan we should be derelict, we should be lacking in perception if we did not make some provision to serve the men in the navy yards, in the arsenals and in other militarized industries. I wonder we were so short sighted, I wonder we did not see we were undercutting the men in the army and navy not to be serving likewise the morale of the men in the industries, and, therefore, I am glad to see these organizations desire to see us sweep past the goal in order that we may do our duty to these men.

Speaking of this being a war of entire peoples leads me to say it is essentially more than any other war—and this has been in some measure true of every war—it is a war of women. Not in the sense we could have said that of any war, but in that larger sense that women are called to take the place of men in the ordinary vocations that men filled, also in the fact that millions of women are making munitions, therfore releasing men, and then to hark back to the original reason, just because this war is more deadly, more awful unbelievably awful—women have got in the last analysis, to bear the larger part of the burden incident to the millions of graves of men, and the tens of millions of lame and crippled and the impossible burdens of taxation which will affect the women of more than one generation. Therefore, anything that God will let the Young Women's Christian Association, or the women's section of the Catholic War Council and the Hebrew Welfare Board do to serve the women of our nation and of France and of other Allies to help their morale, is in the national interest. But that necessitates a much larger provision in the budget than you will find there.

Then there is another very strong reason why we have got to have more than $170,500,000 and that is that the center of gravity has, within several months, shifted from this side of the Atlantic to the other side of the Atlantic. I would like to change that. Within a few months the center of the heart interest of the American people has shifted from this to the other side of the Atlantic Ocean. It has been my lot within the last few weeks to visit thirty-one of the United States. My journeys have taken me to the rural districts. It has been deeply moving to me to see in the windows all through the country these little flags with one star, two stars or more. The same is true among the houses of the workmen in all our cities. The other night an Irishman in New York came to see me. He had to work all day and he had to come to see me at the venture of not finding me in. I had met his son "over there;" he was in the regiment with my son, the 165th New York or the old "Fighting 69th" of the old Civil War days, a regiment made up of eighty-five per cent. of Irish Catholics, so my son, who is a Protestant if there ever was one, has had a Catholic chaplain, Chaplain Duffy. I met a number of my son's comrades and my son said to me when I was going, "I wish you would just call up over the phone the fathers and mothers of those boys you have met so far as you can and write others and tell them you have seen the boys. I sent a letter to this Irish laborer and he came in to thank me. He had three boys "over there." He had lost one of them and he said, "I wish I had another boy to give to take his place." And also among the avenues of the wealthy you find distributed these service flags. We are proud of our country, rich and poor. You can go behind any of those windows and you will find there hearts that are beating with special reference to what is now taking place or is soon to take place "over there." This has a financial aspect which shows why we must have much more money because these few societies which we represent are owing to military necessity the only organization permitted to work among our men overseas. This necessity puts a larger burden on these societies for they have got to do, in addition to their own work, all that thirty or more denominational and welfare and patriotic societies are doing for the soldiers and sailors here. Then again the army "over there" is broken into many parts. You will not find them as we do in great cantonments at home, save where the men may be massed in front line trenches or immediately behind in the rest camps or reserves. You will find there an American regiment of say twenty-six thousand men scattered as I did the other day in thirty-five or more villages. I found 170 in this village, 252 in that and so on, in different numbers billeted in those villages. Let me take you to just one of those villages. I went into a hay mow that had chinks in the sides which let in the snow and rain. I found seventy men sleeping there, and down below them that night they had taken hay and scattered it in a thin layer over the ground and one hundred were to sleep there. Some were to sleep in the chicken house and others in warehouses. I found still others in some of the less desirable rooms that the officers had not commandeered or on back galleries and porches where the rain and snow drifted in. I did not find in one of those villages a club or town library or a Y. M. C. A. building, nor did I find a saloon where there would be any warmth. You might go to a wine shop and buy wine to take home with you to drink, but there was no place where the boys could congregate. Just think what it costs to plant the work of one of these societies like the Y. M. C. A. or the K. of C. in places like that contrasted with one large cantonment here where there are forty to fifty thousand men. Some may say, Go with your work into villages that have a thousand boys or more. If you had gone to the village where I found my boy and possibly two hundred other boys, if you found your boy where I found my boy you would have said, "If necessary I will mortgage my farm in order that these organizations may have money enough to enable my boy to have a place where he can get warm and a place light enough to enable him to see to write his letters home."

The expense is also increased by the fact that the American army is being constanly shifted, except in the front line trenches. I have a little chart in my hotel which shows how one division of the American army was moved five times in six months. The Divisional Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. said to me, "I have had to open up 35 Y. M. C. A. huts five times, making 175 in six months. That is fearfully expensive. Someone might say, "Just open them up the first time so the men will have a splendid example and an inspiring memory." The American people will not stand for anything except that these organizations follow the boys through to the end.

It costs more also because the French railroads have been worn out or overworked by the war demands and pressure. The fact is they are not able to get supplies to build new equipment. Therefore the Y. M. C. A., following the lead of the Red Cross, have developed or aare developing their own motor transport, and the K. of C., and Salvation Army have to do the same, but let me say to you that is a most expensive process; but we must do it because we must have the personnel and the supplies where the men are.

That reminds me of another reason and that is that everything costs so much overseas, and the prices are sure to continue to mount.

We need a large oversubscription because of the continuity of this service. These societies accompany and serve the boy from his home to the camp, during his training at the camp, to the port of embarkation and while waiting there, on the high seas, at the port of debarkation, through the further training period in France, into the trenches, at the hospitals and leave resorts, in lonely prison camps and then through the long dangerous period of demobilization and all the way homeward until you go to meet him at your own station, or in Chicago, or on the Atlantic seaboard. In a word—from home back to home, and during all the intervening space of time they will be home for the boy. When the men, women and children of Wisconsin understand this they will say, "Let us forget the goal of $170,500,000 and let us give these societies enough money to do this work properly."

I will mention in brief another reason why we must exceed $170,500,000 and that is because of the comprehensiveness of this ministry. These societies are to be the American home to every boy. That is enough on which to make the whole argument. They also must be the American school and the American college. To this end we have just started the American university in khaki. We must likewise be the American club at its best for all these boys, and the American library and the American stage at its best, and the American churches and synagogues. In a sentence, we seek to reproduce for our soldiers and sailors—remember this—all that is best in American life. This is costly, but none too costly. Why, $170,500,000 will mean about ten cents a day for each American soldier, and that does not include the navy, nor the women affected by war conditions. That does not include our Allies. We ought to increase the average amount for the soldiers and sailors alone to at least fifteen cents a day, and of course the American people will do it when they understand.

We must not forget our Allies—those who for three long years before we saw our duty and acted upon it, and for our sakes as well as theirs were bled almost white. We must expand our work on behalf of the Frech army of 4,000,000 through the agency which we have been financing, the Foyer du Soldat. It is now established at 1,000 centers as a result of our help and we have been asked to assist in planting it in 1,000 more places. In the same way we must enlarge our co-operation with the Case del Soldato, which with our aid in men and money is working among the 3,000,000 Italian soldiers. Likewise we must do more for the Belgian army, for the Portuguese and for the Allied armies in the Balkans, in Egypt, in Palestine and in Mesopotamia. And we must not abridge but augment what we have begun to do for the labor battallions of Chinese, Indians, Africans and West Indians behind the fighting lines in France, all emphatically in the interest of saving the American boys and of winning the war. I am proud of the fact that at least $25,000,000 of these consolidated budgets goes toward these Allied armies and the prisoners of war; it ought to be $50,000,000 or more. I want to mention this other reason—and there are a great many more—and that is in order that these societies may be in a position to meet emergencies and crises. After all that is what war consists of. If you cut out of war the unexpected and emergencies, the calamities and the crises, you do away with war. I am free to say that these societies have not included in their budgets to meet emergencies. One of these societies, as you know, made a drive last year for $35,000,000. You can always trust the heart of the American people. They knew better and they subscribed $54,000,000,. Note what that made possible in this one respect. I left America the 21st of March. Do you remember what that day was? The day the Germans' great offensive of the year began. I had found England serious on other occasions; this time I found her suffering. I found she had lost eighty-nine of her Y. M. C. A. huts. I said—I did not have time to cable—"There are people in America that would like to give half a million dollars to replace them." On my return to America my committee criticised me for one thing and that was that I did not promise a million instead of half a million. We cast that bread upon the water, it came back not after many days but after a very few days because, within three weeks after I promised the half million dollars, the American War Department and our President decided to brigade American troops with those of our Allies. Within two days two divisions of the American soldiers were sent across the Channel and they were put in the very sector where we had arranged to replace the English huts.

Even though the war were to end within a few months, or a few weeks, we should stand in great need of a fund of more that $170,500,000, owing to the fact that this work, unlike that of many other agencies, will have to be continued throughout the entire period of demobilization. While in Europe I was told by military authorities that it will require a period of fifteen months from the time that the conflict ceases to transport the Canadian army to their homes and that it will require eighteen months to convey the armies of Australia and New Zealand homeward. Without doubt it will require not less than twelve months for us to bring our American Army home. During that long period they will have virtually all of their time on their hands. They will not have the excitement and the incitement to stimulate their spirits and the intense activities of the war period to absorb their attention and utilize their time. Their temptations will be more numerous and persistent. There will be a tendency to let down standards and relax discipline. It is of the utmost importance that plans be made for the wise use of their leisure hours. The practical and significant question is, Shall our men and boys come back to us weaker or stronger men? The period of demobilization should be made one of growth in knowledge and working efficiency and of strengthening of character and life purposes. The Young Men's Christian Association and the other organizations are planning not only to enlarge their recreational program during this period, but to launch a great educational campaign. In popular language it may be described as "The University in Khaki." We have appointed an Educational Commission overseas, composed of a group of the leading educators in America. They have asked us to select and send over about two thousand professors and teachers of American colleges and schools to help in launching educational work for the coming winter and also to be on hand for the period of demobilization, whenever it comes. We have entered into negotiations with the British and French universities to help us in this vast educational undertaking. One may judge of the great dimensions of the enterprise from the fact that it will require at least $8,000,000 for textbooks and books of reference for the coming winter alone. It ought to be added that no provision is made for this educational program in the budget of $170,500,000 and therefore in itself is a further reason why we must have a large oversubscription.

Now to sum up, in view of what this will mean for the American soldiers and sailors during the coming winter, which is going to be a terrible winter; in view of what is going to mean for the millions of homes from which these boys have come and from which they are going to come; and in view of what it would mean to the enemy if we were to fail;—we will not fail, but we will lose ourselves in our great cause and therefore find ourselves away beyond the goal.

The Call for the Thanksgiving Offering

BY G. T. RONK

The call for this great offering goes forth at one of the greatest times of stress known in the history of the American people. Not only have millions of the manhood of the country been called to the National defense in a foreign war, which brings in its train a vast readjustment of the responsibilities of the local church workers; not only have war needs for equipment and works of mercy exercised a vast change in the home economics and individual power to give; but also we are face to face with the worst pestilence that has swept the country in its whole history, which has already brought death and sorrow to our beloved fraternity and consequent painful readjustment of private affairs, which has closed churches and interrupted the course of local finance, already burdened in many places seemingly to the limit. Consequently, the Thanksgiving tide approaches as we are struggling to our feet once more with minds none too clear, in a confusion that engages the possibility of vast interests being overlooked.

Therefore, this call goes forth to pastors, leaders and the rank and file of the church to be up and doing as never before. One of our vital interests confronts us at this hour, the paramount interest of the extension of our beloved faith through the activities of the General Missionary Board. As a nation and as a church we have risen magnificently to the demands of the dark hours just passed, in pouring out our blood and our treasure for the country, in personal service to the sick and dying of our own and neighboring households; and this, too is our own—this responsibility for the propagation of our faith that God has given us as a light to our pathway in the darkest hour, as a precious inheritance to hand down to our children for their time of stress—this responsibility which is unto our Lord. There is danger that we will forget him; that in the stress of the call of country and the moans of friends we will forget his interests which are fundamental, above the travail of nations and above the moans of men; his interests which are being served in inscrutable ways, so plain and open in the past, so dark and unfathomable in the present, but certain in the determining power of his providence. Let us rise once more to the occasion and not forget him.

Secretary Daniels has recently said that if the civilization which is saved out of the wreck of this war, does not become a Christian civilization it is not worth saving. To fulfil our mission for the future and to justify the price we are now paying for it, we must crown our deeds and sacrifices by the supreme sacrifice to Christ of which this Home Missionary Board is an instrument and the impending offering is an incident. All our contributions to the suffering world and endangered civilization becomes futile unless we carry through this supreme contribution of all. In geography, in politics and in philanthropy we have gotten a world view and embarked on a world activity of epic dimensions. How futile it all becomes unless in the fundamental issue of the kingdom of Christ which is involved in the world conflagration, we employ the same world view and world activity of the sublime epic of God in Chirst Jesus. The one dominates the stage of the age, the other dominates the arena of the ages. To the remotest farmhouse and hamlet we have become international in sympathy, activity and the pouring out of our heart's blood; through the desperate earnestness of it all, let us not forget the prior internationalism of Jesus Christ. Without such a perspective, if we may believe the word of the dominating geniuses of this hour, our offering of blood and treasure becomes a hideous mockery.

Less remotely, the coming offering for the General Missionary Board at the Thanksgiving tide should receive the earnest support of every loyal Brethren because this board through its activities is the most immediate and direct agent for the propagation of the Brethren doctrinal position we have. Other organizations in the church owe the justification for their existence to their indirect contribution to this end. This organization is the direct agent to this end.

It has enlarged plans and enlarged activities for the coming year that require an enlarged income. Its activities for the coming year will be under four heads:

1. The support of growing church projects in strategic centers from Washington state to Washington, D. C. These are practically all prosperous and becoming enlarged centers of Brethrenism from year to year.

2. The thorough investigation of new points looking to new work in years to come with evangelism and personal work leading thereto.

3. Organizing and evangelistic effort in dying churches and sparsely settled districts, many times strategic with relation to adjacent population centers. This work promises to be universal and thorough.

4. The thorough indoctrination of all immature churches and mission fields through tracts and definite doctrinal propaganda.

To insure the thorough execution of these activities the board at its last meeting divided the country into three districts and provided for each a field secretary without salary: namely, Western District, all west of the Rocky Mountains: Henry V. Wall, Long Beach, Calif. Eastern District, all east of the west line of Pennsylvania: Horace Kolb, 1603 Butler St., Philadelphia, Pa. Central District, between: George T. Ronk, Leon, Iowa. These Brethren solicit correspondence from all churches or isolated members within their several districts regarding the activities or needs suggested as well as from the district mission boards whose efforts they are directed to try to co-ordinate with the activities of the General Missionary Board. Their election for this specific purpose and for this detailed activity calls for the financial support of the smallest and remotest church in the brotherhood.

Finally, in view of the world wide interests involved, in view of this greatest moral crisis of the nations, in view of the impending problems of reconstruction following peace, in view of the constructive purposes of the General Missionary Board in seeking to conserve and co-ordinate to the last hamlet all the forces of the church to form a united front to meet the challenge of the anguished world as to the meaning and issues of life—in view of all these interests, personal, vital, inexpressible, the General Missionary Board asks the whole church to forget its anguish, its sacrifices and its forebodings, and to merge its enthusiasm in that vaster enthusiasm in Christ, as at the Thanksgiving season it counts his blessings and ministers to his cause here by a great and spontaneous offering.

Voters Take Notice

BY FRANK B. YODER

Fall elections are not far away. The brewing interests of the country are working systematically to gain control of our law making bodies.

They have secured the nomination of men who are known to be opposed to temperance legislation. If money and whiskey can do it these men will be elected in November.

If such a thing should happen it will be good-by to the prohibition amendment to our national constitution, for many states have yet to ratify this amendment.

Other states will be voting for prohibition measures. It should be remembered that laws can be repealed as well as new laws passed.

We have made considerable progress in temperance legislation the past year. Much of this has been brought about as a war time necessity. We have found the results to be good, excellent, in morals and in business. Let us keep all we now have and at the same time labor to secure still more. Let us not be satisfied with anything short of national prohibition and an educated public conscience that will DESIRE and INSIST on enforcement of our temperance laws.

The only way to do that is to see to it NOW that only such men shall be elected this fall who are known to be "out and out," "flat-footed" and "four square" in favor of prohibition.

I am making no argument for party. Party politics is, or should be, a dead issue. Principle should stand at the head of every ticket. Question your candidates. If they be unwilling to declare themselves on this important question before election day, MARK them and VOTE against them election day. You cannot discharge your full duty of citizenship and do less.

A vote for prohibition is like paying a premium on your life insurances policy. It protects you and your family in the years to come.

The three candidates here in this district, 13th Indiana, who have failed so far to declare themselves are Messrs. Goss, Gorski and Legity. Mr. Heplor, candidate for state senator also is opposed to National prohibition.

"Staying By the Stuff"

BY G. C. CARPENTER

The churches in the homeland form a base of supplies necessary to carry to a successful conclusion the greatest war the world has ever known, namely, the war against Satan and sin and death and hell. The forces of the church of the Living God ought to buckle on the armor tighter than ever and go "Over the Top" again and again. The Four-Year Program charts at the next General Conference ought to show that the enemy has been driven away back of his 1918 line and that remarkable gains have been made.

The missionaires at the front can press forward with the gospel light and drive back the darkness only to the extent that the church at home does her part. Thanksgiving is the time set for the annual offering for Home Missions. That time will soon be here. The churches east of the Mississippi have been closed for a season on account of the raging epidemic, but that must not lessen our loyalty to the cause of Home Missions. At the most opportune time every church in the brotherhood ought to reach the goal of thirty cents per momber and be listed by our faithful secretary-treasurer among the "Banner" churches.

Your home board has made a budget for the year covering mission work in from twelve to fifteen places and in more than half as many states. The board is the servant of the church. Much time and attention are being given to the work now under way or being contemplated, but the board must depend upon the churches to furnish the "stuff Sufficient" to the amount of $7,500. "Give and it shall be given unto you." Let pastors announce the offering every Sunday and talk it privately a whole month. Let the special envelope be put into the hands of every member of the church and Sunday school two or three weeks in advance, and let much prayer be made and the certain result will be "Over the Top" and "Over the Top" again. The Brethren church can if she will and she surely will because God in his goodness has made it possible. Remember that thirty cents per member means for some members $25 or $10 or $5 or perhaps more and for others still smaller amounts, but for all "according as God hath prospered you." It always pays to be honest with God.

Information Wanted

The Ohio Four-Year Program Director would be glad to receive the name and address of some one in each of the following congregations to whom he can send communications and feel assured that such notices will be properly taken care of and replies promptly made:

Bear Creek, Salem, Miamisburg.

Since the recent pastoral change in this circuit we have been unable to get in touch with any persons responsible for Four-Year Program work in these churches. The official Four-Year Program booklet has been sent out for some time now to every church in the state, but some were uncalled for and return postage had to be sent. If any church has failed to receive above mentioned booklet, please write me, giving name and address of responsible correspondent.

Protecting Children From Illness

The Children's Year campaign to save 100,000 babies is demonstrating the wisdom of the proverbial "ounce of prevention" as a means of protecting children from disease. The weighing and measuring test has revealed to many parents that a child, while apparently not sick, may still be suffering from some latent illness or defect which is likely to affect seriously his health in after life. "Well-baby clinics" where mothers may obtain advice on how to feed and care for their children in order to keep them well report that more mothers are bringing well children to them for advice. Many of the communities that are working to save their quota of the infant lives that are to be saved during Children's Year report the establishment of new baby clinics.

Every mother, of course, desires to protect her child from illness, and now, when every ounce of human strength as well as every available dollar is needed to win the war, it is particularly necessary to keep children well. A mother who keeps her children well can save not only the stress of illness upon the children, but the time of a doctor and perhaps a nurse, and the expense in fees, drugs, special food and extra service which serious illness entails.

And the prevention of illness among children generally requires no more than the intelligent application of simple rules of health. To suggest to mothers ways of conserving health and preventing disease, the Federal Government has published a number of helpful bulletins. Among these are bulletins of the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor on the care of the child. Of these, "Prenatal Care" shows the prospective mother how to apply the simple rules of hygiene to her own case; "Infant Care" sets forth the plain rules of health for the baby, and "Child Care" describes the care of older children. Any mother in the United States may have these three bulletins if she will write and ask for them.

To the National Ministerial Association of the Brethren Church:

Two of our Brethren have died during the last few weeks. Brother Earle Deitrick passed to his reward on October 12 and brother L. A. Walters on the 17th, both victims of pneumonia, following an attack of Spanish influenza. This makes a double call necessary and I have made it out, dated October 24. If any member fails to receive it the fault will not be mine, but let this be the notice to any such. The amount called for is $4.00, and it must be in my hands by November 23, to insure good standing, with the protection it involves.

Denver to the Front

A year ago it was my happy privilege to share in the Teacher Training commencement of the Denver, Indiana, Sunday school. At that time a nice class was graduated from Moninger's "Training for Service." Prior to this graduation plans were made for the organization of a new class to begin with the Three Year Course. In the absence of our own text-book, "Thoroughly Furnished" was selected. Nine persons enrolled for the study, seven of whom have completed the First Year Book with very creditable grades. To our knowledge these Denver students are the first Brethren class to complete the first year's work of the new Three Year course.

These energetic people are to be congratulated upon the attainment of this noteworthy distinction. They have not only made a record for themselves, but have set an example for others that is full of suggestion. Several fair inferences may be drawn from their accomplishment.

1. A teacher training class may be successfully maintained in the average Sunday school. The Denver school would not presume to be above the average in enrollment, equipment or personnel, and yet she will not receive the limitations imposed by these conditions as insurmountabl barriers. Believing trained teachers to be essential to the larger development of the progressive school, a goodly number of persons were induced to pursue the course of traning.

2. A teacher training class may be regularly maintained in the rural-village school. Some persons think it is impossible to maintain a class where the members are widely separated. Others argue that rural people are too preoccupied with other matters. Neither contentions represent the whole truth. Some of the people, at least, of the country and small town can be enrolled in training classes.

3. The regular, successful conduct of the class rests largely with the pastor. Brother Myers considers his training class as much a part of his work as preaching and visiting. For its success he plans, prays and works, and his indefatigable labor is rewarded with gratifying results. May other schools and pastors be encouraged to do likewise. You may begin at once with Part II of our First Year book.

REVIEW OF

-The Thought and Work of the Church

LOOK at the LABEL on your paper, and if it says 41-18 or any number below 41 it means that your subscription has expired. Our present system of marking the time of expiration is by NUMBERS instead of by DATES. The first paper in January is numbered ONE and continues throughout the year until the number FIFTY is reached, so the number on your label determines the time of the expiration of your subscription.

Then LOOK AGAIN at your label. It is important, as the War Industries Board has ordered all publishers to discontinue all unpaid subscriptions. This order means that we must cut off all Evangelist subscriptions whose numbers are 41-18 or any number lower than 41, unless they are renewed promptly. It is not necessary that they shall all be paid immediately, but we must receive your order to continue the paper, when it will be charged to your account. We were obliged to cut off a number of subscriptions last week though we regretted it greatly. It is a painful operation. Don't ask us to repeat it.

The epidemic of influenza has not abated to any great extent in this section of the country, and the Publishing House has been greatly crippled. The help we announced we had received last week lasted only one day, so since Monday of last week the editor himself has been acting as engineer, and general utility man, locking up the forms, making ready the presses and most everything else about the plant except setting type and feeding the presses. When no other help could be secured Brother Slotter's wife, who years ago worked for the Brethren Publishing Company, consented to come to our assistance and she has been giving noble service in feeding our big press. Taking everything into consideration we did very well last week, getting the Teacher's Monthly, the Evangelist, four weeks' issues of Primary Bible Stories and The Angelus off the press. We hope to do better and catch up if possible this week. But we must again ask you to be patient with us until the "flu" goes back to Spain.

The word from Brother Bock of Argentina, South America, is encouraging in that it shows the determination on the part of our missionaries to spread the gospel as far out over that great country as the way is opened to them. This letter from Brother Bock bears the date of September sixth, so it is to be seen that the mail from South America does not come through on the aeroplane route. Brother Bock's family, including wife and baby are enjoying good health.

We have never heard much through the columns of the Evangelist about the work of our good brother Arthur Snyder, of Mathias, West Virginia. But we are glad that the brotherhood may learn from the report of a meeting Brother Snyder recently conducted about ten miles from his home that he is meeting with success and is favored by both God and man. Twenty-seven confessions were received at this meeting and one of the commendable features of the meeting is that all the converts have united or will unite with the Brethren church. Sound Brethren doctrine must have been proclaimed.

After serving the New Enterprise, Indiana Brethren church for a period of three years, brother C. A. Stewart has terminated his pastorate at that point and will take up his residence at Bunker Hill, Indiana, where he will be near his new charge at Loree. We predict a pleasant pastorate for Brother Stewart with this congregation for these people know how to make a pastor feel happy. Moreover the Brethren Evangelist goes into every home in this congregation. We take it that it will not be very long until this will be one of the first questions asked by a pastor who is called to a new work, for the pastors who have tried it know that this is one of the most evident signs of life in any Brethren church.

Not many churches can show a better record of activities than the little band of Brethren at Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania. The report of this church's activities, especially of the Sunday school, as made by their pastor, W. A. Crofford, is certainly a commendable one and should encourage other small congregations to do their best.

It is not at all difficult to imagine how H. F. Stuckman at Falls City chafes under the restraint of the shutting down of all public work by the notorious little animal that leaves the Spanish influenza in its wake. But while Brother Stuckman is disappointed that his plans have been upset, he yet rejoices that he had some splendid services since the General Conference before the epidemic came on the country. A good number of members have been added to the church and the Sunday school has been busy, but read his report and see what great things the Lord hath done.

Our church news this week covers a wide extent of territory, from South America and eastern part of the United States to the Pacific Coast. Brother Beal and the Compton Avenue Brethren church of Los Angeles, California, had a most blessed gathering on Sunday, October 6th. Read the report from Brother Neher on another page. Systematic work and much printer's ink accomplished good results.

This week our readers are favored with the first report from brother I. B. Trout as he takes up his work as a pastor among the Brethren. Berlin, Pennsylvania is his field and he has set about to occupy this field for God and has found a number of good helpers among the brethren and sisters of Berlin. Brother Trout would have all understand that this is an all American town in spite of the name it bears. That there is a future before the church of Berlin is evidenced by the large number of boys and girls that are connected with the work there. The Sunday school is going steadily forward.

Brother Beachler regrets very much that the epidemic has robbed him of three of the best weeks of the year to carry on the College Endowment plan, but the churches should work all the more earnestly when he does get around to them, for while the influenza may be of the devil we are sure the work Brother Beachler is doing is of the Lord.

A criticism that was made against the Evangelist at the Winona Conference was that not more space was given to the support of the various movements in America in support of our various war auxiliary organizations. While we did not feel that the criticism was really justified we recognize that it is largely a matter of personal opinion. But this week we are giving almost the entire contribution department to the publishing of the celebrated address made by the foremost American citizen, next to President Wilson, John R. Mott, as he appeals to the American people to contribute $170,500,000 for the support of the united organizations that are laboring in behalf of the welfare and comfort of the American soldiers both at home and abroad.

A unit of the S. A. T. C. was established in Ashland College last week. This was done not because the College or the Brethren church has been converted to militarism, but as a means of protection to the boys of Brethren homes and to give them at least a part of the training Uncle Sam demands without their being compelled to go to the regular army training camps.

L. S. Bauman, editor of the Brethren Misisonary asks us to announce that the next number will come out somewhat late because he is waiting certain reports that are not yet at hand.

The Brethren in Muncie, Indiana, were just ready for a good season's work for God in their new quarters when the closing orders put a stop to all their plans.

Around the Editor's Table

Faith's Resting Place

Once a man said to his pastor, "I don't see why a man can't come to some resting place in matters of religious belief where he can settle down comfortably instead of having to reconstruct his faith with the years. The strain of such anxious, intense thinking sometimes seems unbearable."

There are a great many people seeking a place of rest in the world, rest from work, rest from thinking, rest from worship, rest FOR faith; but how many take time to think that real rest means total inactivity and total inactivity virtually mean death. Not many people really want to die just yet and we would not blame them for with all its burdens and woes life is not altogether unattractive and there is much enjoyment to be derived from its activities, and with the exception of a few indolent people most men and women really enjoy a degree of activity. Of course some people do not want to work and some do not want to think. We once heard a preacher tell of a young woman who came to him at the close of a sermon and said, "I do not like that sermon. It makes me think and I do not want to think." We know it takes some effort to think in any helpful manner and some people do not like to expend much effort, but we are glad they are rather few after all. We believe most people like to think, though they may not have the best of control over their thoughts.

In matters of faith one must think. A faith that does not arouse or inspire thought can not be a "living faith." We know that opinion and thought are constantly changing and in a measure one's faith must change with one's thought, and because one's faith is not now what it was twenty years ago, it is not necessary to abandon all faith.

Faith can have, yes it must have a resting place, but this resting place must be more of a foundation upon which to build than a place or location where one can settle down for days or for an eternity of inactivity. A rose may rest upon the branch of a bush, but the rose's beauty is revealed only as it unfolds before the human eye to the delight of all who may behold it. Faith may rest upon certain foundation truths or principles, but the real beauty of a living faith is not revealed until it has unfolded under the benign influence and leadership of the Spirit of God who is the life of faith. One may have a foundation of faith that can not be moved and upon that foundation one may securely rest, but in order to prevent the stagnation that means death one must consider the unfolding processes of the centuries in matters of faith and realize that there is still something to attain—something better farther on. Questions of doubt may sometimes arise and one may hesitate about venturing out in the unknown seas, but it should be remembered that as one traveling along some waterway, entirely new to him, with wooded hills and precipitous banks on either side, he may sometimes come to a point where he cannot see very far ahead and the deep gorge or dark canyon through which he is passing may seem dark and foreboding and he may hesitate and even fear to go forward, but as a gradual bend, or even a sharp turn is made in the stream, beauties of scenery and grandeur of earth and sky are opened to his view such as he had not imagined it would ever be his lot to behold. So it may be in matters of faith, when the deepest shadows of doubt begin to oppress and one begins to think perhaps it is just as well to give up all idea of an abiding faith, the scene changes and a flood of sunlight from the Father above overwhelms the seeker after truth and a new sense of the presence and power of God comes over him and he is then glad that he has not abandoned his faith and rejoices that he was willing after all to let the Spirit of Truth have way in his life and to follow the leading of the Spirit, which is the Holy Spirit, until he was led to place his faith upon the one eternal foundation which is not simply a resting place where one may while away his languid hours but is more of a starting place from which one may rise to the sublimest heights of faith, faith that will lead him to step out on the promises of God who is the great leader and who will lead his children on to some fairer goal than the mind of man has yet conceived.

Meditation and Prayer

Not within the limits of the memory of the writer have public gatherings as schools, churches, theaters, etc., been closed for so long a period of time on account of any scourge or epidemic as at the present time in many states and sections of America. For a period of four weeks the churches and Sunday schools of Ashland have been closed on account of the prevalent deadly influenza. While it has been reported that in the state of Pennsylvania the churches and Sunday schools were closed while the saloons and theaters were allowed to remain open it has been different in other places. Many cities in Ohio closed saloons and pool rooms as well as churches and schools, which is the only consistent thing to do.

The American people have developed an unusual taste and appetite for excitement and amusement. Amusement companies have been put to their wits' end to plan and devise new forms of entertainment for the American public which soon tires of old things and constantly demands the ringing in of the new.

This has all worked to the detriment of the American people who need less excitement and more repose. The American people are a nervous people and their restlessness gets on the nerves of others who would take life with a little greater degree of calmness. People may call it old fashioned and may make all the light of it they please, but what the people of the present day needs as much or more than anything else is deeper meditation, meditation of the kind that was a part of the life of David when he exclaimed, "Day and night do I meditate upon thy works." Life is not taken as seriously as it should be by many people and times like these when neighbors and friends are passing away on every hand from the effect of the dread scourge people are made to think and they are made to pray; but how much more helpful would their meditations be and how much more acceptable would their prayers be if they were made a habit of life, not in time of war or pestilence only, but in times of peace and prosperity as well.

Real Freedom

Few terms are so misconstrued and so misunderstood as is the term freedom. To some it means freedom from all personal restraint, freedom from responsibility to any other, freedom from all obligations of a personal nature. It is only natural that one should love freedom and it is not to be wondered at that men will make great sacrifices to obtain what they call freedom; but how little this greatly to be desired condition of life is understood by the masses that are clamoring for it in some countries of the world was recently indicated by the conduct of an ignorant Russian in Petrograd shortly after the revolution in that vast country. One who observed the incident said he noticed a line of street cars held up in the street while in front of the foremost car a crowd of people had gathered. It seemed a strange situation, but the police made no attempt to break up the crowd. The occasion of the stopping of the cars was revealed when the observer beheld a Russian working man standing in the middle of the car track carrying on an argument with the motorman. All the persuading powers of the motorman seemed useless as he tried to induce the man to get off the track and let the cars go by; but the man stood on what he regarded as his personal rights and refused to let the cars pass. His claim was that since Russia was free he had as much right on the car track as the car had and he proposed to stand up for his rights and moreover he did not intend to move until he felt inclined to do so. But finally the motorman by explaining that he was a poor working man and had to get the car to the barn to finish his day's work so would not his brother working man please get off the track so that he might do his day's work. This appeal went home and the obstructionist vacated his place on the tracks. How foolish and childish it all seems to us in an enlightened land, but we should not forget that there is much darkness in Russia, not only in an intellectual sense, but in a spiritual sense as well.

The freedom Russia needs more than she needs political freedom is that freedom which only the Son of God can give. Russia of all the so-called civilized countries of the world needs to know that, "If the Son shall set you free, ye shall then be free indeed." In fact this is the only real freedom that can come to man, and not only Russia but every country in all the world needs to be made free by this power.

News From the Field

MATHIAS, WEST VIRGINIA

The work at this place is still going on.

Several years ago the writer was called to a place known as Kinsey's Run, a distance of about ten miles from this place, to preach. Soon the people got interested in a church building. This was arranged for and built, and on June 16, it was dedicated free of any indebtedness. Brother J. M. Tombaugh, of Hagerstown, Maryland, preaching the dedicatory sermon.

On September 22, the writer began a meeting at that place which continued for two weeks. During this meeting 27 took a stand for Christ, 19 being being received by baptism, seven coming from the Church of the Brethren, and one yet to be baptized. On Sunday evening, October 6, we held our Communion meeting at the Mathias church, brother E. B. Shaver being with us.

Just previous to this meeting we received three others into the church, two by baptism and one from the Church of the Brethren.

The writer was also called to Dovesville,, Virginia, for the purpose of receiving one and possibly three into the church, but this had to be postponed on account of sickness.

ARTHUR SNIDER.

RIO CUARTO, ARGENTINA

Some months ago it was announced in the columns of the Evangelist, that we would likely open up work at a new point in the near future. I have recently visited some of the nearby town with the idea of selecting a location for another Brethren mission. I first went to Los Cisnes which is only a small village. Brother Yoder and I were there about eighteen months ago and found some Swiss people who are Christians and are interested in having meetings there. They were very sympathetic and offered to help us in any way they could. The following day Brother Yoder came and we went together on to Carlota, nine miles farther up the line, about two and one half hours by train from Rio Cuarto. We spent the day sizing up the town and looking for a suitable place to live and begin meetings. We found some American and some English people all of whom offered to lend their influence in our favor. A house with an extra large front room was found which seemed suitable for the beginning.

But as we heard considerable about some other towns on another line it seemed best to visit them before making a final decision. As Brother Yoder could not leave the college I went alone the following week to Rufino about seven hours from Rio Cuarto. Two members of the mission here had gone there some time ago, and as we were not sure of any established work being there, it seemed worth while having a look. Upon investigation I found a single man of the Plymouth Brethren living there and holding meetings in the homes of the few believers he had. Also the Baptists have a small hall rented at the edge of town and a pastor from another town goes from time to time to hold meetings. Just before leaving I found a nest of Seventh Day Adventists, whose presence is necessary to thorough evangelization of the town. (?) I met an Englishman, a railroad inspector who was one of their victims. I stayed by him a whole evening trying to convince him that we are under Grace instead of the Law.

The town itself is not the most desirable place on earth in which to live. The wells produce salt water, unfit for any use, so those who do not drink wine all the time, as many do in this country, must resort to old musty cistern water. A missionary living there surely would be justified in following out Paul's advice to Timothy.

On my return I stopped off at other towns, some of which were partially worked, but on the whole none of them seems so favorable as Carlota for opening up work at the present. I am now trying to rent the property we found there, and if successful shall move within a few weeks. Pray for the advancement of the kingdom in the Argentine.

WM. H. BOCK.

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

Since our last report many things of interest to us have transpired. Not the least among these accomplishments has been the addition of nine people to our church family. This piece of news would be extremely interesting if it were not for the fact that we have lost several good families since last report, by removal. I am hoping that some of them at least will return soon. Following my return from conference, we began to plan for our promotion service combined with teacher training graduation exercises. The class of trained teachers graduated at that time numbered nine. They had not only completed the first book, but three other specialization books. For four years they have been working faithfully at this task and it was no small pleasure for us to see them come to commencement day. Not one of these teachers is satisfied with his or her training. That is one of the blessings of teacher training. It brings people face to face with the great responsibilities and opportunities of teaching the Word. The promotion exercises in themselves were quite elaborate, since our school is now fully graded. I wish that those who have opposed the graded work could have visited our school on that day and have witnessed what has been done in teaching the word, according to grades by skilled teachers. I say skilled, for I don't believe there is another Brethren school that has a larger group of better trained teachers than we have.

Last Sunday evening we had our fall Love Feast, and a glorious time with the Lord it was. We had a fine representation of our membership at the tables. I missed the assistance of the brethren of the ministry who so often in days gone by have been with us. Immediately following this service the schools churches and shows were closed because of the epidemic which is visiting our community, however in most cases in a very mild form. It is a keen disappointment to me to have our work closed at this time as I have been planning to do some work outside in the way of holding a meeting at Maple Grove church in Kansas. All will no doubt work out right in the end.

Our district conference convened at Carleton on schedule time. We found the town closed upon our arrival, but urgent requests by the Carleton brethren softened the hearts of the health board, and we were allowed to do our work and return to our homes. The second day's session was merged into the first and altogether it was one of the best conferences that I have ever attended in this district.

H. F. STUCKMAN.

NEW ENTERPRISE, INDIANA

For the past three years it has been our blessed privilege to labor with the New Enterprise church. It is needless to say we were not without our difficulties, but our people were faithful and together we planned and tried to solve our problems.

Not a great number was added to the church under our preaching but some heard and answered the call; among the number two men very recently accepted Christ and were taken into the waters of baptism and were received into the church.

As we look back over the past and recall the many enjoyable times we have had together, it is with reluctance that we bring our work to a close here. We take with us many a nice and and useful article that was presented to us by these dear brethren and sisters, all of which we hold in high esteem. They throw open their doors and receive you into their homes in such a way that you are made to feel that you are one of them. Although they are few in number they try to keep the home fires burning, always having the interest of the church at heart. We shall always thank our Lord and Master for the privilege of laboring with the people of New Enterprise. And now as we go from this field we pray that God's richest blessings may rest upon them and that God will send them the right man for a pastor.

We began our work with the Loree church the first of October and will make our home at Bunker Hill, Indiana, after the first week in November. We covet the prayers of the entire brotherhood as we enter upon our new field of labor..

C. A. STEWART.

MOUNT PLEASANT, PENNSYLVANIA

This little organization with less than fifty members, while not in the front ranks of the work of the Brethren church, is, however, valiantly proving faithful to the "rear guard." The scattered membership with long distance from the place of worship accounts for the seeming indifference.

The Sunday school has an enrollement of 85 scholars, with average attendance of 35. David S. Wilson, the superintendent, though young in years is a live worker and pushing for success.

Our Home Department, with sister Mamie Bennett, as superintendent, is perhaps the most promising, having an enrollment of 60 members scattered through three counties of Pennsylvania and three other states of the Union, as well as one member in France, on the battle front, 28th Pennsylvania Division, and two in training camps. Two of our faithful workers, Virgie and Stella, daughters of A. D. Miller, M.D., are in hospital training for their life's work, while Edna Eicher, a graduate from our high school, has taken up work as a typist at Brownsville, Pa., at which place her brother Stewart is also located as chief clerk for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Thus our numbers are depleted adding responsibility to the "Home Guard."

It is fitting to say that of our number, 14 worthy students of God's word, are Montana homesteaders, eagerly studying every Sunday school lesson. Three of them have been able to repeat every Golden Text at the end of each quarter, since members, thus some day to be awarded, not the "Iron Cross," nor the "Cross of Gold," but we trust the cross from earth to eternal glory.

The Cradle Roll, with Mae Long as superintendent, has an enrollment of eighteen. To the faithful work of this department must we look for our successors in the years to come.

W. A. CROFFORD, Pastor.

1014 Ash St., Johnstown, Pa.

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

This week closes the third month of our school work in the "free school." You may ask the question, "What is the Free school?" It is the school which is supported by the state for the benefit of the populace in general; it convenes July 1 and countinues for six months. So many have asked, "Why do they begin the free school in July?" The reason is this, by that time the most of the farm work has been done, the crops are "laid by" and the youngsters can be spared from the homes. By the time the school closes traffic is almost impossible for those who come from a distance because of the rainy season. The attendance has been very regular this year because the state has enforced a law whereby every child between the ages of seven and fourteen years respectively must attend school every day unless prevented by illness or some other substantial reason. So far this regulation has worked splendidly. We now have seventy-five enrolled with an average attendance of about fifty-five. This entitles us to two teachers, who are paid by the state. So far we have received no salary at all for our work. Just why we do not get it there seems to be no logical reason. We are hoping and praying that each mail will bring us a check.

We are enjoying the splendid October days. The mountains are indeed a sight to behold. From base to summit they are one grand mass of varied color which only Mother Nature can paint. As yet the usual fall rains have not begun so everything bids fair to enjoy the season to the fullest extent.

Last week Miss Hillegas and I were invited to a "Stir Off." This in common terms is the old fashioned molasses making. The cane is stripped of its leaves, the stalks cut and pressed, the cane juice is put into a large vat under which a huge fire can be built for the boiling. The length of time depends upon the amount of cane juice. They began about 2:30 P. M. and were through at midnight. The finished product is the delicious sorghum molasses which the Kentucky people are so fond of.

Miss Hillegas and I are now attempting to keep bachelor's hall. After must diligent searching we were fortunate enough to get one room to live in which is located on the third terrace of the mountain side; however, we are still located in the suburbs of Krypton.. All the fuel we burn and most of the water we use must be carried up these hills. We have been real fortunate in being able to hire two schoolboys to assist us in work after school hours. After one gets "up there" (and you don't have an elevator either) it is a very pleasant place to live. The air is very pure and we are away from the dampness of the river. The intense fog which fills the river valley at night does not begin to rise until 7:30 or 8 A. M. The crops in this section have been as good as usual this year and from all indications the people are well provided for, for the winter months. All summer I have wondered how they would harvest the corn crop on the mountain sides. Where the timber has been cut away the mountain sides are farmed from base to summit. Level land is very scarce as you can readily see when you get here; in fact, you begin to realize it as soon as you leave Cincinnati, Ohio. We are planning for a Rally Day sometime this month and will report it later. Remember Krypton, Kentucky in your prayers.

HOME MISSION NOTES

The Washington D. C., "Mortgage Eraser."

To date we have received $961 of the $1500 needed to remove that mortgage that has rested these twenty years on the First Brethren church in our national capital. Every pledge should be met at once. Please do not make it necessary for us to send out duns.

Kentucky

Churches and schools are closed because of the "flu." Brother Cook writes: "We have had one death and several are sick. It is awful up the line and it may get bad here. We are all well as yet." Brother Akens wrote that several at Riverside had light attacks.

That Well

Let us hope that the long delayed well at Krypton may soon be furnishing an abundance of water. Brother Cook says: "Brother Baker bought a drilling machine for wells and he will drill one for us soon. That is the kind of a well we have been wanting from the start." It often pays to wait, for all things come to them who wait and work. Brother Wall of Long Beach, who has recently been a welcome visitor at our mission stations in Kentucky is proving a friend indeed in helping to meet some pressing needs.

Cash

These churchless and Sunday schoolless and Endeavorless days are cutting down the payment of pledges and all who can should make a special effort to remit at once. Let every personal pledge be met at once if possible. Will not many who have given pledges for Kentucky mission work for this year send some cash now. Let societies and other organizations make part payment if not able to pay at all. Thanks in advance for immediate attention.

COMPTON AVENUE, LOS ANGELES

"Over the top" was experienced by our Sunday school and church on Sunday, October 6, at which time Rally Day and Home Coming Day were observed.

The results achieved at that time prove that proper co-operation and systematic advertising will bring results even in war times. A most splendid spirit of co-operation was manifest while agitation was begun nearly two months before and for not a single day were the people permitted to lose sight of the plans for and the purposes of the day. Each Sunday the matter was urged in the Sunday school and at the regular preaching services and for the five weeks just preceding a systematic campaign was carried on by the use of printed matter. Each week cards were gotten out setting forth some angle of the work, special invitations were sent to the mothers of the babies in the Cradle Roll Department by the superintendent of that department, Miss Mary Wrightsman, and the pastor mailed letters to all the families of the church. Besides this many invitations in person were given. It might be of interest to know that the printing was done by the pastor on our own printing press. On the Sunday before Rally Day and Home Coming Day several auto loads went into the country as well as into certain sections of the city to give special invitations to those who might thus be reached. As a special inducement to the members and friends of the church to be present we secured the services of two of our former pastors to have a part on the program. Elder M. D. Early spoke in the morning and again in the evening at the regular service and Elder A. V. Kimmel, who assisted in the organization of our work, spoke in the afternoon. The addresses of these brethren were very much enjoyed. Other outside help that added to the success of the program was rendered by Clarence and Hazel Shively of the First church of Los Angeles and Mr. Brocksieper, a saxaphone soloist of the city.

We had asked for two hundred and fifty in the Sunday school, every member of the church present, and a total offering of one hundred and fifty dollars. Some wondered if we were not setting our goals too high in these times when it is difficult to do religious work, but the results again justified our faith in daring to ask for big things. The attendance at the Sunday school session was two hundred and fifty-six, five members of the Cradle Roll being present, practically every member of the church within reaching distance well enough to be present was in attendance at some service of the day, and the total offering for the day was but a few cents below one hundred and twenty-five dollars.

The program for the day was as follows: The Sunday school lesson was studied in the regular period. This was followed by promomotion exercises and a program by the school under the direction of Sister Falk, assistant superintendent of the Primary department, and at eleven thirty Brother Early gave a short address in keeping with the program. At noon a basket dinner was eaten in the large Sunday school room, which dinner was enjoyed by nearly one hundred people. At two forty-five we listened to the address by Brother Kimmel on "The Need of the Hour In Church Work." The C. E. societies held a joint meeting at six-thirty and at seven-thirty Brother Early gave an address on "Divine Providences and Home Coming Day." Thus ended a day of blessed fellowship which should mean much to us in our work.

It is to be regretted that immediately following this "mountain top" experience should come the order to close the churches owing to the epidemic that is sweeping the country, but we are more than thankful that the closing order did not come one week sooner. Had it come one week earlier it would have been a hard blow indeed, as we would not have been able to enjoy the fruit of our labors. He knows best in whose keeping we are.

On Tuesday evening, October 8, was held the regular quarterly business meeting at which time the reports of the church activities were made. These reports show commendable progress. A most beautiful spirit was manifest in the meeting and at this time the church voted a substantial increase in the pastor's salary.

We are looking forward with high hopes for the future and pray that the Lord may lead us out into still greater fields of usefulness for him. A. E. NEHER.

THREE MONTHS AT BERLIN, PENN'A.

At the end of an auto trip of eight hundred and fifty miles, wife and I found ourselves in Berlin, on Saturday evening, July 27. We began the work of pastor of the church the next day by preaching both morning and evening.

Three months have elapsed since, and we have learned to like the place, the people and the work. In fact we have enjoyed the society and the fellowship of the people from the very first, for we have found a splendid class of citizens and church workers. They are one hundred per cent. American notwithstanding the name of the town. If any one doubts this, let him come here and begin to talk pro-German and see what will happen. Better take my word for it without trying the foolish experiment.

On Sunday morning, August 18, at the Sunday school a very beautiful service flag was unfurled in connection with a fitting ceremony. This flag has thirteen stars on it, representing this number of our Sunday school boys. Since that time two more stars have ben added. Many have been the prayers offered by loving parents and friends for the safe return of these boys to the homeland after the war is over.

For certain good reasons we had our Rally Day on last Sunday of September instead of the first Sunday of October. There were 216 present, and the offering was $153.15. The superintendent and his efficient corps of teachers had arranged a very interesting program in which each class rendered some part. Besides this there were other interesting features. It was a real Rally Day. I have attended many such, but never one that was better. Every one present seemed to be supremely happy and determined to make the coming year a banner one for the Sunday school.

One of the most encouraging features of the work here is the large number of enthusiastic boys and girls and young people connected with the work of the Sunday school and church. We miss very greatly the boys who have gone under the colors, but we are expecting them back before many months to help us in the work of the Master.

On the evening of the Rally Day we had a most spiritual and well attended love feast. The services were unusually full of uplift for the members of the church. We enjoyed very much the presence in this meeting of brother Wesley Platt, one of our California pastors, who came here from the Winona Conference to visit his parents and friends. He is a product of the Berlin church and he is consecrated to the preaching of the Word in every fibre of his being. May God bless him with long life in his service in the great world harvest. The manner in which the love feast links us with eternity was brought out very forcibly during the services. All seemed to look forward to the marriage supper of the Lamb with joy and gladness, but little did we think that so soon one of our number would pass to the beyond. This morning, October 20, a dear sister who was with us in the communion and in the best of health, passed on to her eternal home, after an illness of only twenty-four hours. How quickly young and promising lives are changed from the here to the hereafter. On account of the Spanish influenze we have had no services since the Love Feast, but we are looking forward to spiritual success and prosperity. We are glad that we are here to enjoy work and fellowship with these people.

I. B. TROUT.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

Among the many in our brotherhood who are watching with great interest the progress of the campaign for permanent endowment for the college I question if many have wondered as to the cause of our silence. For all would readily conclude that since the terrible epidemic which has swept the country has brought almost everything else to a standstill, it would also seriously affect the campaign. And that is exactly the situation.

Much valuable time and splendid weather has been lost. We have done nothing for three weeks. Churches everywhere are closed and there seems nothing to do but wait.

Our plan is to go back to Pennsylvania and finish the canvass there just as soon as the state authorities will open the churches. And we shall bend every effort to try to make up for the lost time. Nobody laments more than the writer this serious holdup in our work. Even at the best progress has been too slow to suit us. But let us hope that all will end well.

Up to this time Pennsylvania has made a great record. We believe the churches yet to be canvassed will make a very substantial addition to the results thus far achieved. The Pennsylvania brethren have responded nobly with Liberty Loans. And I have no doubt since the recent loan drive has closed I will find many more ready to be handed in for Permanent Endowment. We have nothing more to add at this time. But we are seriously hoping that when things open up again the campaign may be carried on to completion without interruption.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

Illiokota Conference Minutes, Dallas Center, Iowa, October 10-13, 1918

Thursday Evening

The 1918 conference of Illiokota churches convened at Dallas Center, Iowa. The opening session was held on Thursday evening, October 10.

After a spirited song service, C. E. Weidner, Hudson, Iowa, led in the opening prayer of the conference, invoking God's blessing upon the conference and making an appeal for closer fellowship with him.

The address of welcome was given by the pastor of the conference church, Robert F. Porte. He referred with regret to the epidemic of Spanish influenza in various sections of the district, seriously menacing the work of the conference and manifestly decreasing the attendance of delegates. He expressed the hope of the Dallas Center brethren that through this conference they may receive new plans and methods for more efficient service, and assured the visiting delegates and friends of a most hearty welcome both in the Brethren church and in the homes of Dallas Center.

Responses were given by Brethren Goughnour, Weidner, Burnworth, Snyder, Ankrum, and Puterbaugh.

The opening scripture lesson, Acts 1:1-9, was read by Miles J. Snyder, Milledgeville, Illinois.

The first sermon of the conference was preached by Wm. H. Miller, North English, Iowa, based upon Joshua 13:1. In his discourse he contrasted the problems that faced Joshua with the conditions confronting people in Illiokota. He urged ministers to "preach the Word," i. e. give the people something that will be good for the souls of men and be to them a spiritual uplift. He advocated the establishment of more churches by searching out groups of Brethren people and adequately supporting them. The field that confronts us is the measure of our opportunity. The results that follow definite and persistent missionary work will animate and stimulate the church to renewed efforts. Large churches should assume the responsibility of caring for weaker groups and help them to become self-supporting.

After the closing hymn, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," was sung, the audience united in praying the "Our Father."

Friday Forenoon

Two simultaneous meetings began the Friday morning session of the conference, namely, the district Ministerium and the S.S.C.E.

The Ministerium was called to order by President C. E. Weidner. The entire meeting was devoted to a discussion of business matters, duly recorded by the Ministerium secretary, H. L. Goughnour.

Mrs. A. Emmert, Dallas Center, presided at the meeting of the S. S. C. E., which was an exclusively business meeting.

The conference session proper was called to order by moderator H. L. Goughnour, Waterloo, Iowa. After singing "He Is So Precious to Me," B. T. Burnworth, Lanark, Illinois, led the conference in the morning prayer service.

A Credential Committee was appointed consisting of Harvey Kitchin, J. O. Gring and B. F. Puterbaugh, and an enrollment of the delegates present was made.

The moderator's address was next given. He recalled the changes made in the district during the past year. There were two deaths in the ministry, being J. A. Myers and Strother Hansel. Two ministers removed from the district, C. E. Beckley from Cerro Gordo, Illinois and George E. Cone from Udell, Iowa. There were three additions in the ministry, Wm. H. Miller, H. E. Eppley, and D. A. C. Teeter. The moderator spoke with enthusiastic emphasis upon the work of the Four-Year Program, showing its importance especially at the present time when we are waging a titanic world war primarily in defense of Christian civilization. The gaining of the objectives of a genuinely Christian church is not only indispensable but the highest service which a church can render to the nation in this hour. The least the Brethren church can afford to do for itself and for the nation is to attain the goals set before her. Of the nine districts in the Brethren church, only one has made a better showing than Illiokota in working toward the goals of the Four-Year Program; but the ideal and purpose of this district is to be second to none. Furthermore, the moderator urged the importance of taking steps to secure a minister for every pastorless church in the district; and also insisted that churches already established should be kept strong and vigorous so they in turn may found new congregations. Other recommendations were given in the report, and, by direction of conference, these will be taken up at a later session for consideration and action.

"I Am Pressing on the Upward Way," was sung, and, in the absence of two speakers called for on the program, a paper transferred from the meeting of the Ministerium was read at this time by Miles J. Snyder on the subject, "The Minister's Duties and Opportunities."

The morning session was closed with prayer by B. T. Burnworth.

At this time the first of a series of splendid meals was served to the delegates and visitors in the basement of the church by the sisters of the conference church. A charge of 25 cents was made for the dinners, and lodging, breakfasts and suppers were provided free by the good Dallas Center people.

Friday Afternoon

On assembling for the afternoon session the audience united in singing, "The Lord Needs You," and "My Life, My Love, I Give to Thee," which was followed by a season of prayer with Robert F. Porte leading.

At the request of the moderator a report was now given by the committee of credentials showing an attendance of nine lay and nine ministerial delegates. This report clearly revealed something of the demoralizing effect upon our conference of the epidemic of Spanish "flu" now raging in this country.

A committee on resolutions was appointed at this juncture, consisting of B. T. Burnworth, Freeman Ankrum and Miles J. Snyder.

The main part of the afternoon session consisted of reports by the Four-Year Program directors, with district director B. T. Burnworth giving the chief address on "How We Stand In General." A summary of the achievements in the district shows the following results: Out of a possible 210 points the district gained 96; progress was made in 39; the loss amounted to 75 points; no report caused a loss of 28 points. Considering all these factors, Illiokota ranks second place in the brotherhood in the attainment of the Four-Year Program goals. Three churches in the district won special recognition: Waterloo is a banner church, while Lanark and Dallas Center are star churches.

In the general discussion which followed, considerable emphasis was laid upon the great importance of churches furnishing full and accurate statistics pertaining to every activity of the church. Needless multiplicity of statistics was discouraged. It was the sense of the conference that the general statistics of the churches, furnished once each year for the National Statistician, after he has made his compilations, should be distributed to the proper district officers; namely, the statistics of the churches to the district secretary; the Sunday school statistics to the district S. S. president; and the statistics of the S. S. C. E., the Sisterhood of M. and M., and the Y. P. S. C. E. to their respective district presidents.

S. S. C. E. Conference Session

Next in order was a conference session of the district S. S. C. E. After singing, "Will There Be Any Stars In My Crown?" the congregation united in reading the 23rd Psalm.

District President, Mrs. A. Emmert, gave a stirring report of the work in Illiokota, and reported, among other achievements, 650 members in the district, 247 Woman's Outlook subscribers, 63 per cent. of the members of the church in the S. S. C. E., and 86 women doing the required work in the reading circle.

A round table discussion followed on the general subject, "The Best Thing We Have Done." Several things mentioned by delegates from different societies were: Paying off indebtedness assumed, doing Red Cross work, going "over the top" in getting members and Outolok subscriptions, increasing attendance, cultivating the prayer life and making spiritual growth.

A very helpful talk on "Methods" was given by Mrs. G. T. Ronk, Leon, Iowa, which was chockfull of good, practical suggestions.

Business Session

At the close of the S. S. C. E. session there was a special session of conference for business.

By action of conference the following district goal directors were elected for the ensuing year:

Goals 1, 2, 3, B. T. Burnworth.
Goals 4, 5, G. T. Ronk.
Goals 6, 8, J. L. Gillin.
Goal 7, Robert F. Porte.
Goal 9, H. L. Goughnour.
Goal 10, G. T. Ronk.
Goal 11, Freeman Ankrum.
Goal 12, Miles J. Snyder.
Goal 13, Mrs. C. E. Weidner.
Goal 14 Mrs. A. Emmert.
Goal 15, Miss Elizabeth Hildebrand.

It was moved that the Executive Committee be instructed to arrange next year's conference at a time during the first full week in October so it shall not extend over Sunday.

By motion the moderator was instructed to appoint a committee to receive invitations for next year's conference. Robert F. Porte and Wm. H. Miller were subsequently appointed.

It was moved that it be the sense of this conference that no moderator shall be elected to succeed himself.

By action of conference B. F. Puterbaugh was appointed conference treasurer to fill the unexpired term of Ernest E. Myers. prayer by H. L. Goughnour.

Friday Evening

During an enthusiastic song service, participated in by a large audience, "Raise the Standard of the Lord on High," and "I Shall See Him," were sung. Mrs. G. T. Ronk conducted the opening devotions, reading 2 Cor. 9:6-10 and leading in prayer.

The first address of the evening was given by B. T. Burnworth on the subject, "How the Church May Serve the Nation." Using Micah 6:8 as a scriptural foundation, he urged the church today to serve the nation by having a definite program, formulated by the exercise of clear and broad vision, which concerns itself alike with social, economic, moral and spiritual problems. In view of the present war conditions the church just now should be a mouthpiece for government propaganda looking toward the conservation of food, fuel and clothing, and the production of necessary things; and, at the same time, act as a governor to keep up the morale of the people and keep down unfounded optimism. And the greatest need of all is that the church should counsel and comfort those in deep grief and sorrow, and embrace every opportunity and exert every effort to save souls and keep them saved.

At this time the audience was treated with a splendid number by a mixed quartet from the Dallas Center Brethren choir using the song, "Shadows, No Need of Shadows."

Following the announcements of the evening and brief devotions, Freeman Ankrum delivered a sermon on the subject, "The Churches Banners." Taking as his text Psalm 20:5, the speaker indicated some things necessary for the largest growth of the church, among which he mentioned members, harmony and co-operation, vision of a large work, and activity by all. All these will result in making more attractive services, having fewer dead churches, increasing the prosperity and growth of the kingdom of God, and making the church truly a means of salvation.

The closing song was, "The Lord Needs You," after which there was prayer and benediction by Freeman Ankrum.

Saturday Forenoon

Two simultaneous meetings were again held. Following a business session of the Ministerium a very interesting paper was read which was written by Z. T. Livengood, Lanark, Illinois, on the subject "Solving Pastoral Problems."

At the same hour a session of the S. S. C. E. was held at which time the credential committee reported nine delegates present from four different societies.

Also at this meeting district officers were elected for the coming year, as follows:

President, Mrs. Robert F. Porte, Dallas Center, Iowa; Vice President, Mrs. S. P. Hoover, Waterloo, Iowa; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Elizabeth Hildebrand, Waterloo, Iowa.

It was then decided that $10 of the district's money should be sent to Miss Estella Myers and $15 be paid to the district Mission Board.

The main session of the forenoon was a conference on Sunday school work. "He Leadeth Me," was sung and B. T. Burnworth conducted the opening devotions, reading Matt. 5:3-12 and leading in the morning prayers.

"Secondary Work and How to Do It," was the subject ably discussed by Robert F. Porte district superintendent of this department. He emphasized the importance of remembering that these represent the formative years in the lives of youth and afford unexcelled opportunities for influencing them for good. He also called attention to the necessity of having wise and consecrated leadership in conducting the work and activity in this department of the Sunday school.

Freeman Ankrum next reported the status of the adult work in the district and spoke briefly on "The Adult Work and How to Do It." In the district there are reported 36 adult organized classes with a total membership of 719. In the address three necessary things were stressed which must be taken into consideration in all adult work, namely, fraternity, enlistment and administration.

The subject, "Missionary Work and How to Do It," was discussed by Mrs. G. T. Ronk, who at the same time gave a report of this phase of the work in the district. Eleven out of fourteen schools have had missionary instruction, and during the year $523 were contributed for missionary activities. The speaker gave some practical plans for missionary instruction in the Sunday school, mentioning especially the necessity of having a missionary superintendent or committee to provide missionary programs monthly or quarterly in the Sunday school.

Closing this part of the session, the report of the president of the district Sunday school association was given by C. E. Weidner, together with a prophetic discussion on the subject, "The Demands of the Times Upon the Sunday School and How to Meet Them." Reference was made to the fact that we are living in unusual times with still more unusual times facing us. While the present world is in a state of upheaval and unrest, preparation must be made to socialize and Christianize the future. True Christianity in the new age will play a dominant part. There will be new requirements for citizenship in the coming period of reconstruction which will be a time nations will need the keenest thinking and clearest vision. To properly meet these demands of the times, prepared teachers are needed who will both know the Scriptures and apply their principles to the problems that confront us. And these prepared and trained teachers must also have adequate equipment in the Sunday school and church with which to do the best work.

Business Session

By action of the conference the moderator appointed a committee, consisting of B. T. Burnworth, C. E. Weidner and Mrs. G. T. Ronk, to bring in nominations for district Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E. officers.

At this time B. F. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the Mission Board, gave his annual report, showing for the year total receipts to the amount of $539.18, and disbursements to the work at Brooklyn and Leon totaling $520.85, leaving a surplus in the treasury of $18.33.

On motion it was decided that the Four-Year Program activities in the district shall be financed from the conference treasury.

The conference instructed the moderator to appoint a committee on publications. The personnel of this committee was Miles J. Snyder, Robert F. Porte and B. T. Burnworth who, after due consideration, recommended that a general report of this conference be published in the Brethren Evangelist, that letter heads be prepared for the use of the various Illiokota officers, and that a leaflet should be published showing the apportionments of the mission board with suggestions relative to what congregations ought to do to further missionary activity.

By motion B. T. Burnworth was re-elected member of the ministerial examining board for a term of three years.

After discussing at length a telegram from H. E. Eppley, in behalf of the Cerro Gordo Brethren church, requesting that the Cerro Gordo congregation be permitted to withdraw from the Illiokota conference district to unite with the Indiana conference, by unanimous vote the conference disapproved granting this request, and decided that a man representing the Illiokota conference shall visit Cerro Gordo and confer with the brethren there with a view of showing them the dangers and disadvantages attendant upon granting their request and thus establishing an undesirable precedent. By motion it was further decided that the matter of sending this person to Cerro Gordo should be left in the hands of the district mission board.

The morning session was closed with prayer and benediction by Wm. H. Miller.

Saturday Afternoon

In the afternoon song service, the audience joined in singing "A Wonderful Savior Is Jesus My Lord," and "Faith of Our Fathers," after which there was a season of prayer.

The auditing committee appointed by the moderator consists of Wm. H. Miller and Freeman Ankrum.

At this time the final report of the committee on credentials was given, reporting eleven additional lay and six ministerial delegates, making a total of twenty lay and fifteen ministerial delegates.

The first address in this session on denominational interests was given by B. T. Burnworth who spoke on "Illiokota and Ashland College." After referring to the location and general equipment of Ashland College, he told what it has done and is doing for the Brethren church. It has furnished about 80 per cent. of the preachers, evangelists, missionaries and leaders doing the work of the church today. Ten out of fifteen Illiokota pastors are Ashland College men, to say nothing of our missionaries. Ashland College is needed more today than ever before. The denominational Christian college has a great function to perform in championing everything fine and good and noble in the life and character of the church. The speaker urged unceasing loyalty to this institution of the church, and predicted a generous response in the forthcoming college endowment campaign in Illiokota.

The subject, "Illiokota and the Brethren Publishing Company," was discussed by Miles J. Snyder, a member of the publication board. He called attention to some of the transformations wrought by the times in which we live, together with steps taken by the publishing company to meet the new conditions and enlarge the business of the house. Special stress was placed upon the advantages of the budget plan of getting the Brethren Evangelist in every home and the helpfulness of this to the pastor in various ways. It was urged that more of the churches of Illiokota get on the Honor Roll by getting the church paper in at least 75 per cent. of their homes. An appeal was made to the loyalty of Brethren people to patronize and faithfully support our own publishing company in every possible way. To be loyal to the Brethren church means that we are loyal to all her institutions.

Business Session

On receipt of the report of the nominating committee the secretary was instructed to cast the unanimous vote of conference for the election of the following district Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E officers:

Sunday School

President, C. E. Weidner, Hudson, Iowa.

Vice President, Miss Wilma Barber, Weldon, Iowa.

Secretary-Treasurer, Wm. H. Miller, North English, Iowa.

Elementary, Mrs. Harry E. Stroud, Waterloo, Iowa.

Secondary, Robt. F. Porte, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Adult, Feeman Ankrum, Garwin, Iowa.

Teacher Training, Alice Garber, Lanark, Illinois.

Missionary, Mrs. G. T. Ronk, Leon, Iowa.

Home Department, Miss Etta Lichty, Waterloo, Iowa.

Temperance, Mrs. Robert Truman, Lanark, Illinois.

Administration, Pauline Lichty, Waterloo, Iowa.

Y. P. S. C. E.

President, Ray Emmert, Dallas Center, Ia.
Vice President, Martha Johnson, Hudson, Ia.
Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Letha Bunch, Leon, Iowa.

It was moved that the district ministerial examining board be instructed to prepare a minister's annual certificate in the form of a card which shall be issued annually to such of the ministers as present ministerial credentials to this conference, provided, of course, that the credentials are accepted by the conference.

By motion it was decided that this conference shall increase the district mission board from three to six members. Election of the additional members took place at once with the following result: H. L. Goughnour and M. F. Springer for three years; B. F. Puterbaugh for two years; B. T. Burnworth for one year. G. T. Ronk with an unexpired term of one year and Miles J. Snyder with an unexpired term of two years, were retained from the old board, making the total membership of the newly constituted mission board six.

By unanimous vote it was moved that the mission board be instructed to district the Illiokota conference district with a view of having helpful supervision and the ministers of well established organized churches visit needy congergations at intervals during the year for the purpose of deepening the spiritual life of such congregations and helping them in every possible way.

By motion the report of the auditing committee was received and accepted with the understanding that the mission board be consulted and a slight discrepancy be removed.

At this time the election of conference officers for the ensuing year took place, with the following result:

Moderator, C. E. Weidner, Hudson, Iowa.

Vice Moderator, G. T. Ronk, Leon, Iowa.

Secretary, Miles J. Snyder, Milledgeville, Illinois.

Treasurer, Freeman Ankrum, Garwin, Ia.

By motion the committee appointed to receive invitations for next year's conference was discharged and the matter was left in the hands of the executive committee.

By unanimous vote the conference passed a motion expressing a vote of thanks to Robert F. Porte and the members of the Dallas Center Brethren church for the warm and cordial welcome and the whole-hearted support given to make this conference such a splendid success.

By motion another vote of thanks was extended by the conference to the retiring moderator and officers of this conference for their part in making it an inspiration and a blessing.

Saturday Evening

The closing week-day conference session entered heartily into the song service, singing, "The Name of Jesus Is So Sweet," and "Wonderful Words of Life," led by the conference song leader, Robert F. Porte.

Remaining items of business were transacted at this time.

The Mission board reported the organization of the newly elected body as follows:

President, H. L. Goughnour.
Secretary, B. T. Burnworth.
Treasurer, B. F. Puterbaugh.

It was further decided that next year's mission appartionments shall be made on a basis of 30 cents per member.

By motion the conference treasurer was instructed to collect delegate fees from congregations which have not yet paid their full quota.

The committee on resolutions submitted the following report:

Inasmuch as Almighty God in his wise providence has seen fit to hold precious in his sight our lives and bless us in multitudinous ways, not the least our being permitted to come to Dallas Center and assemble again in this district conference:

Be it resolved that it is the sense of this conference that we rejoice because of the great victories of temperance in our land while looking forward to a dry nation, not only as a war measure but for all time.

Also be it resolved that we express our deep gratitude for the signs of the times indicating that this terrible world war shall soon cease and peace shall reign once more, and again the prophecy be fulfilled that "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks." And also this one, "Neither shall they learn war any more."

Furthermore, be it resolved that we recognize the faithfulness of all goal directors of the Four-Year Program which enables us to stand in the high and honorable second place in the districts of the brotherhood.

That we commend our Sunday school officials for the splendid work done in the Sunday schools. Also the officials of the S. S. C. E. and the Y. P. S. C. E. for their untiring, competent and cheerful services.

That we express our heartfelt thanks to the good people of Dallas Center for the hospitable entertainment they have given us in their homes and church.

That we go away with a definite determination to execute to the best of our ability, the many helpful suggestions given in this conference.

That we hopefully look forward to our conference of next year, striving earnestly in the meantime to accomplish greater things for the progress of the kingdom.

B. T. BURNWORTH.
MILES J. SNYDER.
FREEMAN ANKRUM.

At this time the conference treasurer gave his annual report as follows:

RECEIPTS

Balance on hand	$13 95
Delegate fees	42 00
		$55 95

EXPENDITURES

H. L. Gouchnour, postage, etc.	$ 4 07
C. E. Weidner, postage	54
Miles J. Snyder, postage, printing, credentials	4 36
Conference programs	2 00
Secretary's annual fee	10 00
		$20 97
Balance		$34 98

For the consideration of the conference, the mission board presented the following recommendation, which by motion was adopted: We recommend that the churches in the Illiokota conference district be grouped as follows with the herein named persons given supervision thereof:

Group No. 1, B. T. Burnworth supervising: Astoria, Cerro Gordo, Decatur, Eau Claire, Lanark, Milledgeville, Mulberry Grove Stanley.

Group No. 2, Robert F. Porte supervising: Aurelia, Dallas Center, Mt. Etna, New Virginia..

Group No. 3, G. T. Ronk supervising: Baker, Crown Chapel, Leon, Udell, Union Chapel White Chapel.

Group No. 4, H. L. Goughnour supervising: Brooklyn, Garrison, Garwin, Hudson, Pleasant Grove, Waterloo.

The evening session for worship and inspiration began with the singing of "I'll Live for Him," following which devotions were conducted by Wm. H. Miller who read three parables from Matt. 13 and expressed in fervent prayer praise and thanksgiving and adoration.

A paper written by George E. Cone on the subject "The Why and How of Christian Endeavor" was read before the conference by Robert F. Porte. In considering the "Why" of C. E. he showed how it is supremely a place for free expression on the part of young people under the direction and with the sympathy and helpfulness of the older leaders in the church; an organization that provides physically, mentally, socially and spiritually of the whole man. Speaking of the "How" he said the first thing was to create interest and inspiration by the impartation of knowledge and then translate it into activity by thorough organization and effective work.

Following the announcements of the evening, Evangelist F. G. Coleman, Leon, Iowa, preached a sermon on the subject "Sin the Grave Digger." His text was Matt. 16:24. The dominant thought running through the discourse was: "Say no to self and yes to God," and in presenting it the speaker effectively appealed to the highest things that make for a growing and enlarging Christian life and experience.

After singing "Let the Gospel Light Shine Out," Freeman Ankrum closed the session with prayer and benediction.

Sunday Morning

The Sunday school session was in charge of superintendent Mrs. A. Emmert. "Jesus Reigns and All Is Right," was the opening song, after which B. F. Puterbaugh led in prayer. The class period was given to a study of the lesson entitled, "Abraham Helping Lot." The secretary's report showed an attendance of 90 with an offering of $5.81. The closing song was "Make Me a Blessing Today."

With the audience singing "Come Thou Almighty King," the morning service for inspiration and worship began. The choir furnished special music, singing "Praise Ye Jehovah." The scripture lesson was Luke 17: 11-19, and Robert F. Porte led in the morning prayer.

In the absence of G. T. Ronk who was expected to deliver the Sunday morning sermon, B. T. Burnworth brought the message of that hour. Using as his texts John 14:9 and 1 Cor. 11:24, he spoke on the subject "Appreciation." The message was one of heart appeal, pointing out the Christian's everyday duty and exhorting to appreciation and sympathy and helpfulness.

The closing hymn was "I Love Thy Kingdom Lord," after which Miles J. Snyder pronounced the benediction.

Sunday Afternoon

In the afternoon the audience joined in heartily singing "Onward Christian Soldiers" and "Where He Leads Me I Will Follow." Devotions were conducted by Miles J. Snyder, who read from the second chapter of Joel.

The address of the afternoon was given by C. E. Weidner who used as his subject, "Man and the Opportunity." He showed how the man or nation that refuses to use opportunities loses them. Likewise the church that refuses or neglects to embrace its opportunities will not only lose them but will suffer for such failure. Some assassinate their opportunities and others simply let them slip through their fingers, either of which has serious and far-reaching consequences. The way this nation goes in the next ten years will determine the trend of civilization for the next one hundred years. If the church abuses its present opportunities it will irrevocably hinder the progress of the kingdom of God for centuries.

"Someone Is Looking to You," was the closing hymn, and Robert F. Porte dismissed the audience with prayer and benediction.

Sunday Evening

The first part of the closing session of conference was devoted to a model Christian Endeavor meeting under the leadership of Miss Elizabeth Hildebrand. The Dallas Center Brethren choir furnished special music. A short practical talk was given by B. T. Burnworth on the subject "How to Increase the Attendance." Another helpful talk on the subject "Strengthening the Leadership," was given by C. E. Weidner. The general subject of the evening was "How Can We Correct the Faults of Christian Endeavor." A unique plan was introduced to get all to participate in the general discussion by each speaker when done calling upon an other present. The Mizpah benediction was used to close the C. E. service.

At the church service "He'll Never Forsake" was sung, after which Wm. H. Miller read the scripture lesson. The evening prayer was offered by Rev. Miller, chairman of the Dallas Cente. Federated churches. Rev. Hicks, pastor of the M. E. church, and daughter favored the audience with a fine vocal duet.

The sermon of the evening was preacher by retiring moderator H. L. Goughnour on the theme, "The Manner of the Coming of the Kingdom of God," and was a fitting message for the close of a splendid conference.

After joining in singing "My Savior First of All," the audience was dismissed with prayer and benediction by Rev. Hicks.

MILES J. SNYDER, Sec'y.

MUNCIE, INDIANA

The work at this place like all other places in this state and many other states for that matter, has for the time being ended. This is a new experience in my ministry, and it seems rather strange indeed not to go to church at all on the Lord's day. We have, however, some news to report. We have moved our quarters and are now much more favorably located than we were one year ago.

It is pretty generally known that the place where our work started in this city was not very well adapted for religious work. Last spring we put up the tent owned by the state mission board of Indiana. But the summer being extremely warm, even the tent was not very satisfactory. Winter was approaching and we had nowhere to worship. So we decided that we would erect a tabernacle on our lots which would serve our purpose until we would be ready to build. But on account of war conditions we found this project to be an utter impossibility.

But while war conditions were against us, war conditions also favored us. About one block from where the tent was located there is a place called "Five Points." It is called so because five streets meet there. At this place there are two grocery stores, one drug store, a restaurant, a barber shop, a soft drink joint, formerly a saloon, and several other business places. I mention these things to show that it is rather a strategic point.

Now, before the war there was one more business place ,a barber shop and a pool room combined at this point, but on account of war conditions this noted institution failed for lack of patronage, so much good has come out of this war.

We rented this hall as a last resort, papered it, put new carpets on the pulpit platform, runners in the aisle, one hundred opera chairs bought from the good people of Huntington, painted the woodwork white, put white curtains at the windows, with a new stove as a finishing touch. Now then we are not ashamed to have the president of Ashland College come or the Editor of the Evangelist or any other dignitary that may come this way. People say, "My, what a cheerful place you have here." All is right now and we are happy and contented. Yes, we call it the "Little White Chapel," Brother Carpenter and we think the name is very significant.

The first Sunday we were in the "Little White Chapel" we had fifty-two in the Sunday school, the second Sunday eighty. The second Sunday, however, was Rally Day and we made a special effort. By the way, we used the program prepared by Brother Gnagey and we liked it very much.

We were very highly elated by our new venture, but right on top came the health order, and we had to quit, and have not been there for two weeks. All things, however, shall work together for good to them that love God.

We ask for the prayers of all those who are interested in the missionary work of the Brethren church. J. L. KIMMEL.

HURLED FROM BOYHOOD TO HAZARD

There came to my attention some months ago a letter written from a small New England town. "Twenty boys left our county for Camp Devens yesterday," the letter said, "and fifteen of them had never before in their lives slept a single night away from home."

Twenty boys stepping out to face the world, not as their fathers before them went, into peaceful occupations, but to encounter an unfamiliar discipline, to cross the ocean, to land in a country the language of which they will not understand, to be hurled suddenly out of their boyhood into the most hazardous and difficult of all experiences.

If one could follow those twenty boys through the next trying months he would find in their experiences and in the experiences of those they leave behind, an epitome of what the war means to America.

We have had other wars before this, and all of them have been fought and won by boys. A majority of the soldiers in both armies in the Civil War were under twenty-one. But this war is so different, in the numbers involved, in the terrific nature of fighting machines employed, in the enormous armament and high explosives, in the complexity of the social as well as military problems involved, as to be something new under the sun. The war defies comparison. In almost every aspect it is different from other wars. and one of the differences that seems most significant to me is this—that in the present conflict the influences that were best in civil life have not been left behind, but have followed the flag into the training camp, across the seas, and have marched with the boys straight up to the front line trench.

In the history of warfare this has never happened before. The Civil War soldier had no reminders whatever of civil life, except indeed certain very evil reminders. It was almost an inevitable result of war's upheaval in the past that men should have their moral natures impaired.

Marriages

GIBBENS-STONER.—Newell G. Gibbens, of North English and Marie C. Stoner, of Williamsburg, Iowa, were united in marriage August 6th at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. John A Myers. Both are exemplary young people and we bespeak for them a happy prosperous life. They will reside on a farm near North English. Ceremony by the writer. WM. H. MILLER.

Our Dead

ROTHENBERGER.—Adam died at his home in Rossville, Indiana, September 11, at the age of 60 years, 5 months and 4 days. He had suffered with paralysis for a number of months. The deceased was once a member of the Cambria Brethren church, but after moving away united with the Baptists. Funeral service was held by the writer at the home in Rossville assisted by Rev. Herald, pastor of the Methodist church.

BENNETT.—John H., died at his home near Flora, Indiana, on September 17, aged 73 years, 4 months and 26 days. Brother Bennett suffered for a number of years with paralysis and a complication of chronic ailments. He was baptized and taken into the Flora Brethren church September 23, 1915. The funeral was conducted at 2:30 P. M. September 19, at the Flora church, this being the first funeral to be held in the new church by the writer.

WEAVER.—Orpha Felix, died at the St. Elizabeth Hospital at Lafayette, Indiana, on October 2, aged 35 years, 1 month, and 1 day. The deceased realizing her condition after a severe attack of influenza, called for her parents and the writer on October 1 and made a confession of her Lord and Savior. The funeral was conducted at the residence in Lafayette, by the writer.

W. T. LYTLE.

CLYMER.—Claud E., son of Harrison and Maggie Clymer, was born March 1, 1897 and departed this life October 7, 1918 at the age of 21 years, 8 months and 7 days. At the age of 12 years he was baptized into the Brethren church at Tiosa and lived a faithful member of the same until death.

He sought and obtained the education of both the common and high schools of this county and took some work at Winona College. Claud was loved by all who knew him and once a friend to one, always a friend. He was always obedient to his parents and never gave no for an answer.

On September 4, he was called to Camp Taylor to prepare for service. For 22 days he was drilled and taught the work that he must do while there, but on the twenty-third day Spanish influenza, which developed into pneumonia caused his death. He was obedient to the officers and the captain told his father that Claud was one of the best boys in the camp. A few hours before his death he was visited by his parents and gave them the assurance that all was well with his soul. A few minutes before he died he talked with his Christ in the spirit of prayer and then with outstretched arms Jesus took him home to be with God. He leaves to mourn their loss, a father, mother, brother, sister, grandfather, grand-mother, several relatives and a host of friends. Funeral conducted by the writer. ORA E. OXLEY.

WHITTEN.—Carrie Elizabeth, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Whitten, died September 12, 1918, aged one year. Funeral services at the home of the grandparents Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Kandell, Canton, Ohio, and at the Church of the Brethren, Freeburg, Ohio, on September 14, conducted by the undersigned, assisted at the church by Rev. Stuckey, of the Church of the Brethren. Burial in the cemetery near the church.

SNYDER.—Frank Snyder, son of Mr. and Mrs. Levi Snyder, of Canton, Ohio, passed away at the parental home, October 18, 1918, aged 21 years, 8 months and 29 days. He is survived by the parents, a brother Raymond, with the United States Expeditionary forces somewhere in France, and two sisters, Misses Bessie and Melva. Brief services were conducted at the home on October 19 and burial was made in the Union cemetery at Louisville, Ohio. Services by

The Teacher-Training Book

The Educative Process in Religion, by Dr. L. L. Garber, is our first step towards publishing a literature for our Training classes.

I reviewed this book in manuscript and was greatly pleased with its contents. Dr. Garber has used a style in his writing which will hold the keen interest of the class. The thing which pleased me most was the author has ever kept in mind the student. It will be enjoyed my the most scholarly and easily grasped by the untrained mind. You will want to study this book as soon as it can be had in your training classes. It will grip the interest of the class from the first to the last chapter. It will delight and fascinate like a good story. I bespeak for it the heartiest approval of our Sunday school forces.

ing an army through a deep gorge, and there was an impenetrable fort in front of you and an irresistibe army in the rear of you, what would you do?" After manifesting no little uneasiness, he replied, "I would resign my commission." Of course, military commissions are looking for quitters, But if I were a preacher that never thought of my hearers obeying the gospel, I would resign, too and—and—and apply for a pension. There would be no harm in applying, would there?

The old Jerusalem gospel grandly preached; great missionary plans gloriously executed, will be a fit program for the so-called "Changing World Order."

VOLUME 40 ASHLAND, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1918 NUMBER 42

The World's Refuge

On one occasion when the Lord had made it appear that those who chose to be his disciples should prepare themselves to make some sacrifice and to do some really hard things we are told that a number of them left him and refused to follow his leadership further. They were fair-weather souls who were willing to share the favors that God bestowed upon the labors of his Son but they had not the courage to share with him any of the hardships that naturally would follow the labors of one engaged upon such a mission; and rather than to suffer with him they chose to manifest what the modern world calls their streak of yellow and became quitters or deserters.

The effect such conduct would have upon the tender-hearted Master is not at all difficult to imagine because he was so little concerned about himself or his own comforts and his mind was ever on his great work and on the welfare of those who chose to follow him; thus it may be understood that it was with a most compassionate look and in tones of sadness and regret that he turned to his disciples and said, "Will ye also go away?" Here was the one opportunity now for any one who had grown fearful of the final outcome of their discipleship and of the triumphal completion of Jesus ministry to "get from under" the load, and we imagine some of them down deep in their hearts really would have liked to escape for we know their minds were filled with doubts and their hearts were filled with fear, and we imagine further that one thing only kept some of them from turning away as many had already done; but these disciples were more thoughtful than those who had turned away and they considered the future and what it would mean to them to be denied the presence of the Master, and while they may have hesitated a moment in making up their minds in regard to their own conduct yet their answer to Jesus reveals at least one reason why they would not leave him and it may have been in a mood tinctured with just a little despair that they replied: "Lord to whom shall we go?" Ah! "There's the rub." And that cry has been echoing down the ages from the time of our Lord until now. The world is in distress, and many people have seen some of the hard things followers of Jesus must do. The "way of the cross" is not altogether to their liking and some of them have sought some other way. They have not believed the Lord who said, "I am the way, the truth and the life, and no man cometh unto the Father but by me." And as the many have sought some other way and have bowed down to the gods of modern culture and moral reform we may again hear the words of Jesus to his disciples, "Will ye also go away?" And as the disciples replied to him two thousand years ago they will exclaim today, "Lord, to whom shall we go?"

The world has said the message of our Lord has lost its potency, it no longer meets the needs of the world. We must have a new religion, a new philosophy of life, a philosophy that is broader in its conception and more inclusive in its principles than the philosophy of Jesus Christ, and preachers of social righteousness and general world-welfare tell us that the church, and incidentally the religion of Jesus Christ, has measurably failed and that we must have a new gospel or a freer and more inclusive interpretation of the old, because after the war is over the men who come back from over the seas will have such a broad outlook upon life that they will not tolerate the narrowness which has characterized the work of the church through all the years.

The world is looking for a refuge; there are many social and political ills from which it would escape; but in the face of these stupendous needs of the world we are still free to say there is no other way but his way, there is no other remedy but his remedy, there are no works of righteousness that can take the place of his blood. In fact there is no other refuge but JESUS CHRIST, and as the insidious call of the new (?) religion goes out to the disciples of this age to forsake the oldtime religion of the fathers they too may exclaim with all earnestness, "To whom shall we go?" and then in the words of the Psalmist exclaim, "The Lord is my refuge, whom shall I fear?"

From the Editor's View-Point

Work or Play?

A great deal has been said lately about "work or fight" orders from the government and it is held that every able-bodied man that comes within the limits of the draft age must do one or the other. Under existing world conditions this may be true, but we hold that the work principle goes even farther than that. We hold that even in times of peace no able bodied man has a moral right to live through his life without rendering some service to the world of which he is a part.

Life is often regarded as a struggle, a fight against opposing forces, and he who masters these opposing forces with greatest ease and certainty is generally regarded as the most successful man. It has long been disputed whether man should eat to live or live to eat, but we hold that it is a great deal more important to know whether man shall live to work or work to live or whether he shall do both. Perhaps it is the best thing that can happen to man to be placed in such circumstances in the world that he must work in order to live for we feel quite certain he lives longer because of his work.

While work is one of the greatest friends to good health and contentment it is also one of the greatest friends to mankind in general. But as one's best friends are frequently not appreciated so the blessing of work is too often misunderstood. It has been said, "Work is kind to its friends but killing to its enemies." Thus the attitude one assumes toward his work or even toward work in general is the determining factor as to whether his work shall be a recreation and thus a play or whether it shall be a drudge and thus a back-breaking and life-destroying task.

Weariness of the flesh is greatly augmented by weariness of the spirit and one who can face life's tasks with a spirit of cheerfulness will find the burdens of life greatly lessened. It has long been known that children can be induced to perform rather tedious tasks of labor with alacrity if it can only be made to appear as a game at play and from this fact many grown people could learn a valuable lesson.

Give or Take?

When a partnership is desired to be dissolved frequently the one who is most in earnest about the transaction will say to his partner, "I will give you so much for your share in the business or I will take so much for my share;" and such a proposition is usually regarded as fair for as the old saying goes, " It is as broad as it is long," that is it is a perfectly "square" proposition.

Life itself is a sort of partnership with the world, it is a co-operation of forces and generally he makes most of life who co-operates best with his partner in bringing together the forces of the world of nature. And as one can not hope to be able to draw money constantly from a savings bank unless one is constantly depositing other funds in the bank, neither can one hope to be at all times drawing from the world's forces unless he is also contributing something to that world.

We know that the chief aim of men who venture into a newly discovered or newly explored land is to exploit the land or the people who may inhabit the same, but these are wrong motives to actuate the lives of any men. To look upon the world as nothing more than an object of exploitation is an altogether wrong view to take of man's relation to the earth God has given to him for a temporal home. If the world were to last for a single generation, then there could be no fault found with men for seeking to get all out of it they can without regard to what service it might be able to render to future generations, but since the world was created to be the home of many generations, each generation must consider well the generation that is to follow, and considering all things together that make up our world it is of far greater importance that we should be concerned about GIVING the world OUR best than we should be GETTING ITS best. In this world partnership there must be the give and take principle applied on every hand and one who takes from the world in this generation more than he gives it in return is robbing the generations that shall follow him.

A Question of Boycott

The right or wrong of the principles of the boycott has never been settled to the satisfaction of all men. While there may be no law that can compel a man to buy from one with whom he does not wish to have any dealings or to compel another to sell to a man whom he does not care to have as a customer except where one's business is of such public nature that he is under obligation to treat all the public in the same manner, yet the principle that underlies an organized effort to break down the business of another or to withhold trade from all except favored ones has not yet been recognized as a legal procedure, and sometimes laboring people have been compelled to pay dearly for such attempts, and on the other hand manufacturers and distributors of the world's products have also been compelled by the courts to make reparation for injuries done through the operation of this principle of the boycott.

One of the questions that will soon come before the world for settlement will be whether it is right for nations to act from motives and principles that are regarded as wrong when acted upon by individuals. Germany is now regarded as the enemy to all civilization and as such civilization feels that she must be punished, but the question is as to how this shall be done? One of the most effective plans suggested is that of a world boycott—the refusal to buy anything form Germany or to sell anything to Germany. To make this plan effective nearly all the seafaring men of England have signed pledges that for a period of ten years after the war they will not serve on ships trading with Germany or on ships carrying German goods in their cargoes. And we are informed that a large number of French sailors have made a similar agreement. While such a movement has not yet been openly made among American seamen, yet it is a very common thing to hear men and women say they will never again buy or use anything "made in Germany." And it would not be a very popular movement to attempt to counteract such teaching. Should one do so he would soon be classed as a pro-German, but it should be remembered that the apostle Paul said, "In Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither barbarian nor Cythian, neither bondmen nor free man, but all are one." This principle of Christianity can not be lived up to by any people who discriminate against another for no other reason than because of their nationality or their racial classification.

In a recent speech President Wilson said, "After the war there can be no special selfish, economic combinations within the league and no employment of any form of economic boycott or exclusion except as the power of economic penalty by exclusion from the markets of the world may be vested in the league of nations itself as a means of discipline or control."

While it is true that "the sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children even to the third and fourth generation," it should not be forgotten that God's Book says, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay saith the Lord," and undoubtedly it will be well to let the Lord have his own way in punishing recalcitrant peoples.

If the Harvest Be Home

BY GEORGE S. BAER

(Preached at Louisville, O., at Harvest Home meeting when an offering for aged ministers was lifted.)

When thou hast gathered in thy labors out of the field. Exodus 23: 16.

For most of us harvest time is a happy time, a time of satisfaction, of maturity and of reaping. For some it is a time of sorrow, failure and regret. For all it is a time not of prophecy, but of fulfillment, not of anticipation, but of realization. It is a time of revelation; whether fruit or withered leaves the crop is made known. Harvest time is a time for reflection, when many lessons of profit are brought home to us. And as we look upon this display of our harvest let us dwell upon some well-known facts that are hereby forced upon us anew.

1. If the harvest be home, then we must have sown the seed of the harvest gathered. We reap what we sow. Sow wheat, reap wheat. Sow thistles, reap thistles. Whatever the nature of our harvest, we know the sowing was of a like kind. If we are reaping a harvest of friends we must have sown the seeds of kindness. If we are reaping physical strength we must have sown obedience to the laws of health. If some here are reaping ripe Christian character they doubtless have sown devotional Bible reading, prayer and obedience to God's word.

On the other hand, if the harvest is one of dissatisfaction and regret, remember, it is the fruitage of evil seed. Infirmity of life points to impure thinking; and disease of body to disregard for the laws of growth and health either on the part of ourselves or others. If we are reaping a gambler in the home we perhaps have sown a deck of cards in the parlor or tolerated loafing in gambling resorts. If we are reaping a drunkard, we may have sown a decanter on the sideboard or a social glass at a banquet or ball. If in our communities we are reaping lawlessness, drunken criminals, ruined homes, wrecked manhood and broken hearts, be sure it is because we have been sowing the saloon in our towns, bribery in public officials and greed in our hearts. And if we have been reaping defeat in our efforts to banish the liquor traffic with its associated evils from the land, bear in mind it is because we have been sowing indifference or hypocrisy at the ballot box. Be not deceived, God is not mocked; whatsoever a man reaps, that hath he also sown.

2. If harvest be home, it is there because we have cooperated with God in putting it there. We have borne the burden and heat of the day. In daily toil we have done our best to bring about the harvest we have just now reaped. Crops don't come of themselves. The man who won't work deserves no harvest and gets none. God helps those who are willing to spend brain and brawn in helping themselves.

If the harvest be home for our country it is because by industry, economy and patriotism our citizens have co-operated with God in bringing it home. Never have men and women of every walk of life been so willing to produce, save and contribute for the welfare of our nation as they have this past summer. And because men have been willing to co-operate with God, he has worked with them and a harvest beyond what we expected is brought home.

If the harvest be home for Christ and the church, it is because we have borne the burden and heat of the day in devotion to his cause; it is because we have toiled and prayed, sacrificed and given that his church may not want that which is necessary to its maintenance and growth. I am not sure that the harvest is all brought home for the church. I would not be surprised to find a portion of its harvest in our own individual granaries or even in the nation's treasuries and war chests. I would not think much of a religion that did not bring a man to give proper allegiance to his state and adequate support to his home, but that man's religion is vain that does not place Christ and his church first and excuses his failure to bring the harvest home to the church by the complaint that the requirements of the state and home are too great. He who can not meet the expenses of the state and home out of nine-tenths of his income lives too extravagantly in the home. The Lord requires only the tithe and perhaps a few love-gifts as an acknowledgment of his ownership and our stewardship, and until that has been turned over to his kingdom's interests we cannot be said to be giving unreserved co-operation to God in bringing the harvest home to the church.

3. If the harvest be home then souls are gathered into God's great granary. The children are gathered into the church if the harvest be home. But too often the gleanings are left scattered about the field because they seem so insignificant. It seems more profitable to gather the big sheaves. But the movies are gathering the children. The amusement parks are giving special attention to attracting the children. The circuses, the fairs, the theaters, and every others sort of amusement and sport are very much concerned about interesting the children and gathering them into their worlds. Even the saloons, gambling rooms and dance halls are making bids for them at a very early age. But too often the church is found neglecting her little ones, or at least not putting forth the painstaking effort to gather them into her fold that characterizes many worldly institutions. But a new era for the child is dawning, a time of emphasis on educational evangelism; the church is realizing that the gathering of the children and really holding and nurturing them for God is the most profitable harvest of all.

And unsaved souls, if the harvest be home, are gathered in ever increasing numbers into the great storehouse of God —the church. Has this church been a soul-saving church the past year? Have we as individuals been busy reaping the ungathered wheat of God's harvest fields? Have we been thrusting in the sickle in all the neglected corners? Or are some portions of our field left unworked and some of God's precious wheat left ungarnered because some one has been unconcerned? May it be that even now some soul which we might have reached is compelled to cry out, The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I am not saved, God help us to realize that the harvest is not home so long as there is a single unsaved soul which we by his grace may reach.

4. If the harvest be home, then our granaries are filled with plenty and our hearts should be filled with gratitude. In spite of the dry weather of the summer, shortage of labor and other hindrances, I think we can truthfully say that we have been quite successful in filling our barns. God has given us a splendid harvest, far greater in abundance than we had hopes of reaping at certain times during the season. If it were not for the fact that we are expected to feed the world there would be no thought of food scarcity after reaping a crop like the one we have stored away in our barns. It is a good harvest; let us say it with gratitude to God who gave it. If we would only bear in mind the barrenness of many lands and the devastation wrought in others, we would not hesitate to say, "This is a good crop, more than we deserve," and we would thank God for his kind providence in this favored land.

It matters not whether we work on the farm or in the shop, we can say that the harvest has been a good one, and we have been abundantly blessed. It is true that the cost of living has soared to a record altitude, but, what is unusual, wages have taken a corresponding flight. So that no one is in want these days who is able and willing to work. Not only is there no want, I think there has not been a time in the memory of most of us when people in general had so much money as now and succeeded in having so nearly everything they wanted as now. This is true in spite of the occasional denial required to buy Liberty Bonds and to contribute to war charities.

If these things are true ought not our hearts to be filled with gratitude? We give unanimous consent I know. But how are we showing our gratitude or proving that we even possess it. If St. James should speak to us today he would probably say, "Show me thy gratitude by thy gifts." It may be the acid test, but the sincere and genuine will not complain of unfairness. Under this test how much of genuine gratitude does this day foot up? How much of our harvest of money and grain have we given to the Lord? Ah, I think we should together hang our heads with shame, not one pair of eyes looking to see who of the rest is guilty. Is it not true that we often treat the Lord as a beggar, giving him the scraps and "left overs" and patting our own backs for our generosity? Oh, "bring ye all the tithes into the store house"—God's storehouse, not your own—and prove your gratitude. For remember, grateful hearts go along with full store houses.

5. If the harvest be home, then those who toiled are rewarded. The harvest is what you have been working for. It is the reward of your labor, is it not? Do you not feel rewarded for the hard work of the summer when you have gathered an abundant harvest into your barns, or have counted out the money for its sale? You feel then, that your toil and sacrifice was not all in vain. And being rewarded, you feel satisfied. What a blessed sense is that feeling of satisfaction! How light and buoyant your heart! You have no grievance toward any one, you have been dealt with fairly.

But listen, there have been some who have not been rewarded. They are not a few scattered individuals here and there; they are a whole class of people. They are not an indolent and undeserving class; they are among the most industrious and deserving. They are not a rough, untrained, inefficient class; they are or were the most refined, trained, efficient people of their day. I say "were" because they are old men now, their great activity was in the days that are past. They are the old ministers of our church. Some superannuatel, some still preaching the gospel with what strength remains, all of them struggling as best they can to gain a livelihood in their years of feebleness. They are the most unrewarded class of people on this side of heaven. They served the church in a day when her narrow vision led her to deal unfairly with them; they were unpaid and were given nothing approaching an adequate reward of any sort. They freely and gladly gave the church the best days of their life and now they have come down to old age in penury and without any means of provision. Those whom they served so freely never realized how unfairly they dealt with them. Yet in justice it must be said, it is to the shame of the church in these days that these veterans of the Cross are situated as they are. They never realized their harvest brought home.

But it will do no good to lament over the past, we can not change it. It is gone forever as is the harvest that never was brought home to these aged ministers. The present only is ours to determine, and it is for present needs only that these "Fathers in Israel" are asking. We can not change the injustice of the past, but we can care for their present. And if we should permit them to suffer or to be embarrassed for lack of provision it would be to our shame.

The street car men of a certain city secured by threatening to strike an adjustment of wages and hours of work to take effect more than half a month back. If it were possible to make a fair wage adjustment with our old brethren in the ministry it ought to take effect back more than half their lives. But that is impossible and is not asked. What we can do, I am sure we will do; we will give out of our abundance to secure their present provision. And while we are doing that, let us determine within ourselves that another generation of preachers will not be compelled to go down to old age without having been able to lay by a little store for their days of feebleness because their harvest was not brought home.

WHY?

BY HORACE KOLB

It is the universal custom to apply the test of WHY to everything. Just think, is not this true? We do nothing but that all our friends, and others, rise up and try to ascertain why we do it, and why we don't do a lot of other things. Then, too, we are all the time whying everything that others are doing. This may not all be done in the spirit of criticism, but too often it is. Oh, no one escapes! God, why did you and why didn't you? The King and the President,—the Pope and the Bishop, the Capitalist,—the workingman, and all the rest are all the time and by all hands,—confronted with WHY?.

We know that the Missionary Board of the Brethren church has not been, nor is it now exempt. Let us then ask some questions about it, not to criticise or find fault, God forbid, but with the object of increasing its usefulness and extending its field of work.

What are you? I am a Board formed by the National Conference, composed of twelve men and women elected by Conference. The missionary secretaries of the District Conference are also members.

Who is President of the Board? George C. Carpenter, of Peru, Indiana.

Why is he President? Because he has shown by long years of active service that he is the best man in the Brethren church for the position.

Who is Secretary-Treasurer of the Board? Orion E. Bowman, of Dayton, Ohio.

Is he any good? I should say so. He has been in this office but one year. That is all the time he required to show the best year's record of the Board.

Why don't you get some other persons to fill the above offices, Because it would be impossible to secure better men.

Why is it necessary to have a National Board? It is necessary to conducted the extension work of the church, to give direction to the desire of the membership to help in such work, and to enlarge the Kingdom of our Lord by bringing his saving gospel to lost men and women.

What is the history of the Board? Oh, I can not in this article tell you all! It has a most glorious past. Many churches, some of the now strongest in the Brotherhood, have been organized and helped spiritually and financially, many thousands of consecrated dollars have been received from devout members and carefully applied as desired by the givers, and above all, thousands of souls have been saved and added to the church.

Has the Board any plans for the future? It surely has. Here is one. At the last conference the whole country was divided into three districts, west of the Rocky mountains in the First District; from these mountains to the Pennsylvania line in the Second District, and from that line east is the Third District. District secretaries were appointed, whose duties it shall be to have a general supervision of extension work in their districts. There are a lot of other plans that are being worked out. A large number of churches and missions are continually receiving assistance.

How much money will be required this year?

$7,500.00 at least.

When will this amount be raised? At Thanksgiving time.

How? By each church in the brotherhood sending thirty cents for each enrolled member. By a large number of individuals making personal contribution.

What is Goal 5 of the Four-Year-Program? The founding or re-establishment of 40 congregations.

How will that be attained? Only by liberal contributions to the Home Missionary Board.

What is Goal 10 of the Four-Year-Program? Annual offering of $15,000.00 to Home Mission Board.

Where will that come from? From true and devoted members of the Brethren church.

Why don't everybody give? Other years they have not, but this Thanksgiving they will.

What rate of interest does the Liberty Bond pay? 4¼ per cent.

What rate of interest do missions pay? With a few dollars you can save a soul, which is worth more than the total of all the Liberty Loans, yes, more than all the earth. It is the best paying proposition.

How much have you invested in soul money?

Let each answer for himself. But now is the time to increase your holdings.

None should fail here. All should pull together to make this Thanksgiving offering the very best in our history.

Will you help?

Anti-Divorce Prescription; An Infallible Remedy for "Newly Weds"

BY SAMUEL KIEHL

The bride and groom will have a very happy life, never have a quarrel or a fuss, always have paradise, and never want a divorce, if they daily read and obey Ephesians 5:33.

An infallible remedy is also given in the Word to maintain and enjoy continual peace in the local church.

The church will never need a committee, in the country or in the city, by day or by night, to make wrong right, if every member will daily read and obey the following scripture: "Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. Ephesians 4:31, 32.

It takes two to make a bargain; but one can start a fuss in the home or in the church. Such starters in the church sometimes (when successful) commit great offenses; and the Word says, "It is impossible but that offences will come: but woe unto him through whom they come. It were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he cast into the sea.." Luke 17:1, 2. Jesus says, "Not every one (husband, wife, or church member) "that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. 7:21.

Dear reader, are you and I doing the Father's will; glorifying him in bringing souls to Christ by a godly walk and chaste conversation? The Lord help us to do so. We ask in his name.

The Deadly Cigaret

In a recent number of the Religious Telescope appeared an editorial dealing with the question of the great number of influenza fatalities in such a frank and outspoken manner that we want all the reader of sthe Evangelist to read it, so we reproduce it here.—Editor.

Men cannot sow to the wind without reaping wind or whirlwind or both. One of the abnormalities of the human mind is a desire for the pleasure of sowing but a hope to avoid the disadvantage of reaping. This may be but another evidence that the heart of man is deceitful, even if one should attempt to deny that it is desperately wicked.

Last November, three deaths under the American flag startled the whole country. Now a full newspaper page is so common that it causes less comment. The mind accustoms itself even to terrible things.

But now a new casualty list is appearing. Before us are the names of sixty-five boys, all but two from one state, who died at one cantonment within a few hours. It is the deadly influenza—which we believe was planted purposely and willfully in American cantonments by agents of the kaiser. Every death from this cause is that much aid to our enemies. We have only the ordinary layman's knowledge of the human body, of disease, of medicine, and of nursing. But physicians tell us that the enormous consumption of cigarets is a great contribution to influenza fatalities. We take their word as true, although we know that it is very difficult now to secure sufficient nurses, and this may account for many deaths in the camps. When lungs are parched by cigaret smoking, pneumonia finds a much easier victim than if the lungs had been in prime condition. And most of the influenza deaths result from the induced pneumonia.

What position shall they take whose hearts are patriotic and Christian? The Telescope has opposed this cigaret evil from the first. It regards cigaret smoking wrong from every angle, and has not hesitated to say so, even though such smoking is promoted by the army, by the Red Cross, by the Young Men's Christian Association, by the Young Women's Christian Association, and by many churches. Our position has been criticized by some who think that no word of opposition or warning should be raised against anything the Government does, on the ground that such is unpatriotic and on the assumption that complete approval of every step is necessary to win the war quickly. But the Telescope has no regrets for its stand for practices and habits that make a strong body and strong mind. It even rejoices if its position has in any degree saved a soldier boy from one of the worst habits, not to mention making him an easy mark for a fatal malady.

We do not say that every cigaret smoker will fall before the influenza epidemic, or that every non-smoker who is stricken will recover. We do try to say that any soldier you may select has a better chance for recovery if his lungs have not been injured by the deadly cigaret. It is not a comparison of two men, but a comparison of two conditions of the same man.

In the presence of so many thousands of dead soldiers, without even considering the pall of sorrow hanging over an equal number of American homes, what shall we say of the patriotism of the great tobacco trust which has reaped its millions—at the expense of lives, and to the rejoicing of Germany? Whatever kills American soldiers, be it bullet or gas on the battle line, or influenza-pneumonia in the training camps at home, is pro-German in its first effects, and may be pro-German in its last effects unless we see which way things are going and introduce a counteracting set of causes. The Christian forces of America that fell into the trap of the tobacco trust, and, through a weak sentimentality which it mistook for patriotism, supplied this poison to weaken the soldiers, were unwittingly playing a pro-German game. What a pity! Every time we forsake a high and sane moral position we lose out somewhere. But at what fearful cost we descended and became the willing agents in weakening the bodies of our sons and our neighbor's sons against the ravages of this disease!

There is no need to mention interrupted schools, closed churches, and hampered business, though everything of this kind is important. These words are centered about the pro-German cigaret, and the effect it has helped influenza to have on the war plans and execution. There are personal regrets that seem to have no remedy—one of which is that a part of the money we contribute to the Red Cross and to other agencies working singly or in the war chest is used for the purpose of supplying cigarets. We dare not withhold gifts. They must be increased. It is our hope and prayer that those administering the funds will see facts in true relation, and then change some of the facts. Again, we hope that the part of our contributions expended for things which build up will do much more good than the harm that must follow cigaret smoking. May a gracious Father show the American people their grievous error in their support of a custom which is bringing such aid and comfort to our enemies this very day.

"Young Uns"

BY E. L. MILLER

"No, Maria, I am not in for setting any hens this Spring."

"Why, what's the matter with you, Silas Simpkins? Are you a losing your mind?"

"No! But I'll tell you what's what. This raising chicks for the rats and cats to carry off, and for the hawks to keep you in hot water, I'm done with it."

"But, Silas, they get very few, and besides the cats kill the rats and mice, while the hawks rarely bother the chicks when any other food is handy."

"I don't care," continued the obstinate Silas. "I don't see the need of worrying with the chicks when they are such a bother to raise; the rain and the cold are always sure to get some, and, anyhow, it's the big hens that lay the eggs and bring the prices on the market. No more bothering with little chicks for me."

Can you wonder that Silas' good wife could scarcely restrain herself from asking him under which of the fifty-seven varieties of fools he was to be classified?

"Blame those pesky brats of pigs," said the stockman as a little twenty-pounder ran between his legs and sent him sprawling on the ground. "And to think that I was fool enough to try raising eighty of them this year, and feed higher than ever, and the little pigs don't bring in anything, they are simply expense. I'll tell you, no small pigs for mine any more. I'm going in for big hogs after this, they yield the lard and hams that bring in the cash."

Hearing the stock raiser talking to himself, a passer-by stopped to listen, and when he heard the import of the soliloquy he smiled right out loud, whereat the stockman arose and repeated himself much to the surprise of the passerby. "But," said the friend, "haven't you always raised pigs?"

"Yes, and bad cess to them, they are ever into things, and when the cholera doesn't get them the old mother will will tramp them, or else they will worry a fellow to death running through the cornfield or rooting holes all over the orchard."

"But wouldn't fixing the fences and ringing the pig's noses prevent all that?" persisted the friend.

"Yes, but I'm through with the little pig business, after this it's to be big hogs or nothing."

Can you blame the friend for thinking that the stockman must have been either losing his mind, or else going into early dotage?

And the evangelist continues to report his meetings, "Fifty additions all adults but four, a wonderful meeting. We fished for men and women and we got them. Let some one else look after the youngsters, we are too busy trying to get the older folks, besides it is the old folks that count in making up the budget."

The preacher, too, doesn't go to Sunday school because there are so many impossible children that frequent the place, and don't you know, he cannot preach where there are any children to disturb his flow of rhetoric, or to gurgle and goo-goo as he tries to hold forth in the name of—well, of him who said, "Let them come unto me." Nuff Sed!

Impromptu Flashes

BY W. J. H. BAUMAN

The church of today needs awakening power along several important lines.

Revivalists should be good teachers.

Substantial preaching means doctrinal preaching. See 1st Tim. 4: 10.

Say, Mr. Preacher! It is by far more important what you preach, than how you preach it. Of course the how is entitled to respect.

My O my! how Satan loves to rock the cradle of indifference.

The world of today is teaching the church a great lesson along the line of true and noble patriotism.

The church, in her realm of work, and fight against sin needs patriotism of the highest and most sublime order.

Well developed mentality is a great factor for good in the church; But only so when guided by apostolic spirituality.

Human warfare can never restore to man the image of God; True Christian warfare can.

As the lilies of the field eclipse all human splendor, so does Christian character eclipse the mere human.

If either cold or heat was best for the church at Laodicea—See Rev. 3: 14, 15, 16—it must also be best for the church of today.

The tree of divine grace being rooted in the atoning merits of Christ's blood, is the most delicious fruit bearing tree know in heaven or earth. The fruit being good works. See Eph. 2: 8, 9, 10.

The wonderfully plain and literal fulfillment of ancient Bible prophecies bear testimony to the following poetic stanza:

"We are living, we are dwelling in a grand and awful time. In an age on ages telling, To be living is sublime."

In view of the above facts who can doubt the inspiration of the old Book?

Good use made of intellectual belief is valuable in many ways; But heart (which takes in motive, affection and will) belief is of greater value. See Rom. 10: 10.

While intellectuality and wealth may be used as great factors in the development of Christian character, they also expose one to the danger of vanity and—so-called—light-headedness.

If poverty is not entitled to a seat in the highest, best, and most refined circles of human life, then Jesus the Christ must have been a reprobate and social outcast. Isn't such a thought horrible?

Cheer up, ye poor and downtrodden, the Bible of which Christ is the central character is your best friend.

Conservation and Christian Comity in Operation

BY ROY B. GUILD, D. D.

In view of the successful co-operation of churches in order to conserve manpower and fuel, it is being suggested with increasing frequency that this be done in preparation for the coming winter, for the period of the war—or, in many cases, for all time to come.

One of the strong influences at work in bringing about this co-operation has been the demand that the war so imperatively brings to our attention for united action between the denominations. A visitor to communities where such co-operation is taking place is impressed with the response that has been given to the appeal for getting together, because the larger interests of the Kingdom of God required it. Often the sentiment against the proposed union was evidently strong, but clear explanation of exactly what was proposed, a patient answering of questions, the making of some comparatively unimportant concessions, and the strong appeal to the consciences of the people and to the loyalty to the Kingdom has prevailed to change this sentiment.

Vermont has a group of home missionary secretaries who have effected eighteen unions or federations in which Congregational, Baptists and Methodist churches were concerned, during the past year.

One of the methods employed in seven of the cases was the exchange of fields. In one instance there has been permanent and complete withdrawal, the Congregational house of worship will be repaired with the proceeds of the sale of the Congregational parsonage and placed at the disposal of the United Church, and the Methodist house of worship will be changed over into a community house. Two other towns are illustrations of what union arrangements can bring about in the way of securing stronger men and increase of salary. In the first each church had been paying $800 to its minister and had received only passable service. Now the minister is paid $1200 and he is reputed to be one of the stronger men in the Methodist Conference. In the second the one minister was receiving $900 and the other about $600. Now the minister of the United Church is receiving $1200 and is an unusually competent community minister. A marked increase in attendance at these united churches has been noted.

Federation, the other method employed, means that nothing is said about the withdrawal of either denomination, and in the agreement the suggestion is that there may be an alternation of ministers between these denominations. It is not unlikely that some of these federations will lead to the withdrawal of one or the other denominations.

A most important agreement has been entered into by state denominational secretaries and superintendents, the notable thing being that the responsible executive officers of three denominations entered into this agreement and formed a permanent organization for the particular purpose of carrying it out. These executive officers themselves are taking the initiative.

The secretary of the Vermont council, Rev. C. C. Merrill of Burlington, Vermont ,is able to report some very interesting results. Ministers and laymen who are seeking information along this line, if the facts here recorded are not sufficient, will do well to write to Mr. Merrill or to Rev. E. T. Root, 53 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, Massachusetts, who has had an active part in bringing about many combinations in Massachusetts. The Home Missionary secretaries in that state have been very aggressive in bringing about wise cooperation and combination.

Make Your Life a Power

The new year is upon us. It is an opportune time to turn over a new leaf. Start with a clean page. Let the dead past bury its dead. Forget all that dampens your enthusiasm, or deflects your energies from that which you wish to accomplish.

At the beginning of a new year it is fitting that one should total up one's resources. Take an inventory of your physical, mental and moral possessions. Do not bother about your finances. They will be secure, provided you are well equipped physically and mentally.

Whatever may have been your status in this respect in 1918, resolve that you will improve it this coming year. Your body should throb and thrill with the superb energies that come with health.

See that this new year brings you all that should be yours. Whatever may have been your shortcomings in the past, turn into a new path now. Imbibe the spirit of determination.

"My life shall be a power. I will dominate myself. I will master my weaknesses. I will shun bad habits."

Make these statements to yourself over and over again. Repeat them a hundred, a thousand times. And act up to your affirmations.

By merely saying, "I am strong," you cannot become strong. But by saying, "I am going to work for strength," you impress the ideal upon your mind so forcibly that the thought results in action; and action always counts for something.

Though each human atom is a product largely of inheritance, one is influenced tremendously by environment, by the thoughts and influences with which one comes in daily contact.

We are creatures of habit.

We are made or broken by these daily habits.

Invalidism is largely the result of habit.

Weakness is the outgrowth of habits.

Habit makes a strong man.

Therefore it is well to carefully investigate your habits. Are they good, bad or indifferent? Are they making you stronger or weaker each day?

Most of us imagine that we are full grown as soon as we reach adult age.

There was never a greater error.

We may stop growing in stature, but we should continue to develop even physically. We should become stronger in body up to, at least, the age of thirty.

The mind should continue to grow as long as life lasts, and a clean, strong body is unquetsionably of great service in promoting such growth.

Do you want to make the most of your life?

Recognize the importance of maintaining your physical forces at high-water mark. Develop the tolerant spirit. Realize the brotherhood of mankind. Fill your life with activity to such an extent that you have no time or energy to spare for personal enmities.

Make your brain and your body your servants. Only when you have done this can you live the life of achievement. With your brain keen, your body throbbing with the forces of life, and with the ambition and enthusiasm of youth as an inspiration at all times, regardless of your age, you are capable of attaining whatever end may be the goal of your desires.—Bernarr Macfadden.

Good Substitutes for Bad Habits

The essence of habit-breaking consists not so much in the mere negative attitude of refraining from doing the undesirable thing, but rather in the positive attitude of doing something and so filling one's mind and time with thoughts and activities of the right kind that these very soon establish themselves and actually re-make one's character.

When we were children and went to school we were given a very interesting lesson on the subject of habit. We were told that a habit in the beginning, was like a tiny thread which can easily be broken. Then we were told that each repetition of a certain act or thought was the adding of another thread, making the strand more and more difficult to break, until finally the rope, or band, or chain became so powerful that all our struggles against it were of no avail.

There is an undeniable basis of truth in this old simile. The chains of habit unquestionably grow in strength with continued indulgence. But there is another more constructive view of the same figure of speech which was overlooked by our school teacher and which it is even more important to bring out. Here it is:

The chains of habit are powerful only if one attempts to snap them by a direct pull, but they will rust out and crumble to pieces by themselves if one deliberately centers upon new activities and upon new habits of a healthful, helpful and constructive kind to take their place. In other words, if your old-time practices seem to have acquired the strength of iron bands, you can simply forget them in the substitution of new activities and new habits, and the old bonds will simply disintegrate and drop off.

As long as you worry about your habit you thereby keep your mind on it and make it as hard as possible to break away from it. But to tell you to stop worrying and thinking about your trouble is only another way of saying that you must substitute something else.

The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief receives plea from local relief station for $500,000 to continue relief work in Turkey. 320,000 destitute Kurdish refugees returned to Sonjbulak, 75 per cent widows and orphans. Azerbaijian crops failure, famine threatens, prices rising.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

The ban against church services in Ohio is still on and we presume the same condition prevails in many of the other states, so we take it for granted that most of our subscribers were glad that we were able to get the Evangelist mailed on time last week, regardless of the epidemic in Ashland, for we know that many of our readers greatly desire to receive their church paper in time to have it for their Sunday reading and now since the churches have been closed for so long a period we take it that this desire is stronger than ever.

It is not often that we publish a personal letter in the columns of the Evangelist, but we feel quite sure, from an acquaintance of twenty-five years with Brother S. B. Grisso, that he will have no objections to our publishing the letter we received from him last week. We have said on different occasions taht we believed our isolated members of the church are often the most interested readers of the Brethren Evangelist, and this letter from Brother Grisso confirms our belief.

A few weeks ago one of our reports from California stated that Thomas H. Broad, pastor at La Verne, was about to go on a missionary tour among the mining camps of Arizona. This week we have a report of the trip from Brother Broad. The epidemic so prevalent in every section of the United States had already preceded Brother Broad in his travels, and upon his arrival at his destination he learned that on that very day the closing orders had been issued in Arizona, which made the holding of any kind of public meetings out of the question. This was a great disappointment to Brother Broad, as well as to the miners to whom he had gone to minister. However, the report he gives of his previous trip on a similar mission shows the nature and the need of the work that should be done in these needy fields.

C. C. Grisso, of North Liberty, finds it possible to report some of the good things from that congregation in spite of the present shut down of public meetings. Our readers will notice that he expects the North Liberty church to win a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll with the beginning of the new year. The forward look is essential to success in the Lord's work and the churches that have this look ahead are the ones that are doing things for God. The North Liberty congregation has the same difficulties to contend with that any other church has to face but they have the will to win and they will win. Our readers may expect to have us say a great deal about the Evangelist Honor Roll between now and the beginning of 1919. We do not intend to permit a single issue of the Evangelist to go out between now and that date without saying something, for we MUST win. Conditions in the publishing business of the entire country make it IMPERATIVE that we must win. To do anything less means defeat, and we do not believe the Lord wants us to be defeated.

The note from Sylvester Lowman, of Fillmore, California, is almost like a telegraphic despatch in its brevity, but it tells all that Brother Lowman wants to tell at this time and that is that they expect to dedicate their new church in early December. That will be making haste rapidly, but that is the way they do things in southern California.

N. W. Jennings gave us a general report of his work in West Virginia a few weeks ago, but this week we have a more specific report of the work at Oak Hill and at Salem from the pen of Sister Boothe. It is to be regretted that these meetings-which were accomplishing so much for the kingdom had to be closed because of the epidemic. However Brother Jennings expects to return and finish the work at some future time.

The work of the Kanemorado conference was handicapped by the closing orders in force at the time in Nebraska, but yet a goodly number of delegates were in attendance, and by crowding and abbreviating their work they were allowed to do the business needed to assure a successful year for the work in that district. It is to be noted that this conference, like the others that have already been reported, was conducted with the "forward look." The mission board of the district reported an unusual amount of money in the treasury at the close of the year, but it is to be noted that the board is looking for a man upon whom to spend the money, but from what we know of the spirit of the west they want a man who is willing to earn what he gets.

A photograph of the Kanemorado conference was taken, we presume by the official photographer, Kemper, and he is a good one, and the delegates are notified that they are now ready. Any orders will be filled. See the announcement in another column.

We presume never before in the history of the Brethren church have so many death notices and obituaries come into the Evangelist office. This is but an index to the far reaching scope of the epidemic among the American people. The notices we publish must of necessity be brief and our friends will have to pardon us if they notice that we have abbreviated some of their reports. It strikes the Brethren church with a spirit of unusual sadness to learn that her ministerial ranks have been lessened by the passing away so recently of E. W. Deitrick and L. A. Walters, both of Pennsylvania.

W. T. Lytle's report of the closing of his work at Flora, Indiana, and of the beginning of his new work at Burlington and Darwin, same state, shows how the sadness of parting may be greatly overcome by the attitude and gratitude of the people from whom one parts. That Brother Lytle's work was appreciated in his former charge is made clear by the many tokens of appreciation his former parishioners gave into his hands and the hands of his family.

The Christian Endeavor societies of the Brethren church have set about to accomplish things worth while and they refuse to be stopped by the obstacles that have closed the churches for the month past. A reading of the reports from Brother Garber, Brother Whitted and Miss Nora Bracken show that the heads of the various departments do not intend to allow anything to interfere with the work the young people can do.

Strong appeals will be kept constantly before our people from now until Thanksgiving Day so that the offering for General Missions this year may be by far the greatest the Brethren church has ever made.

G. C. Carpenter always has items of interest to report of the Kentucky work, but this week what he has to say is of more than usual interest, and what he says of the work in his home church, Peru, is not the least interesting part of his report.

Around the Editor's Table

Doing Business for God

A prominent business man of Indianapolis was approached a number of years ago by his pastor who told him he wanted to have him engage in a special religious work, but the man objected, saying he did not know how as he had never done anything else than business and consequently that was all he could do.

His pastor replied, "That is all I want you to do. But I want you to do business for God." He then laid his plans before the business man and showed him how a certain line of work should be done and that it required a man trained in the business principles of the world to do it. This method of presenting the task to the man appealed to him and he entered heartily into the task and made a success of a large religious and Christian enterprise.

If a man is an out and out disciple of Christ his business, whatever its nature may be, will be conducted in a manner to honor God and without a doubt he may look to God for his blessings upon his business and may expect to be favored by him. But in another sense one may engage in Christian activities of a specific character and do it in a way that makes it a real business for God. All Christian activities should be conducted in such a systematic way that they may be said to be conducted along sane business lines. It is no sin to go about one's Christian activities in a businesslike manner. The idea that spirituality and business principles will not mix is all a mistaken one. The apostle Paul was most businesslike in his work for the early church. The other apostles before him were businesslike when they declined to leave off ministering in spiritual things to serve tables, but advised the disciples to choose out from their own number seven men of honest report who should be set over these things.

The church should be a businesslike institution. Its affairs should be so conducted that trained business men will not be made to hold aloof from it because of its lack of intelligent system. It should rather appeal to them to apply some of their business training and to devote some of their business talent to its affairs and its problems.

An active business man in an Ohio village said to the writer a few years ago, "The way these churches do business makes me tired." He then proceeded to tell what he thought was wrong in their management and he also expressed his views as to how he thought they ought to be conducted. The lines he laid down were rather hard but undoubtedly if they were followed they would remove much of the reproach that too often follows the work of a church that is lacking in good business methods and management. It greatly adds to the efficiency of a church if it has good business standing among the business men of the town or city where it is located. Some churches are greatly lacking on this point, while the standing of others is gilt edge. The writer has served both kinds in his ministry and knows whereof he speaks. He has also seen some of these churches change the situation entirely in a few years' time and through sound business conduct gain the standing they formerly lacked. No institution in a community should strive to attain a high standard more than a church.

An Appeal to Pastors

Because we have remained comparatively silent for some time in regard to that part of the Four-Year-Program campaign in which the Publishing House is most vitally interested, namely, the placing of the Evangelist into seventy-five percent of the homes of the church, some of the readers of the paper may think we are neglecting our part in the work and our duty as Goal Director for Goal Nine. However, this is not the case, as we have been only biding our time. The last month has been conference month for a large portion of the brotherhood, and though the conferences were all interfered with and one had to be indefinitely postponed because of the epidemic so common to the country, yet the conferences that did meet took steps to carry on this work as rapidly as possible. Another reason for our silence has been that this is the time of year when there is a lull in the business of the Evangelist. A vast majority of the subscriptions to the church paper expire wtih the close of the year and the pastors prefer to make their special efforts in the way of increasing the number of subscribers to the Evangelist in their congregations at that time.

As Jesus once said to his disciples, "Ye say it is yet three months to the harvest," we can say it is now but TWO months until the harvest of new churches should be gathered into the BUDGET fold. The next two months will determine the success or the failure of this plan among the churches that adopted it during the last year. We are glad to report that NOT ONE church at this time that tried the plan for a year has failed to renew their entire list according to the same plan. The largest renewed list to date being that of the Ashland church, but now within one month some of the largest churches that adopted the plan last year will have reached the end of their first year and we are more than anxious to know what they will do about it for another year. From the strong position the conferences have taken in regard to the matter we can hardly see how even one of these churches can fail in this forward movement and go back to the old unsatisfactory and generally unsuccessful method for caring for the subscription list of the Evangelist as that followed during former years.

In spite of the orders of the War Industries Board to discontinue all unrenewed subscriptions we are still mailing each week nearly two thousand more copies of the Evangelist than we did one year ago, but the next two months will determine whether this has been a permanent growth of the list and a growth that may continue to increase or whether it has been only an experiment that is to be laid aside, having proved unsuccessful. Pastors, this appeal goes out to you. You have stood nobly by the work for the year, and some of you have had a hard time persuading your congregations to see the light and to walk in this better way, but you have succeeded. Shall you follow up your success or are you now going to retreat and fall back to the "old Hindenburg line?" Please remember when a retreat once begins it is difficult to say where it will stop, as General Hindenburg discovered to his sorrow.

Forward the Watchword

Some pastors reported to us that though they failed to get their churches to place the Evangelist into every active Brethren home in their congregations by the budget system last year they had not given up and they hope to be successful this year. We most sincerely trust their hopes may be realized, for a pastor's work becomes discouraging if he can not see signs of progress in the church he is serving, and this placing of the Evangelist into the homes of all the members of a congregation is most certainly a sign of progress.

We know there are other churches that will attain a place on the Honor Roll of churches for the Evangelist because they are really working that way. For the last six months or more one wide-awake pastor in Indiana has been renewing the subscriptions from his congregation only to the end of the year, no matter how long or how short the time may be. He has been planning wisely, and at the close of the year will have a clean slate, and can at that time send in the list of every family in his congregation and have all their subscriptions expire at one and the same time. This will simplify matters for the church and will also make less work for the Publishing House. However, no one need stand back because they have not taken such care to prepare the road before them. If you will send us the list of subscribers from your church we will estimate the amount due or the amount overpaid on all old subscriptions so as to cause them all to expire at the same time. This is an easy matter for us from the records we keep.

But what we want now is that all pastors shall get busy and see if two thousand more names can not be added to our list during the next three months. The Religious Telescope will make a drive to secure TWENTY-FIVE thousand new subscriptions during the first week of December. If the United Brethren church can do that, it would seem strange if the Brethren church can not secure TWO THOUSAND new subscriptions in three months. The Goal set for this part of our great Four-Year-Program will not be reached unless this is done. We know that a spirit of great depression has come upon the churches of all denominations because of the terrible epidemic that has necessitated the closing of all places of worship for so long a time, but one of the ways to get rid of this depression is to work it off, to enter into all the church's activities when the ban is lifted with such vigor that the old depression will be entirely forgotten in the joy of renewed activities. As Brother Bame, chairman of the Program Committee says, "Now then, do it."

A SUCCESSFUL INTERDENOMINATIONAL CLASS

Seven Things Which Helped to Make It

1. A committee with a member from each denomination co-operating.

2. Attractive posters made by girls advertising the class. Posters displayed a month in advance and changed to advertise different chapters.

3. An enrollment day, on which each committee member canvassed her denomination for study class members.

4. Reports of enrollment made to chairman and posted on bulletins by each member.

5. An enrollment fee of $1, which provided each member with a text book and note book and paid the expenses of securing a leader.

6. A well qualified leader who knew the book and knew how to lead others in the study of it.

7. A group of intercessors who prayed for God's blessing on the work.

TAKING A CITY

Scattered Mission Study Classes had been held in various churches in the capital city of South Carolina, but no concerted effort had been made to have a city-wide campaign in all the churches until a group of Columbia young people returned from a summer conference and met together to talk over and pray over the situation. Here follows the sequence of events as they came to pass after that meeting:

A normal class held for the training of leaders. Special class for Junior leaders.

An invitation sent to every church to send representative missionary leaders to a meeting to consider a city-wide Mission Study Drive.

A committee appointed to conduct this drive.

A Mission Study Mass Meeting agreed upon as a starting point.

Names and addresses of every Sunday school teacher above the primary grade and of every president of a church society secured and listed according to city districts.

Every member canvass made of all these teachers and officers on the same afternoon, notice having been given in the churches with the request that all teachers and presidents be at home at that hour.

Members of committees sent out by twos to explain fully the plans for the Mission Study Drive and to give to teachers and presidents enough cards of invitation to the Mission Study Mass Meeting, to be held on the following Sunday afternoon, to be delivered by them with a personal invitation to all the members of their classes or organizations.

Skilful publicity in the city papers. Good announcements from the city pulpits. Special invitations sent to the university, the colleges and two theological seminaries.

Juniors trained for chorus by director of music in city schools.

Above everything else, much prayer.

Large auditorium packed to the doors and scores of people turned away.

An interesting program for mass meeting.

Prominent university professor presiding.

University quartet singing.

Good short talk on the Why and How of Mission Study.

Still shorter talks by four or five people on what they had seen done by Mission Study.

Presentation of the plan for classes in every church.

Distribution of enrollment cards to be filled in by those who would join the classes— giving name, denomination, church.

Provision made for those who wished classes at the college and for business men at Y. M. C. A.

Cards turned over to representatives of the churches designated and Mission Study classes organized in all of them. Nearly 1,500 people enrolled in clases in a city which had had only a scattered few in Mission Study.

Mission Study made a regular part of the annual program of churches that had known no Mission Study before.

HERE AND THERE SUGGESTIONS

A Monday Business Girls' Club conducted a successful class at lunch hour, taking fifteen minutes for lunch and forty-five minutes for study of the book and discussion. This class met around the desk in the office of their leader.

The Six O'Clock Mission Study Tea solves the problem for other business women who get off from business at 5:30, have tea in the church parlors at 6 and Mission Study from 7 to 8.

In a rural community a society with only twelve members arranged a spend-the-day party with each member. They spent the time before dinner in sewing and after dinner studied together the topic set for that day.

Intensely interesting and well attended have been the lively Missionary Discussion Groups which have been conducted by prominent business men in a number of cities recently. Some of these have followed inexpensive lunches served at the Y. M. C. A. Dr. Ward's new book, "The Gospel for a Working World," furnishes an unusually fine foundation for such discussion groups this year.

Women's Clubs may easily be interested in the study of Miss Burton's "Women Workers of the Orient," and the Home Mission Book, "The Path of Labor." It is worth the while of missionary leaders to propose such study and to secure Christian leadership for it.

A People's Forum with a thirty minute lecture by Mission Study leader, followed by a thirty minute open discussion skilfully conducted is an inviting possibility.

The Mission Study Class Nursery is a novelty attachment which makes it possible for mothers to attend the classes. They bring their small children with them to be cared for in an adjoining room by some girls who have devised this way of serving, and popularizing Mission Study.

A FIVE MINUTES' COURSE IN EFFICIENCY

The thermometer registered 104. In search of a possible breeze the 1918 Gettysburg Assembly had assembled on the beautiful campus of the Lutheran Theological Seminary, famed in civil war history.

Said the speaker on Missionary Methods rather incidentally:

"Notwithstanding all the beautiful speeches that have been made about the value and indispensability of the Missionary Review of the World; notwithstanding the distribution of the beautiful place cards, containing discreetly hidden subscription blanks, notwithstanding the club offer of $2 for six subscriptions, we have received only one subscriber to date."

There was a general impression that all that had been said about the Review as one of the necessary first and best aids in missionary enterprise was true. There was also a rather indefinite resolution on the part of many delegates to subscribe "sometime." A second's pause. With one subscription and sundry indefinite promises to subscribe, the matter seemed likely to end. Like a flash the efficient chairman sprang to the platform: "I want those other five subscriptions right now", said he.

Immediately hands went up until the goal of six was left behind.

"Ten?" called the chairman with a rising inflection that caused more hands to go up.

"I want twenty-five subscribers," he added with compelling persuasion.

Faster than the names could be recorded hands were lifted.

There was no relaxation on the face of the chairman. Evidently his twenty-five was but a stepping stone to higher things.

"Give me thirty-five subscribers," he called in a way not to be denied.

In just about five minutes thirty-four names had been added to the one that had seemed destined to stand alone.

Others were added after the session.

The next day the chairman was on the platform again.

"I have thirty-nine subscribers," he announced: "Who'll make it forty by subscribing for one of our missionaries?"

Six hands were raised. The subscription list had gone from one to forty-five, and the methods period had furnished unannounced a first rate course in efficiency in rounding up for definite action the purposes that are so often dissipated by postponement to an indefinite "Some time."

The Plight of Two Brothers

By Euleta Wadsworth

Two cocoanuts with their waterproof coats on fell into the river.

"My!" gasped the larger one, "this is the end of us."

"Now, brother mine," said Koki, "don't be a grumbler. Just wait and see what wise Mother Nature will do for us."

"What can she do, I'd like to know? We can't swim. We'll just float around here until we get water-soaked and sink to the bottom of the river. And we'll never grow up into tall cocoanut palms, as we've always wished to."

"It's true we can't swim," said Koki cheerfully, "but Mother Nature has some wonderful ways of helping her children out of trouble. Don't you remember the monkey who got his arm bitten off and how his tail grew longer and stronger than any monkey's in the colony, so that he could climb as well as any of them and didn't miss his arm?"

"Oh, of course, it's easy enough for Mother Nature to make a monkey's tail grow. That's very different from two helpless cocoanuts in a deep river," answered Tousle who got his name from his thick shock of brown hair.

But Koki refused to be made unhappy by his brother's grumbling, and they drifted slowly down the stream, sometimes lodging behind a tuft of grass or some reeds; and then after a day or two becoming dislodged and moving on again. Their three eyes—which are always on top of a cocoanut's head, looked up at the warm blue of the tropical sky as they drifted.

"Oh! isn't this fine?" cried Koki, "here we are going on a beautiful journey to a new country, perhaps. Isn't it wonderful?"

"At the rate we're going we'll rot and go to the bottom before we get very far," said the gloomy Tousle.

"Now, brother," remonstrated Koki, "why don't you enjoy all this fine new scenery and trust Mother Nature?"

Tousle pouted and refused to answer.

One afternoon while they were lodged at one side of the stream Koki noticed something green sprouting from one of Tousle's eyes; and upon inquiring, Tousle said the same thing was happening in one of Koki's eyes. The next day they each had a bunch of tender green leaves sticking straight up on the tops of their heads, like an Indian's war feathers; and in a short time these leaves had grown strong and broad. And the first day the wind blew they served as sails, which sent Koki and Tousle flying down the river at such a rate that even Tousle was pleased.

"See," called Koki, "what did I tell you Mother Nature could do?"

"This is fine," laughed Tousle. "Why we're going almost as fast as those yellow butterflies over there." Then all of a sudden Tousle looked hard at Koki. "What's that green I see growing in your other two eyes?" Koki looked at Tousle. "Why, you have the same in your eyes, Tousle. What can it be?"

By the next morning it was plain to be seen what it was, for thread-like young roots were already feeling their way through Koki's and Tousle's brown hair. And the next day the wind blew harder than ever until they fairly dashed along through the water. Faster and faster they sailed, and after a while they sighted an island ahead in the middle of the river. The wind blew so hard it made little waves in the usually smooth water, and when the brothers reached the island they were carried from the water by the waves on to the soft mud of the shore. There they stayed, and their young roots, getting longer and stronger every day, grew into the earth. And by the time twelve new moons had come and gone, both Koki and Tousle were fine slender young cocoanut palms.

"Well," said Tousle, "this beats my happiest dreams. By this time next year we'll be as tall as those stately palms over there."

"Yes," replied Koki, "and I hope you'll remember what I told you about Mother Nature and not grumble any more."

"Oh, I'll never grumble any more, Koki. It doesn't pay. Here we are, with our wishes come true, and I was unhappy all for nothing."—S. S. Times.

Frogs at School

Twenty froggies went to school,
Down beside a weedy pool;
Twenty little coats of green,
Twenty vests all white and clean.

"We must be in time," said they;
"First we study, then we play;
That is how we keep the rule,
When we froggies go to school."

Master Bullfrog, grave and stern,
Called the classes in their turn;
Taught them how to nobly strive,
Likewise how to leap and dive.

From his seat upon the log
Showed them how to say "ker-chog"!
Also how to dodge a blow
From the sticks which bad boys throw.

Twenty froggies grew up fast;
Bullfrogs they became at last;
Not one dunce among the lot;
Not one lesson they forgot.

Polished to a high degree
As each froggie ought to be,
Now they sit on other logs
Teaching other little frogs.—Unidentified.

"Sunday Is Out, Daddy"

By John L. Cole

The preacher man had reached that delightful (and delicious) spot in a hard "day's work for Jesus" known as the Sunday Dinner. The morning sermon had been "delivered" at the long-suffering targets. The young men of his Sunday school class had been given all the orthodox doctrine possible to educe from the international Sunday school lesson for the day. The latest problem of the superintendent had been patiently listened to The hands of the faithful, long-staying brethren and "sistren" had been duly shaken. A few visitors who had "run over" to the parsonage after Sunday school had been entertained as courteously as it is possible for a hungry man to entertain when he smells broiling beefsteak and hears it sizzle.

But finally the wife's sizzling hint had worked and the callers had departed in peace. Then quickly was the Prince Albert slid onto the back of a chair and a coat put on more proper for greasy little hands to hug—a chair pulled up to the table—and the aforementioned glad moment had arrived: the time of the preacher's Sunday dinner. Half the day's work done; that is the time! (That was the time; that was the place; those were the girls.)

Hardly had the preacher-man got the sirloin properly apportioned among the girls—one big, who had done the sizzling, and three little—when the oldest of the young ones, the biggest of the little, made a clean declaration which wellnigh startled the orthodox preacher into dropping the carving knife on a Haviland china platter (wedding present, of course).

This was the heresy propounded: "After dinner, Daddy, we'll go down to the store and buy some candy—won't we, Daddy?"

There was a smile so sweet and hopeful on the base offender's face that it seemed somewhat difficult to reprove her with adequate sternness. After some dinners, you see, we had taken just such a trip, on just such an errand, and the distinction between other dinners and this, other days and this was rather difficult to draw just then.

But with becoming impressiveness the impossibility of such an expedition was set forth: "Why, no; this is Sunday! The stores are closed. We don't buy candy on Sunday, dear."

Quick and ingenious was the reply: "But, Daddy, Sunday is out!"

Heresy—worse and more of it! An offense that smelled to heaven. "Sunday—out." The girls had been to Sunday school. Their pennies had been dropped. People old and young had gone home and the door was now shut. Church was empty. Sunday school and church services for that day were a thing of the past. Of course Sunday was "out" and over with! The logic of the young heretic was difficult to follow.

And over his dinner that day the preacher-man ruefully meditated that his four-year-old was not a sinner above all others. Alas! he suspected that there were many thereabouts with older heads than hers, who had learned long ago the Ten Commandments, including one about the holiness of the Sabbath day, people who might be expected to think more clearly and act more consistently, who had gotten confused between such matters; a bit mixed between "church is out" and "Sunday is out"; "worship is over" and "Sabbath is over." The preacher wondered if a good number had not gone out of the church door that morning with a satisfied sense of a duty well done, of having "kept" the Sabbath, which was now "out" and a good time ahead! He wondered if there would not be more culpable offenders, heretics, or casuists, scattered around that countryside, that beautiful Sunday afternoon, who, not for the sake of a trip to the store for candy, but for the sake of a trip to the lake side, or excursion to the seashore, a visit to the resort or a dinner out at the hotel, would be advancing to their consciences some such excuse as the preacher's little girl proffered at the dinner table, "Why, Sunday is out!"—Selected.

NOVEMBER ACTIVITIES

Our Enlistment Campaign continues. September was devoted to the organization of new Christian Endeavor societies and the enrollment of new members. October continued this emphasis with a particular effort to enlist all Endeavorers in the Army of Universal patriotic Service. Thus we have sought to boost the attainment of Points 1, 3 and 5 of our Four-Year Challenge.

During November we will continue to stress the enlistment idea, concentrating attention upon the organization and development of the new Junior and Intermediate societies. While a number of such societies have been organized within the last several years, there is ample room for more. It is difficult to sustain interest and promote efficiency with young people in the same group. By reclassifying them according to age and grading the work according to ability and need numerous advantages will be enjoyed. Where there are not enough young people to maintain a Christian Endeavor society there may be a sufficient number of boys and girls to support either a Junior or Intermediate society. The organization and promotion of either or both is the surest way to secure a young people's society later on.

This important work which makes for future progress should be committed to most reliable people who love and know how to work with the "youngsters." A committee of three makes an efficient combination. One may be charged with responsibility for the direction of spiritual activities; another for the supervision of business matters and the other for the provision of social functions.

The New Superintendent

As stated in these columns earlier, Miss Nora Bracken was appointed National Superintendent of the Junior-Intermediate department. Because of an abiding interest in them she has been a successful worker with children. After teaching for some time in the Pennsylvania schools she was called to teach the boys and girls at Lost Creek. To prepare herself for larger usefulness she entered Ashland College, graduating from the English Divinity course with the class of '17. While in Ashland she was one of the faithful workers, and endeared herself to many of the children through her service as elementary superintendent of the Sunday school. Sympathy, training and experience have prepared her for the work of Junior-Intermediate superintendent. Let our Endeavorers and all who are interested in the training of the boys and girls give her full support in promoting this department. J. A. GARBER.

TRAIN THE CHILDREN

Dear Christian Endeavorers:

I was informed a few weeks ago as to my field in the C. E. work of our church, that of Junior-Intermedate superintendent. But owing to the epidemic of Spanish influenza and other war time conditions I have had time to give thus but little thought and have been unable to outline the work definitely for this year.

The month of November calls for our Junior and Intermediate drive. Thus it behooves us to go to work at once.

I am sure we all realize the importance of this work among the boys and girls. It has been said, "The boys and girls of today are the men and women of tomorrow." So we must train our people while they are young if we would have good, Christian men and women.

Let us try this month of November to do great things in these two departments of the C. E. There are many churches that have neither a Junior nor an Intermediate Endeavor. Some of these churches should have such an organization. Can you not, in the next few weeks, organize and put your young people to work?

We know that many churches are now closed and some may remain closed throughout this coming month, because of the pervading epidemic. If your church is one of this number, then please make your Endeavor drive as soon as you can upon the opening of your services.

We shall plan to have articles and material in both the Evangelist and Angelus that will be of assistance to you in this work. So please do not fail to notice the Christian Endeavor pages of these papers.

We should like to become acquainted and keep in touch with you who are and you who would be workers in this department. "Where there is unity there is strength." We can reach goal two by prayer and by putting all our forces to work. Then let us faithfully and joyfully labor together in the Master's vineyard so that there may be an abundant harvest when he calls for the fruits of the field. NORA BRACKEN.

Conemaugh, Pa.

TRY AGAIN

We have all learned to know the worth of the old saying, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." It seems we will have to take the advice given therein into our Endeavor societies if we succeed in accomplishing what we so desired to accomplish on Good Citizenship Day. It must have been that every church was closed on account of the influenza epidemic as I received only two responses to the many appeals sent out and these were not reports, only notices that these two societies would be on the job when the ban is lifted.

Because of the importance of the task at stake, we must not fail. We must succeed. We must try again. I think we can very nicely substitute the citizenship program on November 17, so I am urging that every society carry out the program suggested at that time with a little extra effort. Endeavor to enroll every member in the Army of Universal Patriotic Service, so that we will win out on Point 5 in our Four-Year Challenge. Send a full report of your meeting with the number enrolled in the army to me.

News From the Field

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

The revival at Oak Hill was well attended for three weeks when Brother Jennings came to Salem where he preached for two more weeks. His labor was well rewarded. There were eight conversions. Two came from the Church of the Brethren. Brother John Duncan baptized the converts in the pool at Oak Hill. I am not sure as to the correct number that were baptized as I have neglected seeing the secretary, but there were forty or more. When the meetings are all over I will get the number of converts at each place. After the meeting closed at Salem, Brother Jennings went to Gatewood and started his meeting there, but on account of an epidemic of Spanish influenza sweeping over the country all public meetings have been closed, so the Gatewood meeting had to be put off. It was a disappointment to all, as the meeting started with good interest and we regret very much that the break had to be made, but Brother Jennings has promised to come back and finish the meeting as soon as he can.

We feel that God is blessing us and we hope for a good meeting yet at Gatewood.

We have never had a better meeting than the one just closed at Salem. We feel more than ever the need of a church at Salem as we have to have the meetings in a schoolhouse; but old Salem school house has been the scene of some very enjoyable meetings, if it has been a little crowded uncomfortably. As Brother Lynn used to say, "God bless Salem."

When Brother Jennings comes back and the meetings are finished we will try to have the full report and correct number of conversions at each place. Until then continue to pray for the final success of the meetings and a great harvest of souls for the Master.

MRS. ESSIE BOOTHE.

HANNIBAL, MO.—A Testimonial

I want to say a few words in regard to the paper. Words fail me in expressing my (our) appreciation of the Evangelist. I expect to be a life subscriber. Among the many good things contained in the paper, two items especially impressed me, one was the splendid financial report for the year past, showing a nice little sum above the expenses of running the paper. Another, and one of the grandest moves ever inaugurated by the church, and that is putting the paper in every home in the church. This is "bearing one another's burdens." I am happily impressed with the many churches that have made the "church paper in every home," a part of the budget of expenses.

May God's choicest blessings ever rest on the Evangelist and its staff of publication.

Another word in regard to my present vocation. The past two weeks have kept the physicians on the go day and night. We have influenza in about one half of the homes in the city. There have only been two nights in the past two weeks that I have not been called from one to three times. Night before last I was out until 2 o'clock in the morning. I am almost worn out; so are the rest of the doctors.

Next to the ministry, which I consider the highest calling that can come to a man, is that of the conscientious physician. When I was preaching I used to stand at the bedside of the afflicted and wish I knew what to do to relieve their suffering; it now makes me feel good to be able, in a small measure to help suffering humanity. While I enjoy the work, I find it, like other work, much brain worry many times, but such is our lot in this life.

I am hoping that ere long I may be so located that I can work in the church of my choice, the Brethren church.

With kindest regards and a prayer for God's blessing on the churches, college, etc., I am, Fraternally,

S. B. GRISSO.

The Grand Finale at Flora After Seven and One-Half Years, and the Beginning at Burlington and Darwin.

The closing of our work at Loree has already been mentioned, yet some things planned to be pulled off at the district conference at Flora, failed on account of the "Influ," but nevertheless the Lytles did not lose out for the good sisters presented Mrs. Lytle with a fine table cloth, sister Mary A. Cunningham gave her gift of appreciation to the pastor and wife, and sister Ora Turner remembered the girls (Pauline and Areline) and many others remembered us with little tokens of appreciation, but brother Bert Daniels and family remembered us in the chilly winter days and presented us with a "Cheery" base burner around which we might sit and watch the blaze ,thinking in fondness of the past experience of happy days gone by. For all of these many gifts, and loving days of fellowship, we thank God and pray God to bless all these brethren at Loree. The closing at Flora, September 29, was a great day, the Sunday school under the leadership of Brother Whetstone started the day with a record breaking attendance, 215 being present, with an offering for Armenian relief amounting to $52. The morning service was blest with at least 300 present, and brother J. W. Brower being present was given an opportunity to present the appeal for our Huntington work which was given a worthy consideration, and the response no doubt will be mentioned later in Brother Brower's report.

Then came the noon hour when more than 250 partook of the bountiful dinner prepared in the nicely equipped basement.

The afternoon fellowship meeting was "for sure" a fellowship service, when the men's class presented the pastor with a fine leather Morris chair, then came the blotting out of the balance of the unsubscribed budget which was easily accomplished and not only a clean slate was left for our successor, but a balance in the treasury, also provision made to take care of the work for the ensuing year, then came the expressional part of the service in which many stated words of encouragement to the outgoing pastor and also expressed how they expected to apply themselves to the further progress of the work with the incoming pastor.

The evening hour was one of great joy for this being the third service of the day and our final word at least 300 were present and in the audience were many of our community friends who had been with us in our community work, and the response of their presence with that of the membership made us realize that our work had been appreciated and was not in vain, otherwise we were receiving some of our flowers while we live to enjoy them.

The sisters remembered Mrs. Lytle with a fine comfort and a slumber robe which has at least 90 of the sisters' names worked in their blocks, the girls were also remembered by various gifts from classes and individuals, and for all these we pray God's blessing upon the donors of every gift, and thank God for every kindness shown us by these worthy brethren which would take a whole page to enumerate.

On September 30 the Burlington brethren came with trucks and moved our goods which are now stored in Brother Polk's storage room while we have been given the use of Brother and Sister Harrall's home until the house we will occupy is vacant. We spent two weeks visiting among the brethren at Flora, and yet could not get to all places to which we were invited, but we are leaving them as standing invitations, hoping to get back later "for the chicken." We have had one Sunday at Darwin, October 6, both services well attended. We planned for a meeting to begin October 14, but had to call this off for the present. As yet we have had no service at Burlington, but we will acquaint ourselves with the field and the brethren and wait patiently and plan larger as we wait, in which we will hope to give a helpful report later. Both of the churches, Burlington and Darwin present to us a willingness to do their full measure and may God's spirit keep us humble and faithful to do his holy will. Pray for us brethren as we labor in his service.

WITH THE ARIZONA MINERS

According to the editor's kindly request, I am writing in reference to the Arizona work.

I arrived in Arizona on the seventh of October to find that an order had gone out that morning for a state-wide quarantine and every avenue was closed, even to street meetings; it was a great disappointment, for on Wednesday evening I had supper in a dining room with five hundred men and we were scheduled for a week's meeting there, the other two weeks to be spent elsewhere in special services. Arizona is a harvest field which is white unto the harvest and the pity of it is that the laborers are so few. The only time the Gospel is preached to these people is when some one is willing to go and pay their own expenses (or have them paid for them as in my case). Our Juniors raised money for my railroad fare and sister Anna Wolfe gave me fifty dollars to pay my board.

It might be of interest to relate a little of my last visit to Arizona which was in 1914. I went to a place in which God's name had never before been spoken unless it were in an oath.

A young lady offered to pay my expenses at this time; she was a tither and a member of the Baptist church, also a stranger to me.

We held three weeks' meetings, some of the cowboys riding as far as 20 miles a night to the services. Some one asks what about results in souls saved? Just as well go to China for three weeks' meetings and ask the same question. To illustrate—I carried a song book filled with the old songs expecting that they would be known to all, when to my dismay there was just one song that a few of these men knew and it was, "Jesus loves me." Say mother, when you teach the little one at your knee those simple songs, you are writing for eternity, how those men sang, and once in a while a tear would come, unbidden, possibly a memory was awakened, a vision of home and mother had come back, and then at the close, such a hand-clasp and a thank you preacher. In the midst of the meeting a young woman from La Verne had been persuaded by us to come down and teach school there, a young woman who was out and out for Christ, Miss Edna Neher from the mother church and she became Sunday school superintendent and organized a work which has gone on until now; she has left that district but those men still speak of her kindly Christian work, her sympathy and friendliness to the men who are generally known as the down and outs of society.

That was four years ago. Today there are eight Sunday schools in that state the direct outgrowth of those meetings, one Sunday school having over one hundred scholars. This work is in the hands of the American Sunday School Union and at the time of writing they have a man from the Los Angeles Bible Institute putting in his full time as missionary and he tells me that it is a common thing to have some soul in these districts come out for God.

To those who are interested in the financial part of these meetings I might say that the people were so delighted to have religious services that they refused to take anything for my living and I turned in a bill for these three weeks' meetings of $19.90, which covered all expenses.

And now I am waiting for another opportunity to go back again with the whole gospel, a gospel that can touch a responsive chord in every heart.

Just another word. I thank God for a bunch of young men who are willing and also fit to carry on the work at home, and for a band of people who will always stand by the work as one man, when the pastor is in other fields.

As ever, your brother for souls,

THOMAS H. BROAD.

NORTH LIBERTY, INDIANA

It is with pleasure that we are sending a few lines to the Evangelist by way of a report of our work in this part of the Lord's vineyard. I will say first that we as brethren here are enjoying the Evangelist these days and by the beginning of the new year hope to place it in every home.

We have nothing startling to report, yet we want to testify to the fact that the Lord is blessing his people and leading us forth from victory to victory. We have suffered many losses, by removals in various ways. Our service flag reveals that 26 of our young men are in the service of their country. Several of these were among our leaders. Several of our young ladies have gone to Washington, D. C., in government employ. Then again some have been recently called to come up higher, but withal we have reasons to be encouraged, as new ones have taken their places and the interest and attendance remain above the average. Rally Day in the Sunday school was observed when the epidemic was raging, hence we have no glowing report for the day, however, splendid sessions were held both forenoon and afternoon. Our brother Frank Hay, vice president of the county Sunday school association and brother Clem Mamerow, superintendent of our own school gave splendid addresses. Our Sunday school has maintained the Front Line Standard the past year and hopes to reach it again the coming year. We have also attained twelve of our Four-Year Program goals this year and will reach another one soon. Our plans for revival meetings have been seriously molested. We are planning now to begin November 10, simultaneously with two other churches of the town, with the pastor as evangelist. From here we turn at once in an effort with the College Corners church, beginning about December first.

At a recent regular service a splendid young school teacher confessed Christ. Others are inquiring the way of the Lord. Thus we labor on doing our little part in helping to bring the kingdom to earth. May we all be just as diligent at our task as is possible, until he shall come to reign supremely in the hearts and lives of men everywhere.

Under the precious blood,

C. C. GRISSO.

FILLMORE, CALIFORNIA

We are still on the job and our new church here at Fillmore is moving along. We think we will dedicate about the first of December, 1918, if all goes well. We will send you a picture of the building when it is completed.

ASHLAND COLLEGE NOTES

In consulting with the Editor about news notes from the College he kindly gave us permission to write a few squibs occasionally. No doubt it will please many of the graduates and former students to read about the old College on the hill.

The school opened up with a larger attendance than a year ago. The large enrollment was a surprise to the faculty, as they had thought the war conditions would put a damper on the attendance.

We just got under good headway with the school work when the "flu" broke into our midst, and nearly every boy and girl in the dormitory had a tussle with it. The place was a veritable hospital for over a week. However no cases proved serious.

There was hardly a family on the hill but what the flu was an uninvited guest to one or more members thereof.

Quite a number of the students went out and did nursing among the sick and needy, during the siege. All schools and public places were closed for ten days. This gave the students who escaped an opportunity to do real Red Cross work.

Classes were resumed Monday, October twenty-first with good attendance. We are hoping that no hindrance of any kind will retard the progress during the balance of the term.

The Philomathean and Hesperian Literary societies have given their initial programs to full houses. Both were excellently rendered. The Philos dedicated a bronze plate, to the men who have gone out to the colors, and hung it on the wall, and the Hesperians dedicated a large silk flag with over twenty stars, in honor of the boys who have answered their country's call. Edward Boardman and Dr. Jacobs gave the respective dedicatory addresses.

Marie Lichty, a graduate of '18, is teaching four or five classes in French. We are all glad to have Marie among us this year again.

Miss Mae Smith another '18 graduate, has been in Samaritan hospital in Ashland for some weeks past. She had a nervous breakdown. We are all hoping she may be restored to her former good health.

W. H. Beachler, home on furlough, gave a splendid chapel talk on "Making a Choice in Life's Work." Come again, Brother Beachler.

Mrs. Ellen Lichty is back from a visit to her former home in Falls City, Nebraska, and resumed her place as Matron at the Dorm.

George Walton, of Fremont, Ohio, who went home during the "flu" epidemic, and was pretty sick with it for a time, will not return to school this year.

The men who have been in the habit of going out every Sunday to preach for a year or two, have been at home for several Sundays on account of the state closing orders.

Among the new students are eight High School graduates who have enrolled in the Seminary department.

Lucile Teeter, a graduate of '18, is teaching Latin and French in High School at Cuyahoga Falls.

Emerson Gnagey, a former graduate, is teaching in High School at Shelby, Ohio.

The College Y. M. C. A. is planning on doing some real war "Y" work. It has pledged a large sum for the national fund, and is making a budget for local work. This will be the largest sum ever appropriated, either for national or local work, by the organization.

HOME MISSION NOTES

The Epidemic

Brother Cook writes, "The Flu" is taking quite a toll here. We have had three and four deaths per day close around here for several days. About half the people down and the other half hardly able to go. We can hardly get enough help to take care of the dead, say nothing about the sick. People are dying like flies in many places up and down the line and back in the hills. We have no nurses and the doctor is going day and night. There are usually 25 or 30 calling for the doctor every day and they usually find him out. Many of the doctors in the mountain district are overworked and sick. We think the epidemic is at its worst now (October 27.) The Lord has spared us thus far for which we are grateful. We are using every preventive possible. I am wearing a mask now when I go out. We certainly pray we shall escape this dreadful thing. Pray for us and our people.

A Call to Prayer

Certainly the thousands who are interested in our mountain mission work will consider it a privilege to unite with our faithful servants of the cross, both at Krypton and at Lost Creek, that they may be graciously spared as they labor in the midst of a suffering people. Let us make this a matter of special daily prayer.

Riverside

Brother Drushal writes, "We are still closed down tight. There have been quite a number of deaths around here from it, the saddest being that of a Mr. Carter from Marion, Indiana, who was here superintending the erection of this bridge. He died in the hospital at Jackson. None of his folks were with him, not even his wife. We are still well in our home except that Gordon has the chicken pox."

Six Peanuts

"Mrs. Drushal and the boys planted six peanuts last spring and it is simply wonderful what they got from it. We have an acre or two of ground on the farm that would be admirably adapted to growing them." Orders for peanuts should be sent to Sister Drushal and the boys and if they cannot fill all the orders this year, they will doubtless be able to fill them next year. Here is an order for half a bushel to be filled at once and sent by express C. O. D. We are sure that Brother Drushal will pardon the above excerpt from his letter and we will all join with Brother Drushal in the hope that a carload of peanuts may be raised next year. And to them who made the discovery our gratitude will be due.

Peru, Indiana

"The Little Brown Church" had a big program well under way for the whole of October, our "Rally Month." In fact, the special program began on the first af August and was to culminate in the evangelistic campaign in November. But the plans of men are not always carried to completion. "Man proposes but God disposes." Our prayer is that great blessing may come out of the changed plans, made necessary by the terrible epidemic. However, we did have a great rally day with two splendid programs. One of the goals for Rally Day was "Five new members of the church." We are thankful that said goal was reached and more, for on Wednesday evening after Rally Day we baptized not only five but seven people, constituting three families, three husbands, three wives and one daughter, a young lady now in High School. When the ban is lifted we will be at it again.

That "Mortgage Eraser"

The Washington, D. C., special fund of $1500 now stands at $1058 cash. The remainder of the pledges, $442, should be paid at once that the mortgage might be canceled and interest stopped. The pledges were taken at sixty days which made them payable on or before October 31. Delinquents should pay a penalty. What do you say?

Spokane, Washington

A splendid gift of $50 was received from Brother and Sister H. B. Lehman of Glendale, Arizona to help complete that much needed church building at Spokane. The amount received by our board for this purpose since conference totals $63.50. They need $2500 in order to complete the building. This announcement ought to bring "The Stuff Sufficient."

The Thanksgiving Offering

Brother Orion E. Bowman, our faithful Secretary-Treasurer of the Home Mission Board, has sent forth the annual call for a splendid Thanksgiving offering totalling at least $7500. This is not too high, the fact is that it is not high enough. If every professing Christian would be honest with God that amount would have to be quintupled and more than that, as somebody said, perhaps even quadrupled. This epidemic ought to increase the offering rather than lessen it. The church has been "robbing God" too long already. It will be a happy day when the challenge in Malachi 3:10 is accepted by the Brethren church and it is made possible for God to "open the windows of heaven and shower blessings that there will not be room enough to receive them." The Thanksgiving offering is for the support of all the home mission work being conducted under the direction of the Home Mission Board, except the work in Kentucky. Part of the White Gift offering at Christmas time will be given for Kentucky missions. Let us prove at Thanksgiving time that we are truly thankful. Let every church plan systematically for the record home mission offering.

Early Payment

Christian Endeavor societies should not forget that their Kentucky pledges should be paid early in the conference year, if at all possible. The same is true of personal pledges. Too many wait until the latter half of the year as though the missionaries could wait eight or ten months without receiving a dollar of salary. Better do the Lord's business promptly. The blessing will be the greater. Do it now.

The Right Word

"Please multiply my last year's contribution to the Kentucky work by two," writes Brother L. B. Wilkins of Washington C. H., Ohio.

G. C. CARPENTER,
President Home Mission Board.

KANEMORADO DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Kanemorado District Conference met at Carleton, Nebraska, October 8 and 9, 1918. The Conference opened Tuesday evening with a sermon by Vice Moderator H. F. Stuckman, subject being "The Presence of God in the History of the World. Splendid music was furnished by the Carleton choir. A service flag containing 36 stars was sufficient explanation for the absence of young men from the choir.

The conference organized on Wednesday morning by electing the following officers by informal ballot: Moderator, H. F. Stuckman; Vice Moderator, A. E. Whitted; Secretary-Treasurer, C. W. Yoder

The moderator's report dealt with the problem of the non-active churches in the district which lower the standing of the district in the Four-Year Program. After discussion by the conference, a committee consisting of John Lichty, H. Howard and J. D. Kemper was appointed to recommend a plan for dealing with the problem. The committee later recommended that the Mission Board be authorized to deal with the problem and that it should consult with the churches in question before taking final action. The report was adopted.

Mission Board Report

John Lichty, president of the board reported the condition of work at Ft. Scott and stated that the board was anxious to secure a suitable man to take charge of the work there. Brother Dodds was secured to take charge of the work at Maple Grove. A Sunday school has been maintained at this place for seven years without a pastor. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $533.73 in treasury after paying all bills.

The Four-Year-Program was presented by A. E. Whitted, district goal director.

Sunday School Session

Mrs. Belle Seibert, of Beaver City presented a well written paper entitled, "The Model Sunday School." The author enumerated the standards a school should strive to attain and emphasized the importance of mission teaching in the school. The next topic was "The Successful Teacher," by C. W. Yoder. Teacher training classes were reported from Morrill, Falls City, Beaver City and Carleton.

J. D. Kemper called attention to the Ashland College courses of training and urged taking advantage of them.

C. E. Society Session

Miss Jennie Bailey, of Carleton, presented the topic, "The Relation of the C. E. Society to Missions." The speaker emphasized the importance of beginning with the children and training them in the Junior and Intermediate societies to become efficient workers for the extension of God's kingdom. The C. E. Societies are doing their work more efficiently than any other agency.

C. M. Pierce spoke on the topic, "The Future of the C. E. Society."

Marriages

LICHTY-GILTNER—Mr. Ralph A. Lichty, of Camp Funston and Miss Clara Juanita Miller, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, were united in marriage in the church at Carleton, Nebraska, September 15, 1918.

The groom is the only son of brother and sister Elias Lichty and was born and reared in Carleton. The bride is the only daughter of brother and sister E. F. Miller, of the Gretna, Ohio, church. The best wishes of a host of friends go with the young people as they start out in their new relationship.

J. D. KEMPER.

GILTNER--NICELY.—On the seventeenth of October at five o'clock, George W. Giltner and Lola May Nicely were united in marriage at the home of Brother Jones in Roann. Both are members of the Brethren church. The writer unites with a host of friends in wishing them much happiness in their new relationship. Ceremony by the writer.

WILLIS E. RONK.

STUTZMAN-SHULTZ.—Mr. Mark Stutzman and Miss Ida L. Shultz, a member of the Berlin Brethren church, Berlin, Pa., were united in marriage on Thursday evening, October 17, at the parsonage in Berlin by I. B. Trout, the pastor. These are both estimable young people, and have the best wishes of a large circle of friends for a long and happy life of faithful service. In the near future they will take up residence in Akron, Ohio, where Mr. Stutzman is connected with the Goodyear Rubber Company.

LEPARD-ALLARDING.—Forest Lepard and Viannie Allarding, both excellent young people of the Campbell Brethren church, Michigan, were united in the bonds of matrimony in the chapel of the Inn, Winona Lake, Indiana during the General Conference by the writer. It was my privilege to baptize these young people and sincerely hope that the Lord will bless them in a large measure as they continue to serve him.

C. C. GRISSO.

Our Dead

COWAN.—Mrs. Glorene Cowan, wife of Harry Cowan of Ashland, O., passed into the life beyond Sunday, October 13. She was the daughter of brother and sister Hugh Emmons of the Ashland church. She united with the church when a young girl and remained faithful until her death. Just the day before she passed away she asked to be anointed. She realized her condition and expressed her faith in God by saying, "My little children need me and God can heal me if it is his will." Private services were held by the writer. At her death she was aged 26 years, 11 months and 12 days. Thus early her life was spent and her brief day closed on earth. She leaves her parents and brothers and sisters to mourn her home going. But the husband and little children have the strongest hold on our sympathies and in their deep sorrow may the Lord solace.

PRESSLER.—John Frederick Pressler, of Rittman, Ohio, passed away at his late home at the age of 54 years. He was a resident of Wayne county all his life. About three years ago when the Rittman church was organized he became a member of it. He leaves a wife and daughter and many friends to mourn their loss. Funeral services largely attended were held in the Presbyterian church of Rittman by the undersigned. May the Spirit of God comfort all the family.

BAKER.—Jane Young Baker, of the Rittman, Ohio, Brethren church passed into the life beyond on October 7, 1918 at the age of 74 years, 6 months and 27 days. She was married to John Baker in 1865. Father Baker and seven children, with 16 grandchildren and one great-grandchild are left to mourn their loss. She was converted in 1861 and has lived a faithful Christian all her life. At the organization of the Rittman Brethren church she and Brother Baker became members. She left a fine example of the Christian mother to be emulated by her children and friends. May the grace of God sustain Brother Baker and all the family. Services at the Rittman Presbyterian church by the writer.

KOLB.—Miss Helen Kolb died at the home of her father, Samuel Kolb, in Ashland, at the age of twenty years. Hers was a beautiful young life quickly plucked by the ruthless hand of death. Private services at the home by the writer. May the promise of the Lord Jesus comfort the fathers and sisters.

SHREFFLER.—Mrs. Marie R. Shreffler of Lebanon, Indiana ,died at the home of her husband's parents, at Ashland, Ohio, at the age of 29 years, 9 months and 23 days. Private burial services were conducted by the writer. She was the wife of brother Clarence Shreffler who was a member of the College Brethren church before his removal to Indiana ten years ago. May God bless the husband and parents.

J. ALLEN MILLER.

APPLEOFF.—Johnnie Appleoff was born near Hamlin, Kansas, October 22, 1904, and died at the Sabetha, Kansas, Hospital October 4, 1918, aged 13 years, 11 months and 12 days. The immediate cause of his death was an automobile-locomotive collision at a railway crossing in the city of Hamlin on the Sunday afternoon previous to the date of his death. His father was also severely injured at the same time but has since made a complete recovery.

Johnnie was a member of the Brethren Sunday school in Morrill and a regular attendant. He was of a sunny, cheerful disposition and loved by all who knew him. He leaves to mourn his early departure his father, mother, two sisters and one brother besides many relatives and friends. Services at the Morrill church by writer, assisted by the pastor, Brother Whitted.

J. D. KEMPER.

KELLER.—John Samuel Keller was born July 31, 1899 and died October 9, 1918, aged 19 years, 2 months and 9 days. He became a member of the Brethren church at Pleasant Valley, September 3, 1915 and was a young man of good promise in the community. His death occured at Chester, Pennsylvania, where he was seized with Spanish influenza, dying within a few days after being taken sick. He leaves to mourn his departure his parents, seven sisters and four brothers besides a host of friends. We can only pray that in this hour of darkness to the bereaved ones that Jesus the Light of the World may prove a very precious and present friend.

Does It Matter What One Does?

In reading the New Testament one can not long escape the conviction that conduct and the tasks of life are of first rank importance. Belief influences both one's relation to his fellows and his God. Four weeks ago the writer sought to emphasize the truth now so universally recognized that it does matter what one believes. Were it not for the fact that many insist that it does not matter what one does the present discussion would be unnecessary. Somewhere between the statement that conduct is three-fourths of life, or all of it, and the contention that conduct makes no difference we ought to find the truth.

There are those who hold that membership in the visible church assures one's salvation regardless of conduct or life's work. The benefits of any sacrament bestowed by the church can never be lost. Good works are good. And there can be more "good works" than one needs for himself and that is better. But one may be woefully lacking in character, in accomplishment in the worth-while things of this life, and above all in doing the specific thing that constitutes one's life work, the very will of God for one's life, and yet be an heir of salvation. Such a view certainly does not appeal to any thinking mind and finds no sanction whatsoever in the teachings of Jesus. This error is just as fatal as the realization of the Christian ideal in life as is the error involved in the belief that one can earn salvation by works or attain it by faith alone.

Has it ever occurred to the reader that some of the greatest truths of life are the most simple and that they center in the most simple facts of everyday experience? Such is the truth of our personal freedom. No matter how involved the discussion of the question of freedom of the will may become it nevertheless remains one of the most persistent and the most insistent facts of our daily experience that we are free. We do choose. Herein also lies the truth that we are responsible for our choices. And in a larger sense we are responsible for the sort of men and women we are, for the work we do and how we do it, for our doing the will of God or refusing to do it. Besides this we are responsible for the character we attain by the refusal or the neglect to make a choice at all. We can not evade responsibility for our acts and our conduct, be it good or evil, by denying freedom or by refusing to make a voluntary choice.

There is another and most striking observation that I have made. It is the far-reaching and determining principle stated by Jesus in the words,—"He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth." Matt. 12: 30. This teaching of Jesus and its parallel in Luke 11: 23 must not be confused with and made contradictory to his words in Mark 9: 40 and Luke 9: 50. There is a vast difference between the man who repudiates, rejects, scorns or passes by with malignant indifference the claims of Jesus and the man who, though in self-will and isolation, confesses by word or deed the claims of Jesus. Men seek to rid themselves of God and Jesus Christ and the moral obligations growing out of man's relation to God by an indifference, real or feinted, or by a refusal to make a choice, or by an utter non-committal spirit. TO MAKE NO CHOICE IS ALREADY A CHOICE MADE. And this is a truth of the most startling force and the most far-reaching consequences. Observe how it applies to life. Look about you for illustrations.

What does Mr. X do, you ask? Anything that falls to him. That means he does nothing habitually, as a life work, and that he does nothing well. Oh, it may be he does it well enough for a man who does anything. But how does he do it in comparison with the man who does one thing and does it well? To have no definite life work is to have after all a life and a work. Is Mr. X a Christian and does he live a good life? A Christian life? Since he must live would it not be better to live the finest life possible? To live he can not escape. Can he escape the responsibility for HOW he lives by just living? Can he escape the responsibility for WHAT he does by doing nothing? And can he ever find any justification for DOING NOTHING the WAY he does it? That is, in other words, can Mr. X escape living, being and doing by failure to make a choice, definite, purposive, meaningful, willed of God? Mr. X may be the reader or the writer and it would seem that it does make a difference what a man does. Our choices, or neglect of choices, determine what we can do and how we do it, and whether we are doing a man's work or nothing at all. To clarify the thought and carry it a bit further I will speak by way of an experience. As a minister I am called to bury a man. He is a stranger to me. I am interested to learn something of the man. I ask a friend, "What did this man do in life?" He replies, "He was a mechanic, skilled, conscientious, faithful to his employer." Or he may say, "He was a splendid farmer, or business man, a useful citizen and one whom the community can ill afford to lose." Or he may say, "Oh, I am sorry to say he did little or nothing worth while in life." Other questions I may ask are, "How did this man live?" "How did he do his work?" "What was his life and his life-work worth to the community, to his own family?"

If I were able to reach the ear of young people in great numbers there are three things that I would stress with all the power of my life. They are the following:

1. Every life is the gift of God. I would insist that it is a good gift. Yes, priceless in the estimate of God himself and by that same estimate unlimited in possibilities and immeasurable in capacities of attainment is every life born into the world. Made in the image of God is an affirmation I count the most significant in the whole creation account.

2. Every life has a plan which is the Will of God for it. We just can not believe that this is a chance world. No more can we believe that life, human life, is meaningless. Plan involves purpose and end. Every life is tied up with a supremely great end. It ought to be one's greatest concern to find out the will of God for the life he is to live and then having found it the greatest joy should be experienced daily in the accomplishment of that will.

3. I should also insist that every divine life-plan includes a career which is the biggest, best and holiest that life can achieve and that the achievement must be won in the most complete, the happiest, and the best manner possible for that life.

Now it must follow that whatever I do, whether I sing a sacred song, or plow a field, whether I preach a sermon or demonstrate a theorem in geometry, whether I do anything sacred or secular, it is I MYSELF who do it. And it follows just as certainly that all I do of whatsoever character will react on my life, my real and very self and change it for better or worse for time and eternity. The very same I who prays may utterly destroy the efficacy of that prayer by doing a shiftless piece of work or by selling a yard of shoddy or by hiding a defect in my daily task which no mortal eye may ever discover. It certainly does matter to ME what I do.

Then I may be doing another man's job and leaving my own altogether undone. In that case I am a great sinner though I may be really doing a great work. And it can not be other than that in the great and final reckoning I must pay a fearful penalty. I may be a prophet in the name of Jesus. I may be a miracle-worker that casts out demons. I may be taught of Jesus and quite well acquainted with him. And, yet, I may find the door closed to me. There is a vast difference between doing your divinely appointed life-work, even in its details, as a worker together with God and seeking the other fellow's job because it looks good to you. Is it possible for one to believe that God works thus with a man? Does God become a

Pulling Power

There is quite a difference between pulling power and the power of a pull. Because of certain influential advantages of one or of one's friends a place of preferment may be secured, and this regardless of one's fitness for the place. This is often true in politics and positions of what we sometimes call public trust, and of such we are accustomed to say, "He had a political pull." This is not regarded in any specially complimentary manner by most people for it is conceded that such influence is seldom used for any good purpose; but there is another influence, the influence of high and worthy character that has pulling power in itself and is worthy and that should be sought after by all men.

We used to know an old brother in the church who insisted that anything that is well-pleasing to man is an abomination in the sight of God. Such a position neither gives man his due nor God the honor that belongs to him. Such a position assumes that man is not pleased and cannot be pleased by righteousness and virtue that are pleasing to God. However we do not believe many men hold to such views of life. There are many worthy things and many worthy motives in the life of a man that must be pleasing to God, and these worthy things make up the attractive forces of a strong righteous character.

Men of strong character have great pulling power and their very personality is such that others are drawn to them, but yet the fact is overlooked that many times very little things constitute this power. The little, the common things in life that appeal to many common minds have a greater power than is at all times realized. But all pulling power is not centered in personal character as a British army officer found out one day while in hiding in Belgium. As he peeked out from his place of hiding he noticed that fully nine out of ten of the German soldiers that passed a show window across the street paused from one to three minutes to look at the display, while the Belgians who passed gave it no attention. The man in hiding thought that only a window display of German magazines and German books would have such attraction to Germans as they passed without also attracting the Belgians and his curiosity became so aroused that at nightfall he determined to venture out of his hiding place to learn if possible what the attraction might be. He crossed the street and one glance in the window cleared up the whole matter. It was a meat market and the window was filled with huge quantities of sausage. And this was the power that pulled nine out of ten soldiers to stop and gaze into the window and that pulled a man out of his hiding place across the street to his own personal danger. The knowledge of the pulling power of certain goods is stock in trade to the window decorator and the knowledge as to how to display that power to the best advantage constitutes his art. Then why should it be wrong for any one to display for good purposes the pulling power he may possess that others may be drawn, not to him, but to right ways of living?

First Steps

One who has not passed through the experiences of parenthood can hardly realize the interest that parents take in watching the efforts of their child to walk alone, and how the very first step taken alone is regarded as one of the greatest accomplishments that has yet been acquired by the child. There are many first steps in life and the way a child sets about it to take its first step with baby feet as it endeavors to pattern after its elders and walk in an upright position may be a sure index to the characteristics that shall follow it all its days. If fearful and hesitating in the endeavors to take this first step it may be fearful and hesitating about all "first steps" in life, while if boldness and courage are displayed at this time such traits may very naturally be expected to characterize its future life. It is true that environment and training may help to overcome these early indications but nevertheless they are there and need to be watched over carefully to help a child to make the most of its possibilities, for the whole future of one's life may be colored if not exactly determined by one's first steps. There may be an attempt made to reach life's goals or successes without taking these first steps, but this is contrary to all nature's laws. One may be promoted over the heads of one's fellows, as is sometimes done in the army as well as in business, but when the promotion is based upon merit one may be assured that it is largely the result of proper and wise "first steps" that have been taken that have fitted one for promotion.

An exchange has very tersely given expression to this thought in the words: "To paddle your own canoe is the first step toward having your own private yacht." The owning of a private yacht may not be the ambition of many of us but there are other ambitions that are equally dear to us and to reach them one must learn to take his own first steps bravely and independently, or as the quotation says, he must learn to paddle his own canoe. This is the law of the business and professional world.

Burning Bridges

It used to be considered good military tactics to burn the bridges behind an army after it had crossed a river in its advance movements for then it was felt the soldiers would be all the more determined to win and would fight with greater valor and courage and even with desperation because they had no way to retreat or to make their escape should they be defeated, but modern warfare witnesses the burning of bridges only in the rear of a retreating army and in the forefront of an advancing victorious enemy force. But there are times in life when it does seem best to cut off all possibility of retreat so that one will be compelled to put forth one's greatest efforts to win or to face inevitable defeat. Self determination in matters of government is one of the requirements stated by our President in his peace terms to which he gave expression some time ago, and self determination in life is one of the primary elements in the building up of any successful career.

There are many things to consider as one contemplates future action or the development of one's future career, even though that career may be nothing more than doing the commonplace things in the world all through one's life. However commonplace things may be transformed by doing them in an uncommon way and the monotony of the commonplace is thus not only worn off but absolutely destroyed. This is one of the things that needs to be done to break away from life's monotonies. The monotony of life is one of the greatest causes of worry and discontent and anything that will improve life's outlook without endangering the character of the one who seeks the improvement is to be commended. But in regard to matters over which one is inclined to worry it is well to accept the contradictory advice of the quotation: "If you are inclined to worry, burn your bridges behind you before you come to them." This apparently impossible thing can be done only by those who have the courage and the power to face a possible defeat with the way of retreat cut off.

Preaching the Gospel

BY I. B. TROUT

The Minister

There is no higher calling than that of the minister, who is called to the sacred duty of preaching the gospel. The minister stands between God and man "to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ." The minister stands in the place of Jesus Christ in a certain sense, for, "God hath given to us the ministry of the reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God" (2 Cor. 5: 18-20.) Again it is said of the minister, "How shall they hear without a preacher," and, "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!" Because of the high and holy calling of the minister, he must measure up to certain standards which are clearly set forth in the scriptures.

1. The minister must be a Christian in the fullest possible sense of the term. This means that he is growing better day by day. He does not come to any height where he has the right to cease growing. A Christian follows on just as rapidly as Christ leads the way into greater light. A Christian does not stop to doubt and cavil at God's word. There may be, there will be, things that contain mysteries to him, but he does not make this the occasion or the place to set up his doubts, nor does he make it the ground of unbelief. He asks God for light and then digs all the harder to be able to search the deep things of God. The Christian minister has no time to stop and parly with doubts. If he undertakes to do such a thing, the chances are that Satan will get the same advantage over him that he got over Eve, when she began to consider doubts. The minister must be able to say at least two things that Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ," and, "I know whom I have believed." As a Christian, the minister must retain the right relation to his fellow men. He must be willing to do the part of a servant to humanity in the fear of God.

2. The minister must believe that the Bible contains the inspired Word of God. He must consider the Bible to be a book in a class by itself and not merely consider it a book among others that may contain truths. Paul said, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. 3: 16). Inspired literally means God-breathed. The word comes from two words, theos, meaning God; and pnein, meaning to breathe. The Bible idea of inspiration simply means God's strong, conscious breathing into men, thus qualifying them to utter the truth. It is God speaking his Word through men as if he were uttering the same words himself. It was so understood by the holy apostle Peter, for he said, "No prophecy ever came by the will of man: but men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit" (2 Peter 1: 21). Both the Old and New Testaments are full of statements teaching that the writers of the Bible were God-inspired. It is said that such phrases as, "God said," "The Lord spake," "The Lord said," etc, etc., are contained in the Old Testament 3,808 times; and the New Testament contains many claims to the inspiration of its contents. Read 2 Peter 1: 20, 21; Acts 1: 16; 1 Peter 1: 10, 11; 1 Cor. 2: 13; and many similar passages. It is absolutely necessary that the minister should believe that the message that he delivers is from God.

3. The minister must be able to expound the Word of God. Paul called this qualification, "Apt to teach" and "Able to teach." It is one thing to believe the Bible; it is quite another thing to be able to teach it in such a manner as to cause others to believe it and to accept its Savior as their own living, personal Savior. Men do not all have the same gifts (1 Cor. 12: 4-14). Let each Christian exercise the gift, or gifts, that God has given him.

4. Not only must the minister believe God's Word, understand it and be able to teach it to others, but he must handle and teach the Word faithfully. He must handle the Word in an honest manner. He must not put fictitious and unreasonable interpretations on the Word. He must let God speak what he wants to say in the Word. He has no right to do what we call "Glossing the Word." The sermon he delivers should come logically out of the text used. I have listened to some fairly good sermons which did not come out of the text used, but belonged to quite a different text. Jeremiah spoke by divine authority when he said, "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my Word, let him speak my word faithfully" (Jer. 23: 28). There is danger of ministers telling their dreams for the Word of God, and of preaching the Word of God as if it were a dream, or some idle fancy. The pulpit must not be prostituted to the common level of what may be called intellectual debauchery, but it must be kept on the high plane on which Jesus Christ established it. The pulpit is sanctified by the truth of God's Word, and he assumes a great risk, who attempts to drag it down to the level of human reason and carnality. Paul said, 'We....Have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the Word of God deceitfully; but.... commending ourselves .... in the sight of God" (2 Cor. 4: 1, 2). The minister who deals out God's Word ably and honestly has come into possession of a fine accomplishment. Bias and twist have no place in the work of a faithful minister of the gospel.

5. There must exist in the heart of the minister a yearning for the conversion of sinners and the strengthening of the saints. He does not preach for honor, money, or any other form of emolument, but he preaches for the purpose of saving men. In no other way can he do honor to God, and in no other way can he be worthy of the calling The gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one who believes, and there is no apology for preaching it for any other purpose than the one purpose of leading men to heaven. The yearning for the salvation of souls is the one fundamental motive for preaching the gospel, beside which all other motives are secondary and of little importance. Ministers, let us read carefully Romans 9: 1-5 and do some serious thinking.

Stern Realities

BY JAMES S. GRIBBLE

Paul, the model missionary, in writing the second letter to Timothy, exhorts him to: "Suffer hardship * * as a good soldier of Jesus Christ:" for, "No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of his life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier." 2 Tim. 2: 3, 4.

The above mentioned verse is not the only place where the life of a Christian is compared to that of a soldier, for there are numerous such references to be found in the Word of God, and our song books literally teem with hymns bearing upon this point. Who is it that has not heard "Am I a soldier of the cross" sung? And when it is sung, who is it among those who profess to be Christians who will deny that he is a soldier of the cross? To make an inference that any one, who owns the name of Christ, is not a soldier of the cross, would be giving offense. Yet, when we have, perhaps very thoughtlessly, sung that hymn, as well as almost countless others, in which the trend of thought is much the same, we never tried to discover the real depth of what we were emptily singing unto God. If it were an idol or a brick wall to which we were singing, we would have put every bit as much real thought and devotion in what we were doing. And after it was all over, we many times felt that we were worshipping God. "God is not mocked," declares the inspired Word.

Today we stand aghast at the terrible things that are being done in this old world, which less than five years ago many of us were considering to be so good that it would meet with the Lord's approval by his permitting the milennium to be ushered in through the wonderful advancements that man has been making along the lines of science, scholarly research, etc. We had entirely forgotten that our babel of today is like that of thousands of years ago—the wonderful achievements of man. "God is not mocked," declares the inspired Word.

"Ye are the salt of the earth," declared our Lord to those who were his followers. Salt is the world's greatest preserving agent. By it, even the mighty ocean, into which flows all kinds of filth, is kept perfectly pure. A wonderful commendation to those who follow our Lord. And now since the church has a high place in the world, and since it is one of the first things to be considered, one would naturally expect the salt to so season all affairs in the world that, among professedly Christian nations at least, there would be no great outburst of corruption. But, what do we find? The very reverse to what has just been mentioned. Is it because our Lord was mistaken in his statement, "Ye are the salt of the earth?" No, a thousand times no. His words are words of truth. But he did not stop speaking when he uttered the statement, "Ye are the salt of the earth," but continued by saying: "But if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is henceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under the foot of men." Why has the church lost the power and influence that she might have in the world? Simply because she has, by her great disregard of the seriousness of her Lord's words and her affiliation with the world, lost her power of influence. Which man, when a real test is made, has the greatest influence for good,—the one who is a jolly good fellow, a church member yet is not a crank on very strict obedience to his Lord, a member of all the secret orders in town, one who would not cause a bit of hard feeling when an invitation is extended to him to take a bit of strong drink, one who is on hand at every dance, special play at the theater, movies, etc., or, the one who is a clear-cut Christian gentleman, giving every man his just dues, tribute to whom tribute is due, custom to whom custom is due, honor to whom honor is due, and above all fear to whom fear is due—God, not, that he has reason to fear the consequences of disobedience as regards himself, but the results that it will have by sending others to eternal perdition? Which man, I ask you, will men confide most in, Like man, like church which is composed of men. The church, at large, has lost her influence. She is as salt without savor. And the church is composed of individuals of the which you and I are included. How do we stand in this test? Have we, like the great mass of prosessing Christians, been saying to the Lord that we are his, and at the same time taking his words at a great discount, and treating him as if he were on idol of wood or stone? God's silence is terrible. His permission for a long extended time of grievous sinning against him and his Word does not signify his sanction. Jesus, God Incarnate, said, "The word that I speak, the same shall judge." John 12: 48. How significant, when our Lord returned to be with the Father, he did not tell us to please our tastes concerning our service to him, but that we should evangelize the world. Yet, how lightly we esteem this great work, and expect him to excuse us.

Instead of expecting God to look over all of our neglect in the one great task that he has given us, it may be of great profit for us to consider our calling. We are called as soldiers—of the cross. In unmistaken terms we are told that we are not our own, for we are bought with a price. Since soldiers we are, let us learn a few lessons from "the boys in khaki." It is such men, serving under the most rigorous empire in the history of the world, the writer had in mind when the inspired Word was written.

A recent writer in writing of a soldier's duty says: "A soldier's duty is to render instant, absolute, and unquestioning obedience to every command of his superior officers. He is put under oath to do so. It is daily instilled in his mind. And it is constantly impressed upon him that the penalty of failure to obey orders is death. The soldier has no discretion, no will of his own, no conscience. He cannot parley with his superior officers, or ask any reasons, or test his orders by any standard, human or divine. His one duty—admitting of no exception or modification—is to obey orders. The man who enlists for military service, whether voluntary or under pressure of conscription laws, surrenders entirely and unreservedly his own power of choice and freedom of action. He repudiates his individual responsibility to God and man, and pledges himself blindly, by an oath and under penalty of death, to obey the commands of his officers, whoever they may be and to whatever work they may send him."

We all feel sorry concerning the great world calamity. Yet, if we Christian people would have taken the Word of God as it should have been taken, and have given the word "soldier" in respect to followers of Christ the same meaning that it conveys in the armies of the world, we would have no war today. It could not have taken place. The salt of the earth, by its saltiness, would never have permitted it. The war is the price of our gross disobedience. We would not give our lives and money to save—evangelize—the world, now they are required of us to kill the men of the world. How many young men who had very promising futures are in khaki today, possibly never to return from the field of carnage and slaughter! We had been treating the Lord's words lightly but now find that the war is a dreadful reality. God is not mocked. Oh, who among those who are still free to do so will repent and give to God his due?

Some may say that the loyalty of God's people would not have prevented the war, since it is the fulfillment of propheey. Any such argument will justify Judas in his betrayal of our Lord. The fact that the great multitude pay no heed to the words of our Lord gives us as individuals no ground for excuse. How much good we could do by our action! How much the more good we could do by the influence of our action upon the lives of others! No man lives unto himself.

And Jesus spake unto them saying, "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," etc. etc.

Autumn Leaves

BY F. M. LAMBERT

"The Autumn woods, a comrade said,
Bring somber thoughts to me;
They speak and breathe of naught but dead
And dying things," sighed he.

"To every leaf that flutters down
Upon the breezes wing,
To leaf of gold, to leaf of brown,
An omen seems to cling.

Too soon we, tinged with woe and grief
When Autumn's sun is low,
Must leave the Bough of Life—too brief—
And sleep 'neath Winter's snow."

Ah, comrade mine, be not cast down,
The leaves that now descend
Are Nature's worn, discarded gown;
Follow thy premise friend—

And look where leaves of varied hue
Have parted from the spray;
A bud!—an earnest of a new
And richer life next May.

So from the soul must drop away
This casket formed of clod;
That Soul, free winged, will wake one day
To gladder life and God.

"Back-to-School!"

"The school is your training camp. Don't be a deserter." This is what the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor is saying to the thousands of children who are leaving the schools for industry, dazzled by the present high wages offered. Jobs that offer very little training, and less hope of a future are being taken unquestioningly by the youngsters who "don't like school anyway" and think they are "old enough to work," or who feel the urge of home necessity.

The Children's Bureau has just announced a Back-to-School Drive whose object may be stated in the President's words "That no child may have less opportunity for education because of the war." The drive will attempt two things: to return to the schools and keep there the children who have deserted them for industry, and to keep the children now in school from leaving prematurely. The actual work of the drive will be done through the Child Conservation Section of the Council of National Defense which is organized into State, county and local units. In each school community committees are being formed whose first duty will be to study child labor and school attendance laws. After that they will go to the county superintendent, the school principals, and teachers to get accurate lists of the children who have not returned to school. Then begins the real work of getting the children back. Parents will be called upon, and the committee members will talk over with them why it is important not only to the child but to the country that he be well prepared for work before attempting it. Where the reasons for leaving were pecuniary an adjustment will be attempted so that the child can return The Bureau urges that the adjustment take the form of a scholarship similar to those in practically all of the colleges, and in certain city school systems. The average amount of school scholarships is $120 a year, and it is hoped that as a result of the Drive an average of at least one will be founded for each of the 281,000 school houses in the United States. The Red Cross will help to keep in school these children who have a father or brother in the service.

The refusal of the Federal Government to employ children in essential industries gives point to the Bureau's contention that they should not be allowed to be employed to furnish a cheap source of labor for non-essentials. The War Labor Policies Board, which is composed of representatives of all the Departments directly concerned in the prosecution of the war, has made a definite ruling that children under 14 shall not be employed on war work and that children between 14 and 16 shall not be employed on war work for more than 8 hours a day or 6 days a week, or between 7 P. M. and 6 A. M.

This action has been followed by a general order to all branch offices from the Director of the United States Employment Service. The order states that the policy of the Service is to discourage all children under 16 from leaving school. If a child under 16 is placed Federal standards of child labor will be followed unless the standards of the particular state in which he works happens to be higher. In that case the state standards will be observed. An effort to put the children in suitable and "developing" positions will be made, and so far as possible the conditions under which they work will be investigated.

The United States Boys' Working Reserve refuses to give Federal recognition to boys under 16 who are employed on farms or in industry. It maintains that children under 16 should be kept in school by all the pressure that can be brought to bear, on the ground that the future welfare of the Nation depends on the educational training of its youth.

The opening of the schools for the fall term gave the Children's Bureau an opportunity to find out to just what extent children were leaving school prematurely, whether those who had worked on vacation permits were returning, and, in general, the conditions among working children. A series of inquiries were made in typical industrial and commercial centers to throw light on these and other questions. The cities studied include New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Washington, Wilmington, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Louisville, and several smaller cities. In Washington it was found that this year 1,095 permits to work either outside school hours or full time had been granted under the law which permits children of 12 or 13 to work, if, in the opinion of the Juvenile Court, the poverty of the family justifies it. In 1916-17 only 277 such permits were issued. This is a gain of 295 per cent. The number of children from 14 to 16 who were granted regular working permits rose from 727 in 1916-17 to 1,917 this year —an increase of 164 per cent. In Wilmington 61 per cent more children have taken out permits this year than last. Practically all of this 61 per cent have definitely left school to enter industry on full time.

Reports of greatly increased shifting from job to job seem to indicate that the child is not finding in his work a steadily progressing training. The figures do not show that children are staying at their jobs more steadily because of higher wages, or that they are staying long enough to gain from their industrial training experience which will make them increasingly useful.

The Bureau emphasizes the fact that the success of the drive depends largely on an educated and intelligent public opinion which will insist upon the complete enforcement of child labor and school attendance laws, and demand that each community shall see to it that its children are not deprived of schooling because of poverty. The school welfare committees are urged to secure for their communities the visiting teachers, vocational advisors, and similar means of guarding the school child's well-being which have proved their value in other localities.

Building for After the War

That thousands of children in rural and small town communities are being deprived of a fair chance for normal development is the assertion of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor in a report just issued on conditions which tend to juvenile wrong doing in the country.

One hundred and eighty-five New York State children who were implicated in some sort of wrong doing and who came from 144 different families were carefully studied, and their family surroundings were scanned in an effort to discover what had led them astray. Most of the children were of normal mentality, although about one-fourteenth were noticeably deficient. But lack of opportunity for moral and mental training, for recreation, and lack of variety of interesting occupations with promising futures led these children of normal mental power into delinquency. All these conditions were found to be accentuated in the subnormal child who, in addition to the opportunities of a normal child, needs to be provided with some adequate means of diagnosis and appropriate treatment.

The 21 New York State communities described show a type of social life that, as the report points out, can "unfortunately be matched in many places." Vivid, detailed descriptions show how the families and communities of these 185 little children failed to safeguard them from early temptations to wrongdoing which will doubtless lead, in many instances, to wasted, stunted lives. Although in nearly half the cases the child lived in its own home with its father and mother there was a lack of control on the part of the parents and a disregard on their part for the rights of others which must have contributed to the child's misdeeds.

The attempt is made to analyze the offenses of the children, which range from more mischief or general waywardness to serious offenses against property and to sex delinquencies. The purposeless mischief often develops because the loneliness of the open country and the "deadness" of the little town," give the child a stupid denial to answer his search for sociability. Without wise leadership the youthful energy is all too likely to run the gamut of small mischief and then degenerate into serious misdeeds.

What were these 21 typical communities doing to save themselves from the moral and financial burden of caring for the misdemeanants their lack of foresight had produced? Prisons for criminals are admittedly an expensive way to safeguard the moral fabric of a community.

What is there to care for the child who has been called to account by the community for his offenses? The justices of the peace, under whose jurisdiction many of the children considered in the study came, were generally found to give but cursory attention to the children's needs, and to be ill-informed as to how their cases should be handled. Local influence conduces in many instances to lenience where sterner treatment would have been for the child's better interest. The report adds to the evidence which favors a separate court for the treatment of juvenile offenders. The impracticability of securing skilled probation officers and juvenile court judges, however, for each small community leads to the recommendation of a county juvenile court, and the extension of the powers of such courts where they now exist, in order that the court may reach the remotest corners of each county—that "a probation officer may be available in every inhabited section of rural as well as urban communities."

Around the Fireside

Making Over Grandpa

"Here begins my opportunity," said Martha to herself as she gave her reflection a hasty survey in the mirror and pinned in place the last vagrant curl. "I have studied hard to learn to manage wisely and economically. My dear people have missed me so much in these two years. They must have something nice but simple for their breakfast; I will try to do things properly and suit Grandpa as well. Then down she ran, singing like a lark.

"Breakfast ready, Martha?" was Grandpa's salutation as he seated himself at the table ten minutes before the time he had appointed. "Hurry up; I have lots to do today."

"Didn't you have time to hull the berries, dear?" asked Aunt Bab as Martha took her crutches and helped the stout lady to be seated. "I might have been up a bit earlier if I had known."

"They are nearly as big as apples, and so pretty I like them served this way. There is sugar in which to dip them," pleaded Martha.

"They are big this year; I get an extra price for them all," put in Grandpa, heartily pleased. "Plenty of callers, too, when I'm picking. Bab's old flame, Dr. Bruce, stops pretty often. He has an excellent appetite, I must say. But bless you, child, I don't want any berries; never eat them at the table, I've eat a quart already out on the bed. What next? O, mush! I don't want that this morning; rather have it fried any time; did you forget my fried potatoes?" He was eating his fifth muffin by this time; and never even noticed the bowl of roses Martha had put in the middle of the table. "Coffe's good; I'll have another cup. Better have more too, Bab."

"Three spoons of sugar, Martha, please, said Aunt Bab.

Martha looked pained, but before she could speak Grandpa broke in, "I'll have another muffin, a quarter of Hitty's apple, pie and a doughnut or two."

Martha's expressive face clouded still more at this demand; and, when he had left the room, she turned to Aunt Bab. "He never used to be so bad as that, spoiling my nice breakfast when I tried so hard."

"He isn't bad at all," his daughter responded. "He has been through a good deal since Isabel left us, and he has never once complained, no matter how badly he was served. Of course his peculiarities grow on him since mother died; but they are all on the outside, and I never mind them. He is a real gentleman underneath."

"Dear old Grandpa! I know that," answered Martha. "But does he always act like that at the table now?"

"Ask for what he wants? Why shouldn't he in his own house?" inquired old-fashioned Aunt Bab.

"He eats so much and so many things, and he doesn't need sweets at breakfast," declared Martha. "Other folks over the sea do need all these things, and it is a waste to eat more than is good for one. Aunt Bab, I'm going to try to make over Grandpa this summer. He needs it, and so do some other people." She gave a significant glance at the broad figure of her companion as she spoke.

"If you only knew the trouble I've had with help," said that lady, trying to change the subject. "We were all right until Isabel's mother was sick. Then we had a girl who broke things, one who stole, and lastly, Hitty, whom you saw waiting for the car yesterday when you came home."

"She looked both sour and gloomy," commented Martha. "I could see that at a glance."

"She certainly was both. I've attended by proxy the funeral of every Northamite who has died within fifty years," groaned Aunt Bab. "We should have been crazy, had she stayed much longer."

"Luckily she's gone now. You've put on flesh amazingly since I saw you last."

"I have been having the things I like."

"You eat too much sugar," pronounced the Domestic Science graduate slowly, trying hard to tell the truth without offense. "Your coffee was like syrup, and you used heaps on the berries. You didn't need those two doughnuts, and so much bacon is fattening."

"I used to be as slim as you are," said Aunt Bab pensively.

"You have been eating more than you require," continued Martha.

"I only eat what I want."

"If you choose to weigh three hundred, you are on the right path," warned the girl.

Aunt Bab winced, and asked, "What can I eat?" Then she listened wearily but patiently to the lecture that followed, backed up by a formidable pile of note-books.

"If people starve as you say, do they really grow thinner?" she wailed at the close.

"Often three or four pounds a week."

"I'll try it," groaned the victim; "but how I shall hate it!"

"I can talk with you, but with Grandpa I suppose I can only try tentative experiments," admitted Martha. "Yes I should think so skillful a farmer as he would take an interest in saving food."

"All these conservation ideas are new and strange to him," said Aunt Bab quietly. "They are foreign to many people, and he does not adjust himself very easily to different conditions and thoughts. He is very generous, though, to all good causes."

"I know he is," replied Martha. "But, with little children going hungry across the water, I cannot see food wasted, or actually doing you dear people harm, without trying to prevent it." She stopped with a quiver in her voice and a mistiness in her bright eyes.

Aunt Bab looked at her in amazement. "My little girl" she said tenderly, "do you care as much as that?"

Martha nodded, and shook the telltale drops from her eyelids.

"You can do as you like with me," promised Aunt Bab. "I will try to help you with your grandpa, for he is not as well as he should be."

"Could we interest him in saving sugar and meat and wheat, the things our friends want most and which can be easily transported?" suggested Martha.

Aunt Bab considered a moment before she answered, "I do not know, but we can at least try."

Grandpa absolutely refused to take any interest in denying himself. He would give money or produce, or even time, but he had "always had real meals," and he was always going to, he informed the two ladies. In spite of this refusal domestic matters ran smoothly. Aunt Bab knit steadily, and Martha stitched on various useful garments in her spare moments. The summer days seemed to begin and end with rides in the new car which Grandpa had bought to show his joy in having Martha back. Yet every ride left some gift of garden or orchard for some neighbor who needed it.

Aunt Bab was slowly but surely losing in weight, and constantly had to take in her gowns. But her usual expression of placid content had changed to a wistful, hungry look. Martha redoubled her efforts to please her relative. The girl's own love story was still in the future, and she never dreamed how frequently Barbara West gazed into the mirror, then wondered whether Dr. Bruce still cared and whether he might call today. Martha did not know that it was Aunt Bab's rheumatism which had made her refuse the doctor, though they were still friends.

The preserving season began early, and was a happy time for them all, though Martha worked hard. "I shall put up all I possibly can," she remarked. "We will give away what we don't need."

"You have plenty of everything to use," remarked Aunt Bab.

Grandpa, coming in with a basket of apples for the Bates family, would say serenely: "Miss Baldwin thinks the fruit has helped a lot to get Josie well, and those vegetables made it possible for Jim Brown to feed his folks until he got to work again. Dr. Bruce told me Miss Elsie might have starved without the fruit to tempt her appetite. Next year we'll have a bigger garden, so we can give the folks more."

"Did the doctor stop here?" asked Aunt Bab careful to show no undue interest.

"Yes. He wanted some more fruit. I told him the supply would hold out for all his patients who needed any," responded Grandpa with a twinkle.

"He never comes to the house any more,' 'said Martha slowly. "I think I might ask him to supper next week when we have the minister here. He used to come a lot."

Even Martha's careless girlish eyes could see the pink flush that rose in Aunt Bab's cheek, and how her face fell when Garndpa declared: "He's scared of Martha's newfangled cooking. Thinks he'd better keep out of danger for the present. Goin' to try any of your food-conservin' business on the parson? The Wests have always given the minister the best there was goin'."

"I know our family traditions," replied Martha briefly, with a flash of her brown eyes. She planned and worked to produce her idea of the best and daintiest meal possible for an honored guest, and felt satisfied with the results.

But, when they all sat down, Grandpa began to complain, though he ate eleven of the croquettes. "Why didn't you make plain hash? You know I like it a heap better. I don't want your salad; green food is for horses and cows. This cake of yours is kind of dry, and don't seem to have any good taste. What do you call it? O, angel cake! Glad I ain't an angel yet; pass the butter, will you?"

Summer changed into fall, and winter gradually approached. The cold weather made the old gentleman feel stiff, and he was slowly failing in strength, though you could not make him angrier than to suggest such a thing. He had one mild attack of indigestion after another. One in particular was aggravated by Aunt Bab's having read aloud from an old Godey's some elegant meals there described. Boiled fish with oyster sauce, tongue, rabbit, fried oysters, mutton, plum pudding, mince pie, blanc mange, nuts, jelly, and fruits were selections from one menu.

Grandpa was filled with an instant desire to have Martha cook these things. Then his mind reverted to the times when his ten brothers and sisters were at home on the old farm. "I'm tired of newfangled ways," he stormed. "I want food such as I used to have; none of your saving, skimping ways for me! I want pie and doughnuts and custard and fried things and plenty of meat; all those things you've tried not to give me for so long. I'm going to have 'em, too. First, I want a custard such as my mother used to make, a dozen eggs and three quarts of milk baked in a milk-pan."

It took half an hour's argument from both Aunt Bab and Martha to convince him that that custard was entirely too large for three; he yielded at last with great unwillingness. Then modestly but firmly Martha went over the reasons in favor of moderate eating, the demand abroad for all we can spare, and what she felt to be our duty in the matter.

Grandpa threw back his handsome white head, and ignored her remarks completely. "Henceforth I will order what I want when I want it."

"Couldn't you tell me a little ahead, so I might have time to cook it and plan a bit?" asked Martha, much subdued.

"You can't plan ahead. How can I tell what I'm going to want until I get set down?" he retorted. After a few days of this regime he remarked one night, "I'll take a lunch now, a cup of good coffee, some doughnuts, and the rest of that cold sausage." After which he helped himself to a handful of candy from his special dish, and started for bed whistling.

Martha looked after him with despairing eyes. "What is the use of knowing how to do things if you are not allowed?" she asked.

"It is fortunate that you do know about food," said Aunt Bab. "Have you noticed that I can get up from my chair easily, a thing I have not done before for years?"

"Why, so you can," admitted Martha, greatly cheered. "I am so glad."

"Father has not been well for some time back; he is older, and can stand less hard work, too. So you ought to make some allowance if he is irritable, dear," added Aunt Bab kindly.

"Maybe I had," agreed Martha, as she went up stairs.

Alas for Grandpa! A few hours later Martha was roused by an unmistakable groan coming from his room. She sprang up, reached for kimono and slippers, and called softly, "Grandpa, what is the trouble?"

The only answer was a second and louder groan. Martha hurried to him to find a very sick man tossing and turning in evident pain. He was too ill to answer questions, and she hardly knew what to do, but realized that quick action was imperative. Running down stairs, she called Aunt Bab, who agreed to telephone for the doctor and hold the line until she located one if Dr. Bruce were out. Martha heated water for hot compresses, and rushed back to the bedside.

The sound of a masculine voice downstairs was very comforting to the frightened girl; and, when big Dr. Bruce entered Grandpa's room, she stopped worrying, and worked rapidly and deftly under his directions.

It was morning before the physician left, and many days before a paler and thinner edition of Grandpa was allowed to sit up for a few hours in his familiar easy chair. These days were spent in more or less silent rebellion at the enforced solitude and the diet of "slops and slush," as he inelegantly termed the food allowed him. Aunt Bab could not climb the stairs in their old-fashioned house, neither could Martha spend all her time with the impatient invalid.

Dr. Bruce came and went, and piles of papers and magazines perforce took the place of the audience Grandpa preferred. Always fond of reading, he spent some of his dreary hours with these; but every single one seemed filled to the brim with pleas for starving Armenians or Belgians. At first Grandpa flung them angrily aside, for he did not wish to ponder along this line; boredom compelled him to take them up again, however, and one sentence suddenly seemed to burn itself into his memory. It pierced his armor of stubborness, and reached the big, tender weart within. "Every time you say you won't change your way of living a starving baby dies in France."

The magazine dropped unnoticed to the floor. The old man lay motionless, with closed eyes, having it out with himself. Martha slipped in several times, but thought him asleep, so noiselessly withdrew.

"Here I lie, a great useless hulk, sick from overeating the very things they need," he groaned. "I'm just an old hog, that's exactly what I am! Suppose I do have to eat different things. Maybe some of those folks, older than I be, have to eat stuff they don't fancy, and are glad to get that. Guess I'd better take a hand in this reformin' business, and begin on myself."

It was after this decision that he startled Martha by the suggestion: "I might give up havin' any sugar in my tea and coffee, and have one cup of good cocoa, or perhaps two, before I go to bed most nights. What do you think of this idea?"

Martha stifled a desire to smile. "You know cocoa takes sugar, too," she replied gently.

"Hm, so it does," mused the old gentleman, and relapsed into silence.

When Dr. Bruce resigned charge of the case, he said: "I will give you a diet-list, and Martha will see that you keep to it. Here are the things Mr. Hoover decides we may all have."

"Hang Herbert Hoover!" flashed restless Grandpa. "That is what my little girl has been trying to tell me all along. She really does know something," he added with the ghost of his old twinkle.

"Where are Bab's crutches?" asked the doctor in his abrupt way.

Martha laughed. "She forgot them when she rushed to the telephone the night Grandpa was taken sick; then she found she could go without them. Now they are standing in her closet."

"That is good news," responded the doctor heartily. "She made me a promise once that if she ever discarded crutches, I might get a license. Young lady, can you make wedding cake?"

"I will look up my receipt right off," promised Martha gladly. "Cake can surely be allowed for weddings."

"Martha can make anything there is going," boasted Grandpa. "She cured Bab, and now I'm going to let her take me in hand. I'd a sight rather eat my kind of food, but hers is safer. I guess I'll begin by leaving the sugar out of my coffee. Figure up what we are going to save, child, and send some of the good folks a check."—C. E. World.

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

We need what is COMING to us. We know the closing of the Sunday schools for more than a month on account of the epidemic has worked a financial hardship with many of them. We know it because they have not paid their bills for the last quarter's supplies. Now brethren, we appreciate the situation, but will you please remember that while your individual account may not be more than from five to twenty, or in a few cases fifty dollars it would not mean much to us, if there were but one, but when ten, twenty or fifty or more is multiplied many times it means a great deal to us. And don't you think it would be easier for you to provide in some manner to meet your one account than for us to bear the burden of the many accounts? The last of October we sent statements to practically all of our Sunday schools that are indebted to us, but it would be embarrassing indeed to tell just how many have responded to our appeal to date. Please remember the words of the Apostle who said, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Will you not help us bear this burden by remitting what you owe us?

Word has come to us of the death of Frank Lambert while in the service of his country in France. No particulars have yet reached us, but many of our readers will remember Brother Lambert as the writer of Ashland College Notes for the Evangelist last year while he was a student at Ashland.

L. Lemuel Kilmer, state superintendent of the Brethren Sunday school work in Indiana furnishes our readers an interesting report this week. This report is interesting first of all to the schools of Indiana, but it is also interesting to the schools of the other states as well as it informs them what the schools of one conference district are trying to do, and also makes known the method employed by a wide-awake state superintendent in his effort to keep in touch with all the schools of his district. The report is good as it is but the superintendent is striving for a better report next year. This is a worthy aim. Will all superintendents please note what Brother Kilmer has to say about superintendents and the Evangelist.

Sister Detwiler is fortunate in being able to minister to the bodily needs of the people as well as to their spiritual needs. When she found the homes in Baltimore almost quarantined against her visits in the interests of the new Brethren Sunday school in that city she turned her training as a nurse to account and became a nurse to help care for some of those who had been stricken by the epidemic. This was as much Christian work and service as the work she had first set about to do and it will tell mightily for the building up of the whole gospel in Baltimore.

The delayed number of the Brethren Missionary is now in type and barring all unlooked-for contingencies it will be run off the press immediately after this number of the Evangelist is printed. Brother Bauman announces on another page the causes for this delay.

One of the good features of this issue of the Evangelist is the contribution from Brother Gribble, one of our missionary party in Africa. Brother Gribble states that he has not yet received a copy of the Evangelist, although we have been mailing the paper to him each week for about three months. The mail service to Africa seems even slower than it is in the United States, and that is saying a great deal when reference is made to the service second class mail now receives.

William Tipton, one of our local workers in Kentucky has been doing the part of the Good Samaritan in the mountain districts of his country while the epidemic has been raging fiercely. Brother Tipton seems a willing worker, but he, like many of the rest of us, sometimes feels that his efforts are not appreciated. Yet we are quite sure he would render the same service again under similar circumstances, even if some of the women didn't boast about his cooking accomplishments.

This week we print another short expression of appreciation from an isolated but faithful member of the church. Those who are acquainted with what Sister Snyder has done for the cause of the whole gospel during the past number of years, situated as she has been can understand in a measure how she appreciates anything that represents her beloved church. We feel that her words of appreciation concerning the ministering of the Brethren Evangelist by bringing to the "shut-ins" such messages as Brother Cobb's will not only prompt him to contribute oftener but will prompt others to do likewise. This is a service too many of our ministers neglect.

The request Sister Hattell makes of the Indiana pastors should receive their prompt attention, especially from those in the northern part of the state.

The meeting of the Ohio Conference Rally and Bible Institute has been indefinitely postponed as announced by Brother Garber on another page.

Sunday school officers are requested not to make up their orders for supplies for the next quarter until they receive our new order blanks. Practically all prices will have to be revised. Our last purchase of paper was at an advance of nearly fifty per cent above the price of our previous purchase and we will be compelled to follow in the wake of other publishing houses that have advanced the price of their publications. This advance is for the Graded supplies as well as for the Uniform Lesson helps. The advance will not be much, only enough to make the difference between profit and loss.

This week we publish the first of a series of contributions on the subject of preaching, which Brother I. B. Trout, pastor of the Brethren church, Berlin, Pennsylvania, has promised to furnish our readers. We may add that the second number of the series is now in our hands awaiting its turn for publication.

Will C. E. workers please note E. A. Myers' announcement on another page, and also read A. E. Whitted's contribution for the topic of November seventeenth.

Around the Editor's Table

The Consolation of Israel

In the second chapter of the gospel by St. Luke we are told, "There was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel; and the Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ." We are not told how many years he waited for this consolation, nor how many times he came to the temple hoping to have the promise fulfilled but was disappointed, but we are told that when the parents of Jesus brought him into the temple to "do for him after the custom of the law," Simeon was there and he took the child up in his arms and blessed God, and said, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

There have been Godly men and women in Ohio who, from the day when the "Women's Temperance Crusades" were first begun in Hillsboro in 1873 by a few women whose hearts were made to bleed because of the curse of rum until now, have been waiting for the salvation of the Lord to come to Ohio. It has been a long wait and a long season of prayer and a long battle, but unless some fraudulent scheme can yet be concocted in Cincinnati this salvation so long looked for came in last Tuesday's election when Ohio adopted the dry amendment to the constitution of this great state, and now the aged temperance workers, men and women who have grown old and feeble in their constant warfare against the saloon and the liquor business and who oftentimes had to bear the stigma that the unpopularity of the cause they championed for so many years brought upon them in the early days of the fight, can say with Simeon, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word." It has been a long struggle, mingled mith many prayers and many tears as the heart-breaking effect of the curse was seen to multiply in home after home, but please God, the victory is worth all it cost to the temperance forces.

Twenty-six years ago the writer cast his first vote for prohibition and he has voted for it at every election since wherever election day has found him in any of the states between Ohio and Nebraska. He has been threatened and he has been assaulted beause of his temperance and prohibition activities, but he would give twenty-six more years to the same kind of work gladly, were it necessary to secure the overthrow of the liquor traffic, but thank God, unless all signs fail it will not be necessary, and while the writer does not feel quite old enough in years to join Simeon in his request for a peaceful departure from this world, he does feel that the victory that has come to Ohio is a victory of the Lord. However, so long as there is remaining one state in all the Union where the open saloon exists or where the brewery or distillery converts the grain of the fields into that which is not bread there is still a battle to be waged, and the mistake of compromise should not be made as one remembers the result that came upon Israel because of disobedience when the Hebrew children upon entering the Promised Land failed to utterly destroy the tribes according to the commandments of God, so the present battle should continue until the liquor traffic has been destroyed, root and branch, in every section of our fair land.

More Government Orders

Since the publication of the last number of the Evangelist we have received our permit for the use of paper in bringing out the various publications that come from the Brethren Publishing Company. A separate permit is granted for each publication and a specified number of tons of paper is allotted to each, and we are asked to pledge ourselves that we will not go beyond these figures in the publication of any periodical. We are also expected to make quarterly reports stating that we have met the requirements of the War Industries Board.

It will not be difficult for us to meet the requirements of the Board in the publication of any of our periodicals except the Angelus and Evangelist.. We have not yet been able to devise any scheme whereby we can supply our regular customers among our Sunday schools with their full number of copies of the Angelus and keep within the limits of the tonnage of paper allowed us by the War Board for this purpose, but we have not yet given up the problem. And as to the Evangelist, the only way we can possibly think of to meet the requirements of the orders is to publish an eight-page paper once a month during the year. We have had considerable correspondence with this War Industries Board about the matter and we have not given up yet, but wil make at least one more effort to have the limit of the tonnage allotted us for the Evangelist and Angelus raised so that we may be permitted to print full sized papers each week during the year, and our hope and prayer is that before the year is over the conditions in the paper industries which have been brought on by the war may be so changed that these orders may be lifted and that we may then be able to secure all the paper our needs require.

That Campaign for Subscriptions

In the face of the conditions as stated above some may ask How about the campaign for new subscribers, if sufficient paper can not be assured to supply fully the subscribers we already have? Honesty compels us to say we do not know as yet. This is one of the problems we are still losing sleep over, but we haven't given it up. One of our exchanges is now completing a thorough organization to secure more than 25,000 new subscribers in December. If this publication is given an allowance of paper that will permit of this campaign, we are entitled to the same privilege and we intend to make a most earnest effort to find how it is done and then to claim the same privilege for ourselves. So our pastors can continue their plans to place the paper in every home in their congregations. We have the paper bought to supply our needs for nearly a full year and we will use what we have or find out a just reason why we can not do so. We dare not curtail the work of the church by cutting down our church publications when other publications that are wholly commercial, use more paper in their advertising sections alone in a single month than the Brethren Evangelist uses in an entire year. So we urge our pastors to go on with their plans to help us secure the two thousand new subscriptions we have set ourselves to secure during the next three months. We feel sure that by that time the war situation will have so cleared up that the ban on the liberal use of paper will have been lifted.

The "Flu" Has Flown

In Ohio the ban on public services has been lifted and the churches and Sunday schools were re-opened last Sunday. Not to our knowledge has there ever before been such a cessation of religious activities in the history of America, and that the churches and the cause of Christianity have suffered goes without saying. But there is one consoling thought: the church has great recuperative powers, and as it has come up through hard experiences before so now we expect it to emerge triumphant from this period of severe testing.

While the public activities of the church have been so greatly interfered with for more than a month, yet any pastor that has failed to use these weeks of enforced cessation of public services in planning for a more aggressive campaign of Christian activities after public services are resumed has not been true to the trust given him. Whirlwind campaigns, intensive activities are the order of the day, and if the plans should have been carefully made and prayed over during these weeks of inactivity are now carried out with zeal and earnestness it will be but a short time until all signs of the past handicap will have been removed and the fruit of the intensive work will be gathered in large quantities. There must be a buckling up and a tightening up of the armor, and every soldier of the great King must resolve that by faithful and untiring service he will make up for all lost time. In fact since the passing of this plague we may expect a great revival of religion.

Civilization and Religious Education

From the Foreword of "The Educative Process in Religion" by Dr. L. L. Garber. Orders may be addressed to J. A. Garber, Ashland, Ohio.

The great problem of every civilization is so to moralize its intellectual and material forces thru Religious Education that the moral and spiritual ideals that give elevation, worth, and meaning to life may not be submerged and lost in the complex physical and material machinery thru which they express themselves and are made practical. Today the world is witnessing, not the first, but the most stupendous demonstration in its history of the failure of intellectual and material achievement divorced from those moral sentiments and ideals which it is the peculiar function of Religious Education, including the church, to cherish, foster and develop. For this reason, teacher-training lessons which aim to enhance the efficiency of Religious Education, and especially those that emphasize both in method and aim the high and transcendent importance of the development of right sentiments and ideals as embodied and exemplified in the life and teachings of Jesus, in contrast with the mere coldly-intellectual and pseudo-scientific interpretation of life, may not be, in its time and place, an unwelcome contribution to religious-educational literature.

India Ruler Encourages Missions

The Maharajah of Kolhapur, one of the five great native rulers of India, is deeply interested in Christian education. Although he has not definitely accepted Christianity, he is anxious that the sons of the nobility shall come under Christian influence. His own sons were sent to an American missionary, Dr. Irwin, for instruction, and after his death, Mrs. Irwin was asked to continue supervising the education of these young princes.

The maharajah has for several years wished that the Presbyterian Mission should build a young men's high school and in order to encourage the plan gave the mission a plot of ground containing thirty-two acres. He also offered to furnish stone and wood for the building, but partly because of war conditions, work on the school was only recently begun. At the king's request, his prime minister sent the following letter to the mission:

"Hitherto, the whole work of uplifting the depressed classes has been done solely by your mission, by approaching them directly. Now, by undertaking the tuitions of the sons of the chiefs and higher aristocracy, you will be achieving that effect in an indirect and perhaps a better way.| You are surrounding these minor high class youths with a far purer and nobler atmosphere than they can hope to breathe in their present environments, and when under your careful tuition their standard of morals is raised they will naturally, as leaders in society, be themselves spreading higher and nobler ideals of life wherever they go. Some of them will be called to rule tens of thousands of people, and you can very well imagine their potentiality for good. That is why his Highness is very keen to send the sons of the nobility to you."

The school at present is being held in rented quarters and is called the Irwin Christian High School. Brahmins, Parsees, Marathis, Jains, Mohammedans and Christians in attendance make it a veritable melting pot for all classes, and all have worked and played together as if no such thing as caste existed. Rev. M. W. Strahler is principal of the new institutoin.

Hindus Reached Through Applied Christianity

When the first contingent of Indian troops was about to leave for the front, the Y. M. C. A. sought permission to place a secretary on each transport. With the causes of the Sepoy mutiny in mind, the British officers denied the request persistently, until at last consent was given with the restriction that the name of Jesus Christ must on no account be mentioned. The Y. M. C. A. leader thought the matter over and came back with this proposition: "If the secretaries agree not to mention the name of Jesus Christ, but will live as nearly as possible like Jesus Christ, will you accept them?" An agreement was reached on this basis and the most spiritually-minded men were chosen for the task. The sequel is told by Mr. F. S. Brockman, associate general secretary of the International Y. M. C. A.:

"Then what happened? Among Orientals the lowest man on earth is a barber. In China the only man whose sons are not eligible for the public examinations is the barber. At first there was nothing for the secretaries to do; but finally the hair of the Indian soldiers began to grow and needed cutting; and although they themselves were of the lowest class, there was not one of them who was low enough to act as barber to another. And then came the time of these university men, who were called 'sahib' by the Indians. They said: 'This is the thing for us to do.' And they started around serving as barbers. It was not long before those soldiers began writing home, saying: "When we left home there was no Mohammedan who cared for our souls; there was no Hindu priest on the boat; there were no Buddhists who looked after us; but these Christians, they have been brothers to us; they have acted like they were servants to us. There is nothing they have not done for us. Put my daughter or my son into the missionary school. We want to know what the Christian religion is.'

"That brings us back to the words of our Lord: 'I am the life.' And any man who lives the life, though he may for a moment keep his mouth shut, can bear the testimony that needs to be borne. There is no work that we have anywhere more successful in direct spiritual results and Christian propaganda than that we are doing among the Indian troops."

The Greatest Work in the World

In these days when men and women are called to do their utmost and to give their all, every noble instinct impels one to serve where he can make his life count for the most. Many naturally feel a restless ambition to leave home and office and ordinary pursuits for more active war work. Men not drafted enlist; women exchange the duties of home and children to help in Red Cross, hostess house or canteen work, to study nursing or work in munition factories; pastors leave their churches for camp work and men of all classes leave their business or profession to enter Y. M. C. A. service abroad.

This spirit is commendable, but it should be held in check by good judgment and a careful consideration of one's ability and responsibility in the present task.

The war has accomplished wonders in arousing men and women from their lethargy or the dead level on which they have been living. Many are learning anew the value of time and money and talents. But is there not danger that men may make unwarranted distinctions as to the comparative value of service in different fields and as to which is the most heroic sacrifice? Is the man who serves in the trenches any more necessary or noble than the man who makes munitions, if he does not do it for selfish reasons? Is the Red Cross nurse any more self-sacrificing than the woman who trains her children at home? Is the pastor who serves abroad any more essential than the one who faithfully leads his people at home? Who is wise enough to estimate which will be the greatest factor in winning the war—the soldiers, the sailors, the statesmen, the munitions workers, the financiers, the physicians, the Y. M. C. A. workers or those who save and give, work, suffer and pray in the homeland?

A letter, recently received from a clear-headed member of the American Army in France, gives expression to a view which many overlook. He is a young college man and a member of a well-known New York family. He is naturally a leader and an independent thinker; above all, he is a devout and practical Christian. He left the best of worldly prospects to enlist in the army that he might serve the cause of freedom and justice. This letter, written to a Christian friend at home who was hoping to enter Y. M. C. A. service abroad, reads in part as follows:

"I'm glad that things have conspired to keep you in the United States, and I hope very much that you will have to stay there permanently. It's a very funny thing how your perspective changes over here. Of course, it's a foregone conclusion that the fighting strength of the army depends on what's done at home. But I've come to feel more and more that the success of the war depends more on what is done at home than all the military victories in the world. In other words, when the war is over will the people be able to take advantage of the openings for good that the war has made?

"There has been a lot of emphasis put on keeping our armies fit, so that they won't be hurt by the war, and there is a tremendous number of people who are abandoning everything to do that work. The great trouble is that only 1-100 of the nation is in the army, and the rest of the 99-100 is nearly forgotten. And what that 99-100 gets out of this war is the important thing. The war is going to be a success or a failure as they learn or miss the lessons of this battle. It's very evident over here in these nations that are fighting. I hope and pray that there will be people at home to guide the nation to the deeper things of life. Those leaders weren't there when I left. At least they hadn't shown themselves, and I honestly think that the greatest work any place today is right at home, helping to bring out those things, and, by the same feeling, I hope that men of vision are kept at home to work there, and for that reason I can't help thinking that it may be a divine Providence that has kept you. So far as I am concerned, I hope it continues to keep you."

Which is the Greatest Work in the World? All service which helps to carry out God's program is his work; and the greatest work for any individual is the work for which God has fitted him, and in the place to which he has called him. The work at home for the soldier, the laborer, the business man, the doctor or the preacher, is equally important with the work abroad. Both need to be done. The question is: Which is the work and what is the place to which God, the great Commander-in-Chief, assigns me? While fathers and older brothers are giving up their lives in the war, it behooves those who remain at home to take up the work of preparing the coming generation of boys and girls for future leadership. These should be better men than those of the past generation, and should not need the awful experience of another war to teach them the value of God's ideals.

Men are prone to seek the service which is most lauded by other men. The greatest, most noble work for any man is that to which God assigns him. If every man and woman were under divine orders, there would be no shortage of workers in any sphere of service.

FACTS WORTH QUOTING

The "Hook-Swinging" ceremony is still sometimes practiced in India, though against British law. It is a form of spectacular self-torture by which the Hindu devotee allows himself to be lifted high above the crowd and suspended for half an hour or more by hooks caught under the muscles of the back. It is a painful method of obtaining merit and a reputation for holiness.

Usurious money lenders are a curse to the farmers of India. Missionaries have started co-operative credit societies to enable the Christians to become independent. Missionaries are also developing schools like Hampton Institute, Virginia, which give an all-around training for life.

Do you realize that the future of woman in Asia will be very greatly influenced by the 200 or more girls from Oriental countries, who are now studying in schools and colleges of the United States? Most of them are preparing to teach in their own lands.

Are medical missions worth while? In the twenty mission hospitals of Korea over 200,000 patients are treated annually, and none go away without having heard the gospel.

Are native churches able to stand alone? Two churches in Madras, India, support two pastors of other mission churches and also help to maintain more than thirty Christian schools.

The only Protestant mission in all French Indo-China, with its five provinces and 18,000,000 people, is that of the Christian and Missionary Alliance of America. These people have characteristics which promise a great future, if they are given the gospel.

Day has dawned for the women of India. A Hindu Widow's Home Association and a Widow Re-Marriage Association have been formed and mark an important advance in the solution of one of India's difficult social problems.

One phase of the Home Mission problem in America is shown by the fact that in Philadelphia every second man or woman in the city was born outside the United States, while half of the native-born had foreign parentage.

The native farmers of North India are being stimulated to adopt scientific methods by means of agricultural exhibitions at which the improved farm products prove a greater attraction than the snake charmers and fakirs.

Burglary in Arabia is punished by tying the thief to a post and whipping him to death. As a result, the crime is almost unknown. A purse dropped in the road will be turned in with contents intact to the chief.

"Referendum and Recall" in Arabia takes the form of assassination of the chief who has failed to satisfy the people by his governmental policy. The leader of the new party then becomes chief.

Hanoi, the capital of Annam, French Indo-China, has one Protestant Christian church for a population of 130,000 Annamese. The first convert was baptized a few years ago. now the church numbers twenty-five.

Book Review

Apropos the C. E. Topic for Nov. 17

There are a number of books that we might discuss under the general topic of Good citizenship and temperance. Books such as, Barker's "The Saloon Problem and Social Reform;" Stelzle's, "The Working Man and Social Problems;" William's, "Alcohol, How It Affects the Individual, the Community, the Race," and many others of equal merit, but I want to lead you to a brief study of Warner's book, "Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem."

To take up the study I want to first name what he terms the sources of the Liquor Institution. There are four, the first he calls the Psycho-Physical, which arises from the human desire to escape from disagreeable states into the agreeable. It was found from experience that alcohol and other narcotics would bring about the desired relief. The next is the money-making scheme or the Economic source. Then follows the one perhaps most powerful, and one most frequently overlooked, its extended use as a means of social enjoyment. Out of such source has grown the name very frequently given the saloon, "the poor man's club." Then the last named and also a very vital source, that which comes from political approval. This last in Warner's estimation is the most inexcusable, and also the one that brings the greatest corruption into the moral life. The four great sources combine in their operations to make the liquor institution what it is today.

In the next place he takes up the discussion of alcohol and health in a very forceful and practical way. Health is the thing most desired. Health both physical and mental, is after all the greatest essential to social well-being and personal happiness. Alcohol and the saloon do not send out such an influence into society that would tend to build up a better condition as concerns the public health and general well-being of humanity, therefore we come with Warner and every other well balanced being to the conclusion that they are of no value to society, but rather a detriment. In this they tend to produce public unsanitary conditions which lead to individual sickness. Along with these come poverty, overwork, neglect, immorality, and the like which infest the public with filth and crime. Great measures have been taken to clean up our sewers and streets when we leave untouched the real source of the filth. As Warner says, "How much more businesslike and scientific that the government should take a hand in removing the source of so vast and preventable an amount of disease and death, physical and mental, as comes annually from intoxicating liquors." This evil should be dealt with in the same way in which we deal with other causes of dangerous diseases.

Leaving this phase let us turn to the thought of the cost of this outrageous drink industry to society in dollars and cents. Does society receive the returns she should for what she pays? Or as we often say, Does the business pay? Especially should this particular question be studied today when we are thinking so much of the cost of things. In a brief chapter Mr. Warner answers very concisely this very question. Follow him and you will find the cost of running this detrimental institution to be overwhelming. He says it is very difficult to obtain any definite estimate of the cost, but comes after a thorough calculation, to put the figures at $1,700,000,000 annually. He goes on to say, "The money thus spent in a single year would dig four parallel Panama canals, one every three months, for a year. It is almost equal to the total gross receipts of all the railroads; nearly six times as great as the tariff, the public cost of the consequences of drink, loss of efficiency in production, health, time, life, care of weakened humanity, and crime, is of course, an amount infinitely larger yet."

Again from an educational standpoint does the book condemn very harshly this institution. He says the saloon is a great public educational institution, influencing the thought, morals, politics, social customs, and ideals of its patrons as its fellow retail stores never do. The saloon is not open only a few hours five days in the week, for a few months a year, but twenty hours a day, six and seven days in the week, 365 days in the year. He shows how its influence counteracts the kind of instruction given in the public schools, how it misleads the new arrivals from foreign shores, and also of the open door it leaves for a large number of grown-ups who have left the public school at an early age.

How true these words, "John Barleycorn is with me because in all the unwitting days of my youth John Barleycorn was accessible, calling me and inviting me on every corner, and on every street between the corners. The pseudo-civilization into which I was born permitted everywhere licensed shops for the sale of soul-poison. The system of life was so organized that I and millions like me—was lured and drawn and driven to the poison shops."

Only a word in closing concerning the Social Ethics of the Saloon. We judge everything by some standard. So we will have to base our judgment of this particular phase of this institution. Again let me quote from the book: "We should judge the saloon by an ethical standard that will permit the greatest possible degree of individual freedom, to would-be user and dealer, conformable to public welfare as a whole, this standard is whether its acts and its product bring the greatest happiness to the greatest number." Does it lead toward or away from this standard? It surely has from its earliest existence turned its back upon any such standard. Then why should it be tolerated? Shall we close this little review with the words from the pen of Henry Van Dyke and strive to lead our lives to the accomplishment of the great task they imply, "There is a loftier ambition than merely to stand high in the world. It is to stoop down and lift mankind a little higher."

THE TIGHTWAD. By Lillian Dean

The first time Jane ever saw him he was coming from the Biology Building with a big pile of books under one arm and an absorbed expression on his face. "That," remarked Ethel, who had just nodded coldly in response to the young fellow's pleasant if absent-minded nod, "is one of the peculiar and one of the least-liked boys in college."

"I thought he looked interesting," said Jane. "I rather like peculiar people myself. I think they're apt to be folks with so much character and so much individuality that they aren't understood."

"Good gracious, Jane, you talk like a professor! What nonsense, anyway! Who in the world wants to be peculiar?"

"I mean it," persisted Jane, half mischievously and half in earnest. "They arn't cut out by the ordinary pattern, and because they aren't just like other people and have a little originality they are called 'peculiar.' I'm peculiar myself," she added calmly.

"Well, you aren't very modest, whatever else you are," teased Ethel. "Now, I know what your real opinion of yourself is at last. You think you have unusual force, individuality, and originality. You certainly do hate yourself, Jane!"

Jane laughed. "I surrender," she said. "Now tell me something about this peculiar and undesirable young man who looks so nice."

"Well, I don't even see anything particularly nice-looking about him. He's so stoop-shouldered, and he goes so shabby. His name is Arnold Travis, and"—

"Not the one they call the 'Tightwad?' exclaimed Jane, surprised.

"The very same, and none other. He's the stingiest thing going. He's well off. I happen to know that he has property in his own name which gives him an income of nearly a hundred dollars a month. I don't suppose there's another boy in the college who has that much. But goodness knows what he does with it. He certainly doesn't spent it on clothes. He refused to contribute to that charity bazaar the girls got up last month, because he said he didn't approve of fashionable charity. He wouldn't join the R. H. S. club because of the expense attached. They asked him when he first came, and he turned them down flat. He lives in the dormitory instead of having rooms at some nice boarding house, as his income would certainly allow. I don't know how many little economies he practices, when there isn't the slightest need for it. And he never was known to give anybody a present. He's a regular miser."

"I can't understand it," puzzled Jane. "He doesn't look the part at all."

"Well, he is, whether he looks it or not. And he was almost insulting to me about that charity bazaar when I asked him to help buy out one table. I ought to have known better than to ask him; but the girls dared me, and I went ahead just to see what he'd say."

"And what did he say?"

"What I told you a few minutes ago. He said that when he contributed to charity he preferred to do so directly and through agencies which knew how to handle the money and that he didn't approve of fashionable charity. I asked him what he meant by fashionable charity, and he said: 'O, this sort of thing. It makes charity a fad. I heard a woman say the other day: "All our best people are going in for charity this season." And now honestly, Miss Neal, aren't you a good deal more interested in making this affair a social success than you are in the charity part of it?'"

"Well, Ethel, I think there's just a whole lot of truth in that, don't you?" said Jane. "What did you say to him?"

"The idea!" exclaimed Ethel indignantly. "You're as bad as he is, Jane. I wouldn't be so cynical for anything. Why, I told him that doubtless he judged other people's motives by his own and didn't give any one credit for a sincere and unselfish purpose."

"Ethel! You didn't say that, did you?"

"I certainly did."

"It was very unkind of you," said Jane warmly. "Poor boy, he must have felt dreadfully snubbed."

"I hope he did, but I fear not," returned her friend callously. "He sort of set his chin—he's got a chin like a rock, anyway—and said: 'On the contrary, I am glad to give credit wherever it is due. But I am sorry to have offended you.' The prissy thing!" Ethel added disgustedly.

"I see I wasted my pity," laughed Jane. "He seems quite able to take care of himself. I think he came off best in that little encounter."

"So do I," admitted Ethel. "That's one reason I don't like him. He's a rude, horrid, stingy thing, and I'll get cross if you take up for him any more."

"Let's talk about something else, then," said Jane, still half teasing and half serious. "I don't want you to get cross, and I've got such a contrary disposition that if we talk about him at all I'll be sure to defend him."

Ethel gave her an exasperated and affectionate little shake. "Crazy kid!" she added. Then she introduced a new topic of conversation, and five minutes afterwards both girls had forgotten all about Arnold Travis.

Two months later Jane met him at a reception given by the Y. W. C. A. "I'm rather surprised to see you here, Mr. Travis," she smiled after acknowledging the introduction.

He raised his eyebrows. "And I'm surprised that you're surprised," he countered. "Why should you be?"

"I've heard a lot about you," she said daringly. "It seems from all reports that you're a very serious sort of person. I didn't expect to meet you at a purely social gathering."

"Reports are misleading," he answered. Then he changed the subject. Jane found that he talked well. He had an alert mind, and he was evidently a hard student. Also the more she studied his face, the harder she found it to believe or to understand all that she had heard about him. For it was not only a sensitive, intelligent young face, but a generous one as well. Jane prided herself on being a student of faces. "And," as she afterwards declared to Ethel, "if that brow and that mouth mean stinginess then I'll never believe that faces show their owners' characters again."

"It's simply your contrary disposition," said Ethel resignedly. "You are bound to like him just because nobody else does. When you are going to see him again?"

"How do you know I'm going to see him again?" laughed Jane.

"Well, you gather up all the freaks in college," declared Ethel. "I naturally supposed you'd adopt this one too." Then she put her arms around her friend. "You're the biggest-hearted person I know," she said warmly. "Lonesome girls and boys and those that other folks pass by find a regular haven in you, Jane. Go right ahead! Maybe you can make this Travis person human before you get through with him..."

During the days that followed, Jane saw Arnold Travis often. He was only a seventeen-year-old freshman, while Jane was a senior and nearly four years older; and one of those friendships, close but entirely unsentimental, which can mean so much to a boy when the girl is a high-minded young woman of fine principles and ideals, sprang up between them. Arnold had never had a sister, and he had never before realized what he had missed. His mother he could not remember. She had died when he was only eight. Jane was supplying the only real feminine companionship he had ever had, and under its influence little graces which he had lacked before began to blossom out in him. He grew more careful of his dress and his personal appearance. He began dimly to suspect that the gracious little courtesies of life which he had scorned as meaningless trifles were of some account, since they made things sweeter and pleasanter.

One spring day he came to walk with Jane timidly bearing some roses. Jane pinned them on her white dress, and as they walked away a careless voice, raised too high, floated down to them from the second story: "Well, of all things! If old Tightwad hasn't loosened up to the extent of sending Jane flowers! It's a miracle."

Jane saw the color rush to her friend's face. "So that's what they call me!" he said after a moment's silence.

"Didn't you know it before?" asked Jane pityingly.

"No. No one ever had the nerve to call me that to my face. I knew they thought I was stingy, but"— "I don't think you're stingy, said Jane.

"Thank you." He walked along with bent head for a moment. Then he burst out, "Look here, I'm going to try to justify myself and explain my attitude, because your opinion means a lot to me. It's true I have a lot more money than most of the boys or girls here, and I reckon I spend less than most any of them too. But I don't believe—I wasn't brought up to believe—that it's right to spend money wastefully just because you've got it. I don't believe in all these luxuries and self-indulgences. They make a fellow soft. I use barely enough of my income to live comfortably. About one-half of the rest I bank, because I may need it some day when I want to build a home or start in business or something, and the other half I give away."

"Give away?" echoed Jane in surprise. "To whom?"

"To different charities."

"I knew they were wrong about you," said Jane enthusiastically. "I'd like to pat myself on the back for having sense enough to know it when no one else did! Why, you're fine!"

The boy blushed. Although he was in many ways overserious and old beyond his years, in others he seemed even less than seventeen. He was far less self-possessed and sophisticated than his college mates, and Jane's compliment embarrassed him.

"All the same, you know," Jane went on, "you're not entirely right. Dressing properly, for instance, isn't wasting money, and neither is an occasional concert or lecture or something like this," and she touched the flowers at her belt. "There's such a thing as being a little bit too stern in your view of life and missing lots of harmless little pleasures that you might have. The lighter side of life must not be entirely neglected. I don't want you to change very greatly, nor to give any less to charities, nor to be extravagant. But when I come back here to visit a year from now, I want to hear another nickname for you."

He met her eyes with a shy little smile. "I'm learning," he said. "I just needed a sister, I guess."—The Visitor.

A CIRCUS DAY ADVENTURE

By Irving Palfrey

The circus came late that year. Usually it came in the spring or early summer, but the circus has to be late somewhere, and it was October before the great day came that the boys and girls of Bellburg and the region near that city had been waiting for. That is how it happened that Cecil Crosby had the adventure that he will not forget for a long time to come.

Neil probably would not have had any particular adventure if the circus had come at any other season than potato-digging time. He lived on a farm not far from the city, and help was so scarce that his father needed him in the fields all the time that he could spare from school. And the circus was coming on a Saturday in potato-digging time! The thing looked dark when he went to his father to talk it over.

"We can go to the circus in the evening," said his father. "How will that do?"

"That will be fine," said Neil, "but it will be hard to miss the parade in the morning."

"Perhaps we can manage that," said Neil's father. "I must deliver a hundred bushels of potatoes to Knight & Quincy in Bellburg, and we can drive in with a load on the morning of circus day."

Of course Neil was happy at that arrangement, and he counted himself the luckiest boy in the world to have a father who could plan things so well.

Circus day came at last, and Neil and his father left the farm bright and early, seated on a big load of potatoes in bags. Prince and Polly, the two gray horses that pulled the load, were in fine fettle—"almost like circus horses themselves," as Mr. Crosby said when they wanted to trot right up a long hill.

They unloaded the potatoes at the warehouse of Knight & Quincy and then drove into a street that led into the avenue down which the grand parade was going to pass.

"We'll be all ready to hustle for home as soon as the parade goes by," said Neil's father, "and then we can have a whole afternoon in the field to give us an appetite for the circus itself in the evening."

From the high seat of the wagon they had a fine view of the avenue near by. It was roped off to keep automobiles and teams from it, and policemen stood at every corner. The sidewalks were crowded with people. Near the wagon a man was selling toy balloons. Neil bought one and tied the string to the wagon seat so that the balloon floated above his head. A little farther off another man was selling pop corn and peanuts, and Neil's father got a supply of both for them to eat while they waited.

A few minutes later Mr. Crosby crossed the street to speak to a man whom he knew. Neil held the reins, and wondered why Prince and Polly were not more excited.

Pretty soon there was the blare of a band in the distance and all the people pressed forward and craned their necks. From the wall in front of a big house near by a dozen boys and girls began to call, "It's coming! It's coming!"

The parade was indeed coming down the avenue. Nearer and nearer came the music of the bands, and a moment later men and women, seated on prancing horses and bearing fluttering banners in many colors, rode by. Behind them, stretching as far as Neil could see, were great chariots that glittered in the sunlight, open cages of wild animals, long lines of elephants, camels and horses, more bands and more riders.

Prince and Polly began to take more interest as the vanguard of riders drew near and the music of the bands grew louder. They pricked up their ears and pranced a bit. Neil held the reins tighter and looked hard for his father. Mr. Crosby was lost in the crowd. Neil could see him nowhere. Prince and Polly became more restless. Prince reared and Polly leaped forward. Neil pulled on the reins and spoke to the horses in quieting tones. Where could his father be? Neil was not frightened, but he had to give so much attention to the nervous span that he could hardly enjoy the parade.

Suddenly Prince and Polly began to act worse. It was just as the first of the many big elephants was passing by the head of the street. Perhaps the smell of the elephants frightened the horses. At any rate, they leaped forward, and the crowd began to give way on all sides. Neil tugged desperately at the reins, but that made no difference. A few plunges, and the horses had carried the wagon right through the rope across the head of the street and into the avenue itself. Women screamed and men shouted wildly. Several men tried to seize the bridles of the terrified animals, but none got a firm grip. In the twinkling of an eye Prince and Polly had carried Neil right by the wall where the boys and girls were watching the parade, and were running madly down the avenue.

The runaway horses dashed in the direction from which the parade was coming, and by strange good fortune—partly because the avenue was clear except for the parade—they did not hit any other team or run over any person. On and on they ran. Policemen rushed and waved their arms, but quickly leaped out of danger. Neil, clinging to the reins all the time, got a glimpse out of the corner of his eye of golden chariots, open cages and fluttering banners.

What would happen? Would the horses tire at last? Would some one be able to stop them? Or would they crash headlong into something? Neil wondered while that wild ride continued. It seemed a long time, but it was really only a few minutes. Then Prince and Polly turned sharply from the avenue into an open space where there were great tents and many men and wagons. It was the circus field. The wheels struck a pole that was lying on the ground. The wagon careened dizzily and Neil flew headlong from his seat—straight into a pile of hay that had been unloaded there for the circus horses. If he had hunted all over that circus field, or all over Bellburg, he could not have found a softer place to land.

Men rushed to seize the panting horses, and Neal crawled, a bit dazed, from the pile of hay. A little later his father arrived, much more frightened than Neil had been.

"It was my fault," he said. "I should not have left the team."

"Well, Prince and Polly and I are all right," said Neil bravely, "and we made almost as much excitement as the circus parade did."

Then they drove slowly home, to spend the afternoon in the potato field before coming back to see the wonderful show in the big tent in the evening. Do you wonder that that was a circus day that Neil will always remember?—Youth's Companion.

EVENING HOUR STORY

By Blanche Silver

One day as Doris wandered in the garden she spied a little lady bug crawling on the stem of a bush.

"You needn't say it!" exclaimed Mrs. Lady Bug, waving her feet at Doris. "Everybody tells me the same thing and I know better."

"Why, what in the world are you talking about?" laughed Doris, who was surprised to find a lady bug that could talk, "I haven't said a word."

"Certainly not," laughed Mrs. Ladybug, "but you were getting ready to say, 'Lady-bug, Lady-bug, fly away home; your house is on fire and your children will burn.' Every one who sees me says the same silly thing, and I know better. Both my children are safe. One curled up in his cradle and the other out fighting for the flower fairies."

"Then no one can frighten you, can they?" laughed Doris.

"Not that way," replied Mrs. Ladybug, "but nevertheless I must be going home. Sure! Come along if you care to," she laughed, as she saw Doris was about to ask. Waving one of her feet around, Mrs. Ladybug touched one of her black spots on her back and muttered something under her breath.

Immediately Doris became so tiny Mrs. Ladybug looked as large as a horse beside her.

"Jump upon my back and we'll be there before you know it," cried Mrs. Ladybug. When Doris climbed up, away she flew over the garden wall and settled on the red-top growing in the meadows.

"No wonder they say your house is on fire!" exclaimed Doris, looking at the red-top where Mrs. Ladybug made her cozy home. "The whole meadow seems to be on fire."

"So it does," laughed Mrs. Ladybug. "But here comes my youngest. I wonder how the flower fairy army is."

Over the red-tops a queer-looking creature came crawling toward them. Doris gathered her feet under her dress.

"Oh, don't be frightened," laughed Mrs. Ladybug. "That's my youngest baby."

Doris could hardly believe that such an ugly, lizardlike creature, crawling on six legs and waving a blue and red tail in the air, could possibly belong to this quite pretty little lady-bug.

"He's ugly, but so is a caterpillar, sighed Mrs. Ladybug. "He's the best fighter the flower fairies have. He eats up more plant-destroying insects than any fellow in the army."

Doris didn't doubt the fact when she saw his big mouth, and she kept her feet under her dress.

"When he's a wee bit older he'll go to sleep in a little cradle like this," said Mrs. Ladybug, pointing to a chrysalis shell hanging on a red-top stem near them. "Then after a nap lasting about two weeks he'll come out a dear little lady-bug."

Just then the end in the shell-like cradle opened and out tumbled a dear little ladybug, the great big black dots looking like ink spots on its bright reddish brown back. Mamma Ladybug seemed to be extremely proud of the black spots and Doris asked her what they were there for.

"Wishing spots," whispered Mrs. Ladybug. "If you can cover up one of those black spots without touching the brown back, and wish, your wish is bound to come true."

Doris laughed and covering one of the black dots with her finger, wished herself big, and down she tumbled into the grasses, a great big girl again.

Doris jumped up and, gathering Mrs. Ladybug in her hand, tried to cover one of her dots, but dear me, Doris' finger was so big it almost hid Mrs. Ladybug herself.

Mrs. Ladybug laughed merrily and, taking her babies by the hand, ran away, leaving Doris staring after them, a puzzled expression on her pretty face.—Selected.

BESIDE THE OCEAN

By John Clair Minot

Do you see the ocean
Under the summer skies,
The ocean that sparkles white and blue
  Where the dim horizon lies?
Or perhaps the rolling surges,
  Sweeping into the bay,
To break in colors of diamond light
  Over the rocks in spray?

I see the godly Neptune
Driving his horses by,
Speeding his chariot over the sea,
  Holding his trident high!
And closer in by the headland,
  Where the surf is flashing fair,
I see the laughing mermaids throng,
  Combing their streaming hair!

News From the Field

Notice of Postponement

Owing to conditions relative to the protracted continuance of the influenza epidemic and the press of church work that will come with the resumption of regular activities, it has been deemed wise to postpone the announced Ohio Conference Rally and Bible Institute at Ashland. The program, however, will be kept intact in the hope of finding a more opportune time at some not far distant date.

We deeply regret the necessity of this action, but believe, with a number of the pastors who have been consulted in this matter, that it will be the best for all concerned. We trust that the Ohio pastors and churches will give themselves unreservedly to the work of the conference, stressing particularly the goals of the Four-Year Program. We must break the record of one Banner and three Star congregations. These with others should enter the Front line position.

J. A. GARBER.

Indiana Pastors

May we not ask this favor for the isolated child of God who is not permitted as those who have their churches and pastors and who feast on the blessed Holy Word and who can twice yearly partake of that uplifting of the soul's redeeming love to him who knows his true, believing and sincere children though isolated from his flock. We would sincerely appreciate the early announcements from our Indiana churches of their fall communion services so that some of them may be attended by those of us who are isolated from the church. So often the announcement is made when it is too late to get to the church.

Baltimore, Maryland

It was expected before October passed that Baltimore would be able to report a place for public worship. But the committee appointed by Brother Horace Kolb has failed, so far, in finding a place. The housing capacity of Baltimore has been tired to the fullest extent since the war is on, and it is with the greatest difficulty that a house can be rented. There are houses for sale, but the sign "For rent" is not to be seen in this locality of Arlington. Any kind of a building is therefore difficult to rent. We cannot report progress in numbers from the outside, so long as we can only meet in the parlor of a home.

Here again is where the Home Department of the Sunday school is the only method of work left, and it is bringing results. One woman accepted Christ yesterday, and would like to have her children come to our Sunday school, but we cannot increase our number as we are now located. We were just in the midst of this effort to reach the few families when the epidemic struck Baltimore harder, today's paper states, than any other large city. At almost every other house where I called they were stricken with double pneumonia, and no nurse. People were afraid I would carry it, and I had to stop my calling. I remembered my diploma from the Philadelphia School of Nurses, and I offered my services, to our own people first. All our people are recovering, for which we are thanking the Great Healer. We started again the first Sunday in November with about 30 present at the Sunday school, with an offering of over $4.00, Brother Williams' family of Warsaw, Ind., were all there, and we expect him to take my place in teaching while I am helping in the Ridgely revival. This will give the Building Committee another chance or time to secure a place of worship. Will the Brethren please pray for the two places, Ridgely and Baltimore, and thus have a share in the joy of having the new converts. They are waiting at both places, some waiting for baptism.

The Brethren Missionary

The October issue oof The Brethren Missionary is late in its publication, we are sorry to say. But two weeks of the "flu," delay in getting all reports from the secretary, and a desire for more definite news from our workers in Africa (which just came), have combined to delay this issue. This issue is our Annual report and contains all reports of cash receipts to date, etc., together with Conference reports, and reports from the fields. It should be in the hands of every member of the Brethren church. It will be sent out to subscribers and all members of the society just as soon as the over-worked office at Ashland can get it printed.

The subscription price is 25c a year. It is published quarterly. Money sent me to Long Beach, California, will reach me all right as usual; but if any one wants to save a little time, if it is sent any time before Christmas to my temporary address below, it will also reach me all right.

The Evangelist Ministers to the Sick

Away from friends and home on a hospital bed, recovering from a severe surgical operation, where the quarantine was strict yet not strict enough to bar the U. S. mail, the Brethren Evangelist found its way to me and I feel that it is my duty to let Brother E. M. Cobb know what his article, "The Land of the Fig Tree Sign," of October 20 did for at least one isolated soul. It seemed my heart was already prepared for it, because I had just been reading the Genesis account of God's covenant with Abraham and the history of the "Peculiar People," always interesting to me. I read till I became so absorbed in the article, I entirely forgot all my sorrows, all my trials and the mental shadow under which I had been laboring, and just drank it in to the finish, unconscious of my surroundings. And even yet, though aroused to my real condition, I have the sweet influence of that article.

Could those who can realize the blessing such articles are to those whom they least think there would be more such.

MARY A. SNYDER,
Glover Gap, Maryland.

Pryse, Kentucky

For about four weeks I helped on the farm at Riverside, and was then called home to help care for the sick. A number of families were down, and I did their chores and acted as nurse and cook, and I found that a woman is harder to please with cooking than a man is.

The first families I helped improved somewhat, and I was called to help other families, for the epidemic is raging, with 2,000 cases in Estill county.

As I go from place to place I remember when Jesus was on earth he had no home, but he also went from place to place, ministering to the sick and teaching his beautiful lessons. While he had no home of his own, yet many homes were glad to open their doors and receive him because of the good he was doing, and his services more than repaid them for the entertainment they gave him. We can have Jesus in our homes today just as surely as the people did while he was here upon the earth.

Report of Indiana Brethren Sunday School Association 1917-1819

Our National Association has prepared a Standard of Excellence and has asked that the schools of the brotherhood strive to reach them and get Front Line recognition. It is well to have such standards before us in order to get better results. Every superintendent and pastor should have it as their ambition to bring their school up to the standard.

These standards are given us after great deliberation on the part of our National Officers and I think in order to be thoroughly Brethren that it is just as essential that an effort be made to reach them as it is to observe the cardinal doctrines of the church.

The standard is no wild fancy of dreamers; it is reasonable and can be attained by any school in the brotherhood. In some Indiana schools not much effort has been made, seemingly, because leaders are very indifferent or think they have too great a handicap to overcome. No greater fallacy could be entertained. It may take a year or two to accomplish it in some instances. It requires a lot of nursing, advocating, urging, almost to the point of coercion, sometimes, in order to get the support from the school that the leaders need in order to accomplish it.

Workers in schools that are not Front Line should have copies of the Standard of Excellence and bend every effort toward attaining the standards required. If you have problem that seem too difficult to handle, write me and I will help you or cite you to some of the National officers who will be able to do so.

There were 40 Indiana schools reported in the Brethren Annual and one new one organized soon after its publication. I sent a letter to the superintendent or pastor of each school, asking that an addressed and stamped card be checked and returned to me that the status of every school might be known and then efforts made to strengthen the weak points that the goal of 75 per cent of the schools Front Line might be reached.

Only 25 cards were returned and one of them reported a school closed because of lack of attendance. So the report below is based on 24 schools out of 40 active schools. Just why more schools did not report is a mystery. Several Front Line schools and others; with prominent pastors of the brotherhood in charge, were among those that did not report. Twelve schools were confident of reaching Front Line, 4 would try, 3 were doubtful and 5 answered No. From the recapitulation of all cards returned, some points were left blank, only four schools, Elkhart, Goshen, Nappanee and North Liberty, answered every point with "Yes." Quite a few answered "Yes" to all but one and in most cases one of the last was the one to receive the negative answer.

This hut was erected in the Scotch Highlands to meet the needs of these men.

The Awakener is a monthly paper issued by the Indiana International Association, and is furnished free, one copy for every dollar contributed to Indiana International work. It is a very helpful little paper and should be read by every superintendent and as many of his workers as can be interested. It will be of great help to get schools in line for Brethren Front Line recognition as well as International. In order to conform to Postal laws, money sent to International work must be placed in an envelope sent out by the County Secretary and in that way a portion of each dollar contributed is set aside as a subscription. Otherwise, it cannot be so counted, and your school misses the help the paper will give if conscientiously read.

I am glad that so many superintendents read the Evangelist and I am a firm believer that when the "Evangelist in Every Brethren Home" campaign is fully realized by our Brother Teeter and his associates, that it will be much easier for Sunday schools as well as churches to work in close harmony with the National Conference's suggestions and recommendations.

If there is a worker who has read my article and wishes to inform himself on this Standard of Excellence, a copy can be obtained by writing me or Brother Albert Trent, Johnstown, Pa. Specify the number you can use in your school and they will be forthcoming. Why not write today? Let's have Indiana "Go over the top" next year with Front Line schools. If there is any question confronting your school, I will gladly give you the benefit of my limited experience or put you in touch with some National officer who can. I covet the hearty co-operation of every superintendent and his pastor during the next year. Let us work together for better Sunday schools that the Master's name may be glorified and his gospel be spread as never before.

Our Dead

BATES.—Earl C. Bates was born March 9, 1890 and passed away at his late home in Carleton, Nebraska, on October 25, 1918.

His death was caused by Spanish influenza with lobar pneumonia complications. Besides a wife and little daughter, he leaves a father, mother, three sisters and four brothers to mourn their loss. Brothe Bates was a member of the Methodist church and had always lived a consistent Christian life. May those who are left to mourn be comforted in their hour of sadness. Brief services at the home by the writer.

J. D. KEMPER.

HEADRICK.—Iza Ethel Headrick, daughter of George C. and Annie Tombaugh was born in Miami county, Indiana October 18, 1886 and departed this life at her home near Gilead, Indiana, October 9, 1918, aged 31 years 11 months and 20 days.

Her death followed an illness that extended over a period of 18 months. She was the second of a family of 12 children to answer the Master's call. Mrs. Headrick was a member of the Methodist church at Fort Wayne, Indiana. She united with that church in 1910. Services were conducted by the writer at her home.

C. A. STEWART.

BLASIER.—Lydia M. Blasier, was born at Louisville, Ohio, December 20, 1887; died at Syracuse, N. Y., October 10, 1918. She was formerly Lydia Schwab and a faithful member and active worker of the Brethren church up to the time of her marriage to Ralph H. Blasier, when they established their home at Syracuse. She leaves to mourn her departure besides her husband and infant daughter, her mother, Mrs. Anna Schwab and five sisters and three brothers.

MOHN.—Ray, son of brother and sister Edward Mohn was born February 1, 1910 and died of pneumonia, October 15, 1918. Little Ray was a faithful member of the Elementary Sunday school and was regular in attendance at church services. Besides father and mother, there is a little sister, Hazel to mourn his absence from the home circle.

MOORE—Arthur, born June 5, 1889, died October 16, 1918, of pneumonia. He was a foundryman employed by a Canton foundry, but lived in Louisville. Private funeral from the house. He leaves a wife and daughter, besides father and mother, four brothers and two sisters.

Funerals for all the above conducted by
GEO. S. BAER.

WALTER.—Elder Loyd A. Walter died October 16, 1918, of pneumonia following an attack of influenza. He was a member of the McKee Brethren church. He was just in the prime of life and we thought he had a bright future. He was ordained to the ministry May 12, 1918 by the writer assisted by Elder W. C. Benshoff, of Altoona. He was a consecrated Christian and an influential man in the church and community and will be greatly missed. He was large hearted, accommodating and sympathetic, always ready to lead a helping hand. Brother Walter was a great Bible student and a fearless preacher. It makes a gap in the work at the McKee church that will be hard to fill. May the Lord raise up some one to take his place. Funeral services were conducted by the writer assisted by Elders John Furry, of Martinsburg, W. C. Benshoff, of Altoona and Jacob Snyder of the Menonite church, Roaring Spring. May the Lord comfort the bereft family.

DELOZIER.— Alice Delozier was born March 22, 1878 and died August 1, 1918 aged 40 years, 4 months and 8 days. She is greatly missed as she was a faithful, earnest and a thoroughly devoted Christian and her sudden demise was a shock to the community. She was a member of the McKee Brethren church for quite a number of years and lived a consistent Christian life. Services by the writer.

DELOZIER.—Mrs. Ida Delozier, wife of brother Harve Delozier, died of pneumonia following an attack of influenza. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, children and a large circle of friends. Brother Delozier has our sympathy and we pray the Lord to sustain him in this severe trial. Services conducted by Elder Hoover assisted by the writer.

partner with a man in ousting another? Two careers are ruined by such a procedure. Yours and the man's whose place you have usurped. And I am persuaded that this is true whether it is an unfair business deal, or winning a social or political position by any sort of false pretense, or accepting a "call" that displaces a worthy brother without cause. I still insist the farther I go in this consideration that it does matter what one does.

Oh, my Brethren and Sisters, Let us awake to the real tasks of life. Let us at them with the best endeavors and the most intense enthusiasm and the finest personal equipment possible for us at life's present stage. To the youth there are now dawning inestimable opportunities; opportunities and therefore compensations for living and achieving such as never were dreamt of before. Oh, Youth of the Brethren church awake! And to those of us older grown, grown to fifty or sixty or seventy, let us awake and at the task before us. Our day is shorter and our setting sun will all too soon be gilt in its glow. Therefore we must do something worth while and that now. Let us yet while life remains plow a field, bake a loaf of bread, send a "word of Jesus" to Africa or South America, bless a little child, magnify Jesus,—and make it our BEST PIECE OF WORK. For it will matter what we have done when the sun of our day sets.

Thanks Be Unto God

If ever there was a time for thanksgiving it is now. If ever there was a year when God's providence was kind it is this year. What Christian heart can take account of the events of the present and not be made to sing with Paul, "Thanks be unto God who always causeth us to triumph in Christ. There have been times of disappointment and discouragement, but not now. There have been times, even earlier in this very year when it was hard to lift the heart high enough to sing. The clouds of defeat and failure hung black and threatening. Misery and bloodshed seemed to have no end except in surrender and slavery. Appetite and greed held the lash over temperance and decency, while crime and drunkenness stalked abroad through the land, spending their fury upon individuals, homes and communities. In those days, when the battles raging were many and the outcome was still uncertain, it was no easy task to keep calm enough and confident enough to rehearse the song of victory. Those were dark days; even the stoutest hearts were quaking, and they have not gone many moons. But the darkness of those days has greatly disappeared and the star of hope has come from behind the clouds. The gloom and chill of winter have changed to the warmth and promise of spring. There is every evidence that a new era of peace and good will, of order and decency, of temperance and righteousness is dawning upon the earth. Things that are transpiring at this very moment make it unmistakably certain that God is in his heavens and is vindicating his might and truth. He is giving victory to the champions of his law and having mercy upon those who keep his commandments. He has caused defeat to overtake those who disregarded his law and their wicked designs to come to naught. Thanks be unto God, for the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous and his ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.

Even the wretchedly deceived and wrongly schooled German people have great reason to rejoice that their fruitless war is over. They were sick of the havoc they had wrought and miserable in the enforced development of their brutality. And in a generation, if it is not already true, they will thank God that their unworthy cause was lost. They will see then that it meant freedom for themselves as well as for the rest of the world—freedom from a philosophy that was vicious, from a tyrant who looked upon his fellow-countrymen as mere tools with which to realize his ambition for world dominion, and from a war Gott who made the world their enemies but in the crisis was unable to deliver. They will thank the true God that through the shock of war he caused the scales to fall from their eyes so that they were enabled to see him not as a mighty war God, but a Father of human kind making brothers of all men.

All men may well unite in one grand song of rejoicing that the terrible world war has ended. For with it has ended its waste and destruction, its cruelty and ravages, its bloodshed and human slaughter. War work has changed to peace work and war bonds to peace bonds. Instead of contributing to war charities we will now be privileged to contribute to peace charities—to home welfare, healing the sick, relieving the suffering, caring for the feeble and evangelizing and Christianizing the whole wide world in Christ's name. Thanks be unto God.

Let us thank God also for the great victories the temperance movement has won in various states throughout the Union, especialy in Ohio, and for the fact that the saloon is fast becoming an outlaw throughout the earth. The church of Christ has long been unmistakably certain that it's most bitter and outspoken enemy is the legalized saloon. The Brethren church has been a pioneer of this idea. As far back as 1818, the Annual meeting declared that no one who brewed, distilled or sold liquor could be a member of the Brethren church. There has never been any compromise. The whole world is rapidly swinging into a position of unequivocal opposition to the liquor traffic. And now must our beloved church stand more gallantly firm and push the fight more aggressively than ever before. And soon we shall be able to thank God not only for a "dry Ohio," but for a saloonless nation as well, and in the not far distant future, for a saloonless world.

Thanks be unto God for the dethronement of autocracy and the enthronement of the people's rule. Democracy makes the people individually and collectively responsible for the conduct of themselves and their fellowmen. The more the people are made to feel individual responsibility the more readily do they seek Divine aid and more directly and certainly can God speak to and rule over them. Democratic principles are the development of Christian ideals, and it is only through the operation of such principles that Christian people can realize what is asserted concerning them by the writer of the Hebrews, Ye are kings and priests unto God. Let us praise God for this coming victory.

Thank God also that the theory that "might makes right" is being crushed, that right is being placed on the throne and brute force is being stripped of his power and brought low. Thank him that selfishness is being made dishonorable for the nation as for the individual, and that it has been clearly set forth that not for gain of territory or power has the strong arm of our great nation been stretched forth, but solely in the interest of human welfare. And thank God that the narrowness of ignorance and partial vision is fast passing away and rapidly being made inexcusable, that the former rigidly intolerant and cruelly uncharitable attitude of men of conflicting and circumscribed views is being mellowed and broadened by fuller light and greater love. Prejudice and bigotry, suspicion and ill-will have ever grown out of half truths and partial visions. But when men have been enlightened by God's truth they have ceased to be wise in their own conceits and have been freed from intolerance and ill-will. And if the truth shall make you free ye shall be free indeed. Yea, in all these things we have been or are being made more than conquerors through him that loved us. Thanks be unto God who always causeth us to triumph in Christ.

From the Editor's View-Point

Weighed and Wanting

While Monday, November eleventh, was a great day of rejoicing in all America because of the signing of the armistice which brought all hostilities between the German and Allied armies to a close yet there was just enough wrong in the life of the American people to cast a slight shadow upon the otherwise brilliant events of the day.

While factories voluntarily closed down for the day and schools dismissed the children from their studies and many of the stores and business places closed their doors for a period of the day which was devoted to parades and patriotic demonstrations, yet there was one business in Ohio that was regarded as a menace to the joyousness of the day and for the safety of the people, the men and women, the boys and the girls that might appear upon the streets of our cities, the state board that has control of this business sent out word to all the county boards that these places of business should be closed at noon.

Factories might be closed and stores might join in the closing arrangements in order to help in the demonstrations of the day but not for the protection of the crowds that would appear on the streets, only one business in America has been found dangerous to the welfare of the people to the extent that its doors must be ordered closed on great occasions, and that is the liquor business.

For years the brewers and distillers and the retail liquor dealers have been telling us that the saloon is necessary to the welfare of the American people, but on Monday, November eleven, nineteen hundred and eighteen the Ohio Liquor License Board declared that they are a menace to CROWDS and ordered all saloons in the state to close at noon for the safety of the people. Unquestionably, had not these orders gone forth, that day would have been one of the greatest harvest days the saloons of Ohio ever saw, but since the voters of the state declared only a week earlier that the saloon would no longer be tolerated in the state even the Liquor Board recognized the fact that the saloons of Ohio have been weighed in the scales of human experience and have been found wanting and after receiving the death wounds on Tuesday, November five we have an idea this closing order on the day of the great celebration caused them to turn toward the Liquor Board and in the words of the great Caesar exclaim, "Et tu Brute!"

Modified Mottoes

The value of proverbs, mottoes for life, etc., has long been recognized by people who think, but that many of these proverbs and these mottoes must be revised occasionally as the years come and go may not have dawned upon upon the minds of some of us as yet. While truth is eternal and in itself will never change yet the methods of applying truth to the problems of life have undergone many changes and they will continue to do so just as long as man makes any progress in his own development.

One of the powers peculiar to man that distinguishes him from the lower orders of animal life is his power to think and to reason upon abstract things. That the dumb animals think is not to be denied and there may be times when they seem to have limited reasoning powers as some contend, but we have never yet seen the claim made that they can think or reason upon abstract subjects, this power belongs to man alone. But as man possesses many powers that he does not always use wisely it is not to be wondered at if sometimes he fails to use his power to think to the best advantage; and as he needs physical training along intelligent lines to make the most of his physical powers so he also needs mental training to make the most of his mental powers. And as speech is the most common expression of thought it is very appropriate to follow the old adage, "Think twice before you speak," but this is one of the adages or proverbs that have been modified and we are now told that it is just as important to think wisely before speaking as it is to think twice. Multiplying thoughts does not always add to their effectiveness.

A Timely Defense

Now that the fighting days of the armies of the world are considered to be over (for at least a generation) it might be a good idea to defend some things that do not call for shot and shell, for aeroplanes or submarines for their defense, but simply right thinking and right judgment of others.

One of the most commonly used and at the same time one of the most abused words in the American language is EVERYBODY. The word has been so corrupted in its meaning that it has come to be substituted for the more proper terms, many or the majority. Perhaps this corrupted meaning of the word has never been brought into greater use than during the past eighteen months in America and in connection with the campaigns of many kinds and many descriptions that have been waged and that are still being waged to help bear the expense of America's part in the great world war.

That the people have generally been benefitted by these campaigns is not to be denied, but that because some have felt unable, in spite of their strong desires, to contribute to some or all of these causes, they have been disloyal is not true. The New York Times recently said, "Everyone has spent money freely during the last four years, and every one, wage earners included, would profit by retrenchment." This statement is so generally true that it has come to be believed to be universally true which is not the case. While many people have profited because of the war industries that sprang up during these years there have been many others, employers as well as employees, who have had no part in this war profit and to meet the requirements the changed conditions in the industrial world have thrust upon them they have undergone the hardest experience of all their lives. The great prosperity that has come to America has not been and is not now a universal prosperity. There are millions of people in America, and the writer will include himself as one of those millions, who have never passed through severer financial straits than they have during the last two or three years. But it is not our purpose to personally defend this large class of American people as our object in making these observations is to call attention to the splendid and timely defense made on the editorial page of the last number of The Youth's Companion. The editor asks the question, "Is everyone rich?" and then proceeds to make it clear to all that we have misjudged many of our best people and that when we have branded some of our neighbors as disloyal when they failed to buy war savings stamps, Liberty bonds, etc., or may have failed to make as large contributions to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and other similar funds, we have passed judgment without knowing any of the facts of the case. The earnings of millions of people are perilously low in times of peace when the necessities of life can be bought for peace prices and in times like these they are left very near the border line of genteel starvation. This editorial declares that in matters of retrenchment and substituting these people can give Mr. Hoover odds and beat him at the game. It is only fair to grant this class recognition.

Contributions

Thanksgiving, 1918

BY J. A. GARBER, ASHLAND, OHIO

Halleluiah! Let the people praise the Lord! Let all the people praise the Lord for his wonderful goodness to the children of men!!!

Not every one, of course, has the same reason for gratitude. One has enjoyed perfect health, while another has had to struggle with infirmities of the flesh. Some persons have been engaged with activities that yielded a full measure of increase, while others labored with a like zeal only to see their toil go unrequitted by reason of conditions over which they had no control. Certain family circles have been allowed to remain intact despite the demands of war, while others have been broken—many of which will never be reunited in this life. Although different situations awaken different emotions and evoke different reactions, there is no one, however, severe his trial, keen his disappointment, great his loss, but who can find some ground for sincere gratitude at this wonderful Thanksgiving of 1918.

Viewed from a material standpoint this year of grace has been one of bounteous gifts. Remembering the exacting demands of last year and knowing that they would be thrust upon us in multiplied force not a few persons approached the recurring seasons with evident fear. They asked, even if inaudibly, how can we produce enough foodstuffs for ourselves and allies? If our crops fail through the presence and ravages of numerous droughts, destructive storms, invading insects, what beneficent hand will supply our needs? These and kindred questions perturbed the spirits of the calmest men. To avert, at least in part, the disastrous circumstances which such conditions would entail all were besought to economize (sometimes required) and to produce. Many persons responded, prepared the soil, planted the seed and cultivated the growing crops. Today most of them rejoice with the fruitage of their labor. And the Giver of all good is not to be forgotten.

"Our heartful thanks we offer Thee,
Our Father God,
For all the blessings full and free,
By Thee bestowed.

For the year's great prosperity,
Our praise ascends,
And sweeter comforts lent by Thee,
A home and friends.

The full and plenteous harvest store,
And fruitage fair;
All with unnumbered tokens more,
Thy love declare."

But the greater reasons for thanksgiving are to be found in the realm of the ideal. The origin and history of Thanksgiving in America testify to the dominance of a fine idealism among our forefathers. Threatened with starvation from which they were spared through the goodness of God and menaced by the marauder from whom they had to protect themselves with firearms they were not deterred in voicing their thanks to the unseen Presence that had led them across a perilous sea to a promised land where they might worship him according to the dictates of conscience.

Intoxicated with the pleasurable delights of an unprecedented, prosperous development the latter generations seemed to be a nation of pleasure-mongers and money-grabbers. We were said to be possessed with a materialistic and mercenary spirit. This conviction was strengthened with the outbreak and progress of the late world-war. Little appreciating our apparently obscure ideals those responsible for the terrible holocaust consoled (rather deceived) themselves with the thought that America was too busy making money to concern herself with a piece of disinterested service. Consequently they received our remonstrances and warning with utter indifference and open defiance. Then came the report of the sinking of the Lusitania and the die was cast. What we had hoped to be spared became, in the judgment of our best statesmen, an inevitable necessity, and the President announced that a state of war existed between this country and Germany. Immediately the forces of democracy which is essentially pacific were converted into the instruments of carnage. For a time the tide of battle seemed in doubt, but earlier than many thought we could reasonably expect the enemy was outwitted and forced to surrender. Believing that the struggle represented a conflict of opposing ideals we are now called upon to return grateful thanks to God for his vindication of his ideal of right which has triumphed over the forces of might. The kings of autocracy have succumbed to the peoples of democracy. Civilization is saved and Christianity is permitted to continue her redemptive work with brighter promise.

Instrumental Music in Worship

H. B. LEHMAN

Some time ago a Christian minister, Campbellite of the old order sect, came into our city and held a revival meeting. One night he announced that he would on a certain night tell the people why there was a division in their church. So, of course, the writer wanted to hear that, and he did. Well, musical instruments was the cause. He said that it was left to David to corrupt the worship of God by introducing instrumental music in the worship of God, and for that reason the Philistines came down and took the ark of God and it never got back.

It so happened there was an elder of the same faith, but not of the same church, sitting by the writer in the congregation. When the meeting was closed the Elder and the writer shook hands and the writer said to the elder: "The preacher did not tell all about David." The elder replied, "Every word he said was true, and you take your medicine."

The Gospel Messenger of September 28, 1918 caused the writer to pen this article. Now let us see what the Lord did do in regard to musical instruments.

First, see Numbers 10:1-10. "And the Lord spake unto Moses saying, Make the two trumpets of silver; of a whole piece shalt thou make them." Here we have the Lord ordering Moses to make two trumpets and two only, because there were only two priests, the sons of Aaron. The priests only were allowed to blow the trumpets, but later on as the priests increased, so the trumpets increased in number. The Lord gave directions, for what they were to be used for. The trumpet was used at all of their feasts. See 10th verse; "also in the day of your gladness and in your solemn days and in the beginning of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt offering, and over the sacrifices of your peace offerings; that they may be to you for a memorial before your God. I am the Lord your God."

In Leviticus 23:23, 24, we have these words:

"And the Lord spake unto Moses saying, speak unto the children of Israel, saying, in the seventh month, in the first day of the month shall ye have a Sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation.". I ask isn't this worship? This feast was the feast of trumpets. At the feast everybody in Israel was allowed to blow the trumpets, but not at any other feast. Do we realize how the Lord regulated the instrumental music in Israel through Moses? And it continued through all of Israel's worship, both in the tabernacle and temple worship.

Again I want to call attention to Leviticus 25:9: "Then shall thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of seventh month in the day of atonement—shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land." Here Moses was given definite instructions by God himself, how to proceed in the year of jubilee.

Our kind brother says more than four hundred years later King David introduced musical instruments and the dance in worship. David did not introduce instrumental music in worship. God did that himself. He did that on Mount Sinai through Moses, but to make instrumental music wrong, the writer in the Messenger associates it with the dance, which is offensive to us all, in the way it is carried on in these days. But in the revised version in the marginal reading it is pipe, no dance. That sounds better, substitute pipe for dance in the old version.

Clark says in his commentary on Psalm 149; 3rd verse: "Let them praise his name in the dance; bemachal, with the pipe or some kind of wind music." He further adds, "I know no place in the Bible where machal and machalath mean dance of any kind; they constantly signify some kind of pipe." (Clark) Now substitute pipe in place of dance in the three last chapters. The psalmist calls on all creatures, animated and inanimated to praise God.

In the 50th psalm, the psalmists says "praise the Lord with the sound of the trumpet, praise him with the psaltry and harp. Praise him with the timbrel and pipe; praise him with stringed instruments and organs. Praise him upon the loud cymbals; praise him upon the high sounding cymbals. Let everything that has breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."

Will some one be kind enough to point out the differece between people and all created things that are enumerated in the three last chapters of the Book of Psalms, and now in Praising God I read in another psalm "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him; in those that hope in his mercy. If everything that God created, in Israel's time was called upon to use every nerve and energy to praise God. Are we in our day to use less energy in praising him? Isn't it just as necessary in our day for the sun, moon and stars, with all the other hosts of created things to praise God? Suppose the earth would cease praising God. We would not last 24 hours. Jesus one time asked the Pharisees, have you never read that "out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." If babes and sucklings praise God to perfection, and yet we don't understand them, is it wrong to praise God on instruments of music. Paul says that we can do nothing against the truth but for the truth.

Is America Overchurched?

Consideration of the Facts as Shown in Recent Surveys

BY THE REV. S. L. MORRIS, D.D., ATLANTA, GEORGIA

The question of overchurching in America has been brought forward at various times and in divers manners, so that it is well to examine into the facts of the case. Some have formed hasty judgments, based on superficial investigation or on isolated cases. There are others who, as promoters of church union and federation, may unwittingly magnify conditions in some localities in their zeal to advance the cause in which they are interested. Home Mission statesmen are ever on the alert and are constantly investigating conditions for the purpose of remedying the evil where it really exists. They make known the cases of overchurching where they exist and recommend new adjustments where they should be made. The statements of these conditions are at times magnified unduly.

Our purpose in the present investigation is to ascertain facts and to exhibit them in perspective, in order to help remedy evils where they exist and to correct false impressions and conclusions.

No one acquainted with the facts can doubt that new Home Mission work is continuelly called for by the acute problems and complex conditions incident to modern life in America. The congestion of over-crowded cities, with all the consequent demoralization; the decay of the country church; affecting the moral fiber of the nation; the increasing immigration with its pagan influences; organized vice lifting its ugly face in ominous attitude; the Macedonian cry of the isolated and backward peoples; as well as the economic, social and moral questions connected with various forms of industrialism—these give new meaning as well as additional emphasis to Home Missions. They call for intense thought and quickened energy, entirely aside from any thought of denominational expansion.

Census reports compiled twelve years ago are sometimes quoted to prove that there is a church in the South for every 319 of population, and a minister for every 470 people. Some data may seem to justify the conclusion, but reliable statistics for 1917, compiled with great care each from denominational reports by Dr. H. K. Carroll, show that the total number of ministers in America is 181,808, which for the population of 110,000,000 gives 605 persons to each minister. The number of churches, 226,609, mean on an average one church for every 485 persons. These figures include 20,955 Catholic priests, 3,138 Christian Science readers, 1,084 Jewish rabbis and 4,460 Mormon elders, as well as theosophists, spiritualists and other non-Christian sects. If we take the number of ministers and churches in the Federal Council of Churches and add to their number the evangelical churches not in the Council, the result would be one minister for about 850 of population and one church for about 650. Some denominations license ministers indiscriminately, so that many of them are unqualified and many are following secular employments. Thousands of churches are merely nominal, having no membership and no preaching, so that it is evident that the real spiritual forces of this country would not show more than one minister to about 1,000 population and one church to 900 people. Who, then, could say that America is overchurched?

In the Southern States the church statistics include the Negroes, whose ambition to preach almost equals the number of the male population that can read and white. Their churches, too, often split into rival factions to furnish opportunities for candidates that cannot otherwise find pulpits for the exercise of their talents. Rev. W. H. Holloway, in "Study of Thomas County, Georgia," asserts that of the 98 Negro churches in that one county about half originated in a church split. Of the neighboring county, Dougherty, he says:

"We have been able to learn of about 120 preachers in the county. Of this number fully 75 are either ordained or licensed. The most of their names appear in the minutes of the various denominations. Now this number may be doubled if we search for all those who call themselves preachers and fill the function of interpreters of the Word of God."

In this same county of Dougherty there is not one white minister living out of the corporate limits of Albany, the county seat. If we divide these 120 Negro preachers, plus the ten or twelve white preachers, into the population of this county, it is evident that the number of population is quite small per preacher, but the number of qualified preachers to care for the spiritual needs of the community is most inadequate.

There are, no doubt, cases of over-churching in some parts of America. Among the hundred thousand or more towns it would be strange if there were not found some such instances. One town in Texas is cited with four small Presbyterian churches; but this case grew out of an effort to unite inharmonious elements, which had exactly the opposite effect and divided one church into two. In Texas, the Comity Committees have, in a number of instances, exchanged churches where the people have consented, until comparatively few such cases of friction remain.

We may frankly admit that there is some over-lapping in the home mission field, due to the infirmities of human nature and the imperfect state of society, but one of the chief functions of the Home Missions Council is to reduce over-lapping and friction to the lowest terms. Very satisfactory progress has already been made in this direction, but the difficulties of handling the matter are the same as those encountered on the foreign field where there are also undenied cases of over-lapping and friction.

The "Neglected Fields Survey" of the Home Missions Council, reveals very clearly that in American Home Mission fields there is far more "overlooking" than overlapping. The following quotations from some of these "Neglected Fields Surveys" counter balance the instances of "over churching:"

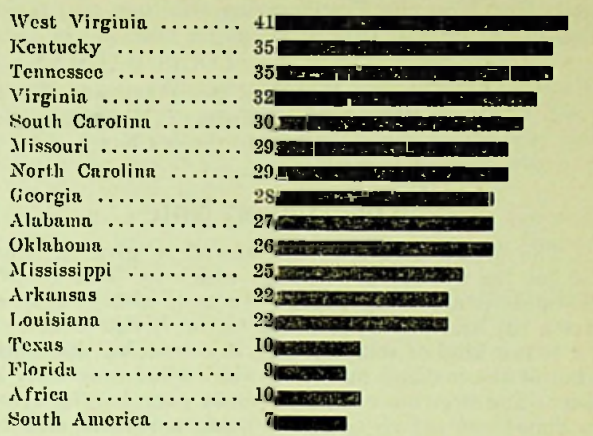
"It was the opinion apparently of the majority that there is decided overchurching, chiefly in small towns, but the fact was carefully noted, also, that some of the churches in small towns minister to considerable districts of surrounding country."

The term "Neglected Fields Survey," was more than justified. In nearly every state visited, from four to sixteen men declared that they knew of people who had grown there from childhood to young manhood and young womanhood without having gospel privileges within reasonable reach. Perhaps more significant were facts like the following, which were brought to our attention:

"In Montana 60,000 to 75,000 of the population were reported as residing five miles or more from a church. A section in the northern part of that state, 40 by 100 miles, has been homesteaded during the last two years, and has few religious opportunities. One rich valley of the state, fifty-four miles from a railroad, with a population of 5,000 people, has but one church.

"In North Dakota fourteen counties have but three permanent places in each for worship. One county in Idaho has a rural population of 9,000, with no preaching service. Another county of the same state has a purely rural population of 18,000, yet only two or three of its sixty-five school districts have regular preaching services; these two Idaho counties are largely Mormon. Literally thousands of foreigners in all the states surveyed never hear the Word of God."



Citations of similar character might be multiplied indefinitely, but let the following from the same source suffice:

"We find in one Western state one hundred and thirty-three towns of from one hundred and fifty to one thousand souls without any Protestant religious work, and one hundred of them being also without Roman Catholic work. In addition to these, there are four hundred and twenty-eight communities of sufficient importance to have post offices, but without any churches. If the same rate of destitute communities to total population holds through all the mountain and Pacific states there are more than four thousand such communities in those eleven states. Home Mission funds have been so limited that the Boards have all felt compelled to confine their efforts mainly to what appear to be the most strategic fields. But we must find some way of establishing Christianity in the thousands of utterly neglected fields."

In "The Frontier," by Dr. Ward Platt, occurs such statements as the following: "Throughout Washington and Oregon may be found scores of narrow valleys teeming with people. No one is doing anything for them religiously, as but little is attempted by any church for Washington or Oregon outside the towns. In Southwestern Oregon is a country of about 1500 square miles, and in which live at least 2,500 people, mostly Americans; and no denomination, according to report made last year, is doing any work whatever in that whole country. They are absolutely without church privileges." As to Washington, he cites a missionary superintendent, who declares The religious destitution of western Washington to be appealing; that outside of the larger towns very little religious work is being done by any denominations. In his division only 209 towns out of 1,146 have church organizations, leaving 937 towns and villages without any religious privileges whatever.

Probably such extensive areas of destitution exist nowhere in the Southern States, except possibly in certain sections of the Appalachian Mountains, or in the thinly settled territory of Western Texas and New Mexico; but whether this condition exists in large areas or not, it can be duplicated in numerous smaller communities, making a vast region in the aggregate. Rev. F. W. Gray, of West Virginia, has carefully gathered valuable statistics and tabulated facts, which reveal at a glance religious conditions in the South. These statistics are furnished by the United States Bureau of Information at Washington and by the National Geographic Magazine.

Comparative number per square mile, out of the church in the Southern States:

This would indicate that the mountainous sections of the South have four times as many unsaved people per square mile as Africa, and five times as many as South America. It places Texas and Africa on the same footing, and Florida in the same class as South America. Asia, which contains China's teeming millions, is not more densely populated than one-half of the States of the South.

Considering the number out of church in the Southland it is evident that there is extensive destitution there, so that much more needs to be done, rather than less, before the Home Mission task is accomplished.

The small churches in thinly populated districts may not show great results, humanly speaking, but they often serve as real and high a purpose in the development of character by means of their heroic struggles, as do the great city churches— too often containing many inactive members. The small rural churches are a great source of supply for the moral strength of the more pretentious metropolitan churches, as the small streams are the source of supply for the great rivers. Railroads maintain small branch lines which never become self-supporting, because they are needed as feeders to the great trunk lines; and the denomination which discourages and neglects the small rural churches will eventually have "Ichabod" written upon its portals. These small churches supply a large proportion of our ministerial and missionary recruits; they give their share to the foreign mission funds of the Church and while Home Mission effort and money expended upon they may never bring them to self-support, they are recruiting stations for world-wide evangelism, and are effective agencies in sending the Gospel to the ends of the earth.—Missionary Review.

The Thanksgiving Offering

While looking after the interests of the Home Mission work of our church is not my particular job, I am intensely interested in seeing our church go "over the top" with the Thanksgiving Offering for Home Missions. Last Easter, we went away "over the top" with the foreign Offering. And we will do it again next Easter, if the Lord shall tarry. But Brethren, let us remind you that God's work is one, whether in Spokane or in Ubangi-Shari. The success of the work in the regions beyond depends upon the success of the work here at home. The boys who went to France would never have gone "over the top" to victory, had it not been for the strong organized home bases that supported them. We fear that we are sometimes partial to the foreign work with our gifts, and as Financial Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, I think I dare say that. As the Financial Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, I shall consider it a victory for our Foreign Work to see the Thanksgiving offerings go sweeping "over the top." Already, some of these Home Missions are proving the staunchest supporters of the foreign work. Witness the last Easter offering of Spokane. Yes, it is all God's work,—one work. It must be done. The time is short. The Master is coming. We cannot afford to be niggardly with our gifts these momentous days. God bless the Thanksgiving Offering, and make it a proof of our love to Thee of which we need not be ashamed.

LOUIS BAUMAN,

Financial Secretary and Treasurer of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Brethren Church.

The Higher Note

The praise which we are moved to give to Almighty God for the wonderful blessings which we have received at his hands is a worthy praise. Its note always reaches the Divine ear and proves pleasant to the Divine heart.

It is a kind of selfish praise, it is true, but its selfishness is not of the low and unworthy kind. God must ever be the Giver; and we, his creatures, must ever be the receivers. No blame can attach to us for being moved in our thanksgiving by those feelings which are natural to a receiver.

It is good in our thanksgiving to make a large and conspicuous place for the blessings which we have received at God's hands. The highest of these blessings are spiritual and are the gifts bound up in the great unspeakable gift of Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the Savior of the world. "For every good and perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of light, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." In the category of gifts are those temporal blessings which we magnify in this country on every Thanksgiving Day.

It is but meet that on this day we add up the figures in our debit and credit columns and, as an expression of our appreciation of the many good things which we have received and are now receiving, present our praise shown not only in reverent feeling and devout worship, but in the material symbols so plentiful and evident on the glad day which we celebrate.

Yet high as is the note of that thanksgiving which comes from a heart conscious of being a receiver, there is a thanksgiving whose note is still higher. It is a praise which is stirred not by the consciousness that we have received so much from God, but by the consciousness that it is our privilege as his children to give so much to him. For, after all, in the vocabulary of love a receiver may be defined as one who gives. The typical child is the true receiver; yet the more it is a receiver the greater giver it may be. This paradoxical truth shines brightest in the field of our relations to God.

So on this Thanksgiving Day, which has been set apart by the head of this Christian Republic as a day of thanksgiving to Almighty God for his matchless blessings, we should not forget to give thanks for our opportunity for giving to God. The more we give, the more thankful we will be. May this giving never cease until we shall have laid on the altar all that Christ desires and can utilize.—Christian Advocate.

Around the Fireside

WHEN SARAH CURRAN THANKSGAVE

Sarah Curran lifted the pie tin with anxious care and carried it across the sunny little kitchen to the table beneath the window. There was something almost ceremonial in her manner as she set the great golden disk down on the blue-checkered oilcloth and stood off peering critically at it under puckered brows.

"I wonder," she spoke doubtfully, "maybe a mite more cinnamon would have been better. Sam'l's dretful partial to cinnamon—"

Flawless, fleckless, its satiny pumpkin filling melting into a precisely frilled border of delicate brown crust, the pie would have filled the heart of any other housewife in Shady Valley with pride, but Sarah Curran's gaze was that of the artist probing relentlessly for flaws in his own handiwork. A woman must have something to fuss over and be proud of—babies, or rose geraniums, or a talent for preserves and pies.

"Sam'l Curran's wife is the best cook in the county," neighbors said, "unless maybe, it's Dave's."

Now, remembering, Sarah lifted her head jerkily and looked with a sort of fierce unwillingness across the brown stubble of the cornfield to where a gabled roof showed over the knoll. The curl of gray smoke that wound up from one of the chimneys seemed to quiver in the film of tears that blurred her faded blue eyes.

"Getting ready for Thanksgiving," she thought resentfully. "Le's see. It's a little mite late for fruit 'n' pound cake. They'd ought to set at least a month to ripen. But her fruit cake always tastes a mite too fresh to me, even if it does take first prize at the fair!"

The Blue Ribbon

Slow color touched her thin cheeks under the sting of memory. It had always been her fruit cakes that had won the bit of coveted blue ribbon until five years ago, when Sam'l's twin brother David had surprised Shady Valley by bringing home his town bride and her mother to his bachelor farm.

Sarah had never forgotten her first glimpse of Dave's wife, Lily, with her young, pink prettiness, her childish dimples and yellow curls. Afterward she had come home and behind locked doors searched her mirror wistfully for something it denied her anxious eyes. She was ten years older than Dave's wife, and no one had ever called her pretty, even Sam'l.

"But she's dretful helpless looking," Sarah comforted herself. "She 'n' her mother, too. I don't suppose she could bake a loaf o' salt risin' nor an apple pie to save her. Poor Dave! I guess maybe he can't crow over Sam'l, even if he has married pink cheeks and doll-baby curls. They set great store by good eating, both of 'em."

And so it had been almost with a feeling of pity she had gone with Samuel to eat their first dinner at Dave's. But when one perfectly cooked dish after another appeared in the little bride's pretty- ineffectual-looking hands—chicken as delicately roasted as her own, airy bubbles of whipped potato, spicy pickles, and at last a lemon pie that might have come from her own oven—pity gradually changed into frozen resentment that lay like a stone on her heart. She listened silently to Dave's humorous boasting of his "new cook," to Sam'l's innocent and honest approbation, as he passed his plate for another piece of pie, and later, when it came time to leave, she faced her new rival with grim justice.

"You're a good cook," she told her grudgingly. "An' I guess I'd ought to know. Folks say I'm a good cook, too."

But in spite of the praise of the words, it was as if she had flung down a gage of battle, and she knew that Dave's wife understood it so.

Sam'l

Feet plodded over the frozen yard outside and stamped painstakingly on the square of carpeting on the porch. Sarah Curran hurriedly turned from the window as her husband came into the room, bringing with him a keen, crisp whiff of out-of-doors.

"Gettin' colder," he announced cheerily. "Guess we'll mebbe get a touch of snow this afternoon. Well, white Thanksgiving, green Easter, folks used to say."

Sarah, busy with her pots and pans, did not look up. Her husband glanced at her rigidly disapproving back, hesitated, then blundered on.

"Le's see, do we have the folks to dinner this year? I got to drive to the mill this afternoon, and I could stop off at Cousin Harry's, and in at the minister's coming back."

Sarah set the platter of boiled dinner on the oilcloth-covered table with a little thud of scorn.

"Sam'l Curran, are you losing your memory, or what?" she inquired caustically. "Don't you suppose I'd be working my fingers off gettin' ready if 'twas? I was one living month getting up that dinner last year, and now you've forgot! That's all the thanks I get for 'most killing myself so's you wouldn't be ashamed o 'your wife's cooking afore your relatives!"

Subdued, Sam'l sank into his seat, his glance unconsciously wandering out of the window and across the fields. He had never understood, being only a man, just why his brother's family and his own had grown so far apart that they never visited each other's houses except once a year when, turn and turn about, they entertained each other and all their relations at a solemn banquet on Thanksgiving Day.

Now over a lifted forkful he ventured mild protest.

"But there ain't any call for getting all wore out baking four kinds of cake, and five kinds of pie, and six kinds of pudddings, Sairy. That isn't what Thanksgiving is for—just eating; it's the eating together that's important, seems as if—"

Sarah looked across at her husband in exasperation. "Land, Sam'l Curran, if you don't talk just like a man! she withered him. "Don't you think I got any pride? I suppose you'd be willing to have folks comparing her cookin' and mine, and pitying you for not marrying some yellow-haired upstart from the city, too! I suppose you'd enjoy seeing her flaunting her cookin' in my very face! Thanksgiving! The only thing I'm ever thankful for is when it's over an' done with for another year!"

She paused abruptly, and drew the pie tin toward her, cutting a generous wedge with exquisite care.

"Pass your plate, Sam'l, and see if you can't make out to taste a bite of this pie. I do' know's it's fit to eat, hardly."

It was the regular formula, as was Saml's reply.

"Goes to the right spot, Sairy. I never set tooth into a finer pie!"

Sarah's sore heart warmed to the praise. In the New England code of reticence a wife does not express her love for her husband in words, but in deeds. For fifteen years Sarah Curran had baked her tenderness for Sam'l into the marvelous dishes she had set before him. She was proud of her skill in cookery because he was proud of it, and since Dave's wife had threatened her laurels she had fought fiercely for supremacy, more for Sam'l's sake than her own.

Once or twice over her dishes, later, Sarah went to the window to peer at the smoke wreaths still curling from the chimney over the hill, with something that was almost pity in her eyes.

"I s'pose she hasn't got much heart cookin' up this year, with her mother dying back in the summer and all," she mused. "I thought she looked dreadful forlorn at church last Sabbath, as if she'd cried so much she was sort of out of curl. I 'most wish the President 'd skip Thanksgiving this year."

The Day Before

But the calendar was not to be amended. The days crept into a week, and the squawking of doomed chickens and turkeys rose from Shady Valley farmyards. On the morning of the day before Thanksgiving Sarah locked her back door, put the key behind the kitchen window shutter, and started out for the village to buy a yard of rüching for the neck and sleeves of her best company black silk.

She stepped briskly along the snowy road, looking stiffly ahead as she approached Dave's house. But though her eyes told her nothing, her other senses were gossipy with astounding news.

Midway of the picket fence that bordered the yard she stopped short, sniffing investigatingly that acid tang that flavored the crisp November air.

"My land!" breathed Sarah aloud in the accents of amaze, "something's scorching! Two somethings—three!"

The smell was getting worse. In the wake of it came a low, gaspy sound that sent Sarah's feet up the drifted path and around the leafless currant bushes to the kitchen door one step ahead of Sarah's mind, panting breathless in the rear.

In the littered kitchen, amid a wild confusion of sticky bowls and pans, trails of flour and broken eggshells, Dave's wife, Lily, sat in a forlorn little huddle in the big splint rocker, sobbing desolately, while the kettle on the stove sent up a cloud of black smoke signals, unheeded.

Sarah Curran caught up a dish towel as she ran across the room and lifted the kettle from the stove to the sink, lips set with disapproval.

"Cranberry jell—scorched to a cinder!" she muttered. "Who ever heard o' cooking jell in an iron kettle?"

Her scornful glance swept the room, rested on the piteous figure crumpled in the chair, and righteous indignation softened to something that was close akin to pity. She drew up a chair and plumping herself down beside Lily, began patting the blue-ginghamed shoulder next to her.

"There, there, child!" Unconsciously her voice fell into mother-cadences of comforting. "Supposen you tell me what's the trouble."

"Everything's the trouble!" wept Lily; everything!"

"Well, the first trouble, then," said Sarah briskly. "We'll tackle 'em one at a time. Ain't burned yourself, or anything, have you?"

Dave's wife lifted a tear-drenched face, pointed a tragic finger at a strange, sodden-looking object on the table, which Sarah's scrutiny had missed.

"Look at that!" she laughed hysterically. "I don't suppose you can guess what it is, so I'll tell you. It's a cake! There's another one just like it in the pig's pail over there, and I threw away two yesterday."

Her voice trailed off into a fresh outburst of sobs. Silently Sarah gazed at the cake, burned at the edge, sunken at the center, lead-colored, terrible. In all her experience she had never met such a cake before.

"But—I don't understand"—bewilderment undertoned the words. "Why, you took the prize at the last county fair with your angel layer!"

Suddenly Lily sat up in the rocker. Her face was very pale and her hands clasped and unclasped nervously as she spoke.

"O, I've got to tell—you'd know tomorrow, anyway," the words tripped over one another breathlessly. "It was mother that was the cook—not me. In the beginning I didn't mean to deceive folks, but Dave was so pleased the first time he came to supper and saw me taking a pan of biscuit out the oven—I—I let him think I made 'em. Then after we were married, I couldn't bear to tell him. Mother didn't want I should. She was dretful tickled—it was kind of a—a joke in the beginning, you see—"

Shame colored her round cheeks. "I was a clerk. I never had any knack at housekeepin', and Dave set such store by things like that. It frightened me to think that—maybe he'd be ashamed of me if he knew. Oh, I know it was wicked of me to go on deceiving him, but I—I love him so—"

Sarah Curran's faded cheeks took on shy color like a bride's. "I know," she nodded; "I know."

For a moment there was no sound in the little kitchen except the childish catch of Lily's breath and the snap of coals in the stove; then the stumbling confession went on.

"Mother always was a good cook. Dave never suspicioned. Men folks is like that. An' I was learning, but I hadn't got as far as pies and cakes, when she—she was took. I can cook plain things most as well as mother, but I couldn't get up a Thanksgiving dinner to save my soul. An' Dave'll be shamed before everybody—oh, oh, what will I do? What ever will I do?"

Sarah Curran drew a long breath. It was as though the weight of jealousy and envy that had lain so heavily on her heart for the last four years had melted away. She took Lily's trembling, ineffectual hands between her own.

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

The effect of the influenza on the Brethren churches and Sunday schools is clearly seen in the lack of church news for the Evangelist this week. We believe there are the most meager reports this week that we have had during the more than three years we have been conducting the paper. We trust that the next few weeks may see a revival of church correspondence and news for the brotherhood.

We have not yet learned what the ceasing of hostilities or the ending of the war will have to do with raising the ban on the use of all necessary paper stock for our publications, but we trust the War Industries Board may be led to see that the only restriction a church publishing house needs to keep it from wasting paper is the restriction that the extremely high cost of the paper itself places upon them. The Brethren Publishing Company must use more paper than it did last year, even though it does cost nearly fifty percent more.

George S. Baer was a visitor at Ashland and the Publishing House several days last week making arrangements to come to Ashland and take up his duties as editor of the Evangelist and assistant editor of the Sunday school literature the first of January. Now is the time for all pastors to complete their arrangements for placing the Evangelist in every home in their congregations. If "a new broom sweeps clean," Brother Baer's coming into the Evangelist office should make a "clean sweep" in bringing the rest of the Brethren churches into the "Budget family" for the Evangelist. With the coming of Brother Baer we shall give our whole attention to the business of the Company, but between now and the first of January we will have too much to do to give it the attention it should receive, so we must depend upon the pastors to help us out.

George W. Kinzie reports that through the Brethren at Clay City were sorely disappointed in being compelled to close their revival meeting just as Brother Bauman got started in it and that though they feel "cast down" yet they do not feel "forsaken" and they really believe the promises of the Word and from this great disappointment expect some good to come in fulfillment of such promise.

While A. E. Whitted moved only from one county into another in changing the location of his pastoral labors it should be remembered that one can go a long way between counties in Kansas. Brother Whitted's labors as pastor at Portis for five years were especially fruitful and the Morrill church has secured in him the services of a most earnest and painstaking pastor, and we trust the successes of his labors at Portis may be, not only duplicated, but greatly increased in the more populace section of Brown county.

Prof. J. A. Garber took up the work of temporary pastor of the Ashland Brethren church on Sunday, November tenth and was formally installed into that position on last Sunday morning. It is sincerely hoped by the Ashland church that Brother Beachler may complete his canvass of the College Endowment by October first of next year so that he will be in a position to do the work for the Ashland church that has been planned and to which he has been called. But in the meantime the church expects to go forward constantly under the leadership of Professor Garber.

W. S. Bell makes a short report of a long trip in his first letter from Long Beach, California, but we expect to hear more from him and his work on the Pacific coast before the winter is over.

Pastors who want their street addresses to appear in the Brethren Annual should send in their correct address immediately.

Around the Editor's Table

Essential to Salvation

It seems to be entirely human for a large portion of the people to seek to know the minimum amount of work that must be done to secure certain results. When, in the days of the apostles, men cried out, "What must we do to be saved," they did not mean how little must I do to secure salvation. We are quite sure most of them were willing to go the full length in their endeavors to make salvation sure.

We have heard preachers and evangelists preach upon the subject. "What must I do to be saved?" but it has not been very often that we heard them give a whole gospel answer. They seemed to be acting on the principle that the least said the easiest accepted, and it seemed that most of them were after immediate results. When men asked the apostles what they must do to be saved and when they asked Jesus himself what they must do to inherit eternal life they received a full and complete answer. Nothing was held back for fear the enquirer might decide that the sacrifice was too great or the requirements too heavy.

There are things that are actually essential to salvation, things that one must do in order to be saved. Taking Jesus at his word these requirements are not so difficult to understand, but taking the word of the theologians of this or any other generation and it is a different thing altogether. A question suggested for discussion in connection with one of the Sunday school lessons of the last quarter was, "If you were a chaplain or Y. M. C. A. worker, and a mortally wounded soldier asked, 'How may I be saved?' What would you tell him?" The question is a timely one and one that should receive close attention from any pastor as well as for an army chaplain, etc. But the question very naturally arises, Is the plan of salvation any different for a mortally wounded soldier, a civilian on his death-bed or a man in the prime of life and the best of health? Are things essential under one condition and non-essential under other conditions? This is a vital question as we consider the character and substance of the teaching of Jesus. There is a danger of men and ministers, for the sake of consolation, hedging just a little in declaring the full gospel plan of salvation under trying circumstances. John the Baptist type of preachers are needed in every age and they are greatly needed right now.

Compunctions of Conscience

Perhaps more has been done in the last two years to break down the theory of liberty of conscience in America than in a full previous century. There was a time when the public and the law of America recognized the rights of individual conscience, but that day has pretty generally passed and it is now almost universally held that individual conscience must give way to public conscience. Some have yielded to this influence without a struggle, some have apparently submitted to it, feeling helpless to do otherwise, while others may have yielded under duress and a very few have withstood the popular clamor and as a consequence have brought ignominy and shame upon themselves. It now remains to be seen whether individual conscience will regain its place in the spiritual life of the world since the termination of the war. The influence of the press has been against it throughout the war and it is not likely there will be much letup from this source. Under the constant hammering of the secular press which has been backed up in many cases by the general religious press of the country a true conscientious objector as he has been termed has been made to feel that he is little short of a confirmed criminal. The effect of this teaching and this hammering on individual and private life remains to be seen.

The attitude of the press is indicated by a statement in a western popular newspaper, "We wonder how much time the average returned soldier will have for the kind of religion preached by the minister who claimed exemption from military service because he was a theological student?" The American people have always been a people who have been free to claim their constitutional rights, and to make it appear that one belittles one's self by standing upon his constitutional rights which the laws of the land recognize is no way to increase the respect of the public for the constitution. But we are of the opinion that the returned soldier will not be so much different in his attitude toward religious things a year after his return than he was a year before he became a soldier, and we are inclined to the belief that the churchmen and religious workers who have worked out to the last detail the plans they have decided must be used to develop the religious lives of the returned soldiers will have to make several revisions before their aims are accomplished. Sin that must be forgiven is just the same in the life of a soldier as it is in the life of a civilian, and there is but one way to eternal life.

Pass on The Blessings

One of the secrets of a proper heating system for a building, either private or public, is that of securing radiation. It matters little how hot a fire may be kept in furnace or stove, without proper and sufficient radiation, a large portion of the heat is lost. Even with the best of systems we are told a large percentage of the heat from the fuel consumed is lost by going up the chimney because it can not be "radiated" in the right direction. Stoves that throw off heat directly from their bodies and radiators that throw off the heat from furnaces and boilers have been constructed in almost every conceivable shape and form to secure the fullest radiation possible, and the stove or the furnace that has the best system of radiation is the one that wins in competition over all others in an open market.

But heat is not the only thing that is radiated, and stoves and furnaces are not the only objects that have this radiating power. This same power belongs to human life and in a very special sense to the Christian life. Fire is not built in a stove simply for the sake of getting the stove warm, but that the stove may pass that heat on to others, and in like manner the Christian life should not be lived simply for the sake of the blessings and comforts it secures to the one who lives it, but this life should be lived in order to be a blessing even more than to get a blessing. The real Christian life is one that radiates blessings to others as a stove radiates heat to those who come near it. It is not necessary for a stove to say anthing about the heat it is throwing off, it is only necessary for one who is suffering from the cold to come within range of its heat waves and the warmth it is throwing off constantly will prove a source of comfort to the one who has come near. The same should be true in a large sense of the Christian. It should not be necessary for him to say much about his Christianity, its influence should go out from his life in waves as the heat goes out from the stove and all who come near him should feel the blessing of his Christian personality as he radiates that which the Holy Spirit has made a part of his life. It is also to be noted that a stove uncared for will rust out more rapidly than it will burn out while in constant use, and we think the same is true of the Christian. His powers will rust out from disuse but his life will become constantly stronger as he radiates blessings to others.

Making the Cross of Christ of None Effect

The Cross of Christ was necessary to the plan of salvation or it was an egregious error for Jesus to submit to its suffering. If the Cross was a necessary part of the plan of salvation in the days of Jesus and the apostles then it is a necessary part of the salvation the world needs today But there is a constant tendency to belittle the Cross and to seek salvation in some other way.

Some months ago a popular magazine published a modern poet's creed as follows:

"I think I've all a man should need, in this, the simple little creed, that's pasted in my lid: 'With all your fellowmen be square; be kind and just to all, nor care a cent what others did.' If one is square and just and kind, I don't believe he'll be behind when they distribute crowns; he'll be a credit to this globe, and he will swap for snowy robe his work-worn hand-me-downs. Religion's tangled, teased and vext with dogma and conflicting text, by sages splitting hairs; and all that fellows really need is just that simple little creed to climb the golden stairs."

The writer of this poetic creed needs to cry out with the Psalmist, "Lord, keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins." for he is presuming to know more than Jesus himself. On one occasion a young man whose life would measure up to the standard of this "little creed" in every detail came to Jesus and said, "Lord, what must I do to inherit eternal life?" and when Jesus told him what he must do he went away sorrowful, for he did not want to pay the price. We think too the writer of this "little creed" will also turn away from the way to eternal life in sorrow unless he is willing to do more than his little creed implies. The Jesus way is the only way from earth to heaven and this way includes something more than the way indicated by our poet who would supplant theology with poetry. His creed makes the Cross of Christ of non effect.

Reasons for Thanksgiving

Of old it was said, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." Some people in America have wondered during the past year just what we would have to be thankful for this year. While our own country had been free from the devastations of war it had not been free from paying the price of war in the toll of human lives in foreign lands, and while on former occasions we were able to thank God that no pestilence or plague had visited our land, this could not be said for the past year for the worst epidemic that ever visited America passed over our land during the months of September and October. So until the peace armistice was signed on November eleventh many thought there was not much room for thanksgiving; but now all that feeling has changed and we presume America never witnessed such demonstrations of joy as were made on Monday, November eleven. But a little foreign girl has shown us how to be thankful in time of distress and suffering by supplying the following:

Thought out and written down without any one's assistance by Surpouhi, a girl twelve years old in the Sunday school of the Armenian Refugee Camp, Port Said, and translated word for word into English by Miss Mary E. Kinney, who is superintendent of the school and teacher of Surpouhi's class:

1. "In the first place I am grateful to God for giving me a mind, because without that I could not think, or learn anything, neither could I tell him of my gratitude for all the many blessings he has given me.

2. I am thankful because he has given me parents. When I am in trouble they help me.

3. I am thankful to him because he helped us flee to the mountains and helped us out of all our troubles.

4. I am thankful because when the Turks attacked us our Father saved us from their hands.

5. I am thankful because God sent some ships and rescued us from danger.

6. I am thankful because after God brought us here he moved the hearts of many races, Americans, English, Europeans and other nations, to serve us in many ways. They opened schools, and gave us clothing and many other things.

7. I am thankful because when the German aeroplanes came God saved us from harm.

8. I am thankful because when the tempter comes to tempt us God saves us from him.

9. I am thankful because God never forgets us and we believe he will help us resist temptation.

10. I am thankful because God always gives us food. We ought to thank him each time before eating.

The blessings God gives us are countless and innumerable.

THE CITY, IGNOBLE

By Frank Thone

We have grown to be a city; there's a host of hopeless men
Who toil that they may eat and sleep, to wake and toil again,
And to their helpless children they'll bequeath their slavery.
From the bondage of the Pharaohs set us
free, Lord, set us free!

We have grown to be a city; we are stricken with the curse
Of those that stint the laborer's loaf that they may swell their purse;
They give him books and churches, but deny him all his pay.
From the greed of Tyre and Sidon, Lord, deliver us, we pray!

We have grown to be a city; but our fathers are not strong,
And they bow before the mighty who find profit in the wrong,
For wrong is ever mighty, and our fathers are afraid.
Help us, then, Lord God Almighty! for we surely need Thy aid.

—The Survey.

THE CITY, NOBLE

What makes a city great and strong?
Not architecture's graceful strength,
Nor factories' extended length,
But men who see the civic wrong
And give their lives to make it right,
And turn its darkness into light.

What makes a city full of power?
Not wealth's display nor titled fame,
Not fashion's loudly boasted claim,
But women, rich in virtue's dower,
Whose homes, though humble, still are great,
Because of service to the State.

What makes a city men can love?
Not things that charm the outward sense
Not gross display of opulence,
But right, that wrong cannot remove,
And truth that faces civic fraud,
And smites it in the name of God.

This is a city that shall stand,
A light upon a nation's hill,
A voice that evil cannot still,
A source of blessing to the land;
Its strength not brick, nor stone, nor wood,
But Justice, Love and Brotherhood.

THE BIBLE IN SOUTH INDIA

The Madras Auxiliary of the Bible Society has this year issued a report which is full of encouragement to those who believe in the value of the scripture sales as a missionary agency; and what mission worker does not? Though the circulation of scriptures began to fall off at the outbreak of the war, it has steadily regained its normal condition. In 1916 there was an advance of 42,000 copies, and this number has been maintained during the past year. The total is 275,802 copies. A number of interesting examples of work done by colporteurs and Bible women is given, also reports of successful work in several centers in the Presidency. There has been a steady increase in the subscriptions and offertories during the past five years. In 1913 the amount was Rs. 13,883; in 1917 the total was Rs. 19,088, a very pleasing increase.

In view of the larger responsibilities that will devolve on Christian agencies by the increased power given to the Indian people by the proposed political changes, the following extract is of interest:—

"If the reader is a student of history, writes Rajah Bhujanga Rao, the author of a metrical version of the Gospels in Telugu," "he can see for himself everywhere that the ennobling life and teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ have lifted up many a nation from the lowest depth of degradation to the light of civilization. Therefore, my countrymen, considering the present state of the social and political relations of the people of India, I venture to suggest to you the advisability of accepting Christ as your personal Savior, and thus saving yourself and your country from social tyrannny and political degradation . . . Except through Him, you have no hope of ever improving socially, and without social amelioration there can be no political salvation."

A CHRISTIAN HERMIT IN BURMA

On the 10th of May, 1918, at Myanaunge, there passed to his rest and everlasting reward John Baptist, the Hermit, who for the past eight years, since he became a Christian, has lived a life of extreme ascetisism and devoted himself to itinerating and preaching among his followers, in connection with S. Michael's Mission, Kemendine. We usually called him Hermit, as that is the recognized translation of the Burmese word "yathe," which was what his followers called him. But his life and habits were more in accordance with those of a Friar than of a Hermit. Before he became a Christian he had been a recluse of the strictest kind and had spent several years in a cave, but since his baptism —with the exception of certain seasons set apart for retirement and meditation—he had spent his whole time in tireless traveling and preaching. His austerities had reduced him to nothing but skin and bone, so that when he went into the hospital five years ago as the result of an accident, the medical authorities commented upon his emaciation and spoke of his need of nutriment. And yet in that condition he could march the whole day without food or drink, and at the end of the journey begin preaching to the villagers, when his stalwart European colleague considered it necessary to indulge in a prolonged rest! His ethereal frame and gentle manner gave one the impression that one was talking to a corporeal spirit, and as he moved lightly along over the miles and miles of rough jungle paths on his frequent missionary journeys, he looked to one, at any rate, of his companions, as if he was being blown along by the wind!

Although the Hermit was himself a rigorous ascetic and allowed himself but one meager meal a day, which he partook of before sunrise, he showed his wisdom and humanity by recommending a sliding scale of diet to his followers, which allowed them to practise the virtue of self-denial according to their several capacities. And although, like all Burmese and Buddhist ascetics, he had an innate prejudice against the use of milk and eggs for food, he was ready to abandon this in the last stages of his disease when it was no longer possible for him to partake of his ordinary food. The Rev. C. R. Purser was able to visit him a few days before his death and give him his last Communion.

The number of the Hermit's followers who have followed him into the Christian church runs into three figures. Most of them are characterized by the same gentleness and self-denial which were so conspicuous in their beloved teacher. They have brought into the church the most attractive virtue in Buddhism, and that virtue has been consecrated and deepened through the use of Christian Sacraments.—Abridged from an article in the "Rangood Diocesan Magazine," by the Rev. W. C. B. Purser.

ONE GIRL DID THIS

A young girl went home from a conference with a great desire to be of service to her Lord in giving to her church at home the missionary inspiration which had come to her. She went to her pastor and talked over with him her hopes and ambitions, and together they worked out a plan for more thorough missionary education in the congregation.

Here are some of the things that were actually done which transformed the life of that congregation:

Every organization or society in the congregation was asked to appoint one member to serve on a Church Missionary Board. The Board thus constituted faced the task of planning and putting into effective operation through the various societies of the church an adequate policy of missionary education.

This girl met with the Executive Committee of the Women's missionary society, and interested them in a Mission Study book so that they introduced this new feature.

The Men's Brotherhood was tactfully encouraged to invite certain good missionary speakers.

The Sunday school program was made to include some missionary teaching with demonstrations and missionary exercises on certain Sundays.

The Christian Endeavor Society became one of the livest organizations in the church through its splendid programs of missionary material, which were introduced.

The Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society became interested in mission study by delightful informal meetings at this delegate's home once a week to go over the new books.

The Junior Society was not forgotten. It also was visited and programs on Mission Study books were planned.

Thus did one delegate go home and give a missionary impulse to the whole life of her congregation. She was not revolutionary. Quietly and tactfully she went about her work. When she was asked how she accomplished so much, she said:

"Two things have, throughout the year, kept alive the fire of inspiration gained at the summer conference. One is my oft-repeated prayer to God for his guidance, and the other is the constant inspiring memory, very real and vivid, of the happiness of that summer conference experience."

The "Thank You" Day

Jimmy was a little boy who had come to live with some cousins because his father and mother had gone West for a time. The cousins, of course, had a father and mother, too, but Roy and Katie and Dick seemed so much more interesting and important than the grown-up people, who did not play, that Jimmy always said he had come to live with his cousins.

Katie, who was thirteen years old, was very good to him. She helped him to dress every morning, and washed even his ears without hurting him. Not everyone can do that, although, of course, your mother can.

Roy was fifteen. He could carry Jimmy on his back, and run! Dick was about Jimmy's age, and knew lots of games; but Dick sometimes played tricks on Jimmy, because at first Jimmy believed everything that Dick said.

"There's a big turkey just come in," said Jimmy. "Tomorrow isn't Sunday."

"No, tomorrow's Thanksgiving," answered Dick. "You get a better dinner on Thanksgiving than you do on Sunday."

"Why?" said Jimmy. "Why" was the word he used very often.

"Don't you know about Thanksgiving Day?" asked Dick.

"No, I don't think I do," said Jimmy. "No, I'm sure I don't know about it."

"I'll tell your" said Dick, with twinkling eyes. "It's the day when you mustn't say anything all day, except 'Thank you.'"

"Why?" asked Jimmy again. "Do people give you things?"

"Sometimes they do, and sometimes they don't," was Dick's answer. "But whether they do or not, you must just keep on saying 'Thank you.'"

The next morning Jimmy rose, full of excitement.

So, when Katie helped him to lace his shoes that he might not be late for breakfast, he said, "Thank you." Katie kissed him, being a motherly little girl, and he said "Thank you" then, and how Katie laughed.

"You may sit here, Jimmy," said his uncle, who had not seen much of the little boy. "Get his chair, Roy."

"Thank you, uncle," Jimmy answered, and as Roy moved the chair to its place, he added, "Thank you, Roy."

He remembered the one word he was to use whenever anyone gave him anything to eat or drink. As his cousins talked a great deal, no one noticed him particularly, but at last so many "thank you's" made his aunt say:

"I think he's been well brought up."

"Yes, he has," said his uncle. "I think I'll take him over to market in the wagon. All the others have something to do."

So Jimmy had a ride, just because he had said so many "thank you's" while he was having his breakfast.

When dinner time came he was tired and sleepy; but the big table, with its lights and colored leaves and pretty dishes and good things to eat, woke him up. He sat next his aunt, who had Dick on the other side of her.

Jimmy was glad it was so late when dinner came. He wanted to say so many other things, and he was afraid he might forget them by tomorrow. He was glad that there was only one day in the year when you had to say nothing except "Thank you."

Dick was having a glorious time listening to Jimmy! He was thinking how much more fun he would have at night, when he meant to tell Jimmy how he had fooled him. But, as you will see, when the time came it was not Dick who laughed!

There were many guests at that Thanksgiving dinner. One was a tall, dark man whom no one except uncle and aunt had ever seen before. Roy said "Sir" every time he spoke to him, and so did Katie. Jimmy thought they seemed somewhat afraid of him.

"He's the new schoolmaster," whispered Dick to Jimmy, behind his mother's back. "They say he's so strict that even the big boys are scared of him!"

When the plates came round to the youngest at the table, who were served last, Dick was soon so busy with his dinner that he forgot to pass anyone the salt, or olives, or anything.

"Come, come, Dick, pass the bread, my boy," said Dick's father. "Don't you see that Mr. Brown hasn't any?"

Even merry Dick felt a little frightened as the big dark man turned to look at him. He passed the plate of bread to Katie very quickly.

"No hurry," said Mr. Brown; but he did not smile, and everyone was quiet for a minute.

"The other little boy is forgetting to pass things," he said suddenly.

Everyone looked at Jimmy; and Jimmy, wondering what he had forgotten to pass, saw that there were three salt cellars right in front of him. He rather suspected that Dick had pushed them there when his mother was not looking; but he handed one of them to Mr. Brown, and as he did so said, "Thank you, sir."

Dick chuckled, but Mr. Brown said:

"I'm glad you can say thank you for a reproof, my boy. It promises well."

"More dressing, Jimmy boy?" asked his uncle.

"Thank you, uncle" answered Jimmy, holding out his plate.

"How many, many times that child has said 'Thank you' today!" exclaimed Roy. "What makes you do it, sonny?"

Jimmy was puzzled. How could he reply to that question in the brief phrase that was all he could speak? He was silent.

"Never sulk, Jimmy, even if they do tease you," his aunt said in a low voice. Jimmy looked up at her, smiling. He could make his one answer to that.

"Thank you, aunt," he replied.

"I like that," said the new schoolmaster. "He can take instruction. I like that very much." And he nodded to Jimmy.

"But I must know why he does it today," persisted Roy. "Why do you keep saying 'Thank you' all the time, Jimmy?"

Jimmy decided that he must say one more word. "'Thank-You' Day," he answered.

"Ah!" said Mr. Brown. "'Thank-You' Day! I like that. Good boy! 'Thank-You' Day! Capital!"

At night, Dick said to Jimmy:

"I fooled you. You don't have to say 'Thank you' all day."

"Boys," said the father of Dick suddenly, "you're pretty young, but I'm going to send you both to school tomorrow. The new schoolmaster thinks you ought to begin right away."

"Oh!" cried Dick. "I'm sorry; he's so strict. They all say so."

"I like him," said Jimmy, "and he said he liked me, too. I'm not scared one bit."

"Yes, he likes you because you said 'Thank you' so many times," explained Katie, coming to help both the little boys to bed. "He didn't know it was all Dick's joke."

"No joke," said Dick. "I'll just have to make tomorrow a 'Thank-You' Day myself."

"All our days ought to be 'Thank-You' Days," said Dick's mother, when she kissed them good night. "And none of them 'Trick' Days, my boy."

Then Katie tucked them both in bed.—Frances Harmer in The Youth's Companion.

THE BLACKBIRDS' THANKSGIVING

Bobbie and Frances are quite sure the rest of you boys and girls have never seen what they saw on Thanksgiving Day down on the pond. Of course, there had been plenty of fun for the children. Four uncles and any number of cousins and aunties, as well as grandma and grandpa came to dinner. Everybody was grown up, however, so after dinner Bobbie and Frances went out on the pond for a skate together. The weather was cold and the pond had frozen over. The ice was thin near the center of the pond, but the little folks had promised to keep close to the edge, so they would not tumble into the cold water. The pond wasn't deep, but no one likes an icy pond bath in cold weather. Over their heads flew a number of blackbirds, calling to one another, and hunting for food.

"The poor things want some Thanksgiving dinner," said Frances.

"I wish we had something for them."

"Look at them now!" said Bobbie. "See how funny they are acting!"

The birds had gathered together where the ice was thin and lay close to the ice. It looked as if they were taking turns in warming the ice, and so they were! They were trying to melt it with their warm bodies. Fish need air to breathe, and when the pond froze over, the air was shut out and some of the fish in the pond died. The birds saw the dead fish under the ice, and knew they would make a fine meal. They kept warming the ice till it was melted, then they poked in their bills, drew out a fish and feasted happily!

"Wasn't that the smartest thing you ever heard of?" said Frances.

"And wasn't that the queerest Thanksgiving dinner you ever heard of?" answered Bobbie, as they pulled off their skates and went running back to the house to tell the exciting bit of bird news.—Picture Story Paper.

EVERY DAY A THANKSGIVING

Thanksgiving should never be wanting in a life. It is not enough to observe one day in the year for thanksgiving, although that is a beautiful thing to do. Nor is it enough to put a sentence of thanksgiving into our daily prayers, although this also is proper. It is the grateful spirit that pleases God, the spirit that is always full of praise. Too many of us go to God only with requests, our burdens, our worries, while we but rarely go to Him with praise. We are not to be thankful only for the pleasant things that come into our days—we are to be thankful, too for the things that appear to us to be adversities. "In everything give thanks." That means, in the sad days as well as in the glad days, when clouds are in the sky, as well as when the sunshine is pouring everywhere. It is specialy said here that this is the will of God for us. This is the way God wants us to live. A rabbinical teaching says that the highest angel in Heaven is the angel of praise. The Christliest life is one that is always keyed to the note of prayer and thanksgiving.—The Rev. J. R. Miller.

THANKSGIVING

T—is for the turkey, so juicy and brown,
H—for each Home where a fam'ly sits down.
A—stands for apples—big, shiny and red,
N—for the nuts that are eaten by Ned!

JUNIOR AND INTERMEDIATE

The Tenth and Dauphin Street Brethren church of Philadelphia has supported several Christian Endeavor societies. We subjoin three testimonies from young men in Ashland College, preparing for the ministry, all of whom shared in the helpful service of either the Junior or Intermediate society. In addition to these promising workers, others, we are told, have gone out from these training schools to witness for Christ and to bless the world. Here are the real reasons for such work that promises so much for the church of the future. It is doubtful if we have another church that can duplicate the record of this one in supplying recruits for the ministry and missionary service.

J. A. GARBER.

His Debt to Christian Endeavor

I owe much of the activity of my early Christian experience and indeed the trend of my life work has taken to the Christian Endeavor Society. The first Sunday evening after I had become a Christian I joined the Intermediate C. E. of the church. I entered the society a totally inexperienced Christian, but through the influence and encouragement of the splendid superintendent of the society, the activity of the young people and the real practical work the society was doing I grew stronger, broader visioned and very conscious of God's great power. Through the society's labors to save derelict men through preaching Jesus, my heart was turned toward the Christian ministry and I finally dedicated my life to that great work.

I am convinced that had I not had the opportunity for Christian service through the Christian Endeavor Society, I would have lost much inspiration and help in living the Christian life. The society to which I belonged has been the direct agency in turning five young men toward the Christian ministry in the last seven years. This is real C. E. with both letters emphasized.

EDWIN BOARDMAN, JR.,

Learned to Pray in C. E. Society

Undoubtedly, in Christian lives, as in other phases of life, there are experiences that stand out in bold relief and as a silhouette against the more bedimmed and perhaps unimportant happenings.

It has been so with me. And as I muse over the various constructing and instructing influences that have entered my short Christian experience it must be said that the Christian Endeavor Society holds no small place. The Christian Endeavor room was the first place in which I was encouraged to render my prayers to God in the audience of others. It was among the Christian Endeavorers that I was incepted into expressing verbally my religious ideas and ideals, and moreover it was among my Christian Endeavor associates that the best social life was extended to me. But best of all,—I gleaned from the teachings in that little Christian Endeavor room that Jesus Christ is the greatest reality in human experience, that he was not only a man among men, but he is a God among men, and here the first fires of impulse to take him as my Master and Savior were kindled and set burning.

And so, in my retrospection of the Christian Endeavor Society, and its powerful influence for good upon the life of especialy young folk, I thank the Lord for this great organization.

EARL H. DETSCH.

Potent Factor in His Life

After all one only knows what he has experienced. Certainly not in an absolute sense, but then, we are compelled to make a distinction. Ten years ago we know well the inhumanity of warfare. Did not history contain numerous accounts of this terrible means of redressing wrongs, of deciding the right, of its unmerciful toll and woeful effects. But within the space of a few short years we have learned, as we never before knew, what war means. Ah, yes! to have come in personal contact, to have been personally affected, that is to know

The following few words, I pray, may find their power in that they are the expression of an actual experience, the testimony of one who has felt the influence of an instrumentality used and blessed of God. The Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society has meant more to me than any other organization. Such a statement may seem to be an exaggeration, yet it is made in all verity. When I entered the church of which I am now a member, she was one of the first to welcome me, and more than this, to take a personal interest in my welfare. From that day until the time I joined myself to that holy body, the beloved of Christ, this society was the greatest and most potent factor in influencing my decision. This was a great work indeed, for what shall be compared to the service of soul-winning. Still that is just a part of its glorious function. Having been won for Christ I was now to be fitted for his service, and this thing the Intermediate C. E. Society was competent and fully able to do. As no other agency she is peculiarly adapted to develop the spiritual life of her sons and daughters, and to mould and make this plastic young life after the model of the Master. I count, that any aspirations I may cherish now, are largely resultant from the ideals held up and the high motives set forth by this society. This is to say nothing of her appeal for active Christian service, which with many others I have been permitted to answer. I cannot praise her too highly, for she has rendered me a great service of which I shall and do testify, unto all the world.

THE OTHER COUNTRY

There was autumn beauty everywhere. "The leaves on the trees make you think of a glorious sunset," Mrs. Morley had declared that morning as she drew back the curtains of the window and looked out on the masses of color in which the trees had clothed themselves. With wonderful angry beauty they were meeting the frosts and the chill. They would be defeated with colors flying.

Mrs. Morley was seated on the pleasant piazza in front of the cottage to which she had so often slipped away from the city to rest during the stress and strain of the life of many years.

Thomas Barton was sitting beside her; the Rev. Thomas Barton, S. T. B., to give him the benefit of his ecclesiastical title and his theological degree. He was young—"shamefully young" one of his friends in the East had said—and his closely knit, well built figure and clean cut face were good to look upon.

Only five months before this autumn afternoon he had graduated from theological school—a famous institution of scholars and leaders—and he was having his first experience as a shepherd of souls.

"You don't know what it means to me to come here where you are out from the city," he was saying. "You care about the things I care about. You understand."

He hesitated a moment; then he said, "I can't get inside the people here—if there is any inside," he added bitterly. "They don't know what I'm talking about when I preach. And I don't know what to talk to them about when I call."

He gave an impetuous shrug of his sturdy shoulders and a wry smile came over his face as he went on, "You remember that illustration I used last Sunday about the Apollo Belvedere. Well, one of the men fresh from the farm afterward asked if that town wasn't in the state of Maine. Now what can you do with people like that?"

Mrs. Morley ignored his question, and asked another.

"Do you really know Mortimer Biglow?"

Mortimer Biglow was the saint and mystic of the countryside.

"O, yes, I know him," Thomas Barton replied. "He's good, surely." But—there was a wealth of meaning of his hesitation.

A little light of mischief came into the old lady's eye.

"Did you ever hear of the English lady," she asked, "who was talking of a pious man from her country home?

"'O, we'll meet him in heaven,' she said, 'but we can't possibly know him in London!'"

"Now you're laughing at me," cried Thomas Barton, his face flushing a little. "But after all, there's a pretty deep gulf fixed, and the people don't cross it, and I can't find the way over to them."

The two sat silent for a little while. Then Mrs. Morley looked quite into the young man's eyes.

"I suppose any culture is very provincial," she said, "which does not add to a man's human resourcefulness."

Thomas Barton made a gesture of protest, and was about to speak. But just then there was a click of the gate, and another young man entered.

"Good afternoon, Phil," said the young minister indifferently. He was evidently less than pleased to have his conversation with Mrs. Morley interrupted. Philip Downs was about to turn away with a quick understanding of the situation. But Mrs. Morley had arisen, and stood before him with outstretched hand.

"Six whole days I have been in Mapleton," she said, "and this is the first time you have walked through my gate."

A quick glow came to the face of Philip Downs.

"You are an opportunity and a temptation," he said in a tone of friendly banter which caused the young minister to look up in surprise. "But the farm is a very jealous mistress, you know."

Mrs. Morley was sitting now between the two young men, each in one of the hospitable, friendly chairs of her piazza. For the moment she let the minister slip into the background, while she plied Philip Downs with questions about his reading and his work.

Thomas Barton listened in amazement. This young farmer, who had been repelled by some unconscious touch of condescension in the minister, and had made himself unapproachable enough, was now showing himself to be a man of mental power, of individual opinion and a real gift of expression. Thomas Barton did not know that for years Mrs. Morley had been the guide, philosopher, and friend of Philip Downs, and that his mental life had expanded under her influence as a flower comes to fine bloom.

It was Philip who became conscious that the minister was being left out of the conversation—Mrs. Morley knew that she could trust him with that opportunity. And it was Philip who deftly included Thomas Barton in the talk, which soon had all the glow and interest of actually congenial minds playing about themes of mutual interest.

The two young men left the cottage together. When they were about to separate Thomas Barton put out his hand impulsively: "I've never known you, Phil," he said. "I'm glad to have met you tonight—the real you." Then, with a little difficulty, he got out the rest of what he wanted to say. "I wish we might be friends."

"Sure thing," said Phil heartily as he gripped the offered hand, "but let me tell you, there are a lot of people around here better worth knowing than I." A genuine friendly concern had crept into his voice. "Try being a Columbus, Mr. Barton, and discover this part of America. It's a great country." Then he said "good night."

Mrs. Morley continued to sit quietly on the piazza of her cottage. She smiled in a gentle understanding way as she thought of the two young men each having so much to give to the other. She was glad that she had been able to bring them together.

Then she turned her mind to other things.

Her family physician's face, with its grave, frank friendliness was before her again. He had made a special call just before she had left the city. She had wondered a little at the quality of gentle admiration in all that he said. They were always great friends, but Dr. Newcombe was never a flatterer. When he rose to go he stood by her chair a moment.

"I do not need to be evasive with you," he said, "you always look life straight in the eye."

Mrs. Morley had taken a moment to look out of the window. Then it was a clear, steady gaze which met the physician's earnest look.

"Perhaps you have nothing to tell me," she said quietly. "There are some things nature tells us—to keep physicians humble," she added with characteristic whimsical humor.

Dr. Newcombe smiled a little. Then he waited until Mrs. Morley asked simply, "Can you tell me how long it will be?"

The physician spoke slowly. "I cannot be sure, of course. But I think it will come quickly, as it has done often with your mother's people. You have used all your vitality with such abandon that—to be frank, you are living now on your will rather than on your strength. When the time comes I do not think there will be much power of resistance—"

Mrs. Morley interrupted. "I see what you mean," she said, "it will be like the 'one hoss shay'—everything giving out at once—and that is what I have always wanted."

Neither spoke for a while. Then Dr. Newcombe said, "Don't be alone for any long period. I was afraid you might do that in the country. Keep someone within calling distance all the while."

The words seemed to bring a new, sudden sense of realization to Mrs. Morley. The physician saw her hand close quickly. Then her eyes were full of light as she turned them upon him.

"Thank you, my good old friend," she said. Then she laid her hand gently upon his arm. "It has been good to be alive," she said, "so good—so good."

The physician marveled as he thought of many things locked among the professional secrets in his mind and heart. Then he remembered other things, and did not marvel.

But Mrs. Morley was still speaking. "I think the autumn has been best of all. Do you know, I have rather enjoyed being the 'last leaf upon the tree'!"

The two were standing now, and the physician murmured some scarcely articulate words of farewell. Mrs. Morley looked up quickly, "Do not fear for me," she said, "I shall be waiting."

All this passed through her mind—sitting now on the piazza of her summer cottage. Within she heard the sound of softly moving feet, as a well-trained servant moved about some household task. She looked out at the Western hills with the rich colors of the leaves, and on at the sky radiant with the golden glow of the day's farewell.

Softly she repeated to herself the words from Hiawatha:

"And the evening sun descending,
Set the clouds on fire with redness,
Burned the broad sky, like a prairie,
Left upon the level water
One long track and trail of splendor,
Down whose stream as down a river,
Westward, westward Hiawatha,
Sailed into the fiery sunset,
Sailed into the purple vapors,
Sailed into the dusk of evening.
Thus departed Hiawatha,
Hiawatha the Beloved,
In the glory of the sunset,
In the purple mists of evening,
To the regions of the homo-wind,
Of the Northwest-wind Keewaydin
To the islands of the Blessed
To the kingdom of Ponemah,
To the land of the Hereafter."

The little old lady sat very still.

"The land of the hereafter," she repeated in a voice very low and quiet.

Suddenly out of the past there came with a sharp pang the sorrow within the sorrow. But with it at once there was a quick, wonderful knowledge that it was a part of something larger, and that larger thing was all shining with noble joy. She seemed focusing her eyes to see some wonderful, unaccustomed thing.

At length she understood that the picture which was capturing her imagination—something more than a picture, she knew—was one great, strong form bending under a heavy burden. It was a form she instinctively recognized.

"He has always carried my burdens," she breathed rather than spoke. Then the heavy burden strangely vanished. But the radiant strong form remained, standing in the glory of the sunset and beckoning.

In that transfigured moment mysteries all seemed suddenly to be made clear. Vast vistas opened. The sunset became a sunrise. She was not at all bewildered or surprised. The one face with its love and welcome filled all her thought * * *

So they found her in the shadows after the sunset—very still and very small—with the light of the eternal morning upon her face. —The Epworth Herald.

A CHANCE FOR A REAL THANKSGIVING

What the Boys and Girls Can Do to Help

By Margaret Bristol Grose

You wish to do your share in raising the money that is to give cheer and comfort to our boys, and you don't see quite how you are going to do it?

Perhaps you have a big brother who writes home from the huts of the Y. M. C. A. or K. of C.? And tells you how, when he had been "over the top" for hours, and was cold and mud-soaked and tired, along came a "Y" man at the risk of his life with hot chocolate and a sandwich. My! how good it tasted and felt! Or he got a big piece of pie from a Salvation lassie! Or he forgot, while in training on this side, how homesick he was, one night, at an entertainment given by the War Camp Community Service. And of course, he spent lots of spare hours reading books supplied by the Library Association. And when your mother went to visit him at camp, she went right to the Y. W. C. A. hostess house to meet him, where they could sit in a cosy corner by themselves, after a delicious luncheon at the cafeteria.

These are all splendid things—you don't see how the boys could get along without them. But—they cost money! And where is that money coming from? Why, from us, of course—fathers and mothers and uncles and cousins and brothers and sisters and friends! If you haven't any relatives of your own in the Service, you may think to yourself that the boys' families will look out for them. But remember that ther are hundreds of boys in the Service who haven't any families at all, so imagine that you have "adopted" one of them. Why not even imagine a real soldier with a real name, so that when you are planning your gift you can say to yourself, "This is for Tom," or "I hope Joe will get this," or "How glad Harry would be to know what I am doing!"

This all sounds very well, but you didn't realize that this drive was coming, and you've pledged yourself to buy just so many thrift stamps, and give just so much to the Red Cross, and it's all you can do to manage that, so how and where can you get the money to help in this new drive?

Here is one way—a way that will not only give you the money, but the most "thankful" Thanksgiving Day that you have ever had.

Ask your mother, when she plans your Thanksgiving dinner, to leave out one of the things that you have always thought "belonged" to Thanksgiving dinner! Either the nuts and raisins, or the cranberry sauce, or the mince pie, or the candy! And ask her to give you the money that she would have spent on that one thing (or two or three, if you can stand it) so that you can give it to the United War Work Campaign Fund.

Then, when you sit down to your Thanksgiving dinner, you can give thanks that you were privileged, by denying yourself something that you really wanted, to earn some money for the comfort of the boys who are offering their lives for your safety, to help Mr. Hoover by saving a little more food, and to win for yourself a true war-time Thanksgiving and the satisfaction of doing your "bit."

News From the Field

Clay City, Indiana

During the past month there has been little to report—excepting the "flu," but prior to that time we were very busy. Upon our return from Conference we began getting ready for the coming of Brother L. S. Bauman, and for the revival we hoped to have. He came and opened fire upon the enemy September 29, and continued over the following Sunday, when the "flu" epidemic caused the government to put a stop to all public meetings. Well, here we were just getting a good start in our meeting, with prospects so bright as to be almost flattering, and, of course, expecting great things from the Lord in our efforts, then all of a sudden—biff, bang! The lightning had struck! It came so unexpectedly, and hit us so hard that we have hardly fully recovered from the shock yet. But thank God for his sure Word assuring us that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." And somehow, the more I think of it the more I am inclined to believe that we shall have even a greater meeting in the spring, when we hope to have Brother Bauman return to us. I am sure too, that the good that shall come from just the one week of our brother's labors shall only be learned in eternity.

From Osborne to Brown County, Kansas

On the last Sunday in August we closed our labors with the Brethren at Portis in Osborne county. Our pastorate here covers a period of five years, but because of the pleasantness and fervent interest of the Portis folks the time seemed very brief indeed. We had most of the experiences that come to any body of people in that length of time, some occasions that brought intense suffering and sorrow but many that brought joy and happiness. In all 142 souls were added to the church during this time. The Sunday school and the other auxiliaries grow to be standard, leaders were raised up and the work in every respect strengthened. It was not an easy matter to pack our belongings and hie away to another work, but nevertheless, that is exactly what we did. On the last Tuesday evening of our residence in Portis the church met at the home of Brother and Sister H. A. Turner and tendered us a farewell reception. During the evening we were presented with a beautiful set of dining chairs. We appreciate this gift very much. Many were the friends we left in Portis, and wherever God may lead us in our labors for him we will always keep a warm place in our hearts for this loyal people. Our earnest prayer is that they may continue to stand back of their new pastor, Brother Roy Brumbaugh, and go on to greater victory for the Lord.

After returning from National Conference we drove to Morrill, and immediately entered into our work as pastor of the Brethren here. We have but little to report so far, but we can say that from what little observation we have made we have a whole-souled people to lead. For five weeks we have had no service at the church because of the terrible disease that has been lurking in our land. We expect to open God's house again November 17 and trust that we may enter into the work with extra zeal and effort, that much may be accomplished during the winter months. We ask the prayers of God's people everywhere that his will may be done in us.

BELL'S JOTTINGS

Sad News

I was called suddenly from National Conference to my home in New York by the unexpected news of Mother's death; Only those who have passed through a like experience understand what such separations mean. I desire to express to the members of Conference my appreciation for the resolution of kindness and sympathy passed. Also to those who sent me letters of comfort.

Dayton Farewell

Returning from New York, I came to Dayton and made preparation for our western trip. The Dayton church in its characteristic way showed the pastor and his family their kindness and love with a church reception in which kind words were spoken and practical and valuable gifts were made.

We were loath to leave Dayton, yet, knowing that Brother Cobb would be on the field, and having confidence in his leadership, we felt the work would be well cared for during our absence.

Off For California

On Tuesday morning, September 10th, we loaded our Ford car with camp equipment and family of six and started for California. The many incidents, interesting visits and sights are too voluminous for this article. We made over 3,000 miles, counting our side trips, and were exactly four weeks on the way; spending eight days visiting enroute. The National places of interest visited were, The Petrified Forest of Arizona, The Grand Canyon and Prehistoric Cliff Dwellers. It was certainly a great trip.

At Long Beach

This is the most attractive coast city in Southern California. We have here one of the finest and best equipped church buildings in the denomination, and a membership of devoted and loyal followers of the Christ. Brother Bauman and his helpers have done a great work in this city. I have been here five weeks and as yet have not preached in the church on account of the "Flu" ban, but expect to have services next Sunday, November 17th.

New Church at Fillmore

We spent one Sunday at Fillmore, California, with our Brother Lowman, who is building up a work in that place. They have a beautiful new building almost completed, which will be dedicated next month. Brother Lowman and his wife were formerly members of our church in Dayton and it was a source of pleasure to meet them. I am expecting to hold a meeting here next month.

Yours in the Glory Hope,

692 Stanley Ave. W. S. BELL

WANDERING EXPERIENCES

Thinking that a few intimate experiences of the past may be of interest to the readers of the Evangelist I can say "Once I was young, now I am old." Yet are there many things in our life that will never be forgotten in the experience of my ministerial life of almost fifty years. I was well acquainted with a man who was always actively engaged in the ministry, and that without regard to money or price much of his time. And in addition to all this, I have known this man and his faithful wife bear their their equal share in money and other needful things in the church where they lived and served. Now a little more and I am done. I have known this man to have many calls to come and hold meetings, which calls he filled, paying his own expenses both ways. Some of these places served by this man at his own expense, now have strong churches.

Now my dear readers: This man now represents the Superannuated Ministers you are paying five and ten dollars a month.

A CHANGE OF JURISDICTION

Calls for help from those in distress come to the Red Cross Home Service from all kinds of places, but when they come from Police Headquarters the young lady who responds usually does not find at the end of her trip a very small boy, his face streaked and smudged where his grimy little fists have wiped away the tears. The small boy was not unknown to the Red Cross worker, and back in Billy's mind there must have been a strong conviction that with the Red Cross lady mercy would season justice, or he would not have selected her as counsel for defense.

The police officer in charge looked very serious. He took his place judicially behind a desk and glared at the offender, motioning the Red Cross lady to sit on the opposite side, where sympathy could flow only from looks.

"Name?" thundered the police officer.

"Billy Bradley," sobbed the boy.

"Charged with?"

"T-t-taking d-dynamite!"

"Guilty or not guilty?"

"How do I know?" wailed Billy. "I haven't been tried yet."

This was too much for the dignity of the police officer. Court adjourned. Billy burrowed his head on the shoulder of the Red Cross lady.

"It is that real estate subdivision they are making out near Billy's home," explained the officer. "All the boys run away from school to play there on the days the men blow up trees and stumps with dynamite. They pester the life out of me because I am always afraid they are going to get hurt; but this morning I caught the young rascal helping himself from the box, and you know, Miss, that was too much. That was serious."

"It certainly was," agreed the young lady gravely. "Billy, the son of a lawyer, should know what a grave offense stealing is. Why did you take the dynamite?"

"I wanted to s'prise mother," explained Billy eagerly, "I wanted to take home a stick for my little cannon and make a noise like a bi-i-ig gun!"

"Officer," said the young lady, "I think this is a Red Cross case. It involves a long course of treatment that you couldn't undertake. If you will turn Billy over to me—"

"Sure," came the ready response. "It ain't the firm hand of the law he is needing, at his age. It's the firm hand of the father that's in the army and according to the way I dope it out you Red Cross folks are trying to take his place?"

"Exactly, and the next time you find a soldier's son in a fix like this, suppose we hold court in my office?"

"I get you," asid the officer soberly. "I have a boy myself."

"GIVE THE MONDAY NIGHT SHIFT CREDIT"

Recently Mr. W. Frank Persons, Director General of the Department of Civilian Relief of the American Red Cross, had occasion to journey from Washington to Chicago, accompanied by Asistant Director Maurice Willows. By the time he had reached Chicago, late in the evening, Mr. Persons had a well-developed case of influenza and was unable to leave his berth. He insisted that he wanted nothing save a hot lemonade, which Mr. Willows set forth to find.

At the station lunch counter they refused to take time to make anything for any one, but suggested that the Red Cross canteen down the track might provide it.

There Mr. Willows went with his tale of a sick man desiring hot lamonade above all things else, and found immediate response. A helpful and sympathetic canteener made the lemonade, put it in a teapot to preserve its warmth, and added a sandwich on the tray.

By that time the train had been switched elsewhere, so Mr. Willows and the canteener scurried across tracks and past puffing trains until they finally found Mr. Persons' car.

He was cheered by the lemonade and wrote a little note on his card to express his gratitude and appreciation, which note was returned with the tray.

The canteener was amazed to learn to whom her lemonade had gone.

"I thought it was for a soldier," she said, —"an enlisted man."

Mr. Willows asked her name that Mr. Persons might report her kindness, but this she refused to give.

"Just say," she replied, "that it was the 'Monday night shift!'"

COMMUNION NOTICE

The Fairhaven, Ohio Brethren church will hold its fall communion service on Sunday evening, November 24th.

All are invited to meet with us who hold like faith.

B. F. OWEN, Pastor.

Our Dead

SHANK.—Earl, October 11, of influenza and pneumonia, at Camp Upton, New York. For years he was a member of the Brethren church and he died in the service of his country and in his faith in the Lord Jesus. Funeral services by the writer assisted by W. C. Teeter. Rev. 14:13.

YATES.—Dorothy, a little maiden of fifteen summers, a loyal member of the Brethren church, stricken with this terrible plague we call influenza, called for the anointing service which was administered, shortly after which she went peacefully home to glory. Services by the writer assisted by W. C. Teeter. Rev. 14:13.

DEETER.—Alonzo, on October 22, of influenza and pneumonia, at home here in Dayton. His wife was so sick she could not go to the grave and before she got out of bed she lost her mother of cancer and her husband's mother of influenza and pneumonia. Services by the writer and W. C. Teeter. Job 14: 14.

WINTENHALTER.—Henry, a long time resident and well known neighbor, of the epidemic. He was never married and never made any profession of religion. Services by the writer. Amos 4:12.

LEWIS.—Charles Edgar, October 12 of influenza and pneumonia, in the middle walk of life. Sick but a few hours. Seems that the stronger the man, the easier victim he becomes for the plague. Services by the writer. 2 Samuel 20:3.

GILBERT.—Cora, in the prime of life, and a splendid Christian woman, since she was fourteen, of influenza and pneumonia was called from the side of her husband. Her sister was sick at the time also but tried to minister to her. Services by the writer and W. C. Teeter, from 2 Cor. 5:1.

DEETER.—Catharine, asleep in Jesus, and what a sweet sleep it is for her whose life has been a continual benediction not only to her own family but to all who knew her. A saintly old mother of the First Brethren church. We will certainly miss her. Services by the writer and W. C. Teeter. Rev. 21:1-7.

DETRICK.—Mary, aged 35, of influenza and pneumonia, leaving a husband and four children, the youngest an infant. Services by W. C. Teeter.

SHANK.—Rosa, nee Stemple, aged 21 years, of influenza and pneumonia, wife of William Shank. She was a member of the Brethren church at West Alexandria. Left a husband and two-year-old son. Services by W. C. Teeter.

OHMART.—Paul P., a young attorney of 27 years, brilliant and of more than ordinary ability. At the early age of 12 years he gave his heart to God and became a member of the First Brethren church at Dayton. He was a Sunday school worker, a church man, and a highly esteemed Christian gentleman. He was a victim of pneumonia superinduced by influenza. W. C. Teeter was called to Springfield to conduct the last sad rites from Ps. 23.

E. M. COBB.

GARBER.—Wilfred Dolf Garber was born September 3, 1893, died of pneumonia in the base hospital at Camp Sheridan, Alabama, October 15, 1918, aged 25 years, one month and 11 days. He leaves his parents, John and Rosa Garber, a brother Edward of Cheyenne, Wyoming, Frank, living near Crown station, and a twin sister, Wilma, living with her parents. He leaves also a numerous family of more distant relationship.

He united with the Brethren church at Crown Chapel, October 31, 1903 and lived a consistent Christian life until death.

His body was laid at rest with his forefathers in Franklin cemetery, six miles northeast of Leon. No public funeral was held but his neighbors and friends gathered in the dusk of Saturday, October 19, and laid him away with simplicity as became a soldier. A large floral offering was sent to the grave and his casket was laid away in the folds of Old Glory for which he had so untimely given his life.

A THANKSGIVING DAY PRAYER. By George H. Hubbard

WE have thought of Thy loving kindness, O God; therefore come we now to render to Thee our thanks. And the praise we speak, we speak not for ourselves alone, but also for those in our homes "cumbered about much serving," for the men and women toiling in manifold needful activities, for the boys at their play, for those who feel more gratitude than they express and for those who express more gratitude than they feel.

WE THANK THEE for what Thou hast wrought for us, in us, through us;

For health, strength, success, prosperity, happiness; and no less for sickness, for loss, for failure and disappointment; for all alike come to us from Thee and are equal tokens of Thy love and messengers of Thy grace;

For all that these varied gifts and disciplines have wrought in us of mental, moral and spiritual growth, for enlarged visions, for deepened experiences, for strengthened purposes and chastened spirits;

For the privilege of being workers together with Thee, of sharing Thy service, Thy sacrifice, Thy joy.

WE THANK THEE for what Thou hast granted and for what Thou hast withheld, for what we have by Thy gift and for what we are by Thy grace, for what Thou hast done for us in Thy love and far more for what Thou hast been to us in Thyself, for the consciousness of Thy presence and power in our lives, giving us strength in weakness, light in darkness, comfort in sorrow, grace in trial.

WE THANK THEE for our common humanity, that we ARE as other men, children of a common Father, Brethren in a common family. We rejoice in the growing consciousness of our mutual privileges and duties, the problems and burdens, the sympathies and possibilities of this great brotherhood.

WE THANK THEE for the vision of divinity which it is our privilege to interpret in the common life, for the liberty and the glory of the children of God.

AND WE PRAY THEE, make us as grateful in our hearts as we say we are with our lips; and let the Amen of our Thanksgiving Day prayers and anthems be the kindness, the brotherly service and the Christly self-sacrifice of an unbroken succession of Thanksgiving days through all the coming years of our life.

For Thine own name's sake. Amen.

—The Advance.

"You poor, scairt little critter, you!" The words were as near a caress as Sarah could come. "There, there, don't you fret a mite. I'll teach you to cook. I'd admire to. Dave needn't know, ever, if you don't want he should. As for tomorrow—

Her eyes rested on the chaos all about her with the satisfaction of a general rallying his forces for a hard battle. "You look me up another gingham apron, an' we'll turn to and red things up. Then I'll start in on a batch of pies. Dave is going to have as good a Thanksgiving dinner as he ever set down to if I do say so as shouldn't!"

She laughed like a girl. In that moment Sarah Curran was almost pretty. In the eyes of Lily—and perhaps the Recording Angel—she was beautiful.

"While you're picking up the kitchen, I'll run across home and fetch a fruit cake and a couple of jars o' pickled peaches and preserves." She planned joyously. "I baked that cake more'n a month ago. I always did think your mother's fruit cake was a little mite fresh-tastin', if anything."

Star-Shine

At dusk the next evening Sam'l Curran and his wife, Sarah, went down the snowy path to the roadway, hands and hearts atingle with the warmth of their farewells. The soft November night was all aglow with star-shine. It lay on their two middle-aged faces, touching them to a semblance of youth again.

"It's been a real nice Thanksgiving, ain't it, Sarah?" Sam'l broke the silence almost timidly. "I dunno just exactly why, but seems as if there'd been more thankfulness in it than usual."

In the dimness Sarah smiled, under her breath.

"I asked Dave an' Lily over to supper Sunday night, Sam'l," she said, with an attempt at matter-of-factness. "Thanksgivin' don't come often enough. We don't make company of 'em—just have a pick-up supper like we would ourselves."

Sam'l looked down at the little figure bobbing along at his side, struggling for words to express his joy in the new order of things, his pride and love for her.

"You don't need to cook up extra for anybody—not if the President of the United States should drop in unexpected to tea!" he declared. "That was a nice enough dinner Dave's wife give us today, but it couldn't hold a candle to your cookin', Sarah! I could tell the difference any day."

A warm little wave of happiness swelled up in Sarah's heart, and broke in a mist of tears. Through them she smiled up at him tenderly, at the little secret joke of his words. Men folks were like that, Lily had said—bless men folks!"

"Oh, Sam'l!" sighed Sarah, joyfully.

In the soft moonlight it was a girl's face she lifted to his shy boy kiss.—Christian Advocate.

Give the Bible a Chance

Is the world to have a new awakening? It has tried other things, why not try the Holy Scriptures? Where the Bible has been honestly tried has it proven a failure? Ten million lives have just been sacrificed as a result of materialistic philosophy; and by a mighty, prepared people. Theistic evolution has not only drenched this old world in blood, but it has robbed and pillaged and outraged and murdered until the world stands amazed and heartbroken. The race is well nigh in despair. The strong and able have been called and we have seen them entrain through tears and sobs and march away to do and die. But humanity is now calling for men and women who have a will to do and a heart to serve. In this call there is no danger of being rejected as physically unfit. Patriotism and religion combined shall yet, under God, unfurl to the breezes the victorious slogan, "THE WAY OF THE CROSS LEADS HOME." While nation after nation, with deposed rulers, is struggling to find itself, let a united Christendom with all the might and means at its command point to the Cross of Christ.

The world, sick and weary at heart, needs a REVIVAL OF BIBLE PREACHING. It will take a Bible people to promote such a revival. Our churches in the past have laid great stress on Bible preaching. A mighty work has been wrought by our fathers, and I have often wondered whether the coming generations would have so strong a foundation because of the work we are doing. There is one thing sure, and that is if we are to be a "Bible people" in the future we must continue to do Bible preaching. And Bible preaching, relating it to present problems and the world's present-day needs, will increase our strength as a people and will exalt us to a place of greater service in the church of God. The Brethren are not a numerous people, but we should make our impress on every community which we touch on great Bible preaching. This should be our specialty. We should persist in making clear to the people the Bible teaching on its great themes, so much so that the community would be discussing the same themes. Along such lines it will do no harm to have the preacher talked about.

In every community there is need of light from God's Book on such themes as "What Must I Believe to be Saved?" "What Must I do to be Saved?" "What Must I do to be Lost?" "Bible Faith, and How to Get It," "The Human and the Divine Elements in Salvation," "How to Know You are Saved, by Facts or Feeling," "The Commission on Go, the Commission on Teach, and the Commission on Babtize," "The New Birth," "Rightly Dividing the Word," "The Master's Use of the Towel and Basin," "The Trinity in the Rite of Baptism," "The Bible, How unlike Other Books," "The Holy Spirit." The cases of conversion as recorded in the Acts, if presented with a view of leading people into the kingdom, would prove of great value to arouse people to the need of sound conversion. Every preacher ought to have a great sermon on the "The Conversion of Saul of Tarsus," and "Jesus—the World's Unchanging Creed." Among sermons, this last should be a classic.

A revival of Bible preaching will prepare the people for a stable missionary policy. It has been said that the New Testament "is the greatest missionary volume that has ever been written, or ever will be written." The four gospels stand at the head of the list on "The Missionary Motive." They each close with a commission from our Lord to evangelize the world. But what modern volume on missions can nearly approach the Book of Acts on thrilling missionary endeavors? The missionary achievements of the early church are records unsurpassed. The missionary journeys of St. Paul are the world's greatest models on "Great Plans Gloriously Executed." Churches founded on the first journey were not left without supervision to struggle and die, but were visited again and again by this little company of missionaries. "And some days after Paul said unto Barnabas, "Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do" (Acts 15:36,. He well knew that without such oversight these little churches would perish. He wrote to Corinth, "Besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches" (2 Cor. 11:28). With such care and oversight, the Brethren could save a score of churches, and place many a good man in the active ministry who is now idle. And here is a superintendent with the O. K. of the New Testament set out in such a conspicuous manner that had we been looking for a Bible plan we must have stumbled over it: "For this cause lift I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I have appointed thee" (Titus 1:5) O yes; the Bible has MOTIVE; but the Bible has PLAN, and the Bible has SUPERVISION. But we have failed to follow the old Book, and while our churches are dying we are still making surveys and evolving plans. In the early church the most responsible work was done by the strongest men. They were adequately supported. For years we have been trying to do this work with men "picked up" from the various callings. Placing these men in the most difficult tasks of the church without superintendents would be like putting a lot of inexperienced men in a factory where each one could do as he pleased, and then expect that factory to be a success without a superintendent. The Allies began to win as soon as all their armies were placed under the command of one officer. Let the Book of Acts be our Standard Text on Missions, at least until our churches are more familiar with it than they are. The Epistles, for the most part, were missionary letters written by missionaries to mission churches. Studying these with a view of "how" would be well worth while in any Missionary Course.

Then, every agency of the church should constantly hold before its constituents the value of an appeal to the Bible. If our O. A. B. C. do not succeed in creating a greater love for the old Book, what will all of their social "gush" avail? Our own Sunday school literature often fails to "hit" when a safe hit would win the game. In treating the lessons in last quarter when New Testament cases of conversion were presented, I often wondered at what they failed to say. Brethren people sustain Brethren literature that our young people may get Brethren teaching. Every agency of the church should emphasize—not so much the common teaching of Christianity—but those great truths that are neglected and ignored. The Brethren church should compel a hearing on the whole gospel. Our fathers were strong here. They may have used an adverb sometimes when an adjective would have been better (and who has not), but they knew their English Bible, and placing their fingers on a "thus saith the Lord" to clinch some great, though neglected truth, had a different ring than the overworked phrase, "each one must settle the question in his own conscience."

From the Editor's View-Point

Moral versus Military Greatness

For a great many centuries the man who has been regarded as the greatest man of his generation has most generally been a great military leader, a man who has led vast armies in mortal combat and to victory. All too long have military achievements been regarded as the greatest achievements of any generation or of any century. Whether it has been the taking of Jericho by the great Hebrew military leader by Joshua fifteen hundred years before the beginning of the Christian era or the battle of Gettysburg in America or the latest capture of Jerusalem by General Allenby's allied forces, it has been all the same, the military genius of the victorious leader has been the outstanding fact in his life.

That many of these great military achievements have been pivotal points around which civilization has taken a turn for the better is not to be denied, and that the genius of a man who can extricate his army from a bad situation and win a victory out of what appeared to be certain defeat worthy of special mention must be admitted, and in the light of such circumstances it is not to be wondered at that the world has made more of its military heroes than of any other class of human society. But while it is ever true that the world is ready to give unstinted praise to these gerat military leaders for their achievements in war it is only to be regretted that the same praice can be given to only a very few of them because of their moral achievements. Mr. Frank H. Simmonds asks, "Is it too much to believe that on the military side Ferdinand Foch will hereafter rank with Caesar, Frederick and Napoleon, and on the moral side surpass them all?" We would like to be able to answer a hearty no to the question propounded by Mr. Simmonds, and we believe comng generations will answer in the same way, but we would like to have it stand out before all the world that the MORAL victories of General Foch, as the moral victories of any other man, are the greatest victories possible for a human being to win, for "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city." This is the lesson we are ever in danger of overlooking in every generation and yet it is one of the most important lessons any man or any generation of men can learn. Moral victories are always greater than military victories.

In Accord with Discord

To some people the sweetest sounds that can fall upon their ears are the discordant sounds of clash and contention and their greatest delight is in witnessing or participating in the unharmonious things of life. This may have appeared to be true in matters of religion in the days that have been but which are no more, but it seems to be true in a special sense in the political world and especially in America at the present time.

It is not only in Europe that great political unrest exists, even in a land where freedom has been the watchword since the founding of the country, as in America and where the greatest liberties and opportunities prevail there those who find delight only in conflict. Occasionally such men make their way into the legislative halls of the states or even in the halls at the national capitol.

Recently a congressman from New York, but one who failed of re-election this fall, said "I am in accord with the Republicans when they show the worthlessness of the Democrats and I am in accord with the Democrats when they prove that the Republicans do not deserve the confidence of the masses." This is a confession that this distinguished congressman is in harmony only with that which is out of harmony with something else, and it matters little what the something else may be. Undoubtedly he is a "conscientious objector," that is he conscientiously objects to everything that is and agrees only with things that are not. He seems to be in precisely the same frame of mind that the old Hebrew prophet was in when he lay down under a Juniper tree and prayed that he might die since he was the only righteous man left in all the world. It is not worth while to deny that corruption has flourished among both classes of politicians mentioned by this talkative congressman, but should the class or the party to which he holds allegiance once gain control of political and public affairs we are unable to imagine the lengths to which their unprincipled radicalism would lead them. It could scarcely be anything better than "out of the frying pan into the fire." But the man who takes delight in standing by while two opposing forces, principles or parties fight one another in the hope that by and by they will annihilate each other and then he will be able to step in and take the palce of both is sure to suffer from a great disappointment. The man who is worthy of a place in the world's honorable positions is the man who himself participates energetically in the world's struggle upward, and who himself seeks the best things in life, not for himself, but for others, and who finds himself in accord with every upward movement in which his fellowmen engage.

Mice and Men

The old adage in regard to "the best laid plans of mice and men," has once more come true. It is reported that the Kasier said, "Wilson went into the war that he might have a seat at the peace table but he will never get it. I will prevent it," and the very next day after the magazine was received containing this remark from the lips of the Kaiser the daily papers of America announced that Wilson had decided to attend the meeting of the peace representatives in Europe. It will be an unprecedented and unheard of thing for an American president to do, but Wilson is used to doing unheard of things and he does them seemingly without regard to what the present generation may think of his actions. We believe he is looking farther into the future than most public men are at the present time, and while we may not agree with all his views we are firmly convinced that his presence at the peace table will add both dignity and virtue to the occasion.

The Strength of Union

Six years ago all America was shocked by the severity and acrimoniousness of the quarrel that arose between two ex-Presidents who both had been the victorious standard bearers of their party on former occasions. That men who had been called by the people to the highest position within their power to give to any American could become such bitter enemies in so short a time seemed almost impossible, but such was the situation six years ago; but what was considered by them both as a common danger brought them together once again and on the last day of October they met and forgot all differences and we are told buried the last trace of the "hatchet" and together framed an appeal to the voters of America that seems to have borne fruit, for it at least received the endorsement of the American people. But the lesson we learn from this reconciliation of our only ex-Presidents is one of the great value of working together in union and harmony. Religious workers may learn from politicians.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

THE PRESENT DRIVE

"So Many Drives"

Yes, there are a good many of them. We have become so used to them that if the Germans do not furnish them or the excuse for them we shall be compelled to make them. Fortunately, this drive was planned long ago. As long as the war. We have won the war and now, since the claims have shifted largely to other shoulders, we may pay the larger attention to this one.

For the Homeland

This drive is for the Homeland. It is for Home Missions. It is to fortify ourselves in the big centers of population. It is to strengthen the home base so that we may be able to build larger on the world field. Our FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM—do you still think of it?—calls for the raising of $15,000.00 for Home Missions and no congregation shall reach the Goals unless they shall have done their part at that sum by 1920. It is easy to see then, that we shall have to make a big drive toward that this year if we reach it next. This ought to be a sort of trial heat. I guess it will be for the 30c per member is away ahead of any amount per member ever asked before.

30c Per.

Did you note the amount? Deciding that sum per member was done by the Missionary Board of the Brethren church of which O. E. Bowman of Dayton, Ohio is Secretary. This is a large board as constituted at our National Conference and ought to tell very well how large ought to be this offering as well as how much is needed and as well the ability of the congregations to reach it. We can; we will.

How to Get It

The way to get it is to get it. Just plan so that each member will feel responsible for the 30c. A good way is to work this through every organization of the church. If the appeal is made only to the church at the regular services, many of the younger people, who will not fail to get 30c will be missed. By no means neglect to get the envelopes to the Sunday school scholars for many parents will be pleaded with through them and the results will be more than the simple getting of some in the envelopes from the church members. The children are fine helpers.

The Isolated

Every once in a while, we read a fine letter from the isolated. Lonesomeness because deprived of the blessings of association with the home members is a keynote in these letters. Now, Isolated, do you know that you would likely be able to receive a personal letter from your pastor if you'd just send him 30c for this collection? By the way, too, I think that would be a very splendid way to keep in touch with your pastor. It will be charged to the church that holds your membership and more still—each of these special days call either for something from you or someone in the church at home will be compelled to pay for you. "A hint to the wise," etc.

Tomorrow

"What a wonderful view reaches out before the world, tomorrow. It looks, as one studies the wonderful changes that are now taking place as if the world will be made over in some ways. Surely this war has taught some terrible lessons. Will we profit by it? One thing church people must surely have learned was the JOY OF GIVING. Scarce did we go to the door any more save to expect to find an appeal for help of some sort. Say, didn't you give a good deal more last year than you ever did before? And say, are you any poorer? Really, don't you feel more like a real person for having done it? Well, that is the joy of giving. We want that this Thanksgiving shall likewise make you feel bigger and better. Give your 30c and then multiply it as many times as you are glad that you are living and have a partnership with God.

Did You Pray?

The last two of my appeals on this page asked you to pray for the FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM and to pray for the success of the Lord's work in this trying time of the seeming triumph of Satan who was causing war, pestilence and famine. One of these asked that you write and tell me that you were. Not a single one did so. You say it is no real business of mine. No more reason why I should ask it than any other preacher? Well, if that is the way you feel about it, I'd like to have you say so. But you are mistaken. I have a right to know. I am sure that this Program will never be executed on time unless there is a big lot of prayer made especialy for it. As the Chairman and Publicity man for the Program, I need more encouragement than I have had to this time. So does the committee. We need to know how you feel as to success and the one big thing for that end is prayer. Do you pray for the success of the Program and will you not tell me so that I may pass on the inspiration?

Others Pray

Since I have made the appeal for prayers, a certain sect has paid full page advertisements in the leading dailies calling the people to pray for the mastery of the influenza. It is dying. Not long ago, the President and Congress called on the churches and people to pray for success of the American arms. I know that many prayers were offered for peace. The Sunday School Times made a follow-up canvass as to the appeal of Congress and the President and found that it was quite universally observed. The whole world, and the war managers especially, were surprised at the speedy collapse of the German cause. Why? Well, asisgn your reason, but I want to tell you that I believe in prayer. When America cast her force on the side of fallen and stricken humanity and disavowed desire for gain, there was an absolute difference and God could no more be deaf to the prayers of his American people than he was to the children of Israel under Gideon.

So Pray and Pay

They go hand in hand as sure as you live. Pay for the success of the Missionary work of the Homeland. Pray for the success of every part of the Program.

BAME.

Our Church and the Present War

BY MARTIN SHIVELY

The attitude of the Brethren church toward the subject of carnal conflict, as it has found expression, both verbally and physically, during the years of the past, is so well known that it scarcely needs restatement. Both passively and actively, its members have stood for peace and with all men, when such stand involved loss of liberty, property and even life. We have heard of one of its earliest ministers, a man of heroic stature, and splendid physique, who was solicited to become a member of the finest regiment in the army of his country and whose persistant refusal was punished by suspending him by his thumbs, but, though he must have suffered the most excruciating pain, he persisted in his refusal until inquiry on the part of his king, who came upon the scene, revealed his religious convictions and resulted in his release, from both his agony and the proposed military service. We remember also, how during the civil war, many of our Brethren were made to suffer because of the persistence of their refusal to participate in the fratricidal strife. And we, who are their successors, both in faith as to the necessity of a whole gospel and the responsibility of giving a vital exposition of it, have most earnestly hoped and fervently prayed such a question, as has been assigned to me for discussion, need never be re-opened. In common with many thousands of Christian people, we had believed that such progress had been made in the world's spiritual development, that this primitive and brutal way of settling disputes between nations was permanently superceded by the infinitely better way,—that of arbitration. Our prayers may have lacked in fervency, or more likely, our zeal for the real well being of mankind and the glory of God was not in sufficient harmony with our prayers to ward off the conflict which has come upon us, and painful though it be, we are forced to face the question of our personal, congregational, and denominational duty in the face of an almost unparalleled situation. And, though the subject of this paper would indicate that I am to speak for the whole church, I am sure that such was not the thought in the mind of the executive committee. None can so speak. My words can commit no one except myself, but as I approach the question, I do say in the spirit of prayer, earnestly hoping that what I shall say, may help other souls, and honor both the Word and its Giver.

We ought certainly to be profoundly thankful that we live under a government such as ours,—A government which recognizes the liberty of conscience so far as is compatible with the rights of others and its own safety and perpetuity. And a government too, which, in offering such guarantees, not only protects us in our worship, but permits us the greatest possible latitude in the choice of fields in which we may serve it, when occasion arises, making such service necessary. To have heeded the frequent apostolic admonition, to pray for those who were in authority, may have been a sore test of spiritual strength to some of God's people at various times, but to us, it ought not only to be a duty easy of performance, but a natural act, and one in which our souls delight. Our president and both branches of congress, have proceeded in a most thoughtful manner, in framing the military measures, under which the country is being operated. Every man with conscientious scruples, on the question of the sacredness of life, owes our government a debt of gratitude, which will not be easy to repay. But one of its expressions ought certainly to be our frequent prayers for those upon whom the terrible weight of the responsibility of leadership rests. We cannot forget the story, more or less widely known, which told of our president, who at a cabinet meeting, held not long before our country was drawn into the war, told his advisors, that, the time had come when he felt, that he had especial need of divine guidance, and asked all who felt as he did, to join with him in prayer for God's help in the crisis. And then, from about that council table, the voice of petition went up to the throne of Grace. No matter how much we may differ from him on other matters, we cannot but feel the more secure, when we know him to be a man of prayer. Neither will we soon forget some of the happenings in that long night session, when the congress was wrestling with the awful question of participation in the struggle, was being settled. Among them was this,—congressman Kitchin explained the vote he was about to cast, against the measure advocated by the administration, saying that he had spent many hours in prayer, seeking the wisdom which comes rrom on high. A friend who was present, told me it was the most dramatic moment he had ever witnessed and that while there were many, indeed a large majority, who did not agree with him, no man questioned his sincerity, none doubted his loyalty, which has both before and since, been abundantly demonstrated. These are by no means the only men, large in the affairs of state, who seek the counsel of God in these stirring times, and we are the more certain of the outcome, beause of it. Ours too, has been a land and ours a government with no ambitions for the extension of its territorial possessions. It won freedom for Cuba, and gave it independence, and by its friendly counsels and guaranteed protection, has not only secured the complete confidence of its people, but has enabled it to take its place among the sisterhood of nations. Its unquestioned policy of live and let live, makes it merit all the love which we feel for it, and fully entitles it to remembrance in every petition which we offer to the Throne of Grace.

There are those who hold that the Christian owes allegiance to no earthly government, and the recognition of such a duty, beyond the paying of the required taxes, is sinful. There are at least two passages of scripture, which have direct bearing upon the matter, as I see it. The first consists of the word of the Lord himself, who being tempted by the agents of his enemies with reference to the tribute money, when he said, "Render therefore, unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God, the things that are God's." Matt. 22:21. We may not agree as to all the implications which are involved in the things that are Caesar's, but to me, it means far more than mere money. If we are indebted to government for protection, education and opportunity for self advancement, the debt can hardly be paid in money alone, especially when money alone will not be able to provide for the safety and perpetuity of such government. Some additional light is thrown upon the question by the words of the inspired apostle, who in Romans 13:1 declared,—"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers." The word "subject" clearly implies more than mere passive support. Unquestionably it means obedience and co-operation. And all the more so because under our form of government, the selected agents of the people themselves, enact, define and administer its laws. Most of us, at least, believe that it is little short of criminal negligence to show such indifference as to who such agents shall be, as will allow us to remain at home on election day. We are confident that if all who say they love their country and declare their interest in its institutions, would interest themselves enough to seek the nomination and election of men, who would really represent them, many of the evils of which we are apt to complain, and justly so, would not exist. We are quite ready to champion participation in government to this extent, and defend the conclusion on the ground that, under the circumstances, we certainly owe it to Caesar.

According to the statement of Food Administrator Hoover, the entire world is but sixty days removed from famine. The most thorough campaign of education possible, has been conducted in behalf of increased production, and conservation of foodstuffs. With our limited vision, we may be disposed to doubt the accuracy of the report, but as good citizens, the proper thing to do, is to accept it, knowing that its author has exceptional advantages, in the way of securing information. I am sure that I am justified in saying that no people in all the land have responded more wholeheartedly to the Hoover appeal, than our own. Not only have our farmers added to the acreage under cultivation, but they have bestowed greater care upon that acreage, And I am sure that we have not failed in our war gardening either, so that the whole stock of foodstuffs has been not a little increased by our co-operation. And I am sure too, that any further demand which may be placed upon the American people, with reference to such need, will be faithfully met. Here is a field in which, even the "conscientious objector" can shine. The tragic and dramatic things which are taking place at the front, may make us forget that the real field of battle is far wider than the trenches. Our country has so many needs to satisfy, that enumeration is next to impossible. Not only must the vast army be fed, but the whole population as well. What quantities of beef and pork and bread and other things are required to meet that need. Wool and cotton must be provided in fabulous quantities to clothe the army and the populace behind it. Transportation, both by land and water, must be furnished in construction and operation. When any of these things with a host of others, are not supplied disaster overtakes the world. In the face of such an unparalleled condition with demand completely outrunning supply, but be he Brethren or any one else, the man or woman who fails to do their very best to increase production and to conserve, will deserve the scornful name of "slacker."

As to the merit of the struggle in which practically all the civilized world is engaged it is of course impossible to enter into a detailed discussion, within the limits of such a paper as this must be. In a general way, war is war,—a tragedy to be most earnestly deplored, and one whose enactment may well fill the hearts of men with terror. God's people must and will, do all in their power to prevent its coming and to heal the wounds which it produces, if it is thrust upon mankind. But in a very specific way, this war is different from most of its later predecessors. One cannot recall the suddeness with which it was begun, and the utter unpreparedness of the nations upon whom it was forced, as well as the ruthless manner in which it was conducted in Belgium and northern France,—one cannot have noted the unutterabble cruelty to the defenseless womanhood and childhood of the invaded sections, as well as the wanton destruction of property, without branding the German government as one of the greatest criminals, if indeed not the greatest, of all time, and its servants, at whose hand the awful crimes have been committed, as willing dupes of an unprincipled power. Neither can one recall the evident earnest purpose of our president and his advisors, to keep our people from becoming involved in it, in spite of the pressure which was brought to bear upon them, without feeling that the participation of our government at present was not of our own seeking. If one is to believe the reports of infringement upon our national rights, as they found daily expression in the public prints, and there is no reason for having doubted their accuracy, and if credence is to be given to the expressed purpose of the arch culprit, toward our own nation, as soon as the way was cleared for such nefarious action, then there can be little room for difference of opinion, as to the matter of our being forced into the conflict as a nation. No one prayed more persistently nor preached more faithfully, in favor of a cool head, in the trying situation, than did our own pastors, but when the Lusitania was sunk without warning and hundreds of noncombatants, among whom were helpelss women and little children were sent to a watery grave, the human within us, cried for punishment upon the cruel wretch and his agents, who could be guilty of such a devilish crime. But why go further into a discussion of atrocities. The ravishment of womanhood, the mutilation of childhood and horrible crimes committed upon the manhood which has fallen into the power of the invader, is all too well known to need repetition. Only the infinite grace of a merciful God can make us able to ever think kindly of those who have been and are responsible for such cruel crimes. One cannot but shudder as he thinks of what would have been, if the first stroke had fallen upon us. How devoutly we ought to thank God for the fact that it has not been so. But there can be no question as to the nature and extent of our obligation toward the poor unfortunates, totally wihout guilt, upon whom the cruel blow has fallen.

By far the greater part of our population, will not be called to participate in a specifically military way, in this war. Many are too young and many more are past the age when they become subject to such service. And still many more are of the gentler sex, and thus not subject to call. But no real American, whatever the sex or age, who has lived under the beautiful banner of his country and has enjoyed its protection and its liberties, as well as the unparalleled advantages and opportunities, can feel otherwise, than he desires most earnestly, to give tangible expression to his appreciation, and lend his co-operation, to the full extent of his ability as occasion so to do may present itself. Fortunately, the field is wide, and the need great. Vast sums of money are necessary to enable our government to carry on its stupendous task. Even its daily expenditures are staggering to the average mind. We are asked to loan to it, what we can, and take the government's promise to pay, in the form of Liberty Bonds. The denominations are such as to enable those with very little capital, to become purchasers, and the terms of payment for the bonds are such as to increase the advantage. And still further, to make it an easy matter to lend to the nation, Thrift Stamps are offered to those of smallest financial ability, all non-taxable, bearing a good interest, and having behind them, as security for their repayment, the wealth of the nation. The smallest degree of patriotism, to say nothing of a purely self interest, ought to make us hear the appeal of our government and render the assistance asked for. And then, there are the organizations which stand for the care of the boys who have been taken into the army, and among which the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. are most prominent. No doubt some of you who hear me today, have a very vital interest in the welfare of those boys, because among them are those who are flesh of your flesh and bone of your bone. Under the most favorable circumstances they may have need of such ministration as the Red Cross offers to the sick or the wounded. Vast sums of money are needed to build and support the hospitals which this organization sustains. Their entire object is the saving of life, whether of friend or of foe, and the service it renders cannot but excite our highest admiration. That great corps of workers which goes out into No Man's Land, where shot and shell are falling, with death at hand, to gather up the wounded and bring them, with tender hands, to dressing station and hospital, is made up of men who hold not their life dear, for the sake of the fallen. Many of them meet death in the discharge of their duties, and their bravery is not a whit behind that of the man who takes his place in the trenches or goes over the top at command of his superior officenr. And what of the doctors, the nurses, and the other attendants, who work tirelessly, and fearlessly in the hospitals, doing their utmost to releive pain and save life. Words cannot express the admiration the thinking heart feels for them. To support such an organization, both with our means and by the work of our hands is clearly the duty of every Christian. In this manner he plays the part of the Good Samaritan and obeys the apostolic injunction,—"Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." We may not see the man to whose hurt the bandage which we make is applied, but the fact is, that a life so saved is a life to our credit, and is certainly among the things suggested by the Master who will say, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of my little ones, ye did it unto me." We may have an unconquerable aversion to the taking of human life, but no child of God can be indifferent to saving it. Here is one field in which we ought to feel at home and we must occupy it. And what the boys who are in the army, and the parents who love them, owe to the Y. M. C. A., is a debt so great, that eternity itself alone will reveal its extent. Laws for the moral protection of the boys were written by its leaders. No army in all the history of the world has been as clean as that which marches under the stars and stripes. The reason is not far to seek. The Y. M. C. A. has gone into the camps and the very trenches with its ministry of love, serving the social, mental and spiritual need of the men. There is no need for my going into further details upon its work for it is too well known to make it needful or interesting. But what I do want to say is this,—No man or woman with a drop of real Christian blood in his or her veins, can withhold from that or kindred organizations the fullest possible help of whatever kind in their power to give. It may permit or even co-operate in some things which we do not like and which we do not think consistent with its high purpose, but when one understands its full purpose, he cannot fail to glorify God for its existence and seek his divine blessing upon its workers.

Thus far nothing has been said with which many of our people will disagree. But what ought we to do with reference to a personal participation in the war as members of the army? We have little option in the matter of yielding to the operation of the draft law and, so far as I know, no one is offering any obstruction to it. We are fortunate again, in having such a government as that under which we live. The fullest possible provision has been made to respect the conscience of every man, except when he denies the right of government to command his service in any capacity. The military organization is made up of many departments with not a few which are non-combatant. No man, subject to the operation of the draft law has any right to refuse obedience to it, in my opinion. He can secure service in either the Quartermaster's department, or the Medical Corps, or perhaps some other department which recognizes his conscientious scruples, but he is not "Subject to the higher powers," unless he submits to the call of his country. His work in the fields just indicated is just as essential to success as is combatant service, and satisfies the requirement of the law. As to combatant service, I am willing to leave it to the conscience of the individual who must make the decision. Personally, I have not come to the point which would enable me to take the life of another, but I pray that I may not be tried as many of my fellow men have been. I have no quarrel with the man, be he in my church or another, who holds a different opinion. He must answer to God for his own acts, as I must for mine. With the figure of my Lord in my soul and a vision of him in life and in death, in my mind, I, personally, could not hesitate in my decision. My business is to present him as faithfully as he is in me and my hearer must make his own choice. An infinitely kind and merciful God will be his judge and mine.

War gentrally, and this war in particular, is the result of the setting aside of the sacred scriptures and the repudiation of Jesus Christ. Though the man whom we all hold most largely responsible for it, often invokes the help of God, and professes to believe religiously in both his existence and his power; no one of us has once noted in his recorded utterances the slightest reference to the Prince of Peace. Any vital recognition of him would have prevented the taking of the step which has plunged society into this vortex or ruin. Others too, are in danger of forgetting the Lord in whom alone is hope of life. Far too frequently we hear expressions which convey the idea that for the soldier who loses his life on the field of battle, the intervention of the sacrifice of Christ is not necessary, but that in making this extreme offer of himself he earns salvation and finds heaven's gate open to him without any further preparation. Our hearts are quickened and our eyes are often tearful with admiration and sympathy, as we hear the story of heroism and unselfish sacrifice, which find expression on the bloody fields, in our boys, and it is little wonder if we place them above the common run of mortals, and in our minds make all kinds of exceptions for them. But the fact is, and we are responsible for its propagation, that for soldier or civilian,—for combatant or non-combatant,—for people of any age or sex, it is still true, that "There is no other name given in heaven or among men, by which men must be saved, than by the name of Jesus." And it is equally true that the saving power of Jesus only becomes operative through faith in him by confession of him, and by obedience to him. There is only one Bible and only one Lord and this is true to all alike. And we are not kind to the soldier nor faithful to our Lord when we fail to emphasize this fact to all the world. Here too is a field in which we must speak and with no uncertain voice.

But the war will not be over when the last gun has been fired and the soldiers have gone back to the unfinished tasks. Peace will return some day, and we are all praying that the day may be hastened. But it will, in a very large way, be a new world to which it shall come. Many of the old things are already passed away, and others are in process of going. The bringing of order out of the chaos which war has wrought, will require the wisest brains and most courageous hearts. Only the thoughtless do not tremble in the face of the uncertainties of the future. None will want a return of the conditions which made this world's blood bath a possibility. Already mankind is talking of a League of Nations, to be organized to enforce a keeping of the peace. But force alone will fail, as it has failed in all ages of the past, to bring about conditions which will guarantee a permanent peace. Only the reign of the Prince of Peace can make the world safe for democracy or make democracy safe for the world. We are his servants, pledged to do his will, to be witnesses for him, and to give a living exposition of his word. In a faithful performance of this duty lies the realization of the world's hope. Our mission shall be fulfilled and our work done, when we shall have given the whole gospel to the whole world.

The Sunday School

Prices on "The Educative Process in Religion"

A number of inquiries have been received concerning the price of Part II of our First Year teacher training book, entitled "The Educative Process in Religion." Now that the full cost of production and distribution has been determined the National Sunday School Association has fixed the following prices: Less than five copies 20c each; five copies for 90c; 10 copies for $1.75; 15 copies for $2.55; 20 copies for $3.40.

Several causes have occasioned this sliding scale in prices: It costs little more to have a larger quantity printed. The unused copies would represent a loss. The booklet can be distributed more economically in quantities than by single copy. Moreover we want a large number of people to have the benefit of this most helpful work. Where classes for study are not being regularly maintained the Sunday school will find it profitable to purchase five or more copies for circulation among teachers who may study it privately.

Orders will be promptly filled by J. A. Garber, whose address is 141 College Avenue, Ashland, Ohio.

THE MAGI OF TODAY

The Sunday School department of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief has prepared a special exercise for use at the Christmas season in connection with the special Sunday school offering for this important and urgent work. The title of the exercise is "The Magi of Today." The program is prepared by Anita B. Ferris which is in itself a guarantee of its excellence.

In the program there are ten speaking parts and provision is made for from five to fifteen other parts according to the ability of the school. It is a strong program at once dignfied and entertaining. It may be used in connection with a Sunday service or on a week night according to the wish of the school. It bristles with interest and information and it is characterized throughout by swift movement and human interest.

The platform arrangement is simple and easily [illegible] the reach of small schools while it may be celebrated [illegible] use in the larger schools that desire it. This program will be supplied without cost to any Sunday school that will carry out the plans of the Committee for an offering for the work of the Armenian and Syrian Relief.

The schools that use the program will find it to be full of inspiration and satisfactory from every point of view.

HELPING STARVING CHILDREN OVER SEAS

Beersheba, Jerusalem, Nablous, Damascus and Aleppo. The march of the British army has been steadily northward. Great has been the rejoicing. Great also has been the steady and ever increasing march southward of tens of thousands of Armenian and Syrian refugees who have sought food, that their starved bodies might not become any weaker. The men had been killed months before. Many of the women were all but dead but they clung to life that in some way they might obtain food for their perishing children. War's victories bring tremendous responsibilities.

At least 400,000 starving children must now look for their very life to America. The Sunday schools of the United States and Canada hear the cry from far-away Bible lands. To help provide food $2,000,000 is asked from the Sunday schools here at home as well as from the countries where the World's Sunday School Association is active abroad. Last year about $1,000,000 was gladly given by these schools at the Christmas season. This year the need is much greater and double the amount furnished last year is the minimum to meet the need now.

A systematic campaign of giving information to every last Sunday school in this country is now going forward under the direction of the Sunday School War Council in co-operation with the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief. The headquarters is One Madison Avenue, New York City. Rev. George T. Webb, D.D., Secretary of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, is the Director of this Sunday School Relief Work. Dr. Webb is Superintendent of Religious Education for the Baptist Union of Western Canada and has been granted leave of absence from important work in Canada to serve as Executive Secretary for the entire campaign. Rev. Edgar P. Blake, D.D., of the Methodist Sunday School Board, is chairman of this Sunday School War Council. Associated with these men are a group of men loaned for this work by their respective boards.

W. C. Pearce, of the International Sunday School Association, is now making a tour reaching to the Pacific Coast, in which he is holding conferences with the secretaries of the various state Sunday school associations.

Every state and provincial Sunday school secretary is working to his utmost at this time to obtain leaders in each county, district, or other convenient unit. These men in turn will select other leaders for the smaller divisions to so perfect an organization that on December first, if possible, each Sunday school in America will have a visitor who will seek to acquaint that school with the general plan and urge them to take up the work of saving these 400,000 children in Bible lands from starving to death. Automobiles will be extensively used in this work. Had gasless Sundays remained, a special permit would have been granted to use the cars for this humane purpose. These cars will carry placards urging every reader to "Save a Child's Life." It will be a continent-wide appeal. On the shield is the picture of a rescued Armenian child, Shushan by name. She makes an appeal for fellow children of her race, as well as the starving among the Syrians and Greeks of Asia Minor.

"Magi of Today" is a special service which is to be used in each Sunday school on the day when the gift is received. In special preparation for this giving-day there is a three Sunday service, entitled, "Faith, Hope and Love," a portion of which is to be followed in a ten minute exercise on each of the three Sundays preceding the day when the offering will be received in that school. Many Sunday schools will take the offering on December 22nd, while some entire denominations will make this special day a Sunday in January, since their Christmas offering has already been designated for the work of foreign missions. The exact day is of small importance. The chief matter is to decide on a day as near the Christmas season as may be convenient and then follow the general plan provided by the Sunday School War Council. A manual has been prepared for the superintendents and suggestive stories have been arranged for the Beginners, Primary and Junior classes. A button has been designed for each member of the school who makes any contribution. Posters, maps of Bible Lands, and other literature is available, and can be had upon request. To superintendents has been mailed a set of literature needed by them and a request blank which when returned will bring a full supply of literature for his school.

EVANGELIST HONOR ROLL

The following churches have adopted the "budget" system for placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their congregation and are thus entitled to a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll of Brethren Churches:

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

After an absence of a number of weeks the Evangelist Honor Roll is once again introduced to our readers. The time of year has come when the pastors are putting forth their best endeavors to win a place for their church on this Roll. The latest church to include the Evangelist for every family in their annual budget is Oakville, Indiana. The last we knew of this church A. R. Staley was their resident pastor. This is another one of the churches where the Editor served as pastor more than twenty years ago that has won a place on the Honor Roll. Of the ten churches served by the Editor during his patsoral activities eight are now on the Honor Roll and one more comes very nearly having the Evangelist in seventy-five percent of the homes of the membership simply by the watchful attention given the matter by the pastor, and this is the Canton, Ohio church.

The first church in the brotherhood to adopt the budget system to provide more than $200.00 for Evangelist subscriptions was Lanark, Illinois, and we have just been notified that this church will continue another year.

The Home Mission Notes by George C. Carpenter were intended for last week's Evangelist, but they reached us after the matter for that number was all in type. The capacity of the present equipment and help of the Publishing House is so crowded that we cannot assure the publication of any contribution or report that reaches us later than Friday in the next issue of the paper. To do so upsets our order and is almost sure to cause the paper to be mailed one day late. Be on time brethren, if you want us to be on time also.

Many of the churches took their offering for Home Missions last Sunday and we trust all were successful in reaching the quota allotted them, but there are other congregations that will life this offering on next Sunday and we will join our repreesntatives of the missionary interests of the church in urging them to make this the most liberal offering in the history of the church.

While all pastors were prevented from doing active pulpit work during the month of October on account of the quarantine against public meetings, yet it was a busy month for all. Brother Shively's report from Masontown is typical of reports that can be duplicated by practically every church in the brotherhood, except in one thing, and that is the amount contributed to the Endowment Fund for Ashland College. Not many of our churches of equal membership can duplicate that amount. The word Brother Shively speaks concerning the general good that comes to a church from a visit from Brother Beachler is timely and should warm the feet of any pastor who may have been living in fear and trembling in anticipating his coming. The paper by Brother Shively, which we publish this week, was prepared for the Pennsylvania conference, but was not read as there was no conference, and while it treats of a war that is over the paper is still timely for it deals with fundamentals that are important to the Brethren faith at all times.

Brother H. H. Wolford reports the ordination to the ministry of Brother Florizel Pfleiderer of Claypool, Indiana. Though Brother Pfleiderer is but a young man, a senior in High School, he is not a novice as he has been preaching for some time for the Claypool congregation and at the request of the church he received ordination. We hope our young brother may realize his hopes to attend Ashland Seminary next year.

The large outlook or vision possessed by Brotherw Geo. T. Ronk, is indicated by the heading of his report this week. He does not confine his interests to the one church in Leon, Iowa, where he serves as pastor, but with a broader outlook he gives the news of an entire county. Brother Ronk has the right idea for the development of the work under the care of the Brethren church and her ministry, and we sincerely trust his hopes may be realized, especially in Decatur county, Iowa.

Some of our readers may have thought that the Four-Year Program page of the Evangelist had been quarantined with the churches of the brotherhood for the past month, but they were mistaken if they did. The page was there every week, but while the churches were closed there seemed to be nothing pertaining to the Program to put on the page. However it has now come out of its hiding place and appears again this week, and we trust it may be able to fill its place and to fulfill its mission from now until nineteen twenty.

The Milledgeville church held evangelistic services for three weeks soon after the close of General Conference, and while it was an enjoyable meeting, it did not bear as much immediate fruit as had been hoped because of unavoidable circumstances. Brother Coleman did his part well. Five members have been added to the Milledgeville church by baptism and two by letter since the last report from this place. Brother Snyder was called unanimously to continue another years as pastor of this church.

As is generally known by the brotherhood Alva J. McClain left the Miami Valley circuit of churches last fall to take charge of the work of the First Brethren church of Philadelphia. This week he gives us a full report of his three years' labors in the Miami Valley. It is an interesting report and should arouse the desire on the part of some Brethren minister to enter this field and take up the work where Brother McClain laid it down.

The Goshen, Indiana church is now engaged in an evangelistic campaign under the leadership of L. S. Bauman. We shall expect a good report from this meeting in about three weeks.

Brother I. D. Bowman has passed through some of the most trying experiences of his long ministry in his Philadelphia work during the past month. Other pastors have had a taste of sorrows of the plague, but none to our knowledge have passed through the depths of it as has Brother Bowman and family.

The intrepid Beachler and the dauntless Harley flew all around the "flu" in Pittsburgh the week beginning the tenth and in spite of the obstacles brought the Pittsburgh church over the top with $1800 for the permanent endowment fund for Ashland College. Pennsylvania is surely coming to the front in the endowment campaign; but how could she do otherwise after the tremendous pace set by Indiana. It matters not how high any other district may go it will yet remain that Indiana was the pioneer and leader in establishing a high record for the churches.

The secretary of the Brethren National Ministerial Association tells us there are a number of good brethren in the Association who have not yet paid up their last death benefit assessment which is now past due. This puts them on the delinquent list.

Around the Editor's Table

A Pop Gun and Gibralter

The Allies tried to go through the Dardanelles early in the war, but in spite of the best equipment any navy has ever seen they failed, for the defenses set upon the eternal hills on either side of the narrow channel were too firm to be battered down by the guns of the strongest navy in all the world; but no naval fleet has ever yet tried to pass Gibralter since it has been in the hands of the British Empire and it is likely that none ever will.

The protecting care of the almighty God and the sure defense of the scriptures has ever been likened unto the strength of the rocks, the hills and the mountains, and a number of years ago one of the greatest Christian statesmen the centuries have produced, the late William E. Gladstone, wrote his famous book, "The Impregnable Rock of the Scriptures." Had this book been the production only of the scholastics of the day it might have been regarded only as a professional production, but coming from the pen and the brain of one of the strongest men in politics and statesmanship England ever produced the book received a special welcome from the Christian public.

The scriptures have been assailed a great many times in the last few hundred years, but they still remain as an impregnable rock, the very Gibralter of revealed religion; but still there are those who attack this strong fortress from every conceivable position and angle; with long range guns and with hand grenades; with submarines (Jonah) and with aeroplanes (Destructive Higher (?) Criticism), but still the old Book stands, a strong tower, a mighty rock of defense to all who seek protection within its pages.

One of the latest attacks made upon this impregnable rock and the church founded upon it is the "pop gun" assault, just off the press, by the famous Upton Sinclair of Pasadena, California, in his little book, "The Profits of Religion." A copy of this book was sent the editor for review, and while we have not yet had time to read it more than half through, we have read the introduction and the conclusion as well as a number of chapters between and we feel free to say that Mr. Sinclair might as well attempt to wrest Gibralter from the British in a "pop gun" attack as to try to take the Bible, Chrisianity and the Christian church away from the people through the influence of such writings and such attacks as he makes in this little book.

It is true there is room for some of the criticism he offers. Perhaps there is some room for the criticism he has to offer in every chapter, but because there are human weaknesses mixed up with the application of eternal principles we are not justified in denying and rejecting these principles. That Mr. Sinclair is not competent to pass judgment on these matters is revealed in his introductory chapter where he likens religious services unto attempts made by men to lift themselves from the earth by their boot straps, when the very opposite is true of Christianity in its recognition of the fact that man can not raise himself and consequently he must have some lifting power from above such as God has revealed in his Book and in Jesus Christ, the Savior.

Can One Know He Is a Christian?

This is a question frequently asked and perhaps just as frequently answered, but the important thing about the answer is, Is it in accordance with the facts in the case and is it true?

One of the first things as well as one of the most important things to consider before an attempt is made to answer the question is to be sure one knows WHAT Christianity is. If one once determines to his own satisfaction what a Christian is then he should have no difficulty whatever in determining whether or not he is a Christian. If this is once known it then seems superfluous to ask, "Can one know he is a Christian? Do you suppose any one would have the temerity to ask President Wilson if he knows whether or not he is a Democrat? or to ask ex-President Taft if he knows whether or not he is a Republican? Such a question would be an offense to either one of these distinguished gentlemen. They know what a Democrat or a Republican is and they know whether they conform to the requirements of either political faith. And a Christian should know what Christianity is just as well as a democrat knows what it takes to be a Democrat or a Republican knows what it takes to be a Republican.

In his last two first-page editorials Dr. Miller made it clear that Christianity is both a faith and a life; that belief and conduct are inseparable in the life of one who claims to be a Christian. It is well to study carefully the things that Christianity represents and then it will not be hard to know if one's life is bearing Christian fruits, for "by their fruit shall ye know them."

A Salvation Army officer tells of "Warrior Brown," an old woman who had won this name by her fighting qualities when intoxicated or enraged. After her conversion she testified in an open-air meeting. Some one on the street hit her a nasty blow with a potato. Only one week before such a cowardly assault would have been sufficient to drive its perpetrator to cover to escape the wrath of the old woman. But the "Old Warrior" quietly picked up the potato and put it into her pocket. Not a word was said but when the harvest festival came around the "Warrior" brought a little sack of potatoes and explained that she had cut up and planted the potato with which her Christianity had been tested, and she was now presenting the Lord with its increase. Did this old woman know whether or not she was a Christian? Yes, not only did she know it, but the neighbors knew it as well, and every professing Christian should know the same thing about his own life and claims.

Strength in Obedience

Sometimes a follower of our Lord may feel almost too weak to try to accomplish what he is convinced the Master wants him to do, and rather than make an effort and fail he decides he will make no effort at all. Without a doubt this failure to try or in other words to obey is one of the great reasons there are so many weak Christians in our churches. Not only have they failed to comprehend the law of life but they have also failed to understand the law of growth and strength. There is an old saying that "we learn to do by doing," and of course one gains strength in the doing also. Someone has said, "Every time a soldier obeys he grows stronger in obedience." This is a kind of growth that is of exceptional value to the discipline of an army, for the very strength of an army lies in the obedience of the men to the commands and orders of their officers. Without obedience to orders from their superiors an army is nothing more than a mob. It may be difficult for a soldier, fresh from civil life, to render even more prompt and efficient obedience to the next command or order as it is issued.

It should be even easier for a Christian soldier, a member of the Lord's great army, to heed the commands of his High Commander than it is for any member of any military organization in the world. The Christian soldier may feel that the Lord requires more of him than should be required from any common soldier, but it should be remembered that promotion is rapid in the army of our Lord and one never knows just what high position he may be in training for nor how soon he shall receive his commission from the great King of all kings. The everyday tasks of a Christian in the common walks of life may seem unfruitful and they may grow monotonous as one does not consider their bearing on the future, but it should be remembered that no act is for today only, but that every act of life has a bearing on and a relation to eternity.

In the light of this view of life it is not difficult to understand the necessity of strict obedience to every command of the Lord, and though this obedience may come hard at first, let it be remembered that each act of obedience makes the next act all the easier and that more strength is gained each day as this life of obedience is lived. As one's muscles become more obedient to one's will every time they respond to the impulse of the will and thus acquire skill and dexterity so one's life by responding to the impulse of the divine will also gains the spiritual skill and dexterity so essential to good work in developing the higher things of life; and moreover we have the promise of Jehovah that he will give strength to his people, but it is only to people who obey.

Setting Up Exercises

Some young men who had previously had an idea that they were strong and well trained physically have found that the simple "setting up" exercises that are a part of the regular drill of "raw recruits" in a military training camp or in an S. A. T. C. bring into play muscles that they really did not know they possessed and the first hour spent in such exercises frequently makes them feel as though they had been run over by a steam roller. They thought they were strong and that their muscles were as "hard as nails" as the old saying goes, but they found out they were mistaken after their first hour of drill.

The Christian soldier needs a training camp just as surely as the soldiers of any national armies do and he needs the setting up exercises as well. He will find that the best drill ground for him is the church or some one of its many auxiliary organizations.

One of the great needs of the American army in its beginning was properly trained officers, and early in the war special officers' training camps were established and the call went out for young men with college training, lawyers, doctors, teachers, business men and all such who had minds that had been trained to grasp details quickly to come to these camps and prepare for officers' commissions in the American army. The same insistent call goes out from the church, and the need was never greater than it is at the present time for a better trained leadership in the churches, a leadership of men and women who are able to direct the "setting up" exercises of new recruits and then to lead them on to victory in the conflict with the evil forces of the world.

SHAKING BONES IN WEST AFRICA

After a morning service in Portuguese West Africa a Mbunda man, dressed in three skins—his own and two cormorant skins—brought forward an armful of ring-streaked posts, each post representing an ancestral spirit, and said that he has been listening to the Gospel message as to the folly of such things, and had decided to give up the old ways for the new. He was followed by a Nkangala man, with a bunch of ancestral worship sticks, saying that he wished to abandon these for the worship of the true God and His Son, Jesus Christ. Thereupon a fire was kindled and these worship sticks went up in smoke, without audible protest on the part of the spirits they represented. As the flames arose, the wife of the Nkangala man came shyly with her personal fetish to put on the fire. This action on the part of these people means a clean-cut break with their old system of religion that has dominated them and their fathers before them with its dark influence. The incident resembles the shaking among the dry bones in the valley that was the result of Ezekiel's message.

New Church for Mebea People

The Mebea people of West Africa have no particular status in the world. To those dwelling in the interior the Mebeas are coast people, while to the beach man the Mebea is a bush man and is accordingly looked down upon by the former, who considers himself vastly superior to the people of the heathen interior. The Mebea people are comparatively few in number, hardly running into the thousands, and live in a narrow line parallel with the coast from a little south of Benito to a point just north of Kribi.

The Christians among the Mebea people have heretofore been connected with the Kribi church, some of them having come from the outstations of Batanga. But in January of this year a church was organized for the Mebeas, in a village fifteen miles north of Kribi, at Aion Kwate. The new church was organized with 105 members, with 62 on the roll for baptism in the near future and 477 catechisms. There is promise of development among them, but their rating as an inferior tribe in the native churches to which they have heretofore belonged, has kept them back.—The Continent.

A Congo Contrast

"Thirty years ago," says Doctor King, of Banza Manteke, "a white man's life wouldn't have been worth a song if he had tried to travel and preach in this region. Now there are no towns in this district that I have seen or heard of where the people are not willing to have the story of Jesus told to them over and over again. On my last trip out, my carriers did not have to buy as much as a peanut. So happy were the people to see us that they gave the carriers all the food they could eat, all they could carry away, and then, at times, food remained on the ground that could not be carried. Such an expression of love is very gratifying by contrast with the past, when the people at times even sought to kill the missionaries."—Baptist Observer.

The Basutos Discuss Education

At a recent meeting of the "Khotla," or Zambesian Council, representatives of the Paris Evangelical Society presented to the black chiefs a plea for a thoroughgoing school system. The missionaries pointed out that while their task was a two-fold one—that of education and evangelization—the former work should be carried on by the native community. They also urged the importance of educating the girls.

The replies of the chiefs were encouraging when one remembers how recently they had lived in savage paganism. "Listen and hear," said one of these chiefs, "up to now the missionaries have borne the burden of the schools. This is not right. This burden is a wanda (i. e., a load carried on a pole by two persons). The missionaries bear the front end, leading the way and we ought to hold up the rear end."

PHILIPPINE HEALTH COMMISSION

The Philippine Health Service is seeking to eliminate causes of disease, rather than to battle with diseases now existing, and to point out ways by which the people may raise their standards of living. One of the first moves of this health commission upon entering a town is to open a free dispensary. The work of this dispensary is not limited to the care and treatment of the sick, but it serves as a sort of lyceum where information is given out concerning hygiene, sanitation and dietetics. In order to supplement the instruction, model gardens are planned, with vegetables carefully selected with a view to furnishing the substances needed for a balanced diet. This feature of the work is of special importance because of the uniformly poor nutrition of the Filipinos.

The Filipino Idea of Women

"The Filipino woman, although this is not generally recognized, is one of the greatest apologetics for Christianity in the Orient. She is today as far in advance of her other Oriental sisters in freedom, social position and independence, that she is in a class by herself. Some idea of seclusion for women exists in the Philippines, of course, but it is that of the convent, not of the 'purdah.' Like other Oriental women, she holds the family purse, but she does more than that; she is the business agent of the family. She keeps the shop, holds the property and carries, to a very large degree, the business responsibility of the Islands. Nowhere else in the Orient will one find a woman lawyer practising at the bar and writing suffrage articles for the daily papers. One cannot account for the Filipino woman on the ground of the racial superiority of the Malay. The only way to explain the unique place which the Filipino woman already occupied in the East is to recognize that for centuries before the American occupation, the people were being taught a Christian valuation of womanhood."—Asia.

A Thomas Mott Osborne in Borneo

As a preparation for his work as a missionary in Borneo, Rev. Charles E. Davis specialized in rice cultivation at the Kansas Agricultural College. But when he arrived in Borneo he found it was not a rice-producing country and in altering his cherished plans he found a more important work than the growing of rice. He established a new kind of school in Sarawak, an independent state of Borneo—a reform school which was strictly a back-to-the-country movement. It exchanges opium dens and dark streets for a bit of damp brown earth, where young outlaws and loafers of the city learn the mysteries of hoes and spades and vegetable life and soon become working units in the colony.

The government, as an evidence of goodwill and friendliness toward this Thomas Mott Osborne of Borneo, contributed one-half of the building expenses and in addition grants a sum each year for the industrial work.

THE GOSPEL ON "LEPERS' ISLAND"

The British and Foreign Bible Society has added to its list of versions, a Scripture portion for a tribe on the west coast of Oba, which is sometimes known as Lepers' Island. This tribe, which is being evangelized from Nduindui, a station opened ten years ago by the venerable Rev. Peter Milne, of the New Hebrides Presbyterian Mission, is now under the care of Mr. A. T. Waters of the "Churches of Christ" communion, who says that the people have no form of salutation, such as "good day," and no phrase for "thank you." Mr. Waters is able to report, on the island of Oba, some 800 baptized Christians. There are also about twenty-five schools, which are self-supporting. Oba Christians also make themselves responsible for missionaries on the neighboring island of Maewo. Some villages have consecrated plots of land known as "the Lord's coco-nut gardens," the proceeds of which are devoted to the spread of the gospel.—The Christian.

And Then

A youth told proudly his hopes and plans,
With his own strong hand all his future drew,
To a calm old man, earth-tired, heaven-bound,
Who answered, from all that his great heart know,
Only these words, "And then?"

"With a steady foot and a willing hand
I will climb to earth's treasure-hold,
And claim my share of the wealth she hoards,
For her favored, the brave and the bold."
"And then?"

"And then, with this wand in my happy hand,
I'll gather her gems at will;
I'll summon each draught of her pleasure-fount
Till it fail, or my goblet I fill."
"And then?"

"Oh, then I'll try fame, and coax till I win
From the noble old laurel a wreath;
This I'll cherish and keep, 'tis earth's choicest gift,
And its life-dew her balmiest breath."
"And then?"

"I'll be kindly, and share of my wealth and my joy;
So I'll bind many souls to my own.
For I'd soon be prince of a dozen warm hearts
Than a monarch of many a throne."
"And then?"

"Why, then I'll be getting to staid middle age,
And the world will be Eden no more;
But I'll choose me an Eve, and build me a home,
And be found at my own open door."
"And then?"

"Then—then I'll grow old, of a quaint old age,
In the midst of my pleasure and peace;
So muffled in treasure, and comfort, and love,
That to my ear earth's discord shall cease."
"And then?"

"I'll grow older and older; and then, I suppose,
Life and I will grow weary,—and,— why,—
As my fathers have done, as my children must do,
So I in my ripeness shall—die!"
"And then?"

"Oh, then will the veil of Death's portal be rent,
And unto each soul shall be given
The awards of this life, however it was spent,
Undying regrets, or the joys of heaven;
Then, and forever then!"

What Then?

An old man, crowned with honors nobly earned,
Once asked a youth what end in life he sought.
The hopeful boy said: "I would first be learned:
I would know all that all the schools e'er taught."
The old man gravely shook his head.
"And when you've learned all this, what then?" he said.

"Then," said the boy, with all the warmth of youth,
"I'd be a lawyer, learned and eloquent;
Appearing always on the side of truth,
My mind would grow as thus 'twas early bent."
The old man sadly shook his head.
"And when you've done all this, what then?" he said.

"I will be famous," said the hopeful boy;
"Clients will pour upon me fees and briefs.
'Twill be my pleasant task to bring back joy
To homes and hearts near crushed by darkest griefs."
But still the old man shook his reverent head.
"And when all this is gained, what then?" he said.

"And then I will be rich, and in old age
I will withdraw from all this legal strife;
Known in retirement as an honored sage,
I'll pass the evenings of an honored life."
Gravely again the old man shook his head.
"And when you've done all this, what then?" he said.

"And then!—why, then, I know that I must die;
My body then must die, but not my fame;
Surrounded by the fallen great I'll lie,
And far posterity will know my name."
Sadly again the old man shook his head.
"And after this, all this, what then?" he said.

"And then, and then!" but ceased the boy to speak;
His eyes, abashed, fell downward to the sod;
A silent tear dropped on each blooming cheek.
The old man pointed silently to God,
Then laid his hand upon the drooping head.
"Remember there's a place beyond," he said.

"The Sunshine of Benson Grove"

BY STELLA TYLER JORDAN

"Next stop Benson Grove," called the brakeman as he opened the door to the Pullman car.

An elderly lady who had been making tatting, opened her bag, dropping her shuttle and thread into it, collected her belongings and prepared to leave the car.

She had traveled for two days and was glad her journey was at an end. At last she had reached the town where John lived. Her belongings were soon ready, for Miss Martha Hawthorn, in her spinsterly way, always kept her things in readiness as though she expected at any moment to be called to another world to give an account of the way she had left them.

She settled back in her seat as the train slowed down. "Pretty village," she said to herself. Just then the porter came up to help her off and she followed him down the aisle.

"Hello, Aunt Martha!" called a cheery voice, and a gentleman greeted her affectionately as she alighted from the train.

She looked up into the jovial face of Dr. John Raleigh, who stood before her in all the splendid vigor of his manhood.

"Do you mean to tell me you are my little John?" gasped the lady as the doctor stooped to kiss her.

"That's just who I am!" he declared, and with the same hearty laugh which she so well remembered, he soon whisked her away over the road to his home.

The place was what Aunt Martha might have expected; a large, well-kept house and grounds, and in the home were a dear little wife and two children.

"You are exactly as I had pictured you to be," exclaimed the old lady in response to Alice Raleigh's cordial welcome. "I know John would pick out some one we would all love."

"Yes," remarked the doctor, coming up the stairs, "And I also picked out these two youngsters for you to love. Just the image of their dad, don't you think?"

When they were all seated in the great living room Eunice and Lawrence soon were in the arms of the aunt of whom they had heard so much.

The days passed very happily for Miss Hawthorn, who was delighted to be able to help some in the housework, since Mrs. Raleigh was accustomed to have a woman come in only a day each week to do the heavy cleaning; when there was nothing she could do about the house, she resorted to her tatting, never content to be idle long.

When Sunday arrived, all drove to church, as Aunt Martha was anxious to attend religious service, never missing it at her own home. They went early enough to attend Sunday school, which the old lady enjoyed very much. As she watched the primary class go to their room, her face became instantly soft with sympathy, for the young teacher—a girl about eighteen years of age, was confined to a wheel chair, which she handled herself and quickly followed the children, whom she so dearly loved.

At the close of the lesson when the primary doors were opened, "Aunt Martha" again had a chance to study the face of the crippled teacher. As the children passed the wheel chair, they looked up with confidence into the sweet countenance of their beloved instructor, and each child received in return a radiant smile and a hearty handshake.

"Well," said Dr. Raleigh on the way home, "how did you enjoy the service, aunt?"

"Very much, indeed," she replied, "but it made my heart ache to watch the young primary teacher, she seems so loveable—I wonder why things like that happen when the girl could be so useful in the world!"

"Auntie, dear," interrupted Alice Raleigh, before her husband could speak. "Just wait until you know Hallie Bristol. She couldn't possibly be more useful than she is now—she is the sunshine of Benson Grove!"

"What can the poor girl do?" asked the old lady wonderingly.

"Do," said the doctor earnestly. "She is doing all the time, I have my hands full to keep her from doing, for she needs to rest. Her ailment is not incurable, but she would gain a great deal faster if she would be content to live more quietly."

"Didn't you see our splendid large primary department?" asked Alice eagerly.

"Indeed I did—it certainly beats ours back home, even if we do live in a large city and have a congregation many times the size of yours."

"Well, Hallie has charge of the entire department. She teaches the lesson from her wheel chair and she can think of many things to amuse and instruct those children! She gets more out of the lesson, too, than any other two teachers put together. Then, when it comes to the young people, she is the center of the Christian Endeavor Society, always having some new idea, no matter what department is discussed. In fact, it seems as though the church just couldn't run without Hallie. You must get acquainted with her, auntie, she is such a darling—and her spare moments are filled with tatting! So I know you would be great friends!"

During the next few months Hallie Bristol and Aunt Martha became real chums. The old lady would go and help the girl in her interesting plans for the betterment of the church and the community. One day each week was devoted to the teaching of embroidery, crocheting and tatting, for there was no one else in Benson Grove who had the time or the inclination to teach these things and there were many who were only too glad of the opportunity to avail themselves of the instruction given so willingly, by the crippled girl and her new friend.

"Won't you come over Thursday afternoon, Aunt Martha?" urged the girl one day. "You will see something that will do your heart good. I can't tell you a thing about it—but come as early as you can."

At promptly one o'clock Thursday afternoon Aunt Martha, Alice Raleigh and the children arrived at the home of Hallie Bristol, taking with them an abundant supply of fragrant flowers. And they discovered, to the surprise of the old lady, that almost every child in the district was already there with baskets of the most exquisite blossoms of the season. What could it all mean?

"Is this a shower flower, Hallie?" inquired Aunt Martha, greatly mystified and very much interested.

"Yes, but not for me!" replied the girl smiling happily. "You see, there are many tenement houses in Grand Center, as well as several hospitals, and each week we gather here to make bouquets. The expressmen are very kind and take them to the city, where they are received by the ladies of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and distributed where they will do the most good."

What a wonderful afternoon it was! Young and old worked busily fashioning the dainty bouquets, to each of which was fastened a verse of scripture written by Hallie's own hand.

"They may not do much good," said Hallie, reflectively, "but one has plenty of time to think when one is sick."

Aunt Martha worked with a will until the last bouquet was tied and they were all piled into Alice Raleigh's car and taken to the express office.

Hallie Bristol warmly thanked each child for their efforts and read to them different letters she had received from those who had already been blessed and encouraged by the receipt of the lovely floral tokens of thoughtful remembrance.

"What gave you the idea, dear?" inquired Aunt Martha of Hallie, after the children had gone home. "It is a beautiful thing to do!"

"I spent many months in the hospital myself and used to long so for some one to bring me even one flower. I know what it means to be sick among strangers, far from one's home and dear ones, and upon my sickbed I resolved that if I ever were able to go back to the busy, rushing world again, I would surely see that those who wanted flowers should have their heart's desire."

HOME MISSION NOTES

"Home Missions Today"

The following significant statement concerning "Home Missions Today" appeared in "The Soul Winner:"

"There is nothing bigger. It is bigger today than it was yesterday, and its size will grow tomorrow and the day after. The reason is the war. Whatever the war may do to the world, it has already made the United States more important to God's Kingdom and to God's world than it ever was before. Under God the destiny of our Globe, in large degree, rests upon these United States. We ought to do everything we can to make this country as thoroughly Christian as we may. Of course, the Spirit of God alone can convert nations; but He works through our preachers, our money and our prayers. Every dollar spent for Home Missions today is the best dollar which any man can put anywhere, unless it is to put that dollar into a young man at the Seminary who is going to give his life to Home Missions. Our Theological Seminaries today must believe more intensely than ever in equipping for Home Mission work, our best and choicest young men."

EVERY NEW OBSTACLE

Brother Paul Miller, the live pastor of the First Brethren church of Spokane, Washington, writes: "Every new obstacle acts like a dash of cold water in the face to a real faith in God. It makes one sit up and realize the fierceness of the battle that is being fought. But this is one thing upon which I have always stood, that if it is really God's work, all the devils in hell cannot stop it, and it shall be completed if we continue to trust in God and do our part."

Since the Winona Conference only $68.50 has been received to assist the Spokane brethren in completing their building. That amount should be increased quickly.

Washington, D. C., Mortgage Eraser

$1103 of the $1500 pledged to erase that mortgage of twenty years standing on the First Brethren church of Washington, D. C. has been received. Will it be necessary for us to publish a list of the unpaid pledges? If not paid in November then watch for the list in the Evangelist. If any churches or individuals are unavoidably delayed in making payment notice should be sent to us at once.

Thanksgiving Offering for Home Missions

The ending of the terrible war ought to increase the amount of the Thanksgiving offering for home missions. The heart that is filled with gratitude but gives no practical expression to that gratitude will not be benefitted. Every church "Over the Top" at the rate of thirty cents per member. And a goodly number of Brethren churches ought not stop with that amount. When this life is almost gone and the heart action impaired and the steps unsteadied that which will bring real soul satisfaction and make the dying pillow soft will be the memory of service rendered in the name of Jesus Christ to those in need. If this generation ever had abundant reason for being thankful that time is now. May the Thanksgiving offering prove that the whole church is loyal to Christ our leader. And victory rests largely upon what the pastor does as the leader of the local congregation. If any church fails to go "Over the Top" the pastor will be largely to blame.

Two consecrated people, a husband and wife, of the above ages, sent two offerings for missions last week, one to Brother Bowman for the regular Thanksgiving offering and the other to the writer for Kentucky mission work. In a splendid letter the good mother writes: "It does seem a shame that young and healthy people should be excused to give only so little the year round. Pa is 85 past, and is almost blind, cannot see his knife on his plate, and I am past 74 and not in very good health, but activity helps to give life. Praise the Lord forever;"

Young people cannot afford to give less than the tenth of their income to the Lord's work. Thus will they open the windows of heaven and showers of blessings will fall upon them. And one of the greatest belssings that will come will be a clear conscience, a conscience void of offense. Who gives less than one-tenth must feel guilty, it cannot be otherwise, unless the conscience is so seared that there is no longer a proper response. Read Malachi 3:10 and prove your God.

Our Sufficiency

"When shall we mortals learn to lean
On staffs that heaven will supply?
Then shall we walk through pastures green,
And God will be our sufficiency."

G. C. CARPENTER

MASONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

We are ready to admit, that if silence and death were really synonymous, there would be excellent ground for the suspicion that the Masontown Brethren church, has ceased to exist. Well, it is not nearly so bad as that, though in common with most of God's servants, we wish the evidence of growing spiritual life, were more pronounced. You have had no report from us, since the General Conference, except that which was given by Brother Beachler, after his canvass of the congregation. And I am glad to say that the church is decidedly the better for his visit, and his work in its midst. Perhaps there may be some of our folks who fear his coming, for the effect they think it may have on the local work, but I know their fears are groundless. That church which has no interests outside of its own boundaries is in a dying condition, and needs just such a stimulant as his appeal will make to it. His personality, his stirring sermons, and his presentation of the great cause he represents, are powerful helps to any congregation. Instead of dreading his coming, all would anxiously await it, if they knew the good it would do them. This congregation does not feel to boast of what it did for the cause he presented, but it is not ashamed. The amount he reported, has been increased to $2765 and the end is not yet.

In common with practicailly all of our people, we have felt the heavy hand of the influenza. We rejoice in the fact that thus far, none of the members of the church nor Sunday school have been taken from us, and not many have yet suffered its touch. But we have had to bear the closing of all our services for a period of four Sundays, with all that that means to a church and its organized efforts. Over 40,000 people, in the state of Pennsylvania alone, have died from its ravages since October 1. It is still taking hundreds every day, and some harrowing scenes have been enacted in every community. The uninitiated would certainly think that escape from such peril as it is presenting, would make all turn in a spirit of thanksgiving, to the services of God's house, when the opportunity is given, but not so with those who know. The lifting of the quarantine demands the most strenuous effort possible, at the hand of all the faithful, to regain the ground we lost, and even then, the results are far from satisfactory. We had hoped to have Brother Goughnour lead us in an evangelistic campaign, beginning the first Sunday of November, but the quarantine spoiled our plans. The special effort is postponed until January, if the Lord wills it so, and then, by his grace, we hope to get back into our best paces again.

To all the sorrowing, among our Brethren, we extend our sympathy, and rejoice that so few have fallen. It is very remarkable that in a time like this only two among our ministers should have been called. God gives us time to serve him, and may none of us disappoint him.

MARTIN SHIVELY.

Ordination

On the 11th of September the writer was called to Claypool for the ordination of Brother Florizel Pfleiderer to the Eldership. Brother Pfleiderer has been serving as pastor of the Claypool church for some time. The church considering him worthy the office requested his ordination. The service was held at the Claypool church. Brother Pfleiderer is a senior in the Claypool high school and hopes to enter Ashland College next year. He has faithfully ministered to the church at Claypool which, though few in numbers, is faithfully keeping up the work. May God richly bless Brother Pfleiderer in a useful life in the ministry.

The report of this ordination should have been made to the Indiana Conference and reported before this, but as only a brief session of conference was held no opportunity was given for the ministerial board to report. We are sure the brotherhood will welcome this young man to the ranks of the ministry and pray for his success.

DECATUR COUNTY NEWS

This title is a misnomer. I might call it the lack of news and be perfectly truthful. We had but about four Sundays of activity after National Conference when the quarantine came down and shut out the light of the sun. After six weeks it was lifted for five days and lowered once more before Sunday. We have given up hopes of doing much before the new year as about twenty percent of the population is sick in bed, many cases whole families without a nurse. What this whole quarter out means to a mission church only those can imagine who have served one. But we are trusting the Lord for power to recover and hope with the new year to get things moving. Church work is limited to visiting, nursing the sick and burying the dead.

As a means of alleviating the situation we are getting out a little four page church paper and presenting the church claims in that way. We hope to make this a personal and doctrinal sheet and maintain it monthly as an aid to our people.

In the seven years since this work was first visited by the writer there has been a vast change in the local situation. Then the Brethren were pretty well grouped about our original country church at Crown Chapel. Now they are scattered over a parish about thirty or more miles square which the pastor must visit. This continual moving and scattering of the people is effective as a means of spreading the Brethren doctrine over this whole country but it delays the building up of a strong center in Leon and makes this a mission point that much longer. We can see this is going to return to us in years to come in a great field with a rich harvest but it magnifies the local task beyond due proportions. Our little church paper is going to be an aid in reaching these isolated ones and completing their indoctrination. Through it we expect to continue our effort to get the Evangelist in every home, which is a mighty task under the circumstances, but a fateful piece of strategy for the coming years.

In a way this new situation here is typical of the whole west. Most of the vacant churches—vacant of pastors—which mark this western country came about in this way. Our local problem here is a type of the whole western situation and it seems there is one way only to meet the problem and that is by responsible supervision by pastors of established churches over small districts adjacent with an unlimited use of printer's ink and propaganda literature. This is the Ohio system of district evangelists and the new Illiokota system of supervisory districts. We will be glad to keep in touch with all supervisors as we make this experiment here.

G. T. RONK.

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

Following the usual summer season and the General Conference at Winona, the work here was resumed with prospects of a good year before us. The first thing of unusual significance was an evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Evangelist F. G. Coleman, which began on September 8 and continued for three weeks. When we arranged for these meetings last spring our thought was to select a date when the fuel scarcity would not interfere as it did last winter, but we avoided one obstacle only to encounter another. Owing to some rainy weather back in August, threshing was still on when our meetings began and immediately following the threshing season the farmers began filling their silos, with the result that it was almost impossible to get anyone from the country to attend the meetings with any degree of regularity. And the one greatly overworked excuse of the sinners was, "too busy to come."

Because of these conditions our campaign was disappointing in a measure. Nevertheless there were many good things to make us rejoice. We had good sermons and rich spiritual feasts and delightful Christian fellowship and conscious religious quickening, to say nothing of the usual visible results in the way of new members. There was only one confession during the meetings, but three more were secured the following week, all of whom were baptized and received into the church; making a total of seven new members since our last report, five by baptism and two by letter.

Our new church year began October first. At the July business meeting the church, without a dissenting vote, extended us a call for another year, which was accepted. The church also voluntarily increased the pastor's salary twenty per cent, and this, of course, was highly appreciated especially since it was really necessary.

Beginning with October the newly elected Sunday school officers began another year's work. The past year was not up to the preceding one in average attendance, due partly to the fact that we have hanging in our church a service flag bearing nineteen stars. But every school ought to make a strenuous effort to go out and get a new recruit to the Sunday school for every member called away from the school to enter the service of his country. With the school well organized and directed by experienced officers, the coming year's work should be one of the very best. Several of our members are pursuing the second year's work in our community Teacher Training class.

On October 6 we had our Rally Day services in the morning and our fall communion in the evening. At that time the "gasolineless" Sundays were still with us, which of course kept many people from the services; but despite that we had a good program and attendance at the Rally Day services, and the largest membership attendance at the communion service since my coming to this pastorate.

The Illiokota district conference this year was held at Dallas Center, Iowa, October 10-13. Owing to the epidemic of Spanish influenza the attendance was only about one-half what it was last year, but a very good program was given and a great deal of constructive work done.

Because of the "flu" in the community we had no services on two Sundays in October, and now that we do have services again a number of people still absent themselves. It is a question whether they are staying away because of their fear of an epidemic that seems to have passed or whether remaining at home the few Sundays there were no services started a habit which is not easily overcome. However, conditions are steadily improving, the greatest of which is the sudden and spectacular ending of the great world war; so we can all face the future with its responsibilities and opportunities with renewed determination and faith and devotion.

MILES J. SNYDER.

THE MIAMI VALLEY CIRCUIT

About three years ago while completing a course of study at Xenia Seminary I was asked to become the joint-pastor with Francis J. Reagan of the churches of the Miami Valley Circuit—Bear Creek, Salem and Miamisburg. On account of Mrs. Reagan's ill health my associate was compelled to give up his share of the work within but a few months and return to California. By request of the churches I took up the entire work. On the first of September of this year our relations were dissolved in order that I might take up work at some place where the circumstances would not require so much exposure to the uncertain weather conditions of the East. In order not to convey a wrong impression to any one who might be considering this place I should explain that to a man of ordinarily good health the above mentioned fact would prove no obstacle as the facilities for reaching all these churches are of the very best.

I shall say nothing of the condition of the churches when, handicapped by inexperience, ill health and my seminary work I became their pastor, save that each church presented its own peculiar difficulties. Our schedule of services gave Salem three preaching services in four weeks, and to each of the others two services in four weeks. Salm conductd a Sunday school every Sunday morning throughout the year under the leadership of Brother W. P. R. Shank. At Bear Creek the Sunday school was superintended by Brother Dan Kimmel during two years and Brother Chas. Kline acted in this capacity during my last year. At Miamisburg Brother Chas. Davis had charge of the Sunday school. I have mentioned the names of these brethren because it is due them for their faithful work. At Salem the pastor could be present at Sunday school only every second Sunday, while at the other churches it was every fourth Sunday, and running a Sunday school with an absentee pastor is no small job.

Mention might be made of many others who rallied around the pastor to help the work of the Lord in various capacities but space forbids. It is enough to say that my successor shall find in these three churches no small number of true Christian men and women who stand ready to help in every way the preaching of the gospel and the teaching of God's word.

In the three years of my going about among the churches I found no home that was not open to me at all times. Of contributions of good things to eat I have forgotten the number, but not the givers. When the question of transportation arose in this parish which extends over a teritory of thirty miles, the men of Salem and Bear Creek came to the rescue with their automobiles. Not all Fords either (No reflection on this worthy machine is intended). During the past two years in making pastoral calls I have driven Fords, Buicks, Studebakers, Franklins, Enggers, Chevrolets, Jeffreys and Paiges, which will indicate to some extent the prosperity and generosity of these people.

Of the churches, Salem with a membership reduced somewhat by reason of certain disloyal members, has done nobly along financial lines. In spite of discouragements in the past three years she has made larger gifts to the cause of missions than ever before. Not only this but Salem has raised her share of the pastor's salary 25 per cent above what it was before she lost some main contributors. This year she met in full every financial goal in the Four-Year Program except College Endowment for which Ohio has not yet been approached. And all these goals were provided for in a budget apart from any special offerings.

At Miamisburg there is a fine band of Christian men and women who deserve credit especially for the way in which they have carried forward the work of the Sunday school in the absence of the pastor. No real need presented to these people was ever turned down, and for the next pastor the church has indicated their desire to just about double their share of salary.

Bear Creek is I believe, the oldest Brethren church in the state of Ohio, and a number of distinguished Brethren pastors have in years past occupied its pulpit. They at least will no doubt be interested to learn of what has taken place in the old building where some have preached their first sermons. Two years ago the women of the church installed a beautiful and expensive electric lighting system. The fixtures provide an indirect light and are a credit to any church. Then about one year ago some of the good women of the church suggested to the pastor that the building needed a bit of fixing up, cleaning, etc. The pastor did the usual thing, appointed a committee, and promptly forgot the matter. But this committee was different. It was composed of three energetic and capable women. The carpet was taken up and made to look like new. Carpenters under the direction of one of the Brethren tore out the old partitions which seperated the two Sunday school rooms from the main auditorium. These rooms were enlarged and the auditorium made smaller. Folding doors were used to replace the removed partitions so that the Sunday school rooms can be thrown into the main auditorium. The enlargement of these rooms of course increased the seating space of the balcony which is directly over them as those who have worshiped in the church will remember. Then the old paper was removed by an expert and new put on which gives the effect of a frescoed wall and ceiling. Taking everything into consideration Bear Creek now has a building which is as well arranged, beautiful and comfortable as any I have seen, and is a credit to the denomination. I know there are members of the Brethren church who remember with no small degree of sentiment the old church, and I hope some of these might have an opportunity to see it again with all its present improvements. I might say also that the S. S. of C. E. were responsible for the greater part of the work, and when I left were contemplating the purchase of new pews. Now a word about the regular work. When I came to the circuit this church was bearing the largest share of the pastor's salary, and has up to the present increased it by 65 per cent. The church has also met in full the financial goals of the Four-Year Program, paralleling the work at Salem. This has been done by the budget system.

Just before leaving the pastor was tendered a farewell reception by the three churches at Bear Creek. It was an enjoyable occasion marred only by the thought of coming separation. By a fortunate chance we were privileged to have with us Brother J. F. Watson to whom the Bear Creek church is home.

The severing of our relations as pastor and people was to me at least a matter which caused no little sadness, for the people had indeed, become "dear unto us." May the Lord send to these churches another who shall be more deserving of the co-operation of their faithful members than we have been.

I understand that no one has been secured thus far. Any pastor desiring to consider these churches should correspond with Marcus Koons, R. R. D. No. 4, Dayton, Ohio.

GOSHEN, INDIANA

The First Brethren church of Goshen, has planned for an evangelistic service which will begin November 25th. Brother L. S. Bauman of Long Beach, California will conduct the meeting. The brethren and sisters of this church are expecting great things of Brother Bauman, and no doubt he is expecting great things of the Goshen church. It usually takes both working in harmony with God to accomplish the desired results. Members of other congregations are invited to attend. Our pastor is quite busy trying to get things lined up for the meeting.

The influenza is letting up at present, the schools are resuming their work and business of all kind is active. We trust by the time the meetings begin the flu will be a thing of the past. Quite a number of our people had been quite low but to our knowledge, all have survived.

The church numerically has suffered some by removals to Elkhart (because of higher wages). But home ties are so strong that some return occasionally. We hope they may take advantage of the contemplated meetings

Our regular Wednesday evening prayer and Bible study was announced by our pastor last week as a Thanksgiving Peace meeting. The attendance was large and proved a success. A special program of home talent was rendered after which the S. S. C. E. served refreshments. A social hour was enjoyed by all, rejoicing that the terrible war had come to a close. Four Goshen boys were killed in action, but to our knowledge to present date none of the twenty-six who attend the Brethren church or Sunday school was killed, and but one was wounded.

Our pastor is editing a neat little weekly calendar. The first copy appeared last week. No doubt this will be a means of inspiration for good in keeping the mind and thought of the church centered on some of the active lines of church work.

It has been decided that the Goshen church will entertain the state conference of 1919.

M. E. HORNER,
Corresponding Secretary.

WHOLE GOSPEL MISSION

Dear Evangelist: After the dark cloud of epidemic influenza or perhaps it would be more proper to say black or spotted fever, has passed over our city, sweeping over eleven thousand into an untimely grave, we are trying by faith, prayer and consecration to get back into a normal condition, both physically and spiritually. In more than forty years of my Christian life, I never before passed through such a spiritual, physical and financial test.

Living in southern Philadelphia, near the Navy yard and Hog Island, it struck here first and hardest. In a few days' time one or more in most of the homes was stricken.

One good-hearted man, I baptized fourteen years ago, said, I am too busy to attend church, but I will help to support it. He worked seven days a week and he and wife were buried the same day and left two orphans in the hospital with the "flu." His married sister died, leaving a child in the hospital with the disease. His wife's two brothers died, so that within ten days seven died in one family.

Brother Earl Dietrich and family came from Brighton, Indiana. He came to get his family fixed in a pleasant home with his sister and father here in Philadelphia. When he was going to France as a chaplain to relieve suffering and help the unfortunate who were falling in the battle field. When he arrived, he found his sister was down with the dread disease, so I met them at the depot and brought them to my home. Two days later Brother Earl was stricken, and later his three children. We had two as good doctors as could be gotten, but they could not save him. He was very sick for ten days. My daughter Bessie, his wife, from grief and overwork, collapsed four or five days before he died.

Brother Bowers and I anointed both Earl and his wife for healing. While the Lord wonderfully raised up my daughter, Earl's sickness seemed to be one unto death. When we prayed so earnestly that he might be spared for the sake of his wife and children, and more particularly that he might be enabled to continue to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ; the only answer I could get in prayer was the impression "all will be for the best." It was a terrible blow to us all, as we dearly loved him. God often takes the best that the unsaved may be warned and given time to repent.

Earl went before the officials of the Government with the highest possible recommendations, when he was promised the appointment of chaplain, but the Lord ruled otherwise.

To live is Christ and to die is gain. Our great loss was his gain.

Earl left many friends here and in our beloved brotherhood. The one who felt it most of all was Bessie, left a widow with three children, she needs the prayers and help of the brotherhood in this sad hour.

About fourteen of our family, including our grandchildren were stricken I had been up every night with my daughter, Leona, in Camden, New Jersey, who we feared would not recoverr. The day Brother Earl was buried I was stricken and for ten days was in bed.

While I was in bed our dear Brother Hazlet, the janitor of our church died. Brother Harrington, the last man I baptized, after ten days' sickness also died, leaving a wife and one child I had calls to preach four funerals in one week but was unable to do so. Brother John Ray preached the funeral of Earl and Brother Hazlet.

We expect to have a memorial service for all December first. I shall never gorget the strange experience through which we passed —churches closed, Sunday schools closed, the plague in nearly every home. All financial help cut off, visiting heart-broken homes, where death and poverty stared them in the face, with an empty pocket, unable to relieve them stricken down with many others of my own family. It was a great trial of faith. Church work wrecked, finances wrecked, some of the best members of my church died and many others of family and church sick; this was an experience through which I never again expect to pass. To be content, and without anxious care, and to be thus sorrowing and having the peace of God and unspeakable joy at the same time is a strange yet blessed eperience that I shall never forget. The Lord wonderfully helped me. I am walking by faith and not by sight; much is yet dark.

I should be at home now, but I promised a two weeks' meeting at Ridgely, and then I suffered more than $100 loss during this epidemic, hence I ran away from pressing duties and began a meeting here in Ridgely, Maryland last night.

My daughter, Mrs. Hand and sister Vianna Detwiler are distributing announcement cards and ringing door bells, and I am trying to take it as easy as possible yet a few days until I get stronger.

I ask the entire brotherhood to pray that I may always be in the center of God's will and that God will greatly bless the Whole Gospel Mission. I have much more I would love to say, but my article is already lengthy, so I will close for this time.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

I am glad to be able to break a silence which has ben both long and painful to me. I came to Pittsburgh not knowing just where I would take up the work again in Pennsylvania. I knew that the ban would be lifted in Pittsburgh on Sunday, November 10th, and that the churches throughout the city would have their first services on that day. And when I saw Brother Harley the remotest thing in his mind and mine was that we would begin the canvass in his congregation on that Sunday. With at least 17 families in his congregation convalescing from the "flu," and with a great deal of fear among the people generally about the "flu," and besides, with the work of the church having been at a complete standstill for five weeks, the conditions seemed as unfavorable for the making of the canvass for Permanent Endowment in the Pittsburgh church at that time as one can very well imagine.

But we can do many things which seem very difficult when we really try. Over the long distance telephone I got in touch with several of the other congregations but nobody wanted me to come as soon as November 10th. Hence, there was only one thing to do and we did it. Harley and I got desperate. We set our jaws firmly and said—we will tackle it. We did not allow "flu," Peace demonstrations, United War Work or anything else to stop us. We realized that the Pittsburgh church could not have a fair chance under the circumstances but we had to start in somewhere and we did.

I found Harley a fine partner. He has his field thoroughly in hand and he is certainly not afraid to work and work hard. And I found a fine spirit of loyalty among his people. Our audiences through the week were not large (that was impossible) but we had splendid services. And we simply made the best of it and finished the canvass with a result which is very creditable to the Pittsburgh congregation. When we left we had reached $1800; and I have a notion that when the results are all in it will be very close to $2,000. In view of the things we had to contend with, and in view of the hard financial struggles the Pittsburgh church has had to come up through during the years, and in view of the fact that there is yet a debt of several thousand dollars on the property, I consider that Pittsburgh has a right to feel very good over what has been accomplished. And I want to testify that the Campaign Secretary feels very good over it.

I am especially grateful to Brother and Sister Harley for the good home they gave me during my stay in their congregation, and also to all of the other good people who royally entertained me in their homes. I have been foolish enough to think that I could pay for my board by preaching on the nights I am at a place; but I have given it up. The way I have been fed all through this campaign makes me feel that I will be owing a lot of board bills over the brotherhood long before this campaign is over. If I could make the preaching better, and induce the sisters to serve more modest meals I might hope to break even. But it is no use to try to reason with the countless good cooks of the Brethren church. They just will have their way; and I have quietly resigned myself to my fate.

A look at the thermometer will show that the "flu" has not put it entirely out of busines. That old $57,000 mark looks good to me. It has moved slowly of late. We have surely had many things to block us and discourage us since last Conference. But we are fully determined that this thing must be done, and so we are putting in more gasoline and going right ahead. We are now canvassing the Berlin circuit. If nothing else prevents Pennsylvania will be practically finished by Christmas.

Campaign Secretary.

Our Dead

RENFROE.—Marcus Renfroe died at Camp Eustis, Norfolk, Va., October 16, 1918, aged 39 years. He was united in marriage to Edith Holdeman of North Liberty, Indiana, June 4, 1916, who with two daughters survives him. Funeral services from the family home Saturday, October 19, 1918, by their pastor the writer. C. C. GRISSO.

HOAGLAND—On October 17, 1918, Mrs. Barbara Hoagland departed this life, aged nearly 70 years. She has been a faithful member of the Brethren church of Warsaw, Indiana for many years. Seven children will miss their goood mother. But may all of them be present in the glorious reunion "Over There." The funeral service was conducted at the home by the writer.

G. C. CARENTER.

MOSER—Robert Leonard Moser was born in Decatur, Illinois, where his entire life was spent. In February, 1916 he united with the Brethren church at that time a mission point in Decatur. While seemingly in the best of health he was attacked by the Spanish influenza and on October 18, 1918, passed away. He is survived by his wife and three small children. Funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer.

Decatur, Illinois.

PHILLIPS — Mrs. Maude Phillips was born near Richwood, Illinois, and passed from life into the great beyond on July 21, 1918, after an illness of only four days. She united with the Brethren church at Cerro Gordo in September, 1904 and remained faithful until her decease. She is survived by her husband, Simon Phillips, and an only son, Murl, who is sixteen years of age. Services by the writer. H. E. EPPPLEY.

HESS—Alonzo Lee Hess, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hess, of Cerro Gordo, Illinois, enlisted in the Navy on June 3, 1918. He was sent at once to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Chicago. He remained there until September 26 when he passed away. Death was caused by pneumonia, which followed an attack of Spanish influenza. On September 28, 1907, he united with the Brethren church of Cerro Gordo and continued to hold membership therein until his earthly career ended. His body was shipped to his home and on Sunday afternoon the funeral services were held in the church of which he was a member. His body was laid away with military honors by a military squad from Decatur. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. E. H. Lugg, pastor of the M. E. church.

H. E. EPPLEY.

STEWART—Rachel Frame Stewart was born June 23, 1837 and departed this life October 3, 1918. She united with the church at the age of 16, and was ever true to the faith until death claimed her. The church has lost a devout and faithful worker and she will be missed by friends and neighbors as well. Her prayers and counsel was an inspiration to many. She will be missed by the Gratis, Ohio Brethren, in which church she held her membership. C. E. B.

Christian Peace and Christmas Peace

The season of the year that is dearest of all seasons to the child heart is drawing near. For a few days yet they will say it is only so many weeks until Christmas and then suddenly their basis of calculation will change and it will be only so many days until Christmas.

We do not blame the children for looking forward with impatient spirit to the coming of this great day for it is the celebration of the greatest event in human history, the birth of the King who, when he comes into his own, will rule as King of all the earth, and the manner in which the anniversary of this day has been observed through the centuries appeals greatly to the childish heart, and it is the one season of the year when grown-up folks as well as children are willing to be childlike, and betwen the age of the gray-haired grandparent and the little child with faltering footsteps the years seem only a few. It is well that the spirit of the occasion has been preserved as it has through the passing centuries, for never before, since the actual day of the birth of the Messiah, has a Christmas season dawned upon the human race fraught with so great opportunity to demonstrate the spirit and power of the day as in the present season.

The most widespread war in all human history has but recently been brought to a close, and in a few days more the emissaries of peace will surround the "peace table" to establish terms that shall assure "peace abiding." It has already been demonstrated to the world that peace established by the sword and enforced by might is not a permanent peace; it now remains to be seen how well the teachers of this lesson to the world have learned it for themselves.

The Christian people of all ages have been derided and scoffed at for their principles of peace, but we are now of the opinion that practically the whole world has come to realize that the only peace that can hope to endure is a peace established on the principles laid down by the great Prince of Peace.

When the rulers of the victorious nations talk about a peace of justice they are talking about a Christian peace whether they acknowledge it or not, for justice has never been granted to the governed by their governors except where the principles of Jesus have come to prevail. We would not question the sincerity of the motives of the emissaries of peace as they come together with a determination to establish a "peace of justice," but there is a bare possibility that they may not be able to look with clear vision beyond the confines of their own national boundary lines. We also acknowledge that justice is two sided and that justice can not be secured for the devastated lands and the greatly wronged people of those lands without meting out justice to the country that has committed the great devastating act, and so justice must be meted out to Germany, but even then it must be remembered that the spirit of Divine justice is tempered with mercy. If we want the words of any one whose message is not the message of the ordinary preacher of the gospel as they bear upon this matter a quotation from the great Shakespeare will not be out of place. This great interpreter of human hearts declares that:

"The quality of mercy is not strained; it droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven upon the place beneath; it is twice blessed; it blesseth him that gives and him that takes: 'tis mightiest in the mightiest: it becomes the throned monarch better than his crown. Mercy is an attribute to God himself; and earthly power doth then show likest God's, when mercy seasons justice. Consider this,—that, in the course of justice, none of us should see salvation: we do pray for mercy, and that same prayer doth teach us all to render deeds of mercy."

So while we would not keep the Allies from meting out justice to what remains of the German government and the German nation we would expect them to consider the teachings of Shakespeare, if they should perchance fail to give proper consideration to God himself. But we are not so much concerned about the terms of peace that may be laid down for Germany as we are about the spirit that may be manifested by the Allies as they make an effort to come to agreeable terms among themselves. The spirit of nationalism has been too long cultivated in the hearts of the people of the nations to be lightly cast aside; and while for many purposes nationalism seems an essential element in human progress, yet we believe the world is thinking more in terms of internationalism now than it ever has done before, and the rulers of the nations are rather reluctantly, it seems, coming to realize that nations, like individual members of society, are very largely dependent for their comfort and happiness upon others. While competition may still be the "life" of trade, and competition for supremacy may be the "life" of nations, we believe the world is coming to realize that it is not an absolute essential to the progress of the world that any one nation shall exist, it is now realizing that as "the greatest good for the greatest number" is the proper motive for action among individual members of society so also it is the proper motive for action among groups of individuals that may be formed into what we call the nations of the earth. So we trust thhe emissaries of peace may keep this thought in mind as they arrange the terms that are supposed to assure a permanent peace for the whole world. If the emissaries of any one country try to take advantage of another country by reason of their present greater power they will be planting seeds that will spring up again in conflict as the wronged nation resolves that some day it will make right by force what it failed to secure by negotiation for itself in the peace conference.

The season of the year in which this conference meets should have a subtle influence over the hearts of its members and should cause them to remember that he who came to bring peace to the world sought not his own good but always the good of others. And so unless the terms of peace agreed upon by the nations shall be founded upon the principles of the Christ who was born in Bethlehem so many centuires ago, and unless they are Christian in their provisions ,not only will the war have been fought in vain, but the terms will deserve to be overthrown at some future time, for righteousness must cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. May the spirit of the Christ Child hover over the conference that shall soon meet in Europe to decide upon things so vital to the welfare of all the world.

TEETER.

From the Editor's View-Point

As a Man Thinketh, or a Woman

Although the war is over it will be a long time before the people of the world cease to think and to speak in war terms. Were it not that people would say to the writer, "Physician heal thyself," he would say this thinking and speaking in war terms can not come to an end any too soon. While it might be the best thing to break from this habit as one should break from the liquor habit, by immediate total abstinence rather than by the tapering off process, we are inclined to the belief that the getting away from the habits of thought and speech occasioned by the war will be a slow process extending through a number of years yet before us.

One of the most striking illustrations of the influence of the war upon the thought of America and especially on the thought of the women of America that we have recently seen was a letter from a mother of an American soldier, which she wrote to a city daily. The letter treats of the matter of feeding the women and children of Germany who may suffer more from hunger through the coming winter than they have at any time during the war. This woman declares that she is disgusted with a resolution passed by a group of women in favor of sympathizing with and of feeding these women and children, and states it as her conviction that they do not feel any charity toward them. This woman expresses herself as speaking for a majority of the war mothers when she objects to supplying any food to Germany and adds if it is a Christian duty to feed them, "then here is where I cease to be a Christian." She need not have added that last sentence for she has already ceased to be a Christian, if she ever was one. She has forgotten that Christ said, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him," and the apostle Paul said, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, and the greatest of these is charity." As Jesus said, "as a man thinketh in his heart so is he," this woman who would speak for the mothers of America by her own words, as they are prompted by her own heart, proclaims to all the world that she denies the teaching of Jesus and has no right to consider herself Christian.

Conservative Thinking

Progressive thought has always had to struggle against the influence of respectable conservatism. That conservatism is preferable to some radically so-called progressivism is not to be denied, but with every forward movement some mistakes must be expected but by clinging tenaciously to a conservative program and by refusing to entertain any progressive thoughts or to consider any progressive ideas one has no chance whatever of ever "getting anywhere" in life.

Since there is danger of going to extremes by the less wise progressive it is well to have his influence counterbalanced by a conservatism that acts as a set of governors acts on a steam engine and thus prevent him from running wild with his notions. While old ideas and old ideals must be given up in many instances one need not become discouraged because some of the new ideals that have taken their place have been shattered and found totally inadequate.

However one of the chief differences between a progressive and a conservative is found in the willingness of the former to have his ideals shattered, if by that process he may be led into a broader and freer atmosphere, while the conservative clings to his old ideas and will not part from them unless they are taken from him by force, and even then he mourns their departure as he would the death of a near relative or friend. This tenacious clinging to old ideas and ideals was cleverly expressed in a recent number of teh New York Evening Sun in the words: "A lot of people will pick up their 1913-14 thoughts right where they laid them down." That attitude on the part of any considerable number of people in any country spells calamity, for if the thought of the world has not gone forward during the last four years it is hopelessly doomed to both retrogression and the social organization of the world to disintegration. It would be well for each of us to ask ourselves the question: "What have I done with my 1913-14 thoughts?" And it is equally important that we compel ourselves to give an unequivocal answer. Too many times the questions we ask ourselves are asked like the questions asked by many Sunday school teachers—asked without expectation of an answer. We need to deal strictly with ourselves, and instead of taking pride in being known either as a "conservative" thinker or as a "progressive" thinker we should rather seek to be known as men and women with open minds, ready to give up the old when we have been convinced that the new is better, but we should not be like the woman we used to know who was reported to have said, "I am willing to be convinced that immersion is baptism, but I would like to see the one who can convince me." That is the spirit of conservatism that will take up all their thoughts, whether they be 1913-14 or 1837 thoughts, right where they laid them down. That is the conservatism that prevents all progress in the world; but we are grateful that such conservatism is rare and that there is a spirit of progress in the world that in time will win.

God and Artillery

The saying credited to Napoleon Bonaparte that "God is on the side of the heaviest artillery," has been revived of late, and the Des Moines Register says, "As usual, it turned out that God was on the side that had the heaviest artillery."

While God is greatly concerned about his people and is interested deeply in their welfare, yet to us it seems a mistake to try to link him up with every move a man or a nation makes. We take it that the Des Moines paper quoted above made the statement to which we refer in a spirit of irony, perhaps prompted by the thoughts of how the Kaiser impiously linked the name of God with his own name in his perfidous plans to enslave the world. But even though the Kaiser did claim that God was a junior partner with him in his plans for world dominion, and even though such plans have come to nought and the Kaiser's hopes have all tumbled down like a set of nine-pins, there is no occasion for linking God up with the armies as the editor of the Des moines paper does. Such an expression is an offense to God and an offense to all Christian people who have a clear conception of God's relation to the world. While in the end it was the "heaviest artillery," or in other words the superior forces of the Allies that beat the "Huns" to their knees, figuratively, if not in reality, yet the fact remains that the time when God showed his favor to the cause of the Allies was not especially in the hour of victory, but in the darkest period of the war when Germany possessed the heaviest artillery and when Germany had superior forces in the field and seemed just about to make her way to the sea and to Paris. If God showed his favor to any side at that time it was to the side of the weakest artillery, to the side with inferior forces in the field. No, God is not always on the side of the heaviest artillery and Christian people should resent such inferences or such claims. In the day of judgment it will be releaved that God has always been on the side of right regardless of the size or weight of artillery.

Preaching the Gospel

I. B. TROUT.

The Sermon

Sermonizing is the most important work that the minister has to do. In the whole continent of the minister's activity, the duty to preach the gospel stands out like the culminating peak in a great mountain system. Volumes have been written on the selection of the text, the preparation of the sermon and the delivery of the sermon. It is my purpose to state only a few of the most important things in connection with sermonizing and leave the rest to the judgment and good sense of the minister.

Probably the largest number of sermons are "made," a few are "grown," and a very small number, relatively speaking, are "born," while very many are either borrowed or stolen. It may be rather harsh to say, "stolen," for no man has the first right to any Biblical truth. God is the author of all truth, and any servants of his has the right to use the material God affords. However, I am sure that I will be understood as to my meaning, when I refer to stolen sermons. Every minister owes it to himself, that his sermons should be as original in style and in the composition of materials as it is possible to have them. It is his duty to give God a chance to use the individual talent and gift that he has given him. There are few ministers who can use a volume of outlines or sermons, gotten up by some one else, without being greatly injured by them in the long run. "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery, was the instruction of the experienced veteran of the cross to the young minister, Timothy, and never has better advice been given to any minister since. Ministers, let us break out of a lot of old ruts, but let us be sure to keep in the road. The trouble is that, when we break out of a rut, we are apt to get entirely out of the road. Sermonizing is not a light, but a serious matter.

Sermons are made when the minister selects a text at random, without respect to its context, then goes to work outlining, outlining, outlining, ad infinitum. He takes a volume or two of stock illustrations from the shelf and hunts for illustrations from South Africa, central Borneo, and New Zealand and attaches here and there, and they are usually about as appropriate as Yankee Doodle attached to a death notice, or the Doxology at the close of a dance. Of course it is understood that the subject announced after reading the text is catchy, such as no sensible and honest student of the Word would ever think of in connnection with the text. I know of a minister who had this idea, and he took the text, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls," and then proceeded to preach a sermon under the title of "Oysters!" Of course some shallow-brained listeners, who have little, or no reverence for the Bible, will say, "Isn't he clever? Who would ever have thought of that?" And we say, "Who would?" and the answer is, "No one who thinks straight."

I am not opposed to text preaching. I believe in it, but I believe in the kind that does honor to God and to his Word, the kind that every minister knows how to do, and can do, if he is willing to buckle down to his work, therefore, I will not stop to explain it.

The sermon is grown, when the minister plants a portion of God's Word in his mind and then studies, reads, outlines, writes, meditates, prays and does every legitimate thing to nurture the thoughts that come in rapidly increasing numbers, until he is ready to deliver a masterful address that has never yet been printed in any book in the form in which he has prepared it for delivery. I believe that I am safe to say, that every successful minister of years of experience has a number of sermons that are in the process of growing, not one of which he has ever attempted to deliver. They are not yet ripe enough to make the attempt safely. They are still growing, growing, and he does not know when he dare undertake the delivery. Sermons, like fruits, some grow to maturity much more quickly than others. Sometimes ministers attempt the delivery of an immaeture sermon to their own discomfiture and to the disgust of the audience. The minister who merely delivers a lot of moral platitudes, good in their place, does not need a text. Any text will serve the purpose as readily as some particular text. He doesn't need an outline, for moral platitudes do not usually fit an outline. The habit of growing sermons is one that ministers should cultivate with jealousy.

The best sermons are born. They are born out of the mind of the minister whose "delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night;" out of the mind of the minister who "lets the Word of Christ dwell in him richly;" and can say, "Thy Word have I hid in my heart." The minister, who is pre-eminently a student of the Word, will find himself at times in the fix in which Jeremiah found himself, when he said, "His Word was in my heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay." This is the condition of a man in whose mind a sermon has come to the point of birth. He can not remain silent, he must speak. Sermons are not born spontaneously. They are the result of the most earnest and consecrated study and effort. They are the product of the travail of the soul of the minister whose fundamental delight is in God and in his Word, and who has set himself to the task with his whole mind, soul, strength and heart. Sermons are born only when the minister comes fully under the spell of the Holy Spirit long enough for God to vitalize his being and produce that which he desires to be brought to the people. Sermons that are born are of close kin to inspiration, as it is commonly understood.

There is danger of the minister priding himself in the fine and logical arrangement of the subject matter of his sermon. If the minister will study the history of preaching, and study the men who have been great powers in winning souls for Christ, he will observe that not infrequently the illogical and even the grotesque sermon reaches the popular audience, which has assembled from almost everywhere, better than the sermon that is practically perfect in form and in homiletical proportion. Men want sermons that reach their souls,. They care very little for what we might call the architecture of the sermon. Their souls are hungering for the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

I close by giving in substance what a great preacher once said about sermonizing, and put these things forward as tests for the sermon,—Have I given a critical exposition of the words of the text? Have I shown off my own cleverness, or have I magnified the Word of God? What I have said may be good enough in itself, it may be even brilliant or vivid; but did such things really come out of the text, and do they tend to give correct and emphatic expression to the spirit of the text? What will be the probable effect of the sermon on the audience? Our object is not so much to say a lot of good things, but to say them in such a way as to carry conviction to the hearts of the auditors and cause them to accept and serve the Master. Sermonizing is a serious matter.—Berlin, Pa.

The Claims of Jesus

BY J. A. McINTURFF

About 1900 years ago there appeared a strange man in Palestine. He was a NEW man for never before had such a man lived. He was strange but still he was a man. His appearance was common and his manner and habits of life were as other men, but he was a strange kind of a man.

When a child he was as others, and the people of the town where he lived saw nothing strange, but later he was attracted to a revival meeting being held by John the Baptist. He became a convert and from this time on preached. His words and deeds from this time to his death were filled with claims which the church and government authorities thought strange doctrines.

He preached that HE was the Savior of men. This strange doctrine was also claimed in the things he did, and he soon won his way into the hearts of some, and they accepted this doctrine of himself.

He claimed to be super-human, that is, the Son of God. He denied that he was the product of the Jewish race, and declared he did not belong to this present order of matter life, but that he came from another world. He denied that his origin was as other men and claimed to remember the history of both worlds, and even said that he remembered the time of creation. He lived as other men, but said that it was for a different purpose. He talked of the future world, and claimed that HE would be the final judge. What a claim of divine supremacy in both worlds! He claimed absolute and indisputable power in dealing with every question of moral duty, and destiny, and said that HE could do all the work of God. He claimed supreme power in the field of mind, and asserted his power to remove moral guilt, or forgive sins. He spoke of HIMSELF as the infinite gift, and said that he was the very center of rest for the human soul. He compared himself with God, and allowed men to worship him as God. He demanded such faith in himself as we should only exercise in God. He demanded affection and devotion in himself which can only be yielded to God. He told the men who followed him that he would remain in the world in conscious relation to the people who accepted his claims for all ages. He claimed power to raise his own body from the grave, and extended this claim to his followers. He said that any man who would accept his claims, or believe on him should never die. He recognized death as a fact, and claimed power to suspend or even destroy it, and give eternal life. He said that his words were the last and final, and that all known before were superseded by them, and that all the future was dependent upon them. What a strange man! Was this the cry of a diseased mind, the creed of a fool, or the pretense of a deceiver? No. It was not, and the evidence is in the fact that men have tested this claim.

I care little for anything except his claim that if men would believe on him and accept his doctrine of HIMSELF, and then live the ethical life he did, that in so doing HE would become their Savior. Men have accepted, and through experience they have proven his strange claim to be true. The infallible proof of his claim is the experience of man, and by actual application of his claims to man for nearly 1900 years, this strange man with a mysterious claim has proven to the wonderment of the world that HIS CLAIM WAS TRUE. HE IS THE SAVIOR OF MEN.

FADS. BY E. M. COBB

Every now and then this country of ours is swept over by a new fad. Sometimes the influence exerted by it is far-reaching, other times, fortunately not. Like a deluge or a conflagration, it happens sometimes that the peculiar way of supporting a cane, the color of a shoestring, the angle of the pose of the lady's hat, length of a skirt, or some such foolishness sweeps over this wide land of ours, from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the gulf.

No doubt you have noticed that a college yell, born in the morning in the Orient and caught up by the gentle zephyrs is wafted toward the setting sun, the echo of which is reverberated by the Rockies ere nightfall. A new flavor of chewing gum, a new name for a cigar, in twenty-four hours is "all the go." The pattern of a new sleeve makes many a manteaumaker say, "They're wearing them so-and-so now."

Parallel with such nuisances as above mentioned we are continually confronted with such things as "no breakfast," "no dinner," "no supper," "cold water," "hot water" fads, all of which are good in their proper proportions, none of which will do for the whole thing; all of which are blessings if used and nuisances when abused. But among the latest of these one has arisen from the discovery that some kinds of diseases are due to the existence of disease germs and now the scientist has made it a penalty to kiss, because of the transmission of these murderous villains, called disease germs. And now the kiss, which has been a token of a mother's love, a mask to the hypocrite, supreme bliss for the lover, an emblem of unfeigned love given by the Son of God, must, because of this fad, be cast into oblivion.

Paramount to anything in recent years comes the action of a certain municipal government board which has in its findings substantiated the fact that coughing, sneezing and speaking in public are criminal acts. Their demonstrations have proven that in these exercises fine droplets of mucous are sprayed from the mouth into the air, which, by currents of air, are wafted from one person to another, alighting in the air passages of the mouth and lungs, thus endangering life. So it is only a question of time until the public, through this fad, will endeavor to stop religious services because of the danger to health.

However, two things are in favor of religion. First, not many people attend church and therefore not many will be killed by this means; and second, if religious services are stopped, theater going and baseball will have to be stopped too, in which case the fad will be very short lived.

It is a pity that since we are at it the theory cannot be carried farther and teach a more wholesome doctrine, that we should legislate against thinking bad thoughts, for fear they will cast off disease germs and cause other people to think bad thoughts. It is far more detrimental than the new fad that has been lately hatched out. Of all the detestable bacteria, germs or bugs, the worst one we have to encounter is the humbug.

The Persecuted Greeks

The Honorable Georges Roussos, Minister of Greece to the United States, has made the following statement concerning the condition of the Greeks in Macedonia and Turkey:

Two peoples,, whose history is but a succession of cruelties, undertook, under the leadership of Germany, the extermination of Hellenism.

The first, Bulgaria, has just evacuated Eastern Macedonia. It has left behind it nothing but ruins. Entire villages have been burned. Masses of inhabitants are without shelter. The houses which have not been destroyed have been pillaged. Furniture, clothing, foodstuffs, all have been carried off. Not a single head of cattle has been left. If the charity of the world does not come to their aid, to shelter, clothe and feed these populations, all those that still remain will soon be dead.

Turkey provides us with a spectacle just as heartrending. The Greek populations of Turkish Thrace, of Asia Minor, have been dispersed. The young women and girls have been carried off into captivity in the harems. Children, torn from the arms of their mothers, have been compelled to embrace Islamism; others have been driven, naked, into the interior, dying of hunger, slowly exterminated. The property stolen from these people has been occupied by the Turks.

The savagery and brutality of these two nations, held in check by fear, no longer knew any limit when, encouraged by German victory, they believed in their impunity.

The Greek race for five centuries has undergone endless martyrdom. It has suffered all things, because it preferred death to the loss of its religion, its national consciousness. It has bought back its right to liberty by this long suffering. The shame which Christendom has endured for five centuries can no longer be tolerated. The peoples of the Orient—Greeks, Armenians, Syrians—have a right of life. Their sacrifices, by which Christian civilization has been able to maintain itself in the Orient, demands their reward. Turkish domination, with its congeners, barbarity and death, must disappear completely. The Armenian people, the civilized peoples of Europe, have promised this. These peoples of the Near East claim the promise; they awaits realization. That is what has given them the strength necessary to enable them to endure their latest persecutions.

Their liberty they will have. You will give it to them. But they will be poorer than Job. Their lands, which have remained uncultivated for lack of implements, for lack of beasts of burden and farm animals will produce nothing to sustain them.

It is to you Americans, whose charity is inexhaustible, without stint or limit, who know what giving means, that all these people stretch out imploring hands. They know that you will not let them perish, and that you, who every day practise charity as our Savior has defined it, will help them to live.

They have already contracted an immense debt of gratitude to you; thousands of lives have been saved by your money. You are now bringing them liberty also. You will complete your benefactions by giving them the means of finding shelter, of being able to work, to produce, to civilize this Orient, the cradle of our civilization.

The Christianity of America will have the honor of regenerating this Orient, so sorely tried. The voices of the Apostles, who taught the Gospel in this privileged land, of all the martyrs of the Christian faith who were burned there, will mingle with ours to implore the blessings of the Most High upon America, land of goodness par excellent.

A New Day at the Holy Sepulchre

When the Governor of Jerusalem learned that a thousand American Christians, representing different sects, were coming to that city to hold a World's Sunday School Convention, he asked whether a thousand soldiers would be sufficient to keep the peace of the Convention. Why? For generations scenes of riot and even bloodshed had occurred year after year between the rival Christian sects at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem in the Ceremony of the Holy Fire on the Saturday before Oriental Easter.

This rioting was due partly to fanaticism and bitterness between the Christian sects celebrating this "Miracle" at the same moment, and partly to the brutal roughness of the Turkish troops who were on guard.

Knowing these things the Governor could hardly credit the statement that not a single soldier was needed to insure the peace of the Sunday school Convention, especially where so many denominations were represented. But after witnessing the spirit of unity among these Sunday school people as they gathered in the convention under two great tents upon the reputed site of Calvary, after noting the unselfish spirit of these workers as they met on behalf of the world's childhood and youth, noting too that the address of the Samaritan High Priest was interpreted by a Jewish Rabbi, he sent his deputy to say that while he was disturbed concerning their coming, he bid them God's speed and a cordial welcome at any time to Jerusalem.

And now, for the first time at this last Easter, the Ceremony of the Holy Fire was celebrated at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre without the presence of Turkish soldiers. The English were in command at Jerusalem and had determined that this year the ceremony should be observed without the presence of a single soldier. It was a bold decision to make but the plan was actually carried through greatly to the credit of Colonel Storrs, the Military Governor who was present at the church with his staff. There was intense excitement. The church was packed to the doors. The Greeks, the Armenians, and Copts were there —intensely jealous of each other. At times it seemed as if rioting was just about to break out, and as the priests within the tomb passed out the sacred fire through tapers there were a few moments of struggle.

Rev. Stephen Trowbridge, the World's Sunday School Secretary among the Moslems, was with Mr. Cleland asked by the Government to stand in front of the mass of Armenians to keep down any turbulent spirits. The Greeks proved the most noisy and troublesome but on the whole the ceremony passed off very peaceably. The Governor later sent Mr. Trowbridge the following note:

"Dear Mr. Trowbridge:

Pray accept my very sincere thanks for the invaluable help rendered by Mr. Cleland and yourself today in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. The peaceful celebration of this historic service without the presence of armed forces has undoubtedly shed lustre upon Allied Christendom, of whom you two are honored representatives in Jerusalem.

(Signed) R. STORRS, Colonel,
Military Governor."

A cable from Cairo, dated October 18, states "A solemn function has just been held at the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem, in thanksgiving for liberation of the Holy Land from the Turks. Consular representatives of all the allied nations attended."

Bishop Hiraiwa of Japan—A Sunday School Enthusiast

A recent visitor at the office of the World's Sunday School Association was Bishop Hiraiwa of the Methodist church of Japan. When the commissioner of the World's Sunday School Association went to Japan in 1906, to co-operate with Japanese Sunday school leaders in organizing their work into an Association, one of those who was most active in arranging the new organization was Bishop Hiraiwa. The church of which he is Bishop has put a very strong emphasis upon the Sunday school work in Japan through an active Sunday school committee and by the employment of a Sunday school Secretary, Rev. K. Mito, who is a genius in Sunday school methods.

Under the stimulation of this Sunday school leadership the Sunday school membership of the Methodist church of Japan has grown to the large total of 38,000 in 1917, while the church membership was 21,000. Bishop Biraiwa says that the largest factor in the growth of the Methodist church is the Sunday school, and this large Sunday school membership is the best promise for the future strength of the Methodist church of Japan. He was full of hope for the future of the Sunday school work of the Empire.

Every Picture Means a Scholar

During these war days fewer Bible picture cards have been sent to the missionaries for use in their work. The effect is clearly noted in a photograph that recently came to the World's Sunday School Association from India. A Sunday school was shown and 15 were present. In former days, when a large number of picture cards had been received, that same school had an average attendance of seventy-five. Missionaries from every field abroad state that "every picture means a scholar." A picture card is a large reward and is given often not merely for attendance but for committing verses and even chapters from the Bible to memory. In a certain city in China the missionary was able to obtain a real cleanup in one of the sections by giving a picture to each woman who would remove all rubbish from in front of her house. Our homeland is rich with pictures. Every Sunday school class or individual member can help forward the Sunday school work abroad by sending used post cards and left over Bible pictures to the missionaries. The pictures will win scholars and the teachers will seek to win souls. For all information write to the Surplus Material Department, World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. Be particular to indicate your denomination, distinguishing between "North" and "South" if necessary. You will receive a card of introduction to a missionary and a leaflet giving all details of the plan. More than 28,000 introductions have been placed in this mannner.

The Organized Adult Class in Buenos Aires

South American Sunday schools are adopting the proved plans of the schools here in the homeland. Many men's Bible classes are doing good work in addition to building up their own organization. This work has been developed by Rev. George P. Howard, Field Secretary for South America, of the World's Sunday School Association.

The First Methodist Church, Buenos Aires, Argentina, has such a class and the teacher, Jay C. Field, just wrote about his class to W. C. Pearce of the International Sunday school Association. He said, in part, "We have just completed the organization of a Men's Bible Class of the First Methodist church, Buenos Aires. We have adopted almost without change, the constitution found in your book on "Adult Bible Classes." We are working now for charter members and will close the list just as soon as you can send us the certificate as shown in said book. We have been having an attendance of eighteen to twenty-four men and have been studying Ward's "Poverty and Wealth." We are now beginning "Meeting the Master." We hope to have considerable growth in the class this year. We have already ordered considerable supplies for the class work."

Around the Fireside

Mrs. Hampton's Side Issue

BY HILDA RICHMOND

"If Luther would only move to town!" sighed Mrs. Hampton once more as she put the finishing touches to a most beautiful cake one mild day in late winter. "I don't believe the woman ever lived who did not long to make money for her very own, that is, if she was normal. Out here in this wilderness, there is as much chance to make money as on a desert island. I suppose I'll die trying to persuade Luther, and never have a chance to earn a dollar; but it certainly is hard."

That evening at supper Mr. Hampton fell into the trap laid for him at once. "Gee! That's a fine cake, Mamma," he observed after eating three slices. "It's worth at least two dollars."

"It would be in town," observed his wife pensively, "but I'm not likely to see two dollars for it out here."

"Now see here, Mamie, I'm making enough money for the two of us. You know all you have to do is to write out a check when you want money, so why fret about anything else. We'll make the last payment on the farm next year, if everything goes as well as it has the past twelve months and then we'll take life easier."

"But I'd like to make money of my very own," said his wife. "There's your sister Ida who makes five dollars a week baking for the grocery near her house, and it doesn't take much extra time. She says it is just like finding money, for she does the baking while she does her own morning's work. And her husband gets one hundred dollars a month clerking in a hardware store and never out in the weather at all. Just look at the way you've worked with those old ditches today! You're likely to take cold and get down sick wading about in the mud."

"I've never noticed that Ida and her husband are laying up any great amount of money," said Mr. Hampton dryly. "I think we live more comfortably than they do for all we do owe two thousand on this farm. John is five years older than I am, and his father gave him a nice little start, while you and I started without help, but I wouldn't trade with them."

"Well, I wouldn't want to trade either," said Mrs. Hampton quickly, "but they cannot manage as well as we do. I think they spend too much money entirely on clothes, while ours cost us very little thanks to my management and sewing, if I do say it myself. But you know, Luther, that their children are far ahead of ours. They have drawing and music and domestic science and everything in the town schools, while our poor little ones have nothing."

"I'm not so sure that our children are behind theirs," said Luther Hampton. "I'll take the good old country school with its few branches well taught rather than a smattering of everything and nothing well learned. Ida said herself that her children had to study two hours each evening while ours are doing little chores and playing."

"Well, anyhow, I want to make money," said Mrs. Hampton going back to her text. "I'll never be satisfied until I've tried it—never!"

"You don't have to move to town to make money," said Mr. Hampton quite as if he was stating something new, when in fact he had said it every time the money making subject came up.

"Now, Luther, we've hashed that over hundreds of times, and you know there isn't a single thing I could do to make money. Chicken raising is out of the question on account of the big woods across the way, and what few we do have we must pen up in a tight pen every night. Bee keeping, canning fruit, making jellies, sewing—we've gone through the whole list, and everything is out of the question. I might bake for the town grocery, but hauling delicate cakes and canned fruit over nine miles of such roads as we have six months in the year is not to be thought of. Cooking is the thing I do well, and I might make money from it if there was any market for my wares; but there is none. Once I tried to send a cake with the rural letter carrier to Mrs. Forbes, but when he delivered it the icing was all broken and she gave me only a dollar for it."

Before spring set in, Mr. Hampton's best horse fell ill and died, and soon after that dogs broke into his flock of fine sheep and killed a number of them. These things, together with the continual begging of his wife to go to town, disheartened him and at last he rented the place to an ambitious young farmer, made a sale of his live stock and implements, and set out for town, much to the delight of Mrs. Hampton, whose mind was filled with rose hued visions. The first of May saw them settled in a city flat with the children in school and Mr. Hampton established in a hardware store at one hundred dollars per month ,thanks to his ability to set up farm implements. Having a knack with machinery, and intimate knowledge of most of the agricultural necessities, he did not have to start at the foot of the ladder as his brother-in-law had done, but was sent at once to the country to set up, demonstrate, and sell machines of various sorts. He liked the work, as it kept him out of doors, and his wife was perfectly happy in the opportunity to carry out her long-cherished plans; so the spring passed rapidly and pleasantly for all except the children, who did not like the flat and fretted for their old surroundings.

"Twenty dollars in three weeks!" cried Mrs. Hampton, waving a check joyously in the air when they had been in town a month. "I bought all the things I used and took them out of the money Mr. Wilson paid me for my work, keeping separate accounts for that and the household expenses, and this is my profit. Now, will you say a woman cannot do business? I'm going to put every penny of this into the savings bank and buy bonds with it when I get enough. And we'll save something out of your salary too! I want to show Ida that it is possible to keep house well on that amount and still save something."

"How about the lard and eggs and canned fruit and meat and potatoes and vegetables we brought from the farm?" asked Mr. Hampton.

"Well, of course, we'll have to count them something," said Mrs. Hampton rather taken aback. "I shall watch the markets this fall and put up plenty of fruits and vegetables. Mrs. Turner gave me thirty cents for a pie this morning because I used my own home-canned cherries for it. Thirty cents a pie! Think of it!"

"That doesn't seem much for a good pie the way everything costs," said Mr. Hampton. "One of the salesmen told me this morning that his wife pays fifty cents a pound for butter. At that rate my salary won't go very far."

"We won't eat so much butter as we did on the farm," said Mrs. Hampton. "With all this talk about food conservation, we must do our part in saving. I have been spreading the children's bread with honey to save what butter we brought with us. You'll see! I have a dozen economical schames that you never suspected. We used to use more than a gallon of milk every day on the farm and all the cream we wanted, but now we get along nicely on a quart of milk a day and no cream."

"I could get along always without the kind of milk we get here," said Mr. Hampton. "It has a queer taste to it that I don't like."

Mrs. Hampton found that when city people began to go away for the summer her trade fell off alarmingly, but she was behind with her sewing, and she consoled herself that in the fall things would brighten up again. Mr. Hampton was busy early and late setting up machines, getting repairs for machines sold previous seasons, delivering tractors, and working as he never had worked before, so he did not notice the falling off in the trade. He was so tired when night came that he dropped into bed in the stuffy closet of a room in the flat and snored until his early rising hour, oblivious of everything but farm machinery. On Sundays he usually remained in bed until noon, trying to catch up sleep and give his stiff, bruised hands a chance to feel better; so Mrs. Hampton heard nothing from him as to the disadvantages of life in a city, though the children daily grew more peevish.

A protracted rain gave Mr. Hampton two days' vacation quite unexpectedly in July; before he could take a much-needed rest a message summoned them to the funeral of Uncle Jason Hampton in the old neighborhood, and they spent the rainy time visiting around relatives and friends.

"You look as if you had had a long sick spell, Luther," said each and every friend and relative he met. "What is the matter?"

"I've been working hard," said Mr. Hampton briefly.

"Working hard!" laughed his friends. "You used to put in sixteen hours a day on the farm in summer, so you can't tell us that a town gentleman works like that."

"You can believe it or not, but I've put in sixteen hours a day for weeks, and I've lost forty pounds since we've been in town," said Mr. Hampton.

"We don't have as much to eat as we used to have on the farm," piped up Jamie Hampton, and his mother could have spanked him. The urchin was sitting behind a mound of mashed potato, chicken, peas, beans, dumplings, and boiled cabbage, making rapid inroads on the good things, but with an eye on the cherry pie and sponge cake to follow at his grandmother's hospitable table, and it was easy for those about him to believe his statement. "Gee! These things taste good! We haven't had chicken since we went to town."

"That will do, Jamie," said his father quietly. "Living in town is quite different from what it is in the country."

"But it is easy to see that you folks are making money," put in Mrs. George Hampton, who also had the fever to go to town. "Mamie's children look like fashion plates."

"It takes so many more clothes in town than in the country," said Mamie Hampton. "I can't let the children run in old clothes on the streets, and that is the only place they have to play."

"I can easily believe that the children play in the streets," said another relative aside to Mrs. George Hampton. It was a family gathering and the long table made conversation possible that was not heard by all. "I'll be glad when Mamie is back in town with her children, for they use nasty expressions and profanity when she is not about. Maybe she is making lots of money with her baking, but it looks as if her children were allowed to run wild."

"Mamie always was easy going," said Mrs. George. "She could keep them in with her if she tried."

"Well, if you'd see the stuffy little place where they live, you'd think they'd smother if they were kept in," said another woman decidedly. "I was there for two hours, and it seemed as if a breath of air was unknown. The front room and the kitchen have light, but the rooms in between, where they sleep, are dark as dungeons. No wonder Luther looks so bad."

Before going to town the Hamptons went to their own farm, and were amazed to see the company at dinner in the familiar dining room. The mistress of the house apologized for the lateness of the dinner by saying a severe storm came up and her boarders could not get there. As the Hamptons sat in the sitting room waiting for the meal to be over, they recognized the voices of Job Marshall and his three motherless boys, old Mr. Turner, whose wife had died several years before, John Hunter and his two hired men, and several other of their one-time neighbors.

"You see chicken raising is out of the question here," said their hostess when the leisurely meal came to an end, "so I looked about for another method of making pin money, and I baked for the grocery back in our old home because we were close to town. Then I canned fruit and made jellies for folks because cooking is what I like to do best, but here the roads are too rough to deliver such things in town so much of the season. There are a number of the neighbors in womanless houses, so I took them in to board, and I find it pays very well. I've made one hundred dollars in this short time, and when fall comes I'll have to get Aunt Sophie to come and help me. The poor souls have depended upon their own cooking so long that they have ordered dozens of cans of fruit and vegetables and pickles for winter. It isn't hard work, as they all want plenty of simple things like meat and potatoes and gravy and vegetables with pie and gingerbread and fruit for dessert, so I just cook an extra quantity of what we would have for ourselves. The children help with the dishwashing and gathering things in the garden, so I get along first rate."

"I—I never thought of such a thing, gasped Mrs. Hampton.

"And this is our last year as tenants," said Mrs. Packer proudly. "We have more than enough to pay two-thirds down on a farm we have in view, and we think it safe to take it. We could take possession this fall, for the owner wants to move to town to take life easy, but we'll probably wait till spring. I wish Henry was at home to talk to you about it, but he had an errand in town. He wants you to know in time so you can get another man for this place."

"O, Mamma!" began three eager voices at once, but their mother silenced them with a little gesture. "Your papa started to say something children," she said with a little smile. "You must not interrupt."

"I guess we'll take the place ourselves another year," said Mr. Hampton, knowing instantly what that smile meant. "We're all pretty tired of town and want to come back home, don't we, Mamie?"

"We certainly do," said his wife with energy. "I've talked about cooking for other folks a side issue to make money all these years, when right before my eyes was the greatest opportunity any woman could ask. And, if you folks want to move to your own farm this fall, Mrs. Packer, I hope you'll let us know as soon as possible."

"I'm not surprised you feel that way," said the hostess heartily. "I tried it in town once and we lost every dollar we had saved on the farm, but we learned some valuable lessons that were worth more than what we lost. I'll leave you my business and good will, and I know you'll succeed."

"At any rate we won't starve," said Mr. Hampton, "and we won't work as hard as we have had to in town. That's one comfort."—Religious Telescope.

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

The item on page six of last week's Evangelist announcing the prices of the new Teacher Training book by Prof. L. L. Garber was handed in too late to receive mention on this page, but we wish to call the attention of all Sunday school officers to the fact that this book is not to be ordered from The Brethren Publishing Company, but directly from Prof. J. A. Garber, superintendent of Teacher Training in the National Sunday School Association. Any orders sent to us will necessarily be somewhat delayed, so send all orders to J. A. Garber, Ashland, Ohio and they will be promptly filled. Since this is the first publication of this sort the Sunday School Association has brought out it should receive the full support of all schools that the Association may feel encouraged to bring out the other three books according to its plans.

The order blanks sent out to our Sunday schools for the supplies for the first quarter in 1919 were delayed a few days because of the necessity of revising the entire price list. However these blanks with duplicate copies of their last order have now been mailed to all schools and we trust they may make out their new order promptly as it will help us to get the goods out a little more promptly during the busy days that always come just before Christmas. We wish to state further that it would be a great accommodation to the Publishing House if CASH would accompany the order wherever possible, and we would especially state that no school should ask us to furnish their supplies for the next quarter until they have paid up for their last quarter's supplies. These are stringent times for all Church Publishing Houses.

The Christian Endeavor page has on it this week communications from G. C. Carpenter and H. M. Oberholtzer, both veterans in Endeavor work, on the importance of beginning young in training children and young people for active Christian service. These contributions are worthy of serious consideration by the Christian Endeavor Societies and the pastors of our churches.

The "Home Mission Notes" bearing upon the Kentucky work were intended for last week's paper, but they did not reach us until that number was all in type and it was not convenient to re-arrange the matter. We are too hard pressed in the mechanical department of the Publishing House for help to make any more work than is absolutely necessary to get out our publications.

James S. Cook, of Krypton, writes at some length of the terrible inroads of the epidemic among the ignorant mountaineers who have more faith in the efficacy of "yarbs and home brewed tea" than they have in modern medical science. It will require the training of more than one generation to get these people to abandon "the faith of their fathers" and to take on something new, but until they do so there is little hope of bettering their condition to any great extent. One of the most difficult things in all the world to overcome is prejudice, and this is true in a special manner of ignorant religious prejudice. The whole world needs the light of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

After a silence of some weeks N. W. Jennings comes to our readers again with his travel notes. The work of Brother Jennings, like the work of practically every evangelist in the United States, and practically every pastor as well, was interrupted by the great epidemic. Although Brother Jennings was able to take up his work a little earlier than some others, yet his winter's plans have all been broken up and his time cut short. This is all the more noticeable since he must discontinue his evangelistic work by the middle of December to get ready to move to California where he will become pastor of the First Brethren church of Los Angeles. At the Mountain View church in Virginia one week's meetings by Brother Jennings resulted in fourteen confessions. He is now in West Virginia engaged in a revival at Oak Hill.

Brother G. W. Chambers reports the development of the work of the Brethren at Buena Vista and at Bethlehem, Virginia. The work here is conducted under difficulties, but yet the Lord has rewarded the faithful workers with victory. At Buena Vista eleven members were added to the Brethren church as a result of a union evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Evangelist Starke of New York. The Bethlehem Sunday school observed a successful Rally Day in October and a promising young man of the community recently was added to this church. Brother Chambers is realizing that the growth of a congregation depends largely upon the esteem in which it is held in the community.

The Brethren have never taken very seriously the opportunity to build up the gospel alone faith in the northern states. Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas have offered opportunities in the past that have not been seized upon. A few Brethren have held on faithfully at several points in Michigan and Wisconsin, and now Brother Baker tells of an opportunity in the thriving city of Eau Claire, Wisconsin. It remains to be seen whether or not this opportunity will be allowed to pass by.

One of the unassuming pastors of the Brethren in Indiana is Brother Homer Anderson, now in charge of the Dutchtown church. This was a neglected field when Brother Anderson was called to it following a successful revival meeting conducted by C. C. Grisso a little more than a year ago, and while Brother Anderson has not yet been able to make the field into a bed of roses he is working faithfully for definite results, and we are glad one of them is to reach Goal Nine of the Four-Year Program. This will mean much toward getting the church interested in all the activities of the brotherhood as they need to know the things that the Brethren Evangelist tells each week.

E. M. Cobb treats a common condition in a unique manner in his contribution this week and we are quite sure many of our readers will appreciate what he has to say.

Around the Editor's Table

Brethren Literature for Brethren Sunday Schools

For the past three years we have been emphasizing on these pages the supreme importance of using Brethren Sunday school supplies in every Brethren Sunday school. In fact we have emphasized this necessity to the extent that we are sure a number of our Brethren have felt we were playing too much upon a single string, that we were narrow minded, etc. We are perfectly willing to have them think anything they please about us just so we get the results we are after, and we did get the results, at least in a measure. A goodly number of our Sunday schools have introduced Brethren literature in departments of their schools that had never used it before, and with good results. We are indeed grateful to these schools and to their officers, and we are especially grateful to the pastors who have co-operated with us in bringing about this result, and we still solicit the co-operation of both pastors and superintendents in securing even greater results, for so long as there is one Brethren Sunday school that is using some other literature in a single department of the school where Brethren literature would secure as good if not better results there is a fertile field for Brethren propaganda, and during the future months, when Brother Baer relieves us of our editorial duties and we are permitted to give all our time to the development of the business of the Brethren Publishing Company, we expect to redouble our efforts along this line, for we are convinced that the future of the Brethren church is dependent to a very large extent upon the development of this idea.

A Denominational Motto

We have just received a circular from the publishing house of the largest Protestant church in America, the Methodist Episcopal church, with the title we have chosen for the heading of this page, except they have the word Methodist where we have Brethren, and to convince our critical brethren that we are not narrow minded when we insist upon Brethren Sunday schools using Brethren literature we wish to quote freely from this circular sent out to every Methodist Sunday school in America, but we will substitute the name Brethren in the place of Methodist so that our pastors and superintendents may the more easily "catch the drift" as the boys say.

Brethren Literature in Every Sunday School—That should be the motto of every Brethren pastor, Sunday school superintendent, officer, teacher, man and woman. The boys and girls and the young men and young women, as well as the adults of our denomination, are entitled to the very best literature published.

The Brethren church need feel no sense of embarrassment in proclaiming its literature superior in its adaptability to BRETHREN needs.

If the church had not supplied its people with a type of literature constructive, educational, regnant with spiritual truths, The Brethren Publishing Company could never have reached even its present stage of usefulness. And the Brethren publishing interetss still continue to grow—because Brethren leaders continue to study the needs of Brethrenism, the boys and girls, the young people, the men and women. Also for that other reason its literature is definitely related to the great program of the church, which is as big as the world and as extensive as is the longings and uncertainties of the human heart and the sufferings and needs of the human race. Through its literature the church is making possible the reclamation of the world through the molding of lives in the ways of the Great Truth Giver.

A Great Principle Stated

There is no PROVINCIALISM in LOYALTY to denominational literature. There are instead, religious definiteness and good BUSINESS SENSE. Protestant churches have never wielded so great influence in the world as today. Denominational pride and loyalty mean a bigger, stronger, and more influential organization, more efficient and successful in co-operating with other denominations in erecting new standards, creating higher ideals, and aiding the world to a proper appreciation of the Divine relationship to man. And the GREATER the pride and loyalty to DENOMINATIONAL literature, the greater will be the church and its influence in the lives of the people coming within the scope of its activities, and the greater will be the friendly and efficient co-operation of the different churches.

What of the Future?

Brethrenism's future depends upon the training imparted NOW to its Sunday school pupils. To deprive them of Brethren literature is to deprive them of the opportunity to become a part of the great Brethren program. It is to deprive future Brethrenism of loyal workers—of men and women educated in Brethren faith and polity.

To give the children of Brethrenism their own denomination's literature will mean training them in BRETHREN faith, assuring the future of the church, and, through a definite, strong, constructive spiritual program, hastening the coming of the Kingdom among men.

Brethren Sunday school literature in every Brethren Sunday school will mean a greater church, a greater work, definite training for these intrusted to our care—the Kingdom's advancement. It is a good motto.

Applying the Poultice

Any man who was brought up on the farm thirty or forty years ago and who was compelled to submit to home-treatment for a great many of the common ailments of life will, perhaps remember very vividly some occasion when the remedy applied was a "horse-radish leaf poultice." It is no wonder that the ailment ceased to give pain for its painful warnings were swallowed up by the more painful drawing-out power of the horse-radish leaf poultice. And to some of us today the application of plain common sense treatment of many of our pet theories may seem painful, but if it is for the common good of all nothing remains for us to do but to submit to the treatment.

It has been stated a number of times in these columns that the publishing business of the world has never passed through such trying times as during the last three years, and hundreds of publications have been suspended because of conditions they could not control. Church publishing houses have suffered with other publishing companies, but most of them have survived because the churches and Sunday schools they represent have been willing to help them bear the burden by graciously submitting to small increases in the price of the supplies they furnish.

Two years ago practically all church publishing houses advanced the price of their publications to meet the advanced cost of production and they have gotten along fairly well, but within the last six months another advance in the cost of paper and printing material of such marked proportions has taken place, and to prevent bankruptcy these same publishing houses have been compelled to make another advance in the price of their output. We have received the new price lists from a number of publishers of Sunday school supplies, and in order to keep abreast of the forward movement and to save ourselves from financial disaster we too are sending out new price lists with a slight advance in the price of Brethren supplies. The price of the Brethren Evangelist remains the same, but the prices of all Sunday school supplies, including the Graded Supplies as well as our own publications, have all been advanced slightly.

Now, if any single Sunday school decides to cut its order down so that it will not cost any more than it did last quarter, it will just to that extent defeat our purpose, for we will have the same amount of literature published at a greater cost with that much more left on our hands unsold, which will mean a dead loss to the Brethren Publishing Company and consequently to the church to which the Company belongs. So please carry your end of the load and we will put forth our best efforts to carry our end as well. Some radical changes are being made in the literature for the next quarter and the next year and it is essential that we have the full support of all the schools to assure the success of these plans.

Finally

This paragraph will be short, but we think it can be clearly understood, and we ask you to mark these words—unless the Brethren Sunday schools CONTINUE to support the BRETHREN publications it will not be many years until there will be no Brethren Sunday school literature, and when there ceases to be Brethren Sunday school literature there will CEASE TO BE a Brethren church.

A War Orphanage Opened in Jaffa

Mr. C. T. Hooper, in normal times the superintendent of the Port Said British and Foreign Bible Society, has undertaken the very difficult task of establishing an orphanage at Jaffa. He was able to secure the use of a large Greek school building which had been occupied as a Turkish prison, but every article of furniture in it had been destroyed by the Turks when they were forced to leave. Not even a window remained, so that aside from feeding and clothing the constantly increasing number of orphans, much time at first had to be given to scouring, repairing and refitting the building. Blackboards and broken doors were made to serve as beds, and the only cups and plates available were those fashioned out of the empty jam tins left in the path of the British Army.

The fame of the Orphanage soon spread and every day soldiers appeared at the gate with more children. There are now nearly 300 in all. One woman, separated from her children when fleeing from the Turks, had crawled through the Turkish lines to look for them, and was made happy when they were found in the Orphanage.

A Transformation in Palestine

Although the British occupation of Palestine only dates back four months, the very atmosphere of this region seems to have undergone a change. Distress had vanished, and misery, sickness and fear no longer linger on the threshold of the towns and villages. Everywhere there is evidence of reviving industry and prosperity. What has contributed more than anything else to immediate relief has been the employment of thousands of natives upon the repair of the roads. Everybody realizes that a new era has dawned for the land. The Bedouins can graze their flocks in peace and security, husbandmen can till the soil with the knowledge that they will not be robbed of the fruit of their labor. The railway to Egypt insures them the easy disposal of their surplus yield and the means of satisfying their wants by imports from abroad.—Jewish Chronicle.

The Servants of the Harem

The great majority of Arab women live their lives within the walls and courtyards of the harem. In the villages, servants are rare, save in the great houses of landed proprietors, but in town there is decidedly a servant class. Nearly every establishment of any means has one or more women servants in the harem, either Arabs or Persians or black women of African descent, and most important functionaries they are. Besides doing the actual housework, they represent the newspaper, the post and the telephone, for they go to and fro between the houses of their mistresses and their friends, doing the errands, carrying the messages and passing on all the gossip of the day. They do the marketing and the shopping, and are in general the go-between for the world without and the world behind the lattices. On the day when women are admitted to the Turkish baths, the servants form part of the black-cloaked household procession, carrying the baskets of towels and clean clothes and usually a samovar and tea glasses, so that refreshments may be prepared after the more ardous pleasures of the bath are concluded. They participate in all the concerns of their mistresses and enjoy terms of great freedom and equality in most cases.

Child Rug-Weavers of Kerman

There is great need of some one to plead the cause of the child toilers in Persia, as Mrs. Browning took up the childish cry of little slaves in England and secured the passage of laws for their relief. Industrial conditions, under which rug weaving is carried on in Persia, are sad indeed, for with the exception of a few men and big boys, almost all the workers are children, so young that in America they would scarcely be thought ready for school; yet their baby hands can fashion rugs so beautiful that folk on the other side of the world will pay almost any price for them. The factories are usually located in the most sordid sections of the opium-poisoned towns, often below the street level, and here these little childrn sit perched all day before a huge framework, while their tiny fingers move incessantly to the rythm of a chant, "three red, six green, four blue two gray and three black," which is droned by a man in charge. When the chanting ceases at sunset, the children do not scramble out and run and play, as becomes their age, but climb slowly down with cries of pain in their cramped limbs and some must sit and wait, with unchildlike patience, until a father or brother comes to carry them to their cheerless home.

In one factory, among thirty-eight children examined, thirty-six were found to be deformed. Long days of toil, nights too short, a poverty stricken home, often angry blows and never a word of a pitying Savior—this is a picture of the tragedy. "It is not the will of our Father that one of these little ones should perish."

The Chins of Burma

A literature in their own language is one of the crying needs of the Chins of Lower Burma, whose Bible consists of a tentative edition of the first four chapters of John, translated by a Chin preacher with a very limited education; whose hymn book has been out of print for some years and whose other literature consists of a so-called spelling book, printed thirty years ago and so rotten that it almost crumbles into dust when touched. The Chins are animists, and believe in a creating spirit—a mother god—but many of them have no religion whatsoever. They have veered away from their ancestral belief and are drifting toward Buddhism, but now, while they are in a state of transition, is the time to win them to Christ. They may soon become Burmanized and therefore Buddhists, and will be harder to reach. If the missionaries can preach and pray and sing in Chin, and have a literature in Chin, their hearts can be more readily touched. m

Gurdaspur Home for Women and Children.

For many years missionaries of the Punjab have longed for a place where homeless widows, deserted wives and new converts could be given the protection they need and an opportunity to help themselves. When Miss Emma Dean Anderson, of the United Presbyterian Mission, went home on furlough four years ago, she was commissioned to raise $10,000 for this purpose. One day she missed her train in Paxton, Illinois, and decided to make some calls. She was led to speak of this work to Mrs. Elizabeth Temple, who promised to furnish the money for the undertaking. One difficulty after another has been surmounted and now the chapel, hospital, school and thirty-six rooms for women and children are practically completed.

Thirty-five women and twenty-three orphans have been sheltered and have been taught to read and write. The women have learned to make their own and their children's clothing, and some have become proficient in lace-making, cooking and nursing. Much attention has been given to Bible study and Miss Anderson expects to train many of them for Bible women.

Promotion of Widow Re-Marriage

The founding of a Hindu Widow's Home Association at Poona, in 1896, whose aim was to educate widows and make them useful members of society, was an important step in the solution of one of India's social problems. At about the same time a Widow Re-marriage Association was formed and only recently a men's club has been organized with a somewhat novel entrance condition—the condition of having married a widow. However, the matter is not so ludicrous as it might seem, and rises into a moral necessity when one considers that men must be found brave enough to endure the social ostracism which such a marriage involves, if this evil prejudice is to be broken up.

A Woman's Exchange in India

Near the great temple in Madura, India, a house has been secured and leased for three years for a woman's exchange. In addition to serving as the usual exchange, it will furnish a headquarters for women engaged in evangelistic work and provide a Christian welcome for Indian women. A room is reserved where meetings can be held.

Hook Worm and Churches

Medical work greatly asissts the evangelist in Siam. Dr. M. E. Barnes, a representative of the Rockefeller Foundation, has inaugurated an intensive hookworm campaign in the large province of Chiengmai. Because of his experience in similar campaigns in Java and Ceylon, and with the help of the three mission doctors, very great progress has been made in stamping out this stubborn disease. The churches have been used for a campaign of education and those outside the church, noticing that no disastrous effect followed the foreigner's treatment, have overcome their scruples against it. The "Continent" says:

"From February 7, 1917, to March 31, 1918, 14,429 people were examined, of whom approximately 75 percent, or 10,786, were found to be infected. Of this number 3,387 have been willing to submit to treatment, and upon re-examination of 2,214 cases only 395 have been found infected. Once more there is being brought to the attention of the people of Siam the desire to Christian America to relieve the diseases of the body as well as those of the soul, a desire which has been so well exemplified by the Chingmai Leper Asylum."

Bangkok Christian College

Many factors contribute to the increased enrollment of Bangkok Christian College, which at the beginning of the last school year enrolled 218 students and 324 at the beginning of the present year. One reason given is the splendid reputation of the school's English courses; another frequently heard is that the boys receive more considerate and careful attention than in the government schools. It is also true that the East is turning to America and American institutions as never before, and never has there been so great an opportunity for service.

A New Mission College in Singapore

The proposed Anglo-Chinese College at Singapore is the outgrowth of the school founded by Bishop W. F. Oldham of the Methodist Episcopal church. The success in securing subscriptions amounting to almost a million dollars in land and money can be attributed to boldness in planning large things. Half a million has been given outright by wealthy non-Christian Chinese.

Among the gifts for the new college is a tract of 100,000 square feet in the heart of Singapore, the rental from which will be turned over to the college as soon as the present leases expire.

The school, of which the college is the development, has an attendance of more than two thousand, greater than that of all the government schools combined, and it is thought that with ample accommodations the number of students will be doubled.

"Devil Driving" in Peking

The ceremonious driving out of demons is an annual occasion of considerable import in China. At such a ceremony, held recently at the Lama Temple in Peking, the streets were thronged with merchants and people in holiday attire, buying small wares. The temple courts were crowded, but a wide roadway had been left for the unhampered exit of the demons, who are supposed to travel only in straight lines. Inside the temple were rare embroideries, made especially for this occasion, and a "living Buddha" was dressed in cloth of gold. Priests lounged about, dressed in the most brilliant colors, and those engaged in the service wore masks. The actual ceremony of expelling the demon consisted of some mild dancing, so that on the whole it would appear that only the meekest sort of a demon would be impelled to leave as a result.

A Christian House in China

A letter from China gives the following description of a home where some fifty or sixty persons sit down to food at every meal. Nine brothers and their families all live with the old folk. All are Christians, and even the women take turns in leading daily family prayers with the whole company. They also run a school, have cleared the village of all idols, and in many ways have improved the neighborhood. The whole work of the farm, as well as spinning, weaving and the making of the clothing is well organized. The harmonious way they get on together is a good testimony to the love of God in their hearts. The old father was the first one converted. Last year he was so ill, so one day he asked the whole family to gather around him, and exhorted them to put God's glory before everything else and follow the Lord closely. After lying back on his bed he led them in prayer. When ended and they had opened their eyes, they found that his soul had gone to be with the Lord whom he loved so well.—National Bible Society of Scotland.

DICK'S MAGIC

By Clara Ingram Judson

Dick Janney lived with his father and mother and a dear grandmother in a green-shuttered white house. In front of the house were three big pine trees under which Dick played whenever he had time, and behind the house was a big garden where flowers and good vegetables grew every summer. Dick was a busy- hard-working boy who loved to make things and do things and to form plans that any one else would think of. Anything that he could have or saw or hammer or dig or cut or grow seemed interesting to him.

His grandmother liked to read to him, and Dick enjoyed it quite as much as she did. They read stories of heroes and brave deeds —always stories of men who did wonderful things with their hands and brains. One day Dick's cousin Elizabeth came to visit them, and as she said she loved reading, too, grandmother suggested that she read to them both.

"What would you like to have her read?" asked Dick politely.

"I'll get the book," replied Elizabeth eagerly and hurried off to her room. In a minute she was back with a well worn volume under her arm. "This is full of interesting stories, grandmother," she said, "and I know Dick will love them—just read any one you like."

With a little smile grandmother opened the book of fairy stories and read the tale of the genie who was hidden in a tiny box.

While the reading went on, Dick politely kept still, but when grandmother had finished and Elizabeth asked him if he liked the story, he exclaimed, "Like it! Like fairy tale stuff? Nobody but a girl would believe that story!"

Elizabeth looked so disappointed that grandmother laughed. Then she asked Dick, "You mean that if I gave you a tiny box and told you that it contained something big and wonderful, you would not believe me?"

"Why-y, what do you mean, grandmother?" asked the puzzled boy.

"I mean that boys should not say they do not believe when perhaps they really mean they do not understand," replied grandmother. She went over to her cupboard and selected a small box. From the box she took a small, round, black object that looked like a bead.

"Suppose I said to you, 'That small thing contains something as big as you are, something green and yellow and red, and as broad as your body.' What should you say to that?"

Dick looked the little bead over carefully. It did not seem to be a seed, it was so smooth and perfectly round and hard. "I should say you were joking," he replied, with a laugh.

"Very well," said his grandmother, "We'll see if I am. Take this to the back of the garden, bury it an inch in the ground, and in six weeks tell me whether I am right.

Dick and Elizabeth, who was quite as interested as he was, ran to the back of the garden and buried the little black bead just as grandmother had directed. While the six weeks were going by there was no other place in all that garden that they watched as they watched that particular spot.

"Let's go and look in the garden once more," suggested Dick on the last morning of the sixth week. "Of course that bead is not a seed. I knew that all along; and, anyway, if it was a seed it would have sprouted long before this. But let's look just once more and see if we can guess what grandmother meant."

When they came to the place where the bead was buried. Dick gave a cry of surprise; for there, sticking out of the ground, were two straight, stiff shoots of reddish green that had come up overnight.

"I know what it is!" exclaimed Elizabeth as soon as she saw it. "It's a canna—I mean it's going to be. That's what grandmother meant—a canna has red and yellow blooms and is as tall as you are and every bit as broad."

"Then I know what she meant, too," said Dick, as they started toward the house to find their grandmother. "She meant me to remember that everything is interesting if you understand it. Maybe if I try to figure out what each story stands for, I may learn to like your fairy stories. I think that's what she wanted."

BETTY'S NEW MUFF

By Janet T. Van Osdel

Betty had a beautiful new white muff. All the other little girls looked at it longingly. But each one of these little girls had other pretty things of her own, all except Jane Babcock, and poor little Janie had not even a pair of mittens to put on her red, rough little hands. Once, when Betty was looking across the aisle, Janie slipped one of these little rough hands into the muff as it lay on a chair next to her. It was for only a moment, but such a happy moment

The day was bitter cold, and after Sabbath school was over Janie hurried toward her home as fast as she could go. Her bare hands were drawn as far up into her short coat sleeves as she could get them, but they were almost frozen. As she ran along she was thinking of Betty's new muff. Then she heard some one running along behind her, and in another moment she saw dainty little Betty beside her.

"You haven't got any mittens on, Janie," said breathless Betty, who had a very kind heart hidden away under her pretty clothes. "And I saw you put your hands in my muff in Sabbath school, and I can go as far as your house and then run into our yard the back way, so you can take my muff as far as your gate."

"Won't your hands be cold?" asked Janie, her eyes round with the wonder of it all. But without waiting for an answer she slipped her numb fingers into its welcome warmth and buried her face in its beautiful fur.

"Not with fur inside my mittens," laughed Betty, with a happy skip. And she felt even much warmer than she had when carrying the muff down to Sabbath school.

The rest of the way home was all too short for Janie, and when she reached her gate she gave the muff a last loving pat as she handed it over to Betty.

"Oh, this won't be the last time, little goosie," said Betty, giving her a kiss. "We'll walk home every Sabbath just like this."

And they did.—Ex.

TRAINING THE BOYS AND GIRLS

To create interest in the Junior and Intermediate work Miss Nora Bracken, our National Superintendent, arranged a series of articles. The personal testimonies of last week are here followed with messages from pastors who have interested themselves in training the boys and girls and who have definite convictions on the subject. Other of our ministers have shown a similar interest, and it is earnestly hoped that still others will encourage the organization of Junior and Intermediate societies in their churches. The workers of our churches of tomorrow are among the boys and girls of today.

THE LADDER OF CHRISTIAN TRAINING

The grade work in the Public schools prepares the boys and girls for high school and college work. Junior and Intermediate Christian Endeavor is the grade work that prepares the youthful members for advanced training in the young peoples and senior societies and finally in the university of established church activities where graduate Endeavorers are so much needed. Certainly every church ought to have a Junior society, and in many churches an Intermediate society is also necessary to meet the needs of the youth at a certain age.

The Junior and Intermediate societies constitute the grade work and who would like to enter High school or College without grade work? Think on these things.

G. C. CARPENTER.

THE SHEPHERD AND THE LAMBS

Every pastor ought to be intensely interested in the children and young people of his parish, not only for the good effect it will have upon the older people of his congregation, but for the sake of the children and young people themselves. We know that impressions made in childhood are the most lasting. We also know that the mind and heart are more impressionable in childhood than in later life. Here then is a great field of opportunity for the pastor, which it seems that most pastors neglect. They try to shift the responsibility to the Sunday school teachers or others who may be caring for the children. These may indeed bear a large share of the responsibility and do a great service, but their interest cannot take the place of the personal interest of the pastor in the children and young people of the church. The pastor cannot afford to neglect his opportunities in this regard. If the proper course is pursued, it is vastly easier and more important to have one from entering into sin than to rescue him afterwards. It is also easier to develop Christian character without the handicaps of sinful tendencies and evil habits. It seems to me, therefore, that every pastor should be zealously interested in everything that is for the uplift of of childhood and youth.

I have found, in my experience, that the Junior C. E. and the Intermediate C. E. afford most fruitful fields of opportunity for a pastor. Children, like Jesus in his childhood, like "to be about their Father's business." They like to sing, to pray, to read the Bible, to lead meetings and to learn God's way and do his will. Their hearts are responsive to the appeals of the gospel. It is a sin to fail to give them the opportunities they need and to properly direct them.

I must be brief, in this article, but let me urge a hearty interest in all our churches in the November drive for new Junior and Intermediate C. E. societies. Wherever the arrangements can possibly be made, and a half dozen or more children, from six to twelve or fourteen years old, can be brought together, let them be organized into a Junior C. E. society, with some consecrated person of the laity as superintendent under the direction of the pastor. In the same manner let the children of the early and middle teens be organized into an Intermediate C. E. society. The importance of these organizations apart from the Y. P. S. C. E. is at once apparent to the thoughtful. There may be peculiar difficulties in some places to overcome, but they can usually be overcome in some way. The joy of seeing the children grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord and developing in Christian service will amply repay all the patience and labor extended. Jesus did not only say, "Feed my sheep," he also said, "Feed my lambs." I love the lambs of the flock that has been committed unto my care and I find great joy in feeding and caring for them.

A BLACK MAN WHO BELIEVED IN HIS WHITE NEIGHBORS

Our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren.—Nehemiah 5:5.

In a school for colored boys and girls in a mining town in West Virginia, a little black boy named Booker was reading in his school reader the stories of men whose lives had been a service to the world. There were many stories of boys who had risen from humble homes to positions of honor, for example Benjamin Franklin and Abraham Lincoln. Booker wondered whether he too might not some time become a great man.

He was certainly poor and humble enough in those days. Before he came to that school, he had not even had a surname. He was just caller "Booker." The first day at school the teacher asked him his name, "Booker," said the little boy. "Booker what?" said the teacher. "Booker Washington," was the answer. This was the name he had chosen for himself.

In talking with his schoolmates about the characters in the reader. Booker spoke to them about his dreams of being a great man some day. The talk ran something like this: "Benjamin Franklin was a poor boy," said Booker. "Why may not some of us boys become great by and by?" "Oh, no, Booker,' 'was the reply. "None of us black boys will ever be famous. Don't you see that all those men in the reader were white? If we were white, there might be a chance for us."

What the boys said was true; in those days the men about whom the school readers told always were white men. Booker's heart was heavy. There did not seem to be much hope that a black boy could ever be of very much use to the world. But a little later he heard about a negro named Frederick Douglass who had won respect and honor. This man had been a leader in the anti-slavery struggle before the Civil war. Booker was greatly encouraged by the story of his life and secretly kept on hoping that he, too, might some day do great deeds of service.

As he grew older, however, he found that it was too true that a black boy had little change to improve himself and his condition. The whole world seemed against him. He soon learned all that was taught in the little West Virginia school and he knew of no other school which was open to negroes. No one gave him any encouragement to seek for more education. Many people at that time believed that negroes ought not to be educated.

Yet Booker did find some white friends who lent him a helping hand. One was a woman, named Mrs. Ruffner, for whom he worked as a household servant. Mrs. Ruffner had the reputation of being "strict." That is, she wanted her floors swept clean, under the tables and bureaus as well as in the middle of the room. Booker was a thorough worker, and Mrs. Ruffner liked him and encouraged him.

While he was with Mrs. Ruffner, he heard about Hampton Institute. This was a school for negro and Indian boys at Hampton, Virginia. It gave an all-around education—not only in books but trades, such as carpentry, printing, and farming for boys, and household work and sewing for girls. Booker began to save his money to go to this school, which was several hundred miles away. At last, when he thought he had enough money, he set out on the journey. He traveled over the mountains in a stage-coach, and the first night they stopped at a little mountain town. Booker went to the hotel with the other passengers, but could not get a room. The poor boy had not even yet realized what it meant to be black. There was no place in that town for a negro to sleep, and all that night Booker walked about outdoors to keep warm. But the next day he kept on his journey, and at last, after many days of traveling reached Hampton. Here he found good friends, among them the head of the school, the great General Armstrong. He was the best friend Booker ever had. From him he learned to trust in God and give himself, like Jesus, in service to his fellow men. The chief word at Hampton was service.

When Booker graduated from Hampton his great ambition was to help his own people, of the South. He remembered the little the negroes of the South. He remembered the little boy who went to school in West Virginia, whose hopes and ambitions were discouraged because he was black. He knew there were thousands of black boys and girls who could make something of themselves in the world, if only some one would give them the chance. Now it happened that the state of Alabama had just appropriated money for an industrial school for negroes at Tuskegee. Soon after graduating from Hampton, Booker Washington was appointed as the principal of that school. He made it one of the most famous schools in the world. When he went to Tuskegee, there were no students, no buildings—in fact, nothing at all. The first classes were held in an old shanty which had been a henhouse. Today, there are many and beautiful buildings worth millions of dollars, and more than two thousand students every year. Booker Washington became one of the most famous men in the world. He was even introduced to Queen Victoria of England, as the man who founded the Tuskegee school for negroes. The dreams of that little black boy in West Virginia did come true in a wonderful way. Even though his skin was black, he rose to a place of very high honor in America and in the world, because he had given to America and the world a life of very high service.

The most remarkable fact about Booker Washintgon, however, is not that he succeeded in spite of so many obstacles, but that in his success he felt no hatred against the white people, who had despised him because of his black skin and had tried to keep him from getting an education. Instead of hating all white people in return, he believed that usually they did not mean to be unjust or unkind, but that they simply did not understand negroes. He believed in his white neighbors. He believed he could win their good will. This was what he taught his students at Tuskegee. "I learned from General Armstrong," he often said, "never to let any man degrade me by making me hate him." Many educated negroes spent their lives denouncing the wrongs which the race was suffering. They were very bitter and revengeful, and considering how negroes have generally been treated, we should not blame them too severely.

Of course Booker Washington protested very often against acts of injustice against his people. For example, he was to make a speech in a certain town in the south one evening. Soon after he reached the town, he entered a large office building and looked around for the elevator on the regular elevator was the sign "For white passengers only." But there was another elevator, on which was the sign "For negroes and freight," as though negroes were not human beings, but just things. The meeting in the evening was attended by many white people, as well as by negroes. In the course of his speech Mr. Washington spoke of that elevator and of the sign, "For negroes and freight," and he said, "Friends, that's mighty discouraging to the negro." All the people, white and black, clapped their hands, and many of the white men jumped to their feet and shouted, "You're right." Let us hope that the sign was taken down, and that as soon as possible decent elevators were provided in that town, for negroes as well as for white people.

But Booker Washington felt that the best cure for the prejudice against his race was not to protest against it, certainly not in an angry and spiteful way. The most important thing, as he thought, was that the negroes themselves should make themselves worthy of the respect and love of their white neighbors. Sooner or later he felt sure that this would win their hearts. So in his school at Tuskegee he taught his students first of all to be clean and to keep their rooms and their homes tidy and in order. He himself had learned that lesson so well, when he worked for Mrs. Ruffner, that, as he expressed it, "I never see a button off a persons' clothes or a grease spot on his coat, that I do not want to call his attention to it. I never pass a fence with a loose paling, wtihout wanting to stop and fasten it on."

Then he taught his students to be absolutely honest and trustworthy, and best of all, to be useful, to make service the guiding spirit of their lives, wherever they might be; to do their work as carpenters or farmers or housekeepers so thoroughly and so skilfully that their white neighbors would come to depend on them. That is why he made Tuskegee an industrial school, to teach all kinds of trades. Like Mr. Higginbottom and Mr. Churchill, in India, he taught these colored boys and girls to be proud of honest work, no matter how humble. Many of them had despised and hated work. "Only slaves work with their hands," they had thought. So, when the school was started, all the students wanted to study Latin and Greek; they did not like the idea of going to school to learn bricklaying, or dressmaking, or the principles of farming. But Booker Washington showed them that free men work, too, and that the only work that is dishonorable is work that is carelessly or dishonestly performed; but that any man should be proud of useful, honest, and skillful work.

The students at Tuskegee took these lesosns to heart. And the result was that Booker Washington's faith was proved. Many white people of the South, as well as of the North, became his friends. Some of his most loyal helpers were Southern white men. When he died, in November, 1915, hundreds of white people came to Tuskegee from far and near, to do honor to their dead friend; his influence had been felt all over the world. Never again will there be quite so much hatred between white men and black men as there was before he lived; and he has helped us to believe that the time is sure to come when all such foolish prejudices will vanish forever.—From Stories of Brotherhood, by Harold B. Hunting. Published by the Missionary Education Movement of the U. S. and Canada.

HOME MISSION NOTES G. C. C.

"Matron and Nurse"

The schools have not opened at Lost Creek and Krypton since they were closed on account of the epidemic, but we are hoping that they may be able to resume work soon. Sister Drushal writes that a matron and nurse will be very necessary We have called loud and long for a matron. Never before in the fourteen years have we called in vain. Pastors, can you, will you try at least, to help to find the needed matron and nurse? Will every reader try to discover those who can and will give themselves to this work? We know that nurses have been at a premium, but here is a pressing need and ought to be supplied.

"Going for Water"

Brother Cook writes: "They are drilling now, are down about 35 feet. It was about 27 feet to the rock. We do not know how much farther we will have to go before we find water. We hope not far, BUT WE ARE GOING FOR WATER."

The Epidemic

Brother Drushal suffered an attack of the influenza, but is about recovered. The other workers have escaped thus far. Brother Cook writes that the "flu" is bad in that section and that he is busy helping people as much as he can, by writing words of comfort, going as near to their homes as is safe, and talking with them, by doing chores for some families, where all are sick, by keeping a sormon and announcements on the bulletin board up town, etc., etc.

Miss Hillegas Ill

Miss Lottie Hillegas who left Krypton on the closing of the school several weeks ago and went to Winona is ill at the latter place with a mild case of influenza. She likely contracted the disease at Winona. Will every reader join us in praying that she may recover quickly and be able to resume her duties when school will reopen, which will not be for several weeks?

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

The Devil is to Pay

"The devil is to pay," is an expression many of us have heard. It is an expression usually made by the agencies of Satan, who hear the approaching sound of danger, and know from past experiences that Satan will demand his pay. However, the expression may convey another meaning, namely, the debt that he himself will owe. But the perplexing problem, is how is he going to do it. Will his suffering in hell pay the debt? Perhaps some of us question it very much. However, if hell is half that bad we had better plan staying out.

The old devil has had the main line here for six weeks, and it looks now like he will hold it for six weeks longer. Believe me, he is not leaving a stone unturned, and is exercising every force and influence possible. He has coupled together ignorance and indifference, unsanitary conditions and the "flu," and with this conglomeration people can fully escape.

A government doctor from Indiana was here a few days, and in conversation with him he said to me, "the only absolute way to make things sanitary in many of the mountain homes would be to burn everything they had in the form of rags, household plunder and house, and take a new start. He said he had no idea that there were so many people living in these mountains in the condition in which he found them. In going up the creeks he said he found in about every home the sick, dead, or dying. He told me of one home near here where he went, where he found the father outside the gate carrying a young baby in his arms. Trying to follow the father, was a little babe scarcely a year and a half old who was so sick and weak that it could scarcely walk. In the house of one room, he found two small children in one bed and in another two a little larger who were almost dead with this dreadful thing known as the "flu." He said after being in there some little time and the objects became more distinct he could see the form of a person lying back in the corner who proved to be that of the mother lying cold in death. No one to say a comforting word, no one to care for the dead or the dying. And that can be said of hundreds of homes.

In another home not far from here the entire family was down with the flu and no one to go in and care for them. It is said for three or four days they were without water and food save the water that poured in through the roof when it rained. It is said the mother the day before she died drank the only water she had had for three days out of her hands, from the stream that was pouring down upon the bed. This story like many others that I might rehearse, comes to me from the most reliable people in Krypton.

The doctor of our town told me the other day, one reason for so many deaths through the mountains was, "that the people generally speaking, did not believe in the doctor of today. They believe in roots, herbs and teas, old women's sayings and a lot of twisted theology. He said a great many of them would not send for a doctor until they were about ready to pass over, then if the person died they charged the doctors with it. He said, too, in the most of the places where he went, he would go in, open the doors, raise the window if there was one in the house, give them some fresh air, a lot of good advice and some medicine, and he said he would not get out of sight until they would have every door and window closed, and a big fire built in the grate. And in many cases, when he returned he would find the medicine untouched, while they were experimenting on every remedy they could hear about in the community.

Is it awful? No, it is worse than that. France is not the only battlefield of recent date. Satan has chosen other places and plans for the destruction of the living. His toll here is appalling. The mountain sides are dotted with many fresh graves. Many, many because of conditions referred to above. Brethren, I am just wandering if it might be possible, that in the day of judgment that the blood of many of these might cry out against us. Why have we waited so long? Why are we so slow? Will this Christmas season find many of us resolving to do what we have never done before? Pray for us, the battle is still on, at least 25 cases in Krypton, and perhaps twice that many that can just walk around.

JAS. S. COOK.

DUTCHTOWN, INDIANA

It will soon be a year since Brother C. C. Grisso brought the message of God to this part of God's church, and while this is one of the rural churches that has had its share of trouble, it remains a church, trying to do things for the Master. There is no place on earth that has a finer lot of people than Dutchotwn, and the church is in number one condition. We surely are glad to report that Brother Beachler was with us in the last weeks of August, just before our General conference. Surely Brother Beachler, is an all around man. He's a money getter, and a soul winner, and he is also a fish getter. We would be glad if his money job was finished, so we could have had him to hold our revival. But we are going to say this for Brother Beachler, we expect him to come to Dutchtown next year. We wish some of our state evangelists would come to Dutchtown. We are not selfish. Dutchtown has the spirit to make visitors welcome. We did not do great things, but what has been done, is done well. A revival is to be held as soon as we can get an evangelist. Some one wanting a job for December can write to Howard Mŭzy or Homer Anderson, Warsaw, Indiana.

Remember, the pastor will be on the job and in the harness to help. We want to go over the top for Jesus. We went over the top and over the top for Permanent Endowment, and we are going over the top in some more goals before long. The Goal Nine Drive is on 75 percent is the top, but Dutchtown is going over the top. This is not all. We made some of you big churches step some in Permanent Endowment, and we are going to make you step some more in the next two years, if the "flu" don't get us. Keep your eye on Dutchtown, for we are coming with a renewed church.

Last year Dutchtown was not on the church roll. But now she is, with a membership of 50 and a Sunday school with 5 classes and three organized classes. A church attendance of 80 percent of membership and a Sunday school that went from seventeen to seventy-five, with a fifty-four average. And a prayer meeting that has doubled its attendance. "If you get there before we do; look out for us. We are coming too." May the blessings of God be bestowed upon his church.

HOMER ANDERSON.

TRAVEL NOTES

The "flu" ban was lifted in Virginia about two weeks before in West Virginia. While in Buena Vista visiting with our people, friends and nursing "flu" patients—The writer was called by the Mountain View church to come and hold a revival meeting, and on the night of the 10th of November, with Brother John Patterson, the pastor, and his faithful band of live workers we began the fight which lasted a week. The God of all grace and all power stretched out his strong arm against sin and the wicked one, and called from heaven to souls to come to the blessed Savior for salvation through his atoning blood. Fourteen harkened to the heaven born call and boldly confessed faith in the Christ and his church. The meeting was in full blast when we had to close to keep our word and appointment in West Virginia.

About fourteen years ago the writer received Brother John Patterson into the church—to be with him in a campaign and to mark his growth in grace in the favor of God and man was a pleasure not soon to be forgotten. May the God of all grace continue to bless his ministry.

The Mountain View church is about five miles north of Roanoke City, facing the N. & W. Railroad and is built by the side of a splendid macadamized road which runs down through the great valley. The building is nice and the location ideal.

We are proud of the people received during the meeting. They are the kind which will help to beautify the church of the living God. I was so much delighted to see Brother Charles Nininger come into our church. He is the son of Brother Christ Nininger who was an Elder in our church and who baptized the writer and laid hands upon his head praying God to make him a soul winner.

My home was with Brother Ed and Sister M. O. Nininger. Brother and Sister Nininger are like father and mother to the writer and his wife. When we were struggling in school, trying to prepare ourselves a little for the work of God they got back of us in a financial way—their kindness in the past was a vouchsafe of a royal welcome in their nice country home. The week spent with them and other dear ones in the faith was all too short. I like to think of that heavenly land where the faithful meet to engage in an unbroken worship for all eternity. May the Christ who conquered in life and in death keep all his at Mountain View and everywhere.

I am now in West Virginia. Will be in these parts until about the middle of December. Then to our Ashland home where we will make ready, if God permits, to take our leave for sunny California. We have been 1919. Why do it a number have asked? We up the work in Los Angeles, California. It is Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia. These dates would have kept us busy until August, cel his dates with the churches in Indiana, with deep regret that the writer must cancalled by the First Brethren church to take believe that the Spirit of God is leading and all these years we have tried to let him station us in our work and we should still let him lead us. May God send to each church the needed help, both pastors and evangelists. For nearly five years we have been working in the evangelistic field, we have well covred the field in the Brethren church, and visited some of the churches twice, of course we visited a number of churches, assisting them in revivals when we worked as pastor in Roanoke and Pittsburgh.

It has been a great pleasure to work with the many pastors in our church. We have had good times together and a great place will be in my heart for them and the good people, and when we are through in the West the Father may send us over the field again, we leave it all with him. We will write about this work when we are through. And when we are in the work as pastor we promise to give the readers of the evangelist some of our humble thoughts.

Our Editors, every one of them, have been good to your servant in giving him space and helping him in his work. For their kindness I thank them, they have a hard place to fill, one of the hardest in the church, and up until this time I am glad that I can say truthfully I have never tried to make it hard for them in any way, neither shall I. Grace, mercy and truth be with all his struggling children. Your servant,

N. W. JENNINGE.

P. S.—My mail will reach me at Oak Hill, West Virginia, until December 12, then Ashland, Ohio.

BUENA VISTA, VIRGINIA

It has been some time since we have said anything about our work in Buena Vista, Virginia. Let me say that we have had some fiery trials. Foes without and within. Some of our number moved to other places for better wages, some proved unfaithful, and some of our good workers, death claimed. After the epidemic made its rage on both old and young, and scarcely had we committed to the grave the last one of its victims until the black storm cloud of the "flu" was on with its death dealing power. Death and mourning on every hand, and our daily prayer that was offered with all the passion of my soul was, Oh God! stand between us and death. But now praise God, for he heard our prayer, and death was not permitted to enter our home.

For five weeks our church was closed. We were made glad to see the dear brethren and sisters and children return to their church. We have now a long hard pull to make. To say the most our progress will be slow as our membership is composed of the laboring class and is not able to support a pastor, so we can only give part of our time to the work, and we must resort to other labor for a living. We wish to say something here of the evangelistic meetings, conducted in this city by the Rev. Starke, of New York. Brother Starke was fearless and a powerful speaker and did much good. There were a number of conversions, eleven of which came to our church.

HARRISONBURG—BETHLEHEM

Our work at Bethlehem is progressing nicely. On the first Sunday in October the children of the Sunday school rendered a fine program for Rally Day, which was a complete success. At one of our regular preaching services Brother Cline, a very promising young man, gave his heart to God and was received into the church, which means a very substantial gain.

In August Brother McInturff, of Indiana, conducted a short revival for us at Bethlehem. Because of illness we were not able to be there. Brother McInturff did some good preaching, and the interest was growing when he was taken seriously sick for a few days which greatly interrupted the meeting. We are hoping and praying for a revival next summer, and be sure we want Brother MacInturff to conduct it.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the care of Brother Lee Logan and Timothy D. Swartz. The S. S. C. E. and Junior society are active and in a splendid working condition. The real need of this church is a resident pastor. We believe there is a great future for Bethlehem. Bethlehem is loved by the members and neighborhood, as was indicated by the language of Brother Spitser's little daughter, when she said, "Mamma, when I get big, I want to play the organ at Bethlehem.

Brethren, we desire your prayers.

G. W. CHAMBERS.

WISCONSIN NOTES

Now that the great war is ended we are in hopes that we can soon make the Macedonian call for help us to a house to worship Almighty God, as contained in our incorporation resolutions. On September 29 we baptized three young ladies and we are holding Bible study and prayer meeting each week, only have discontinued a few weeks now on account of the "flu."

We believe there is a bright future for the First Brethren church in Eau Claire, Wisconsin.

I wonder how many would be willing to assist us in this much needed cause.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

Because of Elder H. R. Holsinger's close associations with the work at Berlin I felt when I got there that I was on historic ground. While at Berlin I went out to see the Holsinger monument which I had not seen before. I also went to the resting place of the late Brother J. H. Knepper and his good wife, which is in the same cemetery.

I did not feel strange at Berlin because during my pastorate at Myersdale I became acquainted with many of the Berlin people. This work represents a circuit comprising three points—Berlin, Maple Grove, and Downey. Brother I. B. Trout is the pastor, having assumed charge of the work last July. And notwithstanding the "flu" epidemic has hindered him greatly in doing many of the things a pastor desires to do in the first few months he is in a new pastorate, still Brother Trout has made fine progress and he has a splendid hold on his work. I predict that he will have a very successful pastorate in this field. Brother Trout has already won the full confidence of his own people and of the people of the community, and his people stand ready to respond to his leadership. I was very glad for the opportunity to make a fuller acquaintance with him and his family which came to me through my canvass in his congregations.

As for the results of the canvass in this circuit, I would say that perhaps on the surface they may seem somewhat disappointing. But a knowledge of the details in the case makes considerable difference. During my entire stay among these three churches we had extremely bad weather, consequently the attendance was poor at practically all of our services. Moreover, the "flu" was still a disturbing factor especially in the country churches. But in the Berlin church the thing that worked the most serious hardship on the canvass was the fact that just previous to my coming this congregation obligated itself for a very substantial sum, for a parsonage property. The congregation considered that it was placed in a situation with reference to a very desirable property where it had to act and act quickly; hence the purchase was made. And while this action and this new obligation changed things materially in my work, yet it was a splendid purchase and what may have been loss for me and my work, was, I am very sure, gain for Brother Trout and the Berlin congregation. And so, whereas Berlin under normal conditions would have gone from $2,000 to $2,500 for endowment, she went $1,200. I do not feel any inclination at all to criticize for I know the circumstances involved. But I am still hoping that at some future day when things have swung back to the normal for Berlin she will do more for the College.

The Maple Grove church is not strong numerically. This place will go $100. Downey also has a small membership. The result here was approaching $200 when I left. It ought to go $200 or better and I am hoping that Brother Trout will bring it to that as he closes with folks whom I could not see when I was there. I shall remember Brother A. J. Miller and daughter at Downey as particular friends of the College. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Very few people in these two churches are reading the Evangelist. And I have already said repeatedly that this condition always hinders my work. I am not going to praise these two churches for what they did for endowment. There are individuals in each church whom I can praise, but as congregations I cannot praise them. There were too many folks in these fields, with financial ability, but they refused to hit hard. I am meeting folks like that quite frequently. But when the campaign is over and the victory is won such folks will not be able to enter fully into the rejoicing because they did not do their best.

While at Berlin my headquarters was in the home of Brother Wm. Menges and his son H. W. Menges. At Maple Grove Brother P. R. Stahle took me in and took the best of care of me. At Maple Grove Brother Jacob Kimmel and his good wife were father and mother to me. And to these good folks, and to all of the folks in this circuit I am indebted for the splendid typical Somerset county hospitality which they showed me in their homes.

Thus the mercury gradually rises and gradually we are moving toward the completion of the canvass in Pennsylvania. By Christmas time the Pennsylvania churches will be finished with a few exceptions. And when the grand total is figured up for Pennsylvania it will be a great record.

Our Dead

HOUSE—Lester House was born November 7th, 1893, and departed this life September 17th, 1918. He was a member of the Gratis Brethren church. C. E. B.

HENDRICKSON—Charles Seymore Hendrickson was born July 29th, 1861, and departed this life October 21st, 1918. He was a member of the Brethren church of Gratis, Ohio. C. E. B.

SNIDER—Martha Jane Snyder was born April 18th, 1860 and departed this life October, 1918. She united with the church of the Brethren March 10th, 1888, and remained a faithful member until the end. She was a member of the West Alexandria congregation, and they have lost one of the faithful members. The services were conducted by C. E. Beakley, pastor of Gratis, Ohio Brethren church.

FLORA—Ralph Noah Flora, youngest son of Brother and Sister Marit Flora, of the Center Chapel church, Indiana, died at Camp Sheridan, Alabama, October 22nd, 1918. Death resulted from pneumonia, following an attack of influenza. Ralph was born September 23, 1893, being 25 years and 29 days of age. He united with the Brethren church when 14 years of age and remained true to his faith until death.

His captain said of him: "Private Ralph Flora was an excellent soldier who was universally liked by his officers and fellow soldiers, and his death is a source of genuine sorrow to all of us."

Funeral services were conducted at the home of his parents, by Elder L. W. Ditch, assisted by Elder Willis Ronk, pastor at Roann.

SWIHART—Isaiah Swihart quickly passed to his reward October 31, 1918 at his home in Athens, Indiana, at the age of 71 years, 8 months and 19 days. He was united in marriage to Mary E. Burns on September 17, 1873. To this union were born 10 children, 3 sons and 7 daughters, all of whom survive him, with 19 grandchildren, one brother and two sisters. In early life he united with the German Baptist church. About 26 years ago he with his wife united with the Brethren church, in which faith he lived until death. Funeral services by the undersigned.

D. A. HOPKINS.

HESSON—Emma J. Hesson, wife of John Hesson, died at her home, Idlewood, Maryland, October 15, 1918, at the age of 68 years, 7 months and 21 days. She has been a devoted member of the Brethren church for about 12 years. She had been in poor health for over two years. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved husband. Services by will mean more than ever to thoughtful people, but it will not be a season for extravagance; only worth-while Christmas presents will be given.

J. P. Garver, E. M. Riddle.

CHRISTMAS THIS YEAR

For nearly one hundred years The Youth's Companion has been the popular Christmas present. It always has been the best present for so little money, because the paper means so much to the family life and continues to come every week throughout the year.

In these serious times The Youth's Companion is worth more than ever. It costs just the same—$2.00 for 52 issues. It's the best $2.00 that can be invested in a family, and when giving The Companion you give only the best.

Don't miss Grace Richmond's great serial, Anne Exeter, 10 chapters, beginning December 12.

The following special offer is made to new subscribers:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues of 1919.
2. All the remaining weekly issues of 1918.
3. The Companion Home Calendar for 1919.

All the above for only $2.00, or you may include

4. McCall's Magazine—12 fashion numbers.

All for only $2.50. The two magazines may be sent to separate addresses if desired.

Some Problems We Ought to Solve

I trust that it may not be considered as an abuse of a prerogative to use this page for the present discussion. I am writing wholly from my own observation and view-point. What I may here stress may seem less important in the minds of others than some things omitted from this discussion. I hope I may incite others to write as freely as I do. It would be mutually helpful and certainly it would further the interests of the church. I am not writing for controversy either.

Making the Evangelist

I wish first of all to say that I have no criticism to offer of the Evangelist as it is nor of the Editor and those responsible for its makeup. When I have said this I wish to add immediately that the Evangelist is not what it ought to be as our Church Paper, as our Editor himself has often stated. But it is as good as the church makes it. I have read it continuously since a member of the church. I have known every Editor since 1886. Periodically our people,—the churches and their representatives at Conference,—grow dissatisfied with the incumbent of the Editorial Sanctum and desire a change in the person of the Editor. It ought certainly by this time be clear to all that a change in the mere personnel of the editorial staff does not give the result sought for. No one man can make a church paper what it ought to be. Nor can an Editor and three Associates do so. And since we are now at the point of a new editorial management assuming control may I not write freely without giving any offence? I retire as an Associate Editor with this contribution. For any criticism I am about to offer here I assume my full share of responsibility.

The Editorials. The Evangelist should have the strongest possible editorial contributions. I have frequently asked myself the question, What should be the nature of an Editorial? I have concluded that it ought to be the leading contribution of the paper. Or to put it in other words, it should be thought-directing and result in action by the whole church. The editorial should reflect the spirit and genius of the brotherhood. It should lead in every movement of the church. It should anticipate and thereby prepare the way for all forward activities of the church. It should be unifying and concentrating in spirit. It should deepen and vitalize the spirituality of the church. It should ring thoroughly true to the teachings of the New Testament as understood and practiced by the Brethren church. Positively, it should be strong on the essential and fundamental teachings of the gospel, and negatively, it should oppose with an uncompromising spirit of conviction and force every error of the day. It should avoid all and any tinge of controversy and all subjects of differences of opinion.

I have only room for a word more on the matter of the editorial and I have not the slightest desire to embarrass by this suggestion the incoming Editor. It certainly is the Editor's right and business to see to it that the editorials measure up to his standard, whether he writes all of them or not. The suggestion here made I believe might help strengthen this part of the Evangelist. It is, that the strongest men of the denomination be asked to contribute material for this page. Such contribution to be sure should be on the theme suggested and in harmony with the wishes of the Editor.

Leading Contributions.—Here indeed is where the Evangelist falls short of meeting the large demands of the church. The readers of the paper do not like the "Scissors." The merit of the articles reprinted does not seem to enter into the consideration. What is wanted is an original contribution from some brother or sister with his or her name attached.

Now to be perfectly frank unless about one hundred fellows awaken and do their duty Brother Baer can not make the paper by any other means than the use of a sharp and big pair of scissors. The fault lies in the church and not in the Editor. Men will promise to write but they seldom do. They promise to write if the paper is supplied them. They receive the paper and forget to write. I mean they take the Evangelist as pay for a promised contribution but they forget to write. This ought not to be so. I have written as much as any one in the church and I have never received a penny for a single contribution. I believe we ought to cheerfully and freely contribute. We ought to write so much that the Editor could make a wise choice of materials and reject the rest. And we ought to receive back our rejected copy with thanks to the Editor that he knew better than we what all the church ought to have through the columns of the Evangelist. From the days of Brother Holsinger until now I have not once questioned the wisdom of the Editor in charge about any contribution of mine being rejected. Nor will I begin now. Come, Brethren and Sisters, let us up and awake to our opportunity! Let us rally around Brother Baer and assist him with all our power. It would only take two or three contributions from each one of a hundred capable writers during a year to bring this part of the Evangelist to a high level of worth and power in the life of the church. Will we do it?

Church News.—My interviews with many persons have shown me that the first page read in the Evangelist is page 8 where the review of the thought and work of the church is given by the Editor. After this readers turn to the pages following to find the "News from the Field." The Editor's review on page 8 is made up from the "News from the Field" which reach the office. Why can there not be a great revival of "News from the Field?" A post card can carry an item of interest to the whole Brotherhood. Send it on to the Editor. There certainly ought to be enough of vital interest going on in the whole church to make inspiring "News" worth reporting at least once per month. How is the battle going in the front line trenches? Tell us.

MAKING THE EVANGELIST is the JOB of the WHOLE CHURCH. The church,—lay members and ministers, has no right to ask Brother Baer to give up a good pastorate among a people who are slow to spare him and to become the Editor of the Evangelist unless, UNLESS,—get that word,—we mean to help him succeed. He can if we help him. HE can not, and no OTHER MAN can succeed if we do not do more than we have in the past to make the Evangelist.

Making the Evangelist what the church wants it to be is no small task. I neither could edit it nor would I undertake to do so. There are men who can. I urge that those who like myself can not be the Editor rally to the support of the man we charge with this responsibility and that we assume our share of the task. The writer stands ready to pledge himself to join all others to whom these words may come to enthusiastically and consistently and in brotherly love support Brother Baer as he takes up his duties January 1919.

From the Editor's View-Point

The Expression of the Soul

One of the common, yet elusive, terms in use by mankind to give expression to being that is different from the common existence of either mind or matter is the word soul. We will not attempt to give anything more than the most common definition, the immortal spirit, here; we will leave the deeper defining to psychologists and metaphysicians. But as the term is commonly understood, though not easily defined, it is but natural to consider the manner in which the soul finds expression.

We are told that the soul of the poet finds expression in his poetry. We may not always understand just what he is trying to express, but of course that is because we have not the soul of a poet; and the soul of a musician finds expression in his music, whether it be expressed upon the crude bamboo musical instruments of the South Sea Islanders or upon a Cremona violin or a Steinway grand piano, it is all one and the same thing—the expression of the soul of the musician. The reason it is so much easier to comprehend or to appreciate much of the popular "ragtime" of the day than it is to enjoy the masterpieces and the classics of past and present generations may possibly be because most of us are "rag time souls" and thus fail to enter into the spirit of the music of the masters that gives expression to lofty souls.

But the latest claim in regard to the expression of the soul has been made by a famous designer of "swagger" costumes for women who says, "Dress is the expression of the soul." Now had this most famous designer said, "Dress is AN expression of the soul," we hight have passed the statement by without notice, but when it is claimed that it is THE expression we feel that it is only proper to look into the correctness of the statement.

If dress is the expression of the soul then John the Baptist must have been a very simple soul indeed, at least he was a rugged soul, for his garb was of the simplest and most rugged character. It is not anywhere written that Jesus sought in any manner to give expression to his soul through his clothing, but he did teach the folly of giving much thought to these earthly garments. The great Tolstoy of Russia who had every opportunity to hold himself aloof from the "common herd" and to satisfy himself on the fatness of the land was too great a soul to thus content himself while his fellow men were suffering around him by the millions, and though he is regarded as one of the greatest souls produced in Europe in a hundred years the peasant's garb that he was content to wear gave little expression to that greatness.

While loftiness of soul and true refinement may be indicated by neatness and simplicity in attire we are slow to admit that one's garb is a true index to one's soul as we would not like to think that the souls of men and the sours of women of the last generation have been as queer as the old photographs in any family album would indicate by the clothes they wore.

A Forlorn Hope

We presume Maximilian Harden but expressed the common hope of the leaders in the Roman Catholic church when he said, "Eventually the secular power of the papacy will be established in Rome." We presume there are millions of members of the Roman church that would rejoice to see that day, but if they are bolstering up their waning faith by any such hopes we fear they will be sadly disappointed, and no one should now realize this more than Maximilian Harden himself, unless he is too blinded by prejudice to read and interpret facts and history.

There are times when one's failing courage may be bolstered up by repeating over and over again the words, "I am not afraid, I am not afraid," until one finally comes to believe that he is not afraid. And thus the real followers of Romanism seem to have been bolstering up their faith by repeating over and over, "The Pope shall rule the world from Rome, the Pope shall rule the world from Rome," but this is one of the instances where saying so will not make a thing so, and the declaration of all the Maximilian Hardens in the whole world will not bring it to pass.

As the events of the centuries reveal the real facts in the case Rome has been losing her temporal power constantly through all these years, and as the power of the Pope has always been dependent very largely upon the ignorance of his subjects who have submitted to his rule because they have known nothing better, the constant spreading of knowledge in the world is removing that tie, and, as one country after another has thrown off the Roman yoke in the past, so we may expect them to continue to do until not one country remains that will even entertain a thought of Roman rule over secular matters to say nothing about planning to help such rule to come to pass. But right here a great task is set before the Protestant churches of the world. As the people renounce the temporal rule of the Pope many of them also renounce his spiritual rule as well, and unless the Protestant churches are prepared to guide them into the way of spiritual liberty without losing faith in God and Christ they are very likely to fall into the ways of skepticism and unbelief. While we realize that the hope of the secular rule of the Roman church is a forlorn hope we should not neglect the opportunity that is ever open to the Protestant Christianity to lead these people who have been deceived so many centuries into the way of the truth and the life.

The Might of Right

We presume that never again will a nation that desires to be called civilized act upon the principle that might makes right. No longer do men indorse the saying: "He may take who has the power, and he may keep who can." We take it that different principles shall rule the lives of men in the years to come than have been only too prevalent through the years that have but recently passed. But while we are rejoicing that it has been satisfactorily and we trust once for all been proven that might has never made right and that in no case can it ever do so, we should not forget that there is another principle equally as strong and a great deal more wholesome. The principle of right makes might and the man whose life is governed by this principle is amazed at the strength that is his. But all this strength is needed for the various activities of life present altogether too many opportunities for one to go wrong unless there is some wholesome principle of life acting as a restraint upon him. We know that a great many people chafe under restraint and we are being taught more and more that self-expression is the great underlying law of all growth of the human soul, but observation leads us to believe that the law of self-restraint is equally as impoortant. But one of the easiest, yet at the same time one of the surest means to keep one in the right path is to follow the admonition of David Lloyd George who said, "We will do no wrong if we abandon no right." This then is the might of right—it keeps one from wrong.

The Minister's Duties and Opportunities

BY MILES J. SNYDER

The duties and opportunities of the minister may be roughly grouped and briefly treated under two heads, namely, the preacher as pastor and the preacher as teacher. Perhaps it is not far wrong to say that both are equally important. But the tendency in these days, and therein lies a great danger, is to minimize the pastor's office and to extol the preacher's. We hear much about the minister having so large a duty to the public that he cannot give his time to individuals. We are told that so much is exacted by the modern congregation that the preacher must give all his time to sermon preparation. Frequently we hear ministers speak lightly of pastoral calls. Some seem to have the feeling that calling upon the laity of the church is beneath the dignity of men of such highly trained intellect as theirs. But, while peculiar situations need to be reckoned with accordingly, the pastoral side of the minister's vocation remains highly important.

Of course, it is easy to understand its great importance when one thinks of the opportunities pastoral work offers. First, there is contact with child life, and the children of today are the church of tomorrow. Children are not reached by preaching, and no preaching in after years will ever win such allegiance as the friendly comradeship and leadership of their earlier years.

Then there is the opportunity of opening the door for youth. Young people from the age of fourteen to twenty are not generally interested even in good sermons, but they are remarkably responsive to personality and friendship. It may be seriously questioned whether all the public addresses a preacher makes, all the committees he attends, and all the articles he writes, have the large and abiding influence upon society that the devoted and intimate attention given to fifty or one hundred young people would have. What greater work can a minister do than guide young people into the paths of true Christian manhood and womanhood, usefulness and success?

And again, while much is said about the persuasion of the pulpit, the statement is doubtless true that most of the accessions to the church have come from personal conversations through pastoral calls. Looking back over my own ministry, the gains that stand out distinctly and the results that can be tabulated have come much more from personal contact than from preaching. Of course, this may be a reflection on the character of my preaching, but it is true nevertheless. In fact, in my present pastorate, in spite of three special evangelistic campaigns conducted in as many years by successful evangelists, seventy-five percent of the converts were the direct result of pastoral work rather than the preached word. Preaching is the force for Christian nurture, but for winning men and transforming them there is nothing like the personal persuasion of one who through intimate acquaintance they have come to trust and admire.

And even the visiting of women in the afternoons, the comforting of the sick and sorrowing and heavy laden, and the informal chat in the home, are by no means to be despised. The reason so many ministers speak lightly of these is because they have no genius for friendship. Selfishness has taken the place of gentleness and sympathy and faith. The preaching that grows out of friendship for the flock is preaching that will be far-reaching in its influence.

Now, what I have said about the duties and opportunities of the preacher as pastor will in no wise conflict with what I shall say about the preacher as teacher. Jesus Christ inaugurated the Christian era by appointing twelve men and sending them forth to preach and teach, saying, "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." And obedient to their commission they went forth to proclaim the Gospel of glad tidings everywhere, and to tell of the new force that had come into society with transforming power, of a liberty that set at naught the fetters of an evil past, and to open the way to an ever-enlarging, victorious life. And in all the days since that glad hour the ministry of Jesus Christ has been a teaching ministry through the spoken word.

Every Lord's day the minister looks into the eyes of tired people with ofttimes anxious hearts. They have come for help and comfort and uplift and cheer. They want a breath of balmy spring, a breeze from the heavenly moorlands. And the minister must come to them with a message that will relieve the stress and strain of life. His mission is to keep faith serene and strong, to hold before them the true values of life, to cause hope and courage to sing in every heart, to quicken the soul to divine endeavor, and to feed with heavenly manna those that hunger and thirst after righteousness. And in these weekly audiences there are also other classes of people, sinful, frivolous, careless, despondent, and here is the minister's duty and opportunity to remove misconceptions and prejudices, to break down religious indifference, to lift up high ideals, to awaken conscience, to quicken hope, and to direct the will in righteous living.

To fulfill the enviable purpose and privilege of the ministry requires more than intellectual attainments. The preacher does not have a roving commission to wander up and down the universe of knowledge. As Christ's ambassador he must take the latitude from his Master. He must have the intellectual grasp of, and the spiritual grip on, the great truths of God's Book. Having labored fervently for these, and having obtained them, he must clearly define and confidently declare them with the tone of certainty for they are God's eternal truths and if men cannot cling to these with assurance then the very foundations are tottering and all is chaos.

Today, owing to the great world-upheaval, grave questions are being asked by serious minded men and women in every community. They are asking them of their own hearts and they are also asking them of others. To whom have the people a right to look for answers to their deepest questions in these troublous times if not to the minister? If he cannot give them complete answers he must at least give them serious consideration and throw some light upon them; for it is the duty and opportunity of the minister to be and to bear a shining light amid the darkness of the world.

It was never more easy for ministers to make such calamitous mistakes as they make now in dealing with conditions that confront us. Amid surroundings such as the world has never seen before, no minister should want for themes today, and yet what trivial themes some ministers content themselves with! He is missing the mark and betraying his trust and wasting his time who diligently seeks for so-called popular themes and preaches nothing but war sermons or invariably discourses on supposed related prophecies. The true minister will not be carried away on the currents of the times, but will hold himself to eternal principles applicable to other than war problems and conditions and applicable also to other than temporal incidents and passing events. While speaking to and for his age, the minister must be largely independent of his age, and instead of being shaped by it must try and shape it. His message must be above the standard of the age in which he lives, bringing into it the radiance of the eternal. The Bible must, as in the centuries gone by, continue to be his text-book and unfailing source of inspiration and authority and power; for that Book alone has the only message that can be applied to illumine the paths of men and lighten the burdens of the people.

Furthermore, to rightly perform his mission and serve his day and generation, the minister must believe in man, not an unwarranted belief that man is good and needs only a little coddling to make him pure and generous, but that man is made for God and religion. Much of the talk we hear about the general good ness of humanity is only sentimentality and false optimism. The truth of the matter is the average man is not good, but very vile and full of selfishness and secret sins. But the minister must have an unswerving faith in the capacity of man for God, which truth is abundantly confirmed by the experience of the race. Animated by this faith and conviction he must proclaim the good news of the Gospel: That God is a compassionate Father whose love suffers long and believes and hopes and endures for his children, that this love of God means the forgiveness of sins in the lives of those who sincerely repent, and that with sins forgiven eternal life is man's priceless possession as a free gift of God.

Manifold are the minister's duties and opportunities in this age of transition and change in which we live. There is a birth of a new consciousness in our social life and deep stirrings in the heart of humanity. The new religious educational movement in our day opens new avenues of approach to many old questions. The full-orbed minister must be qualified to intelligently lead in all these movements that effect the stability and growth of the twentieth century church.

Concluding then, it is therefore clear that in view of these conditions, with a new and firm belief in man's capacity for God and religion, with an unwavering faith in Jesus Christ and the efficacy of his solutions of all problems of life, and with a vitalizing belief in the times in which he lives, the minister of this generation must have courage and divinely guided convictions and be prepared under the providence of God, to direct and mold and crystallize the shadowy and indefinite sentiments in the hearts of the people. This is the challenge and function, these are the duties and the opportunities of the Christian ministry today.

The Theology of the Reconstruction

BY E. M. COBB

The devil, be he myth, microbe or monstrosity, transferred mother Eve's God-given dogma for some of his philosophical theology upon the consideration of a little applesauce; he euchered Noah out of his for another installment of his substitute plus a bunch of grapes nicely served up; he assisted Solomon the wise man in the selection of seven hundred princesses (not common white trash) and they turned his head from wisdom, and his heart from God, and they mixed up his politics and religion until he overran the Heinz record and had about seven hundred varieties; but the children of this generation are wiser.

We often hear of preachers who speak of the Twentieth century theology, religion, or Christianity and all that, but you have yet to find the first case where the devil ever changed medicine. He only has the one variety in his case —UNBELIEF. The rest of the case is filled up with various and sundry capsules which he uses in the administration of his dope. To his amazement, he finds that he cannot use the apples for we are Hooverizing; the bone dry sentiment has ruined the grape juice brand; Smoot no longer assists him in the polygamy stunt, and so he has had to substitute several new brands of capsules.

The brand that comes from the Russel factory, are dipped in a strong solution of anti-ressurrection theory and thereby destroy all the dogma God ever gave the patient on the subject of the Hope of Eternal Glory; the brand that comes from the Eddy mills are saturated with anti-atonement doctrine, and as soon as the patient has swalllowed the capsule, he no longer has any vision or conception of the merits of the Cross.

But when he wants to vaccinate a bunch of theological students and preachers, he secures from the Ella Wheeler Wilcox laboratories, this New Thought brand that works charmingly. Notice the new formula in the December number of the Cosmopolitan.

In the first stanza, she says that the "Spirit flowed from the mind of the Maker through nature to man." That puts an end to John's theology; he thought the Spirit came through the word to man. Jno. 17:17.

In the second stanza, she has the Spirit on a parallel with the sap of the tree, the instinct of the beast, and the reason of man. Notice the modern conception of the Deity.

In the third and fourth stanzas, the author has attributed the devilish doctrine of Spiritualism to the Spirit. Talk about blasphemy. This new kind is so much more virulent than the old sort, and so indescribably deceptive.

In the last stanza, even the Mighty God is accused of lifting the old dogmas. This does not sound much like, 1 Pet. 5:1-11; Acts 2:42.

I have sounded this note of warning to put our young men and women on the alert for such subtle work of the adversary. Forget the Miltonic forked-tailed image he would have us believe he is, but look for the "Angel of Light" kind that the Book speaks of. You get a more concrete illustration of his method of working a little farther on in the same issue of the same magazine. Under the caption "A Voice from the Beyond" beginning on Page 72 is the most clever, subtle, mixture of asceticism, culture, refinement, truth, spiritualism, theosophy, Buddhism, New Thought, and Satanic substitution for the real gospel of Christ, I have ever seen in one article. One with the talent of the author, and the embellishment as can be given by a magazine like the Cosmopolitan, is able to so deftly weave this mixture as to deceive a large percentage of the unsophisticated and turn their heads.

Notice the lives for pattern—Lodge, Lombroso, Flammarion, Turner, Crooke, Maeterlinck, and Doyle. Notice the list of Spiritualistic books as references. Watch the leaves and determine which way the wind blows. Notice the tirade against orthodoxy and its exponents at the bottom of page 125. This seems so silly from so great a mind as that of the author. To think there can be union of spirit of the gospel and that of Christian Science when the author of the gospel says, "without the shedding of blood, there is no remission of sin," "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood, ye have no life in you." "And the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." That's Dogma which Mrs. Wilcox hates, derides, and denounces. While Christian Science, or rather its author says in Science and Health, pages 25 lines 6 to 9 "The material blood of Jesus was no more efficacious to cleanse from sin when it was shed upon "the accursed tree," than when it was flowing in his veins as he went daily about his father's business." That is not dogma—that's heresy and blasphemy. Yet this is what our author would have the people and especially the clergy to embrace and quote the Savior as saying "Love one another." Sure enough he said that and he also said, "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." Not by talking with infidels, atheists, skeptics, but by "keeping these faithful sayings of mine." He wanted his dogma, his doctrines, his sayings kept. Whenever these advocates of these milk and water substitutes for the real Christianity, can produce as James says, evidences of their faith by their works, then it will be time for us and our children to pattern after their lives.

The author does not hesitate to belittle and berate "wornout dogmas," places Buddha above Christ, says her Robert was her "bread of heaven," and consults the Endor society instead of the Holy Scriptures, The Wise Ones, instead of the inspired writers of the scriptures, the ouija board instead of the communion table, substitutes Scota for the Paraclete, and yet asks us who are disciples of the lowly Nazarene to embrace such licentious heresy and nestle the viper in our bosom as complacently as if it were a dove.

And finally, the six great convictions of spiritualism however contradictory they are to the great plan of salvation given by the Lord Jesus, the author and editor expects us to believe them. Yes, Brethren, here is a sample of some of the theology we will have to deal with during this great reconstruction period after the war. Never was there a time when the Evil One had such a tremendous opportunity with these counterfeit doctrines, to supplant the true gospel of God. It certainly behooves us to double our diligence as ministers, and as Brother Rench says "Give the Bible a chance."

Coronation

BY DANIEL A. POLING,

Associate President the World's Christian Endeavor Union

I saw her first in a great base hospital in the north of England. She was leaning over a bed that held a fearfully broken lad from London's great East Side. In half a dozen places the shrapnel had sought his vitals, and quite as many times the kindly cruel scalpel of the surgeon had searched out the creeping poison. When she touched the boy, he smiled. He could not see her—his eyes were covered—and he could not move his head. Even the smile must have caused him pain. But I never knew before that a man's mouth could be so beautiful. It was as if the lips had responded to something electric in that white-gowned woman's touch; it was as if her fingers had healing in them, as if her hands bore the same divine ministries that the hands of the Galilean carried to the halt and lame and blind, nineteen hundred years before. I found myself whispering "And the child was cured from that very hour."

I saw her next in France, and not far behind the lines. I never learned her story. I prefer to remember her in the spirit of the words of one her hands were laid upon:

"I wonder what she did before she went to war—for she has gone to war as truly as any soldier. I am sure in the peaceful years she must have loved and been greatly loved. Perhaps he was killed out there. Now she is ivory-white with over-service, and all her days are spent in loving. Over dying men she stoops and is to them the incarnation of their mother, or of the woman, had they lived, they would have loved."

I shall not see that woman again. In the air above a red cross, a winged-monster paused and let loose his fury. She is not dead, but gone to her coronation, this woman with healing in her hands, this greatest mother in the world.

On the Brink

Commenting upon President Wilson's decision to sit at the Peace Table, Mr. Arthur J. Balfour is said to have remarked to a friend the other day, "It is going to be a rough and tumble affair, this peace conference." To which the incorrigible optimist will doubtless respond: "Oh, somebody is always taking the joy out of life!" Gladly would we "shoo" away every "gloom" that clouds our sky. How we hate to think of the fly in the ointment of our satisfaction, as we rejoice over the triumph of our righteous cause and the deserved discomfiture of our arrogant foes. At such a time it is peculiarly unpopular to stress the ancient warning: "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." And yet in our inmost hearts we realize that in this world we can never be wholly safe, that dangers seen and unseen lurk on every hand, and that victory and prosperity bring a menace of peculiar insidiousness to men and nations. The truth is that even in the hour of greatest promise we are living on the very edge of an abyss of shame, on the very brink of a volcano of desolation. It is this knowledge which forces wise men to their knees; it is the recognition of this inescapable fact which impels them not to lean upon their own understanding, but to put their trust in the living God.

"Often have I been driven to my knees," said Abraham Lincoln, "by the conviction that I had nowhere else to go!"

Have statesmen ever faced more difficult and delicate questions than those to be determined in Versailles or Paris during the next few weeks? Should we be at all surprised at the rumors of trouble in the settlement of issues which might well test the patience and unselfishness of archangels, to say nothing of weak, fallible men, biased by political views, by racial prejudices, by national misunderstandings? "International complications appear to be endless," writes one correspondent; "views and aims will inevitably clash." The report that French and English politicians are intensely jealous of us and of each other may be an exaggeration; it may not be true that Great Britain wants a just peace only on the condition that she alone can hold the club to enforce peace, that France is already reaching out for more territory than is exactly just, that both France and England sneer at Italy, and that political intrigue is afoot which bitterly resents the threatened preponderating influence of America at the Peace Table; all these things may be overemphasized as serious factors in the situation; and yet who dares to say there is no peril, that after all the bloody cost of this awful war the councils of justice might degenerate into an unholy scramble for spoils, or at least that the glorious ideals of democracy might be dimmed by selfish squabbles, unwise decisions, and trouble-breeding compromises? Surely these are days big with destiny; surely this is the time of times to pray that the All-wise God may preside over that history-making Conference. Let every American in his heart bid godspeed to our President and his associates ,to whom are entrusted such mighty issues in this crisis. Even on the brink of infinite peril we may dwell in safety, if our hearts are fixed upon him. We must believe that by his grace right will win at the Table as on the field.

Then, too, amid the jubilations of Thanksgiving Day and the prospects of a Christmas made so much merrier by the advent of peace and the knowledge that our dear boys are coming home, we hear not only multiplying evidences of heavy responsibilities across the sea; but we are actually face to face here at home with the rumblings of the long prophesied industrial earthquake, not only in the necessary adjustment of living expenses and incomes which is inevitable at the close of a period of war, but in the clashes of men in uniform with the radicals who are already denominated as the "reds" or Bolsheviki of America. We read that the Commissioner of Police of the metropolis threatens to use machine guns on soldiers, sailors and marines wearing the uniform of Uncle Sam, and that the Board of Aldermen adopts a bill which carries severe penalties for all who incite to riot by the use of any red or black flag or any device which appears to stand for opposition to organized government. What a seething volcano this is—and we live on its very brink! God pity us if we fail to understand our need of divine wisdom, our utter dependence upon him who alone can guide us safely through! Never were religion and patriotism so closely linked together. There is no hope for an unChristian America, an unspiritualized League of Nations, an unevangelized world. The one place where all men can really get together as brothers is at the foot of the Cross of Jesus. This is what makes the task of the church so great, and the opportunity to serve mankind so wonderful beyond all precedent. O church of Christ, awake, awake to the surpassing challenge of the new day!—Reformed Church Messenger.

Evangelism

BY J. A. McINTURFF

No other word in the religious vocabulary has been abused more than this. It has stood for noise, nonsense, excitement, and unreasonable religious feelings; it has served as a cloak for sin and deception. It has been the abuse of evangelism which has almost put it in disrepute. It has been led over our land as a slave in the chains of religious cranks, and the things it has been made to do would lead one to believe it insane. It has been pushed into the shadows of superstition and there compelled to do its work. It has been forced out in the cold, chilling world and left to die, and it has been the victim of monarchs. It has been robbed of the real gospel reputation, and starved on religious creeds. It has suffered from false-acceptors, the victim of Christless preachers and churches, and often forced by the proud and creed ridden church to the street and there left under the hands of the enemies to proclaim the Word. It is an unwelcome visitor in many churches, a scorned enemy by a few, and a slave of some, while but a few treat it as a child of the Book. Poor, rejected, starving, enslaved, abused and misguided evangelism still is living and smiling as the Christless hypocrites lead him bound by the chains of their creed and opinions through the ages. But he is as real and sane as ever, all he needs is LIBERTY.

There is a sane, friendly, kind, affectionate, gospel evangelism, and if the real evangelism of the Bible could be freed and allowed to go among the people as in the days of the Jerusalem church the same friendly welcome would be accorded. Men are looking for friends who will help them and the best and most kind of all friends is evangelism. In some place in each life it has been touched by the uplifting hand of the rescuer, evangelism. Man's best friend enters the shadows and saves him from the crimes of sin, when all other respectable friends have forsaken him. Evangelism, man's first and best friend, the only one who will lead him back to God.

With the NEW liberty of the world, and the freedom from much slavery of the past will come a NEW day of evangelism. It will be given its freedom. The cold, formal, creedalism which has pained men will pass forever. The chains of superstition and human opinion will break and a NEW evangelism—no, not a NEW, but the OLD with a new garment and returned health, and with LIBERTY in the NEW FREEDOM—will greet men.

"Two Hams and a Pail of Lard"

G. C. CARPENTER

In 1886 they were not worth as much as now for a good income would be required to buy them today. "The Continent" states that in that year, according to the Presbyterian Assembly Minutes, the total congregational budget of a certain Presbyterian church on the Pacific coast was actually "two hams and a pail of lard." The community hog must have been sacrificed that the preacher might live. But during the next thirty-one years, the Home Mission Board contributed a total of $5,509 to that church. "Missionaries can't live on pork alone." In 1907 it went to self-support.

Today it is one of the strongest churches on the Pacific coast. Its young pastor, we are told, is one of the most resourceful and energetic ministers in his Synod. An elder in his previous church testified to his energy when he confessed that "there was always so much going on at the church that he had to go down to the neighboring city over night to find time to take a bath."

Here is the conclusion as given by the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions: "To bring such a church from weakness and poverty to a point of strength and influence—that is Home Missions. A thousand fields, now aided have in them the same potentialities of power. Help us to help them develop."

The Home Mission Board of the Brethren church is seeking the same results and the opportunities are many. Every church in the brotherhood should go "over the top" with an offering for Home Missions. The church and pastor that fails to give an offering averaging the small sum of thirty cents per member surely lack vision and some of the energy possessed by the pastor referred to above.

The same Home Mission Board appeals to the members of the churches of that denomination to join their "Out-of Debt" Club. We don't want to be too persistent, they say, but nothing could be more persistent than interest on a debt, until you get rid of the debt, which we could do if more people would join our "Out-of-Debt" Club.

A goodly number of people and churches joined our Brethren Home Mission "Out-of-Debt" Club at the recent conference at Winona Lake and most of them have made good to the extent of $1100, but what of the balance who stood good for the $400? A hint to the wise is sufficient. That interest on the mortgage of twenty years' standing is very persistent and will be until we get rid of the mortgage Pay up suddenly and another church, "The First Brethren Church of Washington, D. C.," will go to self-support.

The Perils of Demobilization

BY REV. E. H. DUTTON

Religious Work Director, Y. M. C. A. (S. C.) The Challenge to the "Y" in the Camps

In the course of an address in one of our "Y" huts recently I was urging the men in view of the prospect of demobilization to determine at once upon some unselfish life objective. I had spoken of certain Civil War Veterans who had been standing in the street corners of my old home town day after day ever since I could remember. Men who were brave leaders in the crisis of '61-'65, but who have been of little use to the community or even to themselves in all the years that have followed. In fact they plainly illustrate the assertion the "War makes heroes and also bums." An officer who was present afterward told me that many of his comrades in the Spanish-American "Skirmish" likewise had been of no use to society since their return from Cuba or the Philippines. There is the same danger facing many men who are now looking down "the trail that leads back home." There is the danger also that they may determine upon a selfish career with riches or power as the objective.

Almost from the very day the Armistice was signed the "Y" in the home Camps has given the right of way in its religious program to a message of warning against these dangers, and the challenge of the gospel in view of a world of wide open doors and unmeasured need to a career of unselfish service. The appeal is being made through a campaign carried forward by means of:

1. Lifework addresses. At least one such address is provided each week in each "Y" unit by a qualified Christian leader, in each case supplemented by group conferences and personal interviews.

2. A new series of stereopticon lectures illustrating conditions in the "Lands of the Allies" which can be relieved only through unselfish life investments.

3. A series of life-work pamphlets, posters and other literature which serve to challenge the men to adopt Christian ideals for the life to which they are returning.

4. A new "War Roll" card calling for the initial Christian decision as heretofore, but also for a decision in favor of a life of service, (in the ministry, missionary work, Y. M. C. A Secretaryship, social service, business or the professions).

5. The accumulation of a specific information about every sort of useful post-war occupation toward which the attention of our men may be turned as they pass through our camps in the process of demobilization.

6. A comprehensive plan of recruiting for Christian callings by means of a Committee representing both the Federal Council of Churches and the Young Men's Christian Association, with Dr. F. W. Padelford and Mr. George Irving as executive secretaries.

7. The challenge to the churches in the communities.

The communities into which the men are returning need to be warned through the churches of serious responsibility in this matter. There is apparent a disposition on the part of the home folks not only to express due appreciation to the returning troops for their patriotic service but also to coddle or pamper them, to encourage indulgence and even license as a sort of reward for their military service. If this disposition is allowed to express itself without restraint it will mean the moral undoing of many men.

On the other hand if the churches and communities will meet their returning sons with the challengeto live at their best, to transfer the spirit of unselfish life-dedication to the battles of peace, to the huge task of social and economic construction that faces the world it will go a long ways toward securing the moral results of victory—a long way toward establishing not simply "a free Democracy" in our own land and other lands but also the "new Christian civilization" which, as Secretary Daniels says, is the only adequate compensation for the investment and agony of these terrible years of strife.

The City of God

BY ANNIE JOHNSON FLINT

There is a wondrous city, beautiful, bright, and fair;
The throne of God is in it and the glory of God is there.
And oh, the joy of knowing, as the Lord's redeemed can know,
While through the tribulations of this earthly life they go,
There shall be no more toiling; there shall be no more care;
There shall be no more burdens, grievous and hard to bear;
There shall be no more crying, hunger, or thirst, or fears;
There shall be no more heartache, through the eternal years!

And in that wondrous city there shall be no more night;
Forever and forever the Lamb shall be its light;
And oh, the joy of knowing, as the Lord's redeemed can know,
While through the dark and dangers of this earthly life they go;
There shall be no more trouble; there shall be no more wrong;
There shall be no more sighing, stilling the glory-song;
There shall be no more sorrow, for God shall dry all tears;
There shall be no more sinning, through the eternal years!

Blessed are they who love him and they who keep his word;
They shall enter into the city and dwell in the house of the Lord;
And oh, the joy of knowing, as the Lord's redeemed can know,
While often sad and lonely, through this earthly life they go,
There shall be no more sickness; there shall be no more pain;
There shall be no more parting, loved from the loved again;
There shall be no more weeping, kneeling beside earth's biers;
There shall be no more dying, through the eternal years!

The Sunday School

A Four-Month Program and a Challenge

We have had the "flu" here in Waterloo. No; that isn't poetry: it's a fact. The other congregations and Sunday schools in the Brotherhood have had to fight the "flu" too. All of us, no doubt, are ready to admit that the "flu" is some little old scrapper.

In more dignified diction; unless the Sunday schools all over the United States put forth tremendous effort, they will not recover from the effects of the influenza quarantine for years. For years, I say; and the history of other epidemics renders this prophecy accurate, trustworthy, infallible, ominous.

The obvious demand of the times, then, is that the Sunday schools shall put forth the necessary "tremendous effort." We do not want to languish for years. We want to recuperate right away.

Also, world conditions demand that the Sunday school be on the job right now, with maximum attendance, maximum efficiency and maximum zeal.

Consideration of these facts at a recent cabinet meeting of the Waterloo Brethren Sunday school led us to the decision to "start something." Hence, the following challenge.

The Challenge

We, the Sunday school of the First Brethren church of Waterloo, Iowa, hereby challenge each, every and all the Sunday schools of the Brethren church to a four-month contest in Sunday school activity.

The contest shall be wholly upon the percentage basis so that no school, no matter how small nor how large, shall have any unfair advantage whatsoever. It shall begin with the first Sunday in January, 1919, and continue over the last Sunday in April, 1919—a four-month program.

The school that wins the greatest number of points shall be the Gold Star school of all the competing schools. The school that wins the next greatest number of points shall be the Blue Star school. The school that wins the third greatest number of points shall be the Red Star school.

The Waterloo school will attempt to collect $175.00. Of this amount $100.00 shall be given to Ashland College endowment in the name of the Gold Star school, $50.00 in the name of the Blue Star school, and $25.00 in the name of the Red Star school.

The Four-Month Program

The rules for the contest shall be as follows:

1. An attendance of 60 percent of the total enrollment of the school, exclusive of the Cradle Roll and Home Department, on the first Sunday in January shall give one point.

2. An offering on the first Sunday in January equal to the average offering of the previous quarter shall yield one point.

3. An increase of 2 percent in attendance each Sunday after the first Sunday in January shall yield one point. This means that each Sunday after the first Sunday in January, the attendance must be 2 percent greater than on the preceding Sunday to win the point. If a school fails to have a 2 percent increase in attendance on any one Sunday, it must figure the required attendance for the following Sunday upon the basis of what the attendance should have been the preceding Sunday—if you know what I mean. In other words, a school must make up what it may lose before it can go on winning points.

4. In the same manner, an increase of 2 percent in the offering each Sunday after the first Sunday in January, shall win one point.

5. Each Sunday that 75 percent of the attendants at Sunday school are on time, the school shall win one point.

6. Each Sunday that 75 percent of the adults present have studied their lesson beforehand, the school shall win one point.

7. Each Sunday that every teacher and officer is present, or has provided a substitute beforehand, the school shall win one point.

Now, Come On!

If this set of rules favors any school, it favors the small school. Yet, the rules seem as fair to all as they could be made.

Those schools that will accept the challenge should write a note to the Brethren Evangelist—as soon as possible—and state the fact. This should be done at once.

Almost every school in the Brotherhood could enter the contest with profit. Come on, you superintendents and pastors, accept the challenge, or confess that you are quitters and have a yellow streak! Affectionately yours,

PAULINE LICHTY, Superintendent.
H. L. GOUGHNOUR, Pastor.

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

We have just been notified that the Nappanee, Indiana church will continue to place the Evangelist in every Brethren home of the congregation, one hundred and eighty dollars having been set aside from their annual budget to cover the expense. Three of the largest congregations in the Brotherhood have now reported that they will continue the plan and we can hardly understand how any congregation can longer remain out in the cold after the experience and testimony of some of the best churches we have. Brother C. E. Kolb is delighted with his pastorate at Nappanee because of the activity of its membership. Last year the Nappanee Sunday school ranked fourth in attendance among all the schools of the church.

Now is the time the pastors of all the churches should be looking after the Evangelist subscription lists. We presume seventy-five percent of our subscriptions expire in December and January, and for the conservation of paper all publishers are asked to cut off all subscriptions as they expire unless they are promptly renewed. We can not afford to lose a single subscriber so we ask our pastors to co-operate with us in securing the renewal of all old subscriptions as well as a goodly number of new subscribers. Another reason we want this done promptly is we installed a new Elliott Addressing Machine last summer for mailing our Evangelist and we have been gradually transfering the names from the old system to the new. This requires a great deal of labor as well as considerable expense, and during the month of January we want to transfer the entire mailing list to this system, and every subscription that has not been renewed by that time will make extra work and extra expense for us, so we ask you to co-operate with us by renewing all subscriptions at once, if possible, or at least during the first week in January.

The report of Orion E. Bowman, Secretary-Treasurer of the General Missionary Board for November as it appears on another page is a good one, but the one thing the general brotherhood will be anxiously looking for from now until it appears in the Evangelist is the report of the Thanksgiving offering. The ban that has been on public services at different periods in all parts of the country no doubt affected the offering to a certain extent, but we trust our membership has felt thankful enough to make this the largest Thanksgiving offering ever received by the church.

Brother Drushal reports at some length the work at Lost Creek, Kentucky. He also sent us some clippings from Kentucky papers that tell of the terrible havoc made by the epidemic of influenza in the mountain districts of Kentucky. People in the more progressive sections of the country have thought they have passed through trying times, but these experiences are tame indeed compared to the experiences of the people living in the backward mountain sections of the south. A most pathetic appeal is made by Brother Drushal for a matron for the dormitory and for a nurse at Riverside. The future of the school is placed in jeopardy by this lack. Have the pastors really tried to find helpers for this work?

Brother Albert Trent's "Story of Statistics" should interest all our Sunday school workers. He has taken the following departments of the work, the enrollment, the average attendance, the total offerings, the offerings for national work, the Home Department and the Cradle Roll Department and has listed the ten schools that stand nearest the top of the list in any or all of these departments. It is an interesting report.

The "Challenge" thrown out by the Waterloo, Iowa Sunday school as it appears on page seven this week should stir up every pastor, Sunday school superintendent and every Sunday school in the entire Brotherhood to the greatest activity of their history for the next four months. Some supreme effort will be needed to enable the Sunday schools to regain what they have lost through the closing of them so long because of the epidemic. Reports of this contest as it progresses should make interesting reading for the Evangelist subscribers, and especially for the many isolated members of the church.

In his report of receipts for the Kentucky work for November Brother Carpenter supplements what Brother Drushal has to say about the great necessity for securing a matron and a nurse. Pastors, how much are you helping in an attempt to find these workers?

Brother I. B. Trout's report from Berlin should remove all fear from the heart of any pastor who has been looking for the coming of Brother Beachler in the interests of the Permanent Endowment Fund for Ashland College. These testimonies from pastors where Brother Beachler has appeared should help other churches to look forward with pleasure to his coming, just as we always regard with pleasure the reports Brother Beachler makes concerning the influence of the Brethren Evangelist over the congrgations where he makes his canvass.

J. F. Watson reports some of the things the Somerset street Sunday school has done and has tried to do regardless of the drawbacks occasioned by the quarantine. One member was recently added to this church by baptism.

This being quiet hour month for the Christian Endeavor societies the president of our National Society introduces the new superintendent of the quiet hour department, E. M. Riddle, who also has something to say in regard to the observing of the month and especially the last Sunday in the month when the work of the full month should be brought to a grand climax.

The Maple Grove church, near Eaton, Indiana began an evangelistic meeting early in November, but it, like a great many other meetings, got caught between bad weather and the epidemic and was compelled to close. There were two additions to the church by letter and the church itself felt greatly revived by the preaching of the evangelist, A. E. Thomas.

That the churches of the Indiana district are pretty well alive to their opportunities and to their duty as well is indicated by the missionary apportionment as it appears on another page. This makes a very good budget with which the Indiana Board has to work and the Board is undertaking a most aggressive work in the district, five mission points within the district receiving financial help from this missionary fund. The Indiana churches are among the best cared for and among the most aggressive of any district in the entire brotherhood.

Brother Bauman's work at Dayton was cut short by the epidemic, but the meetings were continued after his departure by Brother Cobb, more than twenty members were added to the church as a result of these meetings and a splendid communion service was observed in connection with them.

Brother Beachler was more than pleased with the results of his canvass for College Endowment at Allentown, Pennsylvania when the circumstances are taken into consideration. This should cause a few of the Pennsylvania churches previously canvassed to feel somewhat chagrined when they place themselves alongside of Allentown, but they will not see this as they are not readers of the Evangelist like the members at Allentown are where the paper goes into every home of the congregation. We are sure the further Brother Beachler goes with his canvass the more he will come to connect up the results of his work in each congregation with the number of Brethren Evangelists going into the homes of that congregation.

Around the Editor's Table

Sacred or Secular

In an editorial in a recent number of a popular weekly magazine it is said that the religious tone of secular editorials dealing with Germany's defeat is almost as strong as the words of the pulpit.

Recently Brother A. P. Reed of Los Angeles, California, sent us a large number of clippings from several of the great dailies of that city to show how large a place these great city papers are giving to religious matters. One of these papers runs a scripture text every day entirely across the top of the page set in sixteen point type so that it will be sure to be noticed. Among these texts are such selections as "For what doth it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his soul," and "Whosoever sahll confess me (Jesus Christ), before men him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven," and "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

We have no way of knowing how deep below the surface this religious sentiment goes, but on the surface it looks good and it must wield an influence for good by giving such prominent notice to the things that are now attracting the attention of the great public. Then in the lower corner of one of the pages, enclosed in a border and set in bold faced type a thought or short prayer is given for the beginning of each day similar to the following: "Dear Lord, keep us this day from the ways of wrong and sin, for we know full well that we must suffer if we sin. Thy law is unchangeable, and we must pay the penalty if we violate it. We would therefore ever seek to keep to the ways of rectitude and light." Here is another of these characteristic prayers: "To thee Almighty God, who hath the destiny of the universe in thy keeping, we turn for help in these trying days when the scourge of a malignant disease is blighting the children of men. Thou art the Great Physician. Come to us we pray with the balm of healing. Drive out this enemy of life and love and health. Restore these stricken ones and to thy name we shall give the praise."

While these prayers appear on the surface to be the prayers of a people who are driven to the Lord because they know no other refuge from danger and the worship seems to be a worship prompted by fear, yet it matters not so much how people are led to recognize the supernatural power of God as it does that they RECOGNIZE him.

Strange Bedfellows

It has been said that politics frequently brings about unusual relationships that are described as "strange bedfellows," but one of the most unusual situations one can find is that created by the proximity of some of the texts quoted above and a special column conducted by the noted, if not notorious, Arthur Brisbane who got into the limelight during the war as one who was suspected of pro-Germanism in the purchase and operation of a great daily paper in the city of Washington, and also for his fierce opposition to prohibition.

Another of the great papers of Los Angeles publishes brief notes or extracts from the sermons of a dozen or more of the leaders of the Los Angeles ministry, and special prominence is gievn to an extract from a sermon of the Rev. Bruce Brown who said,

"Some of the best expressions of the spirit of Christianity are often to be found in the editorial columns of our great papers. I wish to commend particularly to my people at this time, when we are not permitted to have public services, the editorial in the Los Angeles Express of last Thursday. Reread it today for Sunday meditation. Put fear from you as a thing of evil. The difference between success and failure in all the affairs of life is usually a very narrow margin. The race is most often won by a few feet. The victory is won by the nation that can raise the last million. This last step or effort is usually a matter of courage and self-confidence. Disease attacks the body weakened by any passion. Fear opens the door and invites the enemy to enter. Courage, determination fortify every cell of the body. The coward is whipped before the battle begins.

"All the institutions that bless mankind have come from the intrepid few who have dared to walk in untrodden paths. If America had listened to the voice of fear she never would have entered the world conflict, and the nations would have been delivered over to Hunnish savagery. The hope of all future ages rests on men and women who are unafraid."

God Is Not Mocked

With the above apocalyptic warning The Evening News of Newark, N. J. reviews in a solemn manner the plight of the nations that planned the world war and the world's woe. There are some free-thinkers and some skeptics among the leaders of the world's thought and the world's action, but it is refreshing to know that they form an inconsiderable part of such leadership after all, and the words of the editor of The Newark News express the feeling of a vast number of the greatest men in the world. We quote these words:

"It is not enough that the German armies confess defeat.

"It is not enough that revolution takes command of the erstwhile German empire.

"It is only enough that the doctrine and theory of autocracy are disproved and put to shame.

"Autocracy, militarism, can only maintain themselves by professing infallibility. Autocracy can not take counsel of democracy, without dynamiting its own foundations. If it is not superior, it is naught.

"Kaiser Wilhelm may go down in history as the world's greatest villain. He will certainly go down forever as the world's vastest fool.

"There is in his downfall, the downfall of the laboriously created machine that mechanized and brutalized Germany, heart and soul. He and his clique set at naught two thousand years of man's development. They defied the finer instincts of man, debauched the holy mission of education, worshiped at the temple of a crass materialism. For the Nazarene they substituted a tribal Gott.

"Defeat and physical death do not kill. The Nazarene lives. In the suffering of the men who bore the Cross in France he triumphs. Their rest is perfect in his peace. Their glory is imperishable, for they wrought a New World.

"Betrayed by materialism, that against which they contended is hurled to the depths of contempt. It is just scorn that kills.

"Where, today, is the arch-apostle of materialism, militarism, he of the 'flaming sword,' senior partner of Me-und-Gott? Fled across the border to neutral Holland, shameful in defeat and daring not to face the people he betrayed!

"Where are the clerics who swore that they alone knew the real god?

"Where are the diplomats who made faithlessness their creed and tore apart the 'scrap of paper?'

"Where are the thousand professors who protest that might was right?

"Where are the ten thousand savants who declared that their materialism bought them invincibility?

"Where are the hundred thousand officers of the kingly caste to whom the citizen was dirt, and who wrote their creed in flame and sword on Belgium?

"Theirs is shame, the shame that kills. Of all history they are the world's supreme fools. Their sword struck through the superficiality, the carelessness of a seemingly spiritually inert world. The world rammed back against them, and from east to west, from pole to pole, from Christian to freethinker, Mohammedan to heathen, it declared their creed a hateful vanity.

"All things seemed in their hands. The world was drifting under their spell. Their espionage, their mate-

THE SOVEREIGN GOD

A hundred years ago, when Napoleon Bonaparte invaded Russia, he told the Russian Ambassador that he would destroy that empire. The ambassador replied, "Man proposes, God disposes." "Tell your master," uttered the arrogant and self-confident Napoleon, "that I am he who proposes and I am he who disposes."

It was a challenge to the living God to vindicate his sovereign control, and God sent his most humble servants, the myriad snowflakes, from heaven, to subdue this audacious monster.

Napoleon flung his army into Moscow, but left in his retreat on the frozen plains the bulk of his invading army. God said to the defiant Napoleon, as the shore says to the ocean, "Hitherto, and no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." And, in 1815, when Napoleon escaped from the isle of Elba to again threaten with imperious hand the destinies of Europe, the sovereign Disposer of heaven and earth, whose hand is on the helm of empires, ordained Napoleon's waterloo at Waterloo, and ushered in the peace of Europe for thirty years.

And Napoleon Bonaparte found at St. Helena, his lesson that God does dispose the affairs of this world for his own glory and his sovereign righteous will.

Near Vilna, in Russia, is a stone on one side of which you may read: "Napoleon Bonaparte passed this way in 1812 with 400,000 men." On the other side of the same stone is this: "Napoleon Bonaparte passed this way in 1812 with 9,000 men.

No man may ignore God. No nation can disown or dishonor God and prosper. The stars in their courses fight against all such. No man, no nation, may forget God, or fail to walk humbly with him, and live. God has said it, God has sworn it, God has decreed it. Speaking of the Lord Christ who is this world's own rightful King, God has written it large on the page of history as well as the page of inspiration, "The nation that will not serve Thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted" (Isaiah 60:12).

God and truth and righteousness must and will at last prevail ;the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. This is the sovereign message, this is the sublime confidence, this is the song of this Forty-sixth Psalm.

THE BRITISH IN INDIA

Sir John Foster in The Century Magazine

Great Britain never conquered India, as the phrase is currently understood, but gradually inherited and undertook increased responsibilities, owing to the disturbed conditions of the country caused by the rival ambitions of native rulers and the warlike operations of invading peoples. During the last half century there have been many small wars, chiefly in the hills of the northwest with tribes which made predatory excursions into the lands of their more peaceful neighbors.

The broad, outstanding fact is that Great Britain brought peace to several hundred million people who for centuries had suffered the evils of constant war. Laws of equity were established everywhere; not British laws, but laws founded on native custom and practice and administeerd in local languages. Nothing has ever been done to hamper the use of Indian languages,—English officials are obliged to learn Hindustani,—and the rights of innumerable religious bodies have been jealously guarded. It has been because these religious rights were never allowed to be interfered with—and religious animosities are quite as acute in India as in other parts of the world—that has given rise to the belief among the ill-informed that Great Britain has long maintained her supremacy by cunningly playing off one great religious body against another and so preventing a fusion of all races and all faiths for an uprising intended to remove British dominance.

In strict fact, Great Britain was successful in India for the same reason she has been the most successful of colonizing powers; because she interfered as little as possible with the habits and desires of the local people. Vast commercial native undertakings, American in their magnitude, have prospered under the stable government established by Great Britain. The products of the West, all the modern scientific developments, have been introduced. And when it is remembered that India has three hundred millions of population, it is the cheapest governed country in the world. India has to pay for the army within its borders, it pays government officials, and at the end of twenty-five or thirty years of work has to provide them or their families with pensions; but the treasury of Great Britain does not profit by one cent because India is under the British crown.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN SOUTH AMERICA

All who are interested in religious education in South America will be glad to hear the report of the first tour made by Rev. George P. Howard, as Sunday school secretary for that continent:

"My first visit was to Tandil, a flourishing city of about 10,000 inhabitants, situated to the south of Buenos Aires and about a night's railway journey. The brethren of the Evangelical Union (an English Missionary Society) were holding their annual meeting at that time. They gave me two full days and evenings out of their program and we had a great time. They were eager for help. I had a hard time getting away from them, and had to promise to return soon for a second visit. I gave them several addresses on the modern Sunday school; organized and led a model class, and led a Round Table discussion at which they brought up many of their problems. My exhibit trunk was a great feature.

"Great interest was awakened in teacher-training, and several classes were in process of formation when I left. I took orders for thirty copies of the new Spanish teacher-training book, 'The Normal Manual,' published by the American Tract Society. I have had a thorough examination of this book made by some of our leaders here on the field, and it has been found very satisfactory. The names of all who enroll in the teacher-training classes are to be sent to me. I will keep a record of them with the grades as they are examined, and at the end of the course, give them the World's Sunday School Association diploma. From a number of churches, requests have come that I visit them as soon as possible, and help them reorganize their Sunday schools. Everything, therefore, looks promising. I only wish there were two or three of me!"

MOSLEM YOUNG PEOPLE EAGER FOR BIBLE STUDY

In the center of the Niel Delta lies Tanta, a city of 70,000, largely Moslem. In one of the poorest quarters of this city a Sunday school has been started for the children gathered from the streets. Rev. Stephen Trowbridge, Sunday school secretary for work among Moslems, describes a recent visit to this school:

"The upper floor of a house has been rented, and we found every classroom full to overflowing with Mohammedan boys and girls. When this work first started, the children who came were of the poorest and could not read a line, but recently some very bright boys from the Government Schools have been attending. They also are Moslems, and as Sunday is one of the regular school days, they came directly from their classes to this Sunday school. I saw a number of them with their Korans tightly clasped under their arms listening most intently to the lesson, which was from the Book of Acts. Some of the questions they answered with quick intelligence, although they know almost nothing about the Bible as yet."

"Another evidence of interest in Bible study;" writes Mr. Trowbridge, "is found in the girls' college, Cairo, which is under the direction of the American Mission. Never in the history of the college has there been such a demand for the Bible. Moslem, Jew and Christian alike come saying, 'Please send for a Bible for me.' A new Syrian teacher said that the thing which impressed her most in this college is that, when she looks over the crowded room full of girls at Chapel time, she cannot tell from the earnest faces which are Moslem, Jewish or Christian, for all are equally attentive, eager and responsive. Pray that many of these dear girls may have the courage to declare themselves followers of Jesus!"

THE WORLD CURSE

Sir Henry Johnston, the explorer, published in the London Daily News of July 23 a striking indictment of alcohol as a world-wide curse. In part, he said:

"I suppose in course of time I have become a fanatic in regard to the drinking of distilled spirits or of brandied wines, because I am intensely interested in the British Islands and the British Empire, and wish to see both prosperous, happy, healthy and efficient, because in Central Africa I found Alcohol far harder to fight than the Arabs; because in West Africa I found Alcohol the main cause of quarrels between the natives and the white man, between the natives themselves, the chief stimulant of horrors like cannibalism and 'Were-lleopardry,' secret poisonings, and the foulest intricacies of fetish worship, the principal cause of laziness amongst the blacks, or deadly ill-health amongst the whites; because in South Africa I knew only too well that the quarrels between British and Boers were almost entirely conflicts between Scottish or Irish whisky and Cape brandy, and that distilled alcohol was the one overmastering incitement to the native to rape, rob, revolt and ravage; because I saw in India, and in the employment of the Sikh and Indian Muhammedan in East Africa, what serious damage the spread of alcoholic habits was causing among Oriental populations—the white man's example being the ally of the distiller; because I have seen the same in Egypt and in Algeria; because I know that just as the Jameson Raid was provoked, conceived, born and miscarried in alcohol, so were the Ceylon Riots and many a Kuli disturbance in Malaysia (according to the complaints of Planters' Associations).

"I saw this mischievous traffic first in 1882, when I certainly had an open mind and a horror of the goody-goody, when, in my anxiety to be free from sentimental trammels, I was prone, rather than otherwise to take the anti-missionary point of view. I saw it some years later as both Consul and Administrator, and never ceased to inveigh against the mischief alcohol was working among blacks and whites alike. My attacks on alcohol in Africa have continued from 1885 without intermission.

"If the liquor traffic were prohibited, the loss of freight to the shipping companies would soon be made up by the great increase in exports from a sober, industrious and well-populated Africa."

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM

Mexican Protestant churches observe a Bible Day when study of the Bible is emphasized, and in the City of Mexico a week is devoted to the object.

A marked movement away from the Roman Church is in progress among the Poles in the United States, owing largely to the encouragement of the reading of the Bible by them.

A special campaign for teacher-training is to be pushed this autumn by the Sunday school leaders of the evangelical denominations, classes being formed for the preparation of future teachers, conferences being held for those now teaching, and attention being given to literature for teachers. The details will be left for the local church to arrange.

In view of the centennial of its misisonary society next year the Methodist Episcopal church has adopted an extensive programme calling for the raising of forty million dollars for foreign work and an equal sum for home work within five years, together with comprehensive study and effort in all parts of the home field, embracing more than 9,500 different projects.

QUIET HOUR DEPARTMENT

Anent Our Quiet Hour Month and Sunday, December 29th

To the Christian Endeavorers of The Brethren Church:

I speak to you through these columns a message which I trust God may use to help glorify his name through us as Endeavorers.

Let us remind ourselves that the "Quiet Hour" means the setting apart of a regular time each day for quiet meditation and direct communion with God. This little visit with him each day shall include the reading of the Holy Bible, prayer, and meditation upon the truths of life here and in eternity.

As leaders of Endeavor work we cannot hope to lead others into the light and fellowship of Christ until we have it ourselves. We cannot share "Christ" with our fellow men before we have learned to commune with him. Sharing the blessings depends upon how fully we have had a realization of it.

When our brothers and sons and friends come home to again fill their place in our societies, will they see on our faces and hearts, marks which signify that we have lived close to God.

If we have forgotten our pledge, they will soon know it. If we have the spirit-filled vision, they will see joy in our hearts with a yearning to make known our Christ to those who come saying, "Sirs, we would see Jesus."

Nothing so gives joy and satisfaction to life as the realization that we have done God's will. True joy is found in service. The joyful life is a good tonic. It is the life that wins friends. The pessimist, sad and grumbling, might as well surrender to his opponent because he is a repellant force instead of attractive.

He who lives with such a standard as,—"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I hereby enroll as a comrade of the Quiet Hour, and will make it the rule of my life to set apart at least fifteen minutes every day, if possible in the early morning, for quiet meditation and direct communion with God," will manifest the traits of a Christian character. He will posess a joyful spirit and a forgiving nature such as will be influential among all people.

You and I are in C. E. service for one purpose, to glorify his name. Will you not become a Comrade of the Quiet Hour that we may work together?

E. M. RIDDLE,
Supt. of Quiet Hour Department.
Linwood, Maryland.

DECEMBER AND QUIET HOUR

Wide-awake Endeavorers are availing themselves of the advantages resulting from adherence to the monthly service themes announced by the United Society. During December we are asked to devote our efforts to the advancement of the Quiet Hour Department.

From the inception of our organization pronounced emphasis has been given to the cultivation of worshipful attitudes and the development of devotional habits. Appreciating the value of daily Bible study and prayer the leaders challenged the young people with a plea for at least fifteen minutes each day to be consecrated to reverent meditation and sincere devotion, assuring them that God would graciously reveal himself unto those who sought him in private communion.

In consequence of this appeal there are thousands who gladly testify to the innumerable benefits accruing from the observance of the Quiet Hour. Now they are called upon anew to restate their testimonies with fresh emphasis that others may come to know the joy and strength derived from a daily committal of their all to the Lord, for he has promised to keep those whose mind is stayed upon him in perfect peace. Aside from the opportunity of serving their friends individually Brethren Comrades have the privilege of helping to attain Goal 6 of our Four-Year Challenge, which calls for 2500 Comrades by 1920. This may be fully realized by a general enrollment of not less than two-fifths of our membership. Let societies set themselves to this worthy task at once.

Our New Superintendent

Herewith we present the likeness of Brother F. M. Riddle, who was elected superintendent of the Quiet Hour department in the late General Conference. He is a Hoosier by birth, and has continued to maintain the enthusiasm characteristic of Indiana Endeavorers. On the completion of the regular divinity course in Ashland College he graduated with Class '14 and assumed at once the pastoral care of the Linwood, Maryland church where he has earned the confidence of his own people and the Conference of which they are a part, he being at present the secretary and statistician. He not only believes in Christian Endeavor, but the particular department whose activities he has been called to direct. He earnestly hopes to close the month's activities with the enrollment of a large number of new Comrades. Unto this end we commend his messages and solicit the undivided support of all our workers.

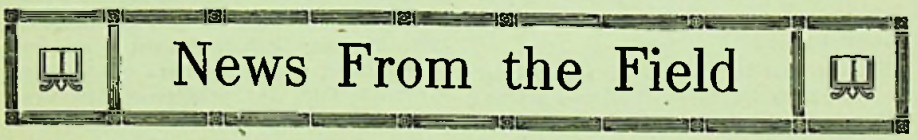
CARELESS MARY

By Eveline Smith

Mary was a very careless little girl. Her hat and coat and playthings were always strewn over the floor. Mary thought it too much trouble to ever put them in the right place.

"Now Mary," said her mother, "I am going over to Mrs. McClaren's for a few minutes and I want you to pick up things and have the room in order 'till I get back."



"Alright," answered Mary, and she started to work. She was only half way through with her task when she heard Fido scratching at the door. "Oh Fido, that you? Come, let's run out to the orchard and have a swing." Mary jumped into the hammock and Fido snuggled down beside her. Before they knew what had happened Mary and Fido were sound asleep.

Suddenly Mary was standing before two houses. One was marked in big letters, "House of Good Order," the other "Topsy Turvy House." The sentinel in front of "Topsy-Turvy House" beckoned to Mary. "Go on in; they are looking for you." Mary rapped on the door and the door whirled round and round and whisked Mary into a room full of children. There were boys and girls with dirty faces and dirty and torn clothes. An old witch, dressed in black, was wielding her broomstick and ordering them about. Chairs and tables were overturned and books scattered over the floor.

The old witch called dinner and they all rushed to the table. The table cloth was torn and dirty and drawn half off and the dishes were broken. Mary tried to get a bite but each time someone would knock it off her spoon. She was very hungry so she told the old witch she wanted to go home. "Why, aren't you careless Mary? You belong here." "Yes, I know but I want to go home," said Mary. The old witch then opened a door and pushed Mary out into the yard, "Well good bye; you will have to go out through the "House of Good Order."

Mary found herself in a beautiful garden; flowers were blooming everywhere and children, neat and clean, were playing games and swinging. A maid with a white cap and apron called to Mary and showed her into a room all painted white. "I will wash and comb you," said the maid, and there are your clothes in the closet and put the books on the shelf and then you may go and play with the children.

Mary was just starting out to play with the children when she felt Fido's paw on her forehead. "Oh Fido, I must have been dreaming. Come quick. I must run and finish cleaning up the house before Mother gets back. I never want to be Careless Mary again."

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Doubtless some have wondered why there has been nothing in the Evangelist from Lost Creek for some time. There has been a reason which is very commonly known. Since October 8, the time the "flu" ban went into effect here, we have been mighty busy with a new kind of work. Fortunately though, we have not suffered so much with it in our own home. Our baby was the first to have it, then the writer, then Mr. Akens and lastly Miss Strode. And fortunately also, we were not all down at the same time. Your servant the writer, suffered a relapse by going out too soon, which kept him in much longer than he would have been otherwise. We have all gotten along very well, with no complications of any kind, for which we are thankful. Mrs. Drushal and our two boys have not taken it yet, and we now believe they will not. Miss Brumbaugh has been called home by sickness there.

How little we know about the future and what it has in store for us. Up to the time that the ban went into effect we had the promise of the best year yet, in different ways, in spite of some unfortunate happenings. But here we have now been completely held up, and will be so until January 1, at least, as the ban has not been lifted in Breathitt county, and may not be for a week or two, as there are a number of cases yet. But the prospect is now better, and there is good hope that the ban may be lifted by the middle of December.

One of the things that will help much to redeem much of the apparent loss in the year's work is to finish the school work for the rest of the year, beginning January 1. But before we can do that we must have a helper that has not been here yet this year. This helper is a matron, for the dormitory, a very much needed place to be filled. And then a mighty close second to this, is a nurse. Your servants here on the field, after much prayer and consideration of the matter, cannot see the advisability of opening school for the rest of the year, and this our big part of the year too, if there is not a woman somewhere in the brotherhood who will answer the call and serve the Lord at Riverside as Matron. The qualifications are: Age, anywhere between twenty and fifty years; enough knowledge of cooking to get meals for about sixty-five boarders; some ability as a disciplinarian and somewhat of a mixer. Then also there is a very grave possibility that we would be required to have the nurse on the job, and even if it should not be required THE SITUATION DEMANDS THE NURSE BY ALL MEANS.

During the early autumn there have appeared in the Evangelist appeals for a matron. Then also Brethren Carpenter and Bowman have done much to find a matron. Yet to date there has been no response to these different appeals. The situation is now just as grave and serious as it can be. As stated above we do not think it advisable to open up for the school work the rest of the year, IF THERE IS NOT A WOMAN HERE TO ACT AS MATRON, AND ALSO THE SO MUCH NEEDED NURSE. If we cannot open for the rest of the year, it means much loss in different ways, some of which will be hard to overcome later on. These statements are not made in the nature of a threat in any way at all. We feel that the Brotherhood should know what it means or may mean not to have this help we have been asking for, and which help is as vital in the work here as the bank cashier is to the bank. We are prayerfully in earnest about the matter, AND WE HOPE AND PRAY THAT SOME WOMAN OR WOMEN WILL ARISE, AND SAY, "LORD HERE AM I, SEND ME." May it be so, and will someone respond to the URGENT NEED. It will be necessary that either Brother Carpenter, or the writer know if such help can be had by about December 18th.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Somerset Street Brethren

We scarcely know where to begin or what to say relative to the various activities of the church. We began the fall work with a bright outlook. Every feature of the work showed signs of taking on new life. The church services were the best I have had for years from the standpoint of attendance and uplift. The Sunday school was on the increase. Our Rally Day services eclipsed all former experiences of my ministry. We went gloriously over the top. Attendance over 500 and offering $268.00. It was Johnstown's biggest and best Rally Day to date. A prominent member of a local church said, "I never saw anything like it in any church in Johnstown."

The "flu" came and we have been marking time ever since The church was closed by order of the State Board of Health for four Sundays. We opened two Sundays and were again compelled, because of another outbreak of the "flu" to close. Another two weeks of waiting and anxiety has gone by and we hope the disease will let up so we can open next Sunday.

We are all anxious to get started again in the work. Our program for the winter has been completely upset to date. It has been a serious loss to use in our work from many angles, and one which I fear will be reflected through the whole year.

Our church choir has been doing splendid work this fall, under the efficient leadership of L. B. Furry. We have a wealth of musical talent and it is to the credit of those who possess it it that it is being cheerfully given to the church.

At the quarterly business meeting in August the pastor's salary was increased and at a very recent meeting another substantial increase was added. The Brethren here cheerfully share their prosperity with their pastor and surely this is commendable.

A splendid young man was recently baptized and received into the church. I pray that the loss in time, and life, through the plague, may result to our good, by an awakening of the church.

J. FREMONT WATSON.

DOINGS AT DAYTON

Dear members of the Evangelist family, when we gave you our last communication the "flu" ban was on, but there have been some happenings since then, to recount, of interest to you. Seven members of the First Brethren, were claimed by "influenza" and over 100 have been suffering from the disease.

Our revival campaign with Brother L. S. Bauman in charge could not open until November 10th, and he had to close his work for us on the 24th ,to meet other dates. The "flu" scare kept up its gate for more than half that period and was quite an embarrassment to the attendance, especially keeping the young people from service. Just when he had to leave us the crowd became more normal, but a good interest was maintained after getting started. Great messages were given but few unconverted people could be gotten into the services to benefit by them except the last few nights and the closing day! The church decided to continue with the pastor, Brother Cobb in charge, and a good interest continued until the close with a Love Feast and Communion on Wednesday evening, December 4th. The immediate results were more than twenty accessions of which eighteen persons have been baptized, and a number came by relation and others by reconsecration and the membership has been greatly revived. Notwithstanding, quite a number of "influenza" cases among the membership at this writing, the communicants at communion feast were over 300, more than had been expected because of a recent outbreak of the "flu" and a threat by the health authorities to close the schools again for a period.

Rev. Cobb, our pastor has captured the congregation by his unique methods of conducting services, united brevity with heroic Bible exegesis and touching the vital points for lasting impressions upon both saint and sinners. He is about to organize a number of classes along various lines of Bible study to begin on or before January first, to interest the young as well as all others of the attendants upon church services of which you will be told during his stay with us at the First Brethren church. We are anticipating rousing results from his efforts in our midst. Though we had the "flu" and other hindrances to content against, our Financial Secretary informs me that he received more money from the membership during the month of November, to his surprise, than any other month of the calendar year, for the general expenses of the church budget. The new pastor seems to be well up along this phase, as well as other lines of encouraging the active and latent membership of the congregation. Our "Boys" are beginning to return from the camps and "over seas" for which we thank God and take courage, in these dark days and trying ordeals that are testing the real Christian manhood of our churches and religious enterprise. May the Lord give us wisdom and the guidance of his Holy Spirit and Word that we may prove ourselves valiant "Soldiers of the Cross" and not disappoint him with our effort to maintain his cause in our day and generation, is our wish and prayer for those of us who have enlisted in his army for victory.

WILLIAM C. TEETER,
Publicity Agent,
Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 5th, 1918.

MAPLE GROVE REVIVAL

On November 5th we began a revival effort at this church and continued two weeks and two days with A. E. Thomas, the Welsh Evangelist in charge.

The first part of the revival the weather was nice but the last week it continued to rain every day and the "flu" got such a hold on the community that we decided it was best to discontinue the services. Brother Thomas worked very hard and preached the Old Book without fear or favor and much good was no doubt accomplished.

Two came by letter and the church was much revived. No doubt the good seed that was soown will bring forth a rich harvest later.

J. L. KIMMEL, Pastor.

"THAT VIRGINIA COUPLE"

Some years ago a young married couple moved to a town in Virginia, bought resident lots, for which they paid the cash. They built on them a nice two-story residence, for which they went in debt. With their limited financial income they discovered it a difficult matter indeed to make a living, pay their interest, and cancel any part of their indebtedness. As they were Christians and members of the church, they resolved to adopt the tithing system and give the tenth of their income to the church. Their resolutions were put into execution, and their donations to the church were made. Immediate prosperity attended all their undertakings, and in a few years their home was not only paid for, but handsomely furnished with the best furniture; and in their testimony that they published in a Chicago paper a few weeks ago they said: "We have learned a valuable lesson, that nine-tenths goes farther now than ten-tenths used to when we did not divide with God." To give is to get is the declaration of the Bible itself, for it says: "Give, and it shall be given you."

The above statement from a young married couple can be duplicated hundreds of times. And thousands of testimonies from individual tithers have the same ring. A prominent banker says: "Since God owns all I possess and has been good enough to allow me the use of the nine-tenths, I am not going to be mean enough to embezzle His own one-tenth in the future as I have in the past. I can now see what Jesus meant when he said of tithing, 'These ought ye to have done.'"

How true and to the point is this straight out word from "The Tither:" "The congregation which allows the Lord to have his own sacred tithe, will not want for funds for church work. Christ will then have the honor of supporting his own Bride with his own money, and not with our donations. And he will make the nine-tenths go as far in the home support as the ten-tenths would go, for statistics have proven that fact. Yes, it is only by our obedience to the undying principle that we may receive the fulness of the financial promises of the Bible."

If the members of Brethren churches would but keep hands off of God's holy tithes! Let every member pay God what he says is his own and belongs to him as interest on what he has loaned to us and the results would surprise the most conservative and doubtful. Not only would the treasury of the churches and of the various church auxiliaries and of the mission boards be full to overflowing, but the spiritual life of the church would be multiplied many fold and multitudes of souls would be won to Christ and the borders of his kingdom would be enlarged speedily and the coming of the King would be hastened. God's way is always best. "The tithe is the Lord's."

GEO C. CARPENTER.

FROM BERLIN, PA

The church here has just had the pleasure of a visit from Brother Beachler, who is soliciting endowment for Ashland College.

I call it a pleasure for two reasons,—First, he is the most gentlemanly solicitor that it has been my lot to meet in many a long day. He knows how to present the matter and to do his work so as to leave friends behind him, instead of enemies as so many solicitors have done in many good causes in the past; Second, he preaches sermons of a very fine type, sermons that are sure to anchor any congregation more firmly to the Word of God. There is no uncertain sound about the messages that he delivers.

Much good as the endowment will do for the church, it is my firm belief that the sermons will do even more good. The churches receive a double blessing from his visit,—the blessing of learning to give, and the blessing of the doctrines taught. Then he sows the seeds of a desire to educate in the minds of the young men and women, and he inspires the whole brotherhood to unite their efforts and stand back of the college and help it to enlarge its usefulness continually as the future years come and go. His mission is a worthy one, and every church ought to receive him with the most cordial welcome.

The pressing need is for a matron and nurse for the three months of school following the holidays. Surely there are somewhere in the Brethren church those who can and will give themselves to this great service for the brief session of the winter term. Write us at once if you will consider the work. God is calling someone, somebody, somewhere, is that somebody you?

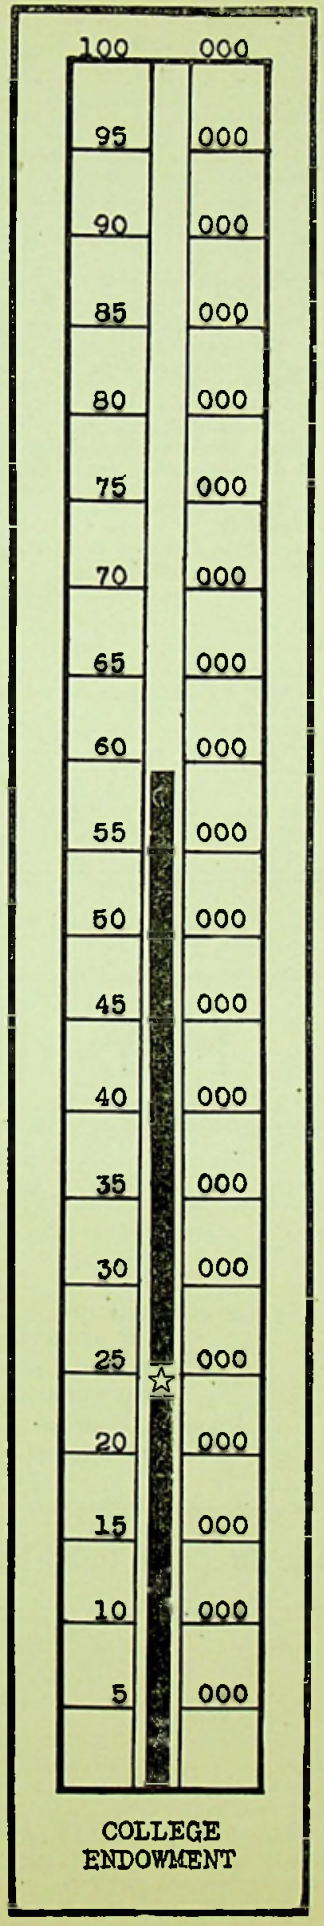
ALBERT TRENT,
General Secy-Treas.

RIO CUARTO, ARGENTINA

Since writing last for the Evangelist we have baptized eleven more converts and celebrated another love feast. We also hold a Temperance Silver Medal contest in which eight of our young men participated. Eighty-six of the people present signed the temperance pledge against the use of liquor and tobacco and impurity. Their names will be enrolled in the National Temperance League of Argentina.

Our Sunday schools are growing as is also the Christian Endeavor.

Brother and Sister Bock have now gone to their new field of labor in Carlota, about sixty miles to the east of us. They will write of their work there. We have a good house, centrally located with a number of influential people already sympathetic there and we may expect encouraging reports. As yet we have no word from the General Conference but hope to have news soon.



Rio Cuarto, October 22, 1918.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

We began our canvass in the Allentown church Friday night, November 29th and closed Sunday morning, December 1st. And though our stay here was short, the results, all things considered, were "long." I did not find a large congregation here but I did find a loyal and earnest people. This was evidenced by the fine attendance we had at each of our services, and the splendid response that was given to the cause of endowment. The Allentown movement has had to fight desperately for its existence from the very beginning, against a veritable bulwark of Lutherinism and Reformedism. Nor is it likely the field ever will be easy for our people at that place: But they seem to have a faith and a determination which is equal to the fight they have to make.

Brother A. L. DeLozier is the pastor at Allentown, and he is greatly beloved of his people. And not only is he rendering able service to his congregation as preacher and pastor, but he is also rendering valuable service to the Allentown High school by teaching several of the languages. Incidentally he has become very fluent in his use of the Pennsylvania Dutch language—a language still "somewhat" in use in and around Allentown. It would not surprise me if, the next time DeLozier appears on the National Conference Program, he would talk to us in Pennsylvania Dutch.

Well, I had a most enjoyable time during my stay in Allentown, which is a very clean and beautiful city. And thanks to the DeLoziers, and the Harleys and the Fehnels and the Turners and the Shaffers and the Yoders and the Klines and the Kamons and all the others for their noble response and their kind hospitality. When I left there was $775.00 in sight. I think DeLozier will run it to $800. I repeat, all things considered this is very good.

The next report will come from Philadelphia.

COMMUNION NOTICE

The Nappanee, Indiana Brethren church will hold its semi-annual communion services on Thursday evening, December 19th. An invitation to all Brethren within reach to attend the service is extended.

C. E. KOLB, Pastor.

Marriages

HOFFSES-BROWER—Marriage ceremony of Mr. A. K. Hoffses and Miss Mamie Brower was solemnized at the parsonage on October 5. Miss Brower is a member of the Brethren church of Dayton, Ohio May heaven's choicest blessing ever be with them.

GIBSON-CLOGETT—Gerald O. Gibson and Miss Ida May Clogett were married at the parsonage on October 5. Mr. Gibson is a son of Brother and Sister Gibson of this city. May God's richest blessings accompany these young people throughout life.

H. H. WOLFORD.

STEELE-FREED—Mr. Vern Steele and Lillian Freed, both of North Liberty, Indiana, were united in holy matrimony by the groom's pastor, the writer, on the evening of October 9 at the parsonage. These are excellent young people, and it is our wish that the blessings of heaven shall attend their journey through life.

C. C. GRISSO.

Our Dead

RITTENHOUSE—Mrs. Anna S., wife of Ross Rittenhouse, departed this life at Ashland, Ohio, on October 15, after a brief illness occasioned by the influenza epidemic. She was a member of the Lutheran church, but attended services in the College Chapel and shared membership in the Sisters' Society by whose members she was greatly loved. May the Lord graciously comfort the bereft husband and all who mourn her departure.

J. A. GARBER.

STOFFER—John E., was born in Knox township, Columbiana County, Ohio, June 19, 1870; departed this life November 4th, 1918, aged 48 years, 4 months and 15 days. He united with the Brethren church in early life and continued a loyal servant of Jesus Christ until he was taken home. He leaves a wife, whose maiden name was Miss Elizabeth Ruff; three children, Thelma, Otis and Leland; his father, Jacob Stoffer; three brothers and two sisters. Funeral services in the home and interment in the Union Cemetery at North Georgetown, his pastor, the writer, officiating.

GEORGE S. BAER.

SELL—Henry Sell, for many years one of the best known men of Jackson and Taylor townships, died October 23, 1918, at his home near Mineral Point, as the result of a stroke of paralysis, aged 65 years. Early last spring a leg was badly crushed by a road-making machine and Mr. Sell spent many weeks in a local hospital. Soon after his discharge from the hospital and while he was on the road to recovery, he was injured in a runaway in which he lost the sight of one eye and suffered internal injuries. It was believed that he had fair chances of recovery until he was stricken by paralysis.

Mr. Sell was born in Somerset county, May 22, 1852, the son of Peter and Catharine Sell. He came to this section when a young man and for many years was a prominent figure in the Jackson-East Taylor section, being active in politics and a more active member of the Brethren church. He was an active pioneer in the Progressive Brethren church in this section, a loyal churchman and the friend of all the ministers who served Brethren churches in the Conemaugh valley. For thirty-five years he was a sturdy, zealous defender of the Brethren faith; he was a good man, a good neighbor and a true friend.

Besides a host of friends who mourn his loss, he is survived by four sons, four daughters, eighteen grandchildren, four brothers and four sisters.

The funeral service was conducted by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church.

DORSEY—Monroe Dorsey of Union Bridge Maryland passed away October 13, 1918 near his home. He was stricken with the dreadful epidemic while at his place of work. He was a young man of fine character, faithful and true, and a member of the Linwood Brethren church. Age 22 years, 10 months, 18 days. He leaves to mourn, a wife and twin daughters. Brief services conducted by the undersigned.

J. P. Garver, E. M. Riddle.

GRINDER—Leonard Grinder died at his home in Union Bridge, Maryland, October 26, 1918, aged 29 years, 5 months, 19 days. In the year 1908 he united with the Brethren church at Linwood. As a result of a disease when a child he was left a cripple. He died of influenza. Services by E. M. Riddle.

WILTSHIRE—Ellen Smith Wiltshire was born near Surrellton, Pennsylvania, March 1st, 1853. Died near Macy, Indiana October 29, 1918 at the age of 64 years, 7 months and 18 days. She was united in marriage to Horace Wiltshire July 12th, 1871. To this union eleven children were born. Four died in infancy. The others she raised to manhood and womanhood. Her great desire was to see her children all married and in homes of their own. About 33 years ago she, with her husband united with the Brethren church. She leaves to mourn her departure her husband and 7 children, with 14 living grandchildren. Funeral services by the undersigned.

D. A. HOPKINS.

FENZEL—Anna Edith Fenzel, daughter of Brother and Sister William Fenzel of the Brighton church, departed this life October 14, 1918. She was a few days over twenty years of age. She graduated from High school in 1917. Remaining at home to help her mother for one year she then entered the Lutheran hospital at Fort Wayne, in September of this year for training as a nurse. She was stricken with influenza and despite the care of the best physicians and nurses did not recover. She had endeared herself to the entire hospital corps which esteem was evidenced by a most beautiful floral tribute. She was a member of the Brighton Brethren church, and after training as a nurse expected to offer herself as a foreign missionary. Her last testimony for Christ was that it was glorious to die when a Christian since death must come.

The parents and sister are bereft of a loving daughter and sister and the church of a young life dedicated to its service. May God richly bless the father, mother and sister. Funeral services by the writer, assisted by Rev. Wood of the Howe Presbyterian church. Services in Methodist church near the rural home of Brother and Sister Fenzel.

rialistic skill, their materialistic philosophy seemed to be overcoming the nations. Hardy in confidence, they struck, struck with the weight of forty years' preparedness.

"But not in Belgium, nor in France, nor in Servia, nor on the shamed seas could they defeat the Power that rose to meet them. Neither the stricken fields nor the reddened oceans gave them back victory. Ever new forces rose to hurl them back and the solid line of the struggling democracies bent and swayed but would not break. Then came the turn, and four months were enough.

"Autocracy and militarism are dead. They are dead because they had no inner life. Revealed, they are utterly put to shame, made the subject of the scorn and ridicule of the world. It is that fact—the shame—that has killed them in the day and hour of their failure. Their arch-priest dares not face the ruin he wrought and runs away. That is their end."

WHITE GIFTS FOR THE KING

Acting upon the principle that it is more blessed to give than to receive, the up-to-date Sunday schools have taught their children and their grown-up members as well that the Christmas season is not so much a time when they should be looking for friends and relatives to make them valuable but unnecessary presents as it is a time that they should be looking for opportunities to help the really needy, the poor and those who have not the privileges of the gospel, and that the money and gifts they otherwise would bestow upon friends who have no need should be bestowed as "White Gifts to the King" by giving them where they will be really doing the Master service.

It should be kept in mind at all times that the service rendered to Christ's little ones is accepted as direct personal service to him. So as the Brethren churches and Sunday schools hold their Christmas services this year they should ever keep in mind that one of the best ways to celebrate the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem is to tell the story of this wonderful birth with all its significance to those who have not yet learned of the salvation that came to Israel and to all the world through this child, and by making provision to support the workers that God has called out into this great harvest field to do the work that some of the rest of us are not prepared or are not able to do. Thus the offerings of our Sunday schools are to be brought to the feet of this Holy Child and presented as "white gifts" unto the King through the service they may render through his name. Every Brethren Sunday school should have some part in this great work at this time and thus be sure that they are doing those things that are pleasing to him. In spite of the great advance of the world in all lines of civilization we yet feel that there never was a greater need to tell the story that was first told to the Shepherds upon the Judean plains than at this very moment. The whole world needs to be told right now that "in Bethlehem a Savior is born," and it needs to be told the story in a way that will reach the hearts of those who so much need this Savior.

One of the strangest things of the age is that in the very land that gave to the world this Savior the greatest suffering prevails after nearly two thousand years have passed by in which the story should have been so perfectly and so lovingly told that all the world would have been brought to his feet ere this. In the far East, even though the guns of war have been silenced and devastating hordes of militarists are no longer crushing out everything that has life in this sacred land, the pangs of hunger were never more keen and the chilling blasts of winter never found more helpless victims than now among the orphaned children of this devastated land. In January an effort will be made among all the churches and Sunday schools of America to raise a vast sum of money to prevent such orphans as these represented on this page from dying from actual starvation. We may not be able to do much, but we should remember that "even a cup of cold water" given to a thirsty child shall not lose its reward, when given in the name of the Babe of Bethlehem, but cold water will not keep the orphan children of Armenia and the far East from starvation; good, hot broth will be necessary to do that. Let us not forget the great needs of the world as we celebrate this Christmas season.

From the Editor's View-Point

Confession Before Men

An expression of appreciation is one of the things in which a great many otherwise good people lack. One may feel in the heart an appreciation for some helpful act of kindness, but too often it is only taken for granted that these feelings will be understood and recognized and no effort is made to give expression to them. Especially is this true of the American people who are a rather undemonstrative class. It is altogether different with a great many Asiatic and European people who are more than free in their expressions of gratitude and appreciation of a kindly deed done.

When America went to the help of the European Allies who were seemingly driven to the wall, but still it was their backs that were to the wall, no doubt many people said to themselves the nations of Europe will never recognize nor admit the importance of the part we play in the conflict. There is a slight element of pride in practically every human breast that makes one somewhat reluctant to admit that without the help of another one would have failed, but we believe every one of the Allied nations recognizes that without the help of America Germany would have won the war, and we believe a great many people are willing to say amen to the declaration of one of the leaders of France who recently said, "America saved us." This is the confession before men that the French people are willing to make, but there is still a more important confession before men that all the world should make. There has been ONE who brought salvation to the entire world of mankind, and moreover it is the ONLY way of salvation, and yet the world is altogether too reluctant to accept the salvation that is offered, it is too reluctant to say, "Jesus saved us." Peter early declared that "there is none other name given among men whereby we must be saved," and the truth of this statement has been demonstrated over and over again throughout the centuries, and especially has it been demonstrated during the last four years, but still people and nations are both reluctant to admit it or to claim the salvation offered. It would have been regarded as one of the world's greatest follies had the Allies refused the salvation America offered them when she entered the great conflict against the barbarous autocracy and militarism that the German rulers were trying to foist on the whole world in the name of kultur. Freedom and democracy have been saved to the world, and especially to Europe by America's part in the war and the people know it and most of them are willing to confess it; also the human race has been saved from destruction by the love of God that sent his only Son to be its Savior, and what has been rescued of fallen humanity has been rescued by this power, then why should any people be reluctant to admit it? Why should any individual member of society refuse this salvation when offered to him? But if he does accept it as it is offered him, why should he not gladly accept the teaching of his Savior who said, "Him that confesseth me before men will I also confess before my Father and the Angels." This confession before men commits the one who makes it to a definite act or principle in life and is a source of individual strength. It should become a universal confession.

Everlasting Torment

The opinions held in regard to future punishment are almost as varied as the number of the individuals who hold to them. While some people may have very decided and clear convictions as to the nature and extent of this punishment there are a great many others who have not yet come to such positive conclusions.

While we are mostly willing to accept what the Bible teaches in regard to future punishment yet perhaps most of us want to give our own interpretation to that teaching, we want this liberty of the mind and in using it we sometimes fashion our beliefs and our interpretations to fit our desires. Not many people will deny the fact of retributive justice but a great many prefer to fashion it to suit themselves. There are a great many who hold to the belief that man gets "all the hell that is coming to him right here on this earth." While we will make no attempt to explain why so many and so great calamities seem to fall to the lot of some apparently good people and why some apparently wicked ones seem to get through the world unhindered and free from visible care; but we still hold to the belief that before God concludes his dealings with a human soul every unrighteous deed and every sin committed must be atoned for in some manner, and we are also willing to trust to the declaration of the Word that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin;" but we also believe there is much truth in a recent declaration of Lloyd George that "deferred castigation is the worst of all punishments:" The writer knows a young man who when a small boy did some act of mischief one Sunday morning at church and on the way home his father said, "I am going to spank you for that when we get home." And they had no sooner arrived home when the boy came to his father and said, "Well papa, if you are going to spank me do it quick." The contemplation of the punishment was worse than the punishment itself and the little philosopher sought the only relief that seemed possible to him and that was to get through with is as soon as he could. So we have an idea that the most everlasting torment that one could experience would be the consciousness that in the end, no matter how long that end may be deferred, atonement must be made for every misdeed done in the flesh.

When Laymen Preach

Just a few days ago we saw in one of our exchanges a criticism of the old doctrine—"Lutheran pulpits for Lutheran ministers," and we are reminded that not only are there those who hold that their pulpits should never be mounted by men except of their own faith, but also that there are a great many other people who hold that only preachers should preach, but still there are multitudes more who will man may minister to the needs of the world without becomgive greater heed to a sermon by a layman than they will to one preached by any of the greatest theologians of the day. We do not say this condition is ideal but we do know that it is very real, and we are not going to say it is without its good points.

We have no thought that the church could get along without its ministry or that the world would be just as well off if there were none to don the clerical garb, but we do say that forces of the ministry have been greatly augmented by the assistance they have received from laymen who have felt called to give to the world messages from God. A laying a minister in the commonly accepted manner, and as such people listen to his teaching, and we have an idea that just now the common run of mankind will listen more readily to what Marshal Foch has to say about the Bible than they will to what Shailer Matthews has to say, and the great Marshal's words: "The Bible is certainly the best preparation you can give an American soldier going into battle to sustain his magnificent ideal and faith." The puny critics of the Word of God that have arisen in the last generation should be hushed into the silence of the tomb by these words.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

BY R. F. PORTE

At this appropriate season and also wonderful time in the world's history it seems to me that the function of the ministerial office should be vigorously exercised in teaching the place of Jesus as Prince of Peace. We make a very serious mistake, as ministers, when we allow ourselves to be a mere relay station for political views. It is the duty of the church to teach the world God's plan concerning man's destiny and our duty to God's plan for the world. The pulpit is not a political forum or place to disseminate social doctrines. We have one certain message which we are to carefully give the world and when we have done that God will take care of the increase. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the one certain rock in this world of uncertainties. We should deal with the original message not with the so-called moral experiences that men claim to have accumulated through the 2000 years of the Christian era. There are many good people who hope to see a brighter future based on the experiences of the past. Human experience is very uncertain. I am glad that the religion of Jesus is not based on human experience. Eight years ago we were told that there would be no more war, the world had grown sensible and would submit its disputes to arbitration, but we have just seen the world plunged into the bloodiest war of history. As far as man is concerned let it be remembered that man's good and man's evil are competitive and as one increases the other meets it and opposes it. We are today looking for an established peace and we all hope it may soon come, yet it seems to me that a peace established under any other authority but that of the true Prince of Peace will prove a failure. It will at least conflict with the Bible.

The Bible teaches that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is both the Savior of the world and the world's Prince of Peace to rule and therefore we cannot expect his rule until in scripture that the initial work of Jesus is that of Redeemer because sin is in direct conflict and opposition to his work of establishing a Kingdom. See Romans 2:5, 6; 3:17. The removal of sin from the hearts of men is the beginnnig of peace. If we want peace we also want the Prince of Peace to rule and therefore we cannot except his rule until his enemy is cast from the throne of your heart and mine. The preaching of the whole gospel is the supreme need of the world today. We have fed on theories and speculations until very often our so-called Christianity looks like a distant relative of the true teaching of the Christ. I want to insist upon the thought that if we accept Jesus as Savior we also should accept him as the Prince of Peace. We must do this to be really consistent. The child-like belief in the truth of the revealed Word will help us over many difficulties in our Christian experience. We have lost our grip upon God and his word largely because we have become anxious to walk alone instead of holding on to the hand of God as a child would hold to the hand of the parent. Our salvation depends upon a continuing faith. See I Peter 1:5. The Christian who maintains such a faith in God can face the future with certainty because the God who created all things and in whom is all power is able to make those who trust him victorious over sin. Such an experience is the beginning of real peace within, that shall manifest itself in our relations with others.

The idea of a true peace through the personal reign of Jesus should be universally accepted. I would make it stronger and say, it must be. If it took the personal Christ to conquer sin in me when he died on the cross certainly it will take the personal reign of the same Jesus to bring in true peace. Why is our thought about Jesus so often inconsistent? We hear the preaching about the establishment of Christ's Kingdom with little said about the King himself. It is our business as Christians to help establish the Kingdom of Christ which is a kingdom of righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. The establishment of that Kingdom depends upon the enthronement of Jesus in your heart and mine but that is not the personal reign of Jesus, that is Jesus dealing personally with you and me. It was the personal sight of Jesus on the shore of Galilee that caused Peter to say, "Depart from me for I am a sinful man." It was the personal sight of Jesus that humbled Saul on the Damascus road. The victory over the forces of sin must come when Jesus can step upon the throne made possible by the loyalty of his people. An impersonal religion has little interest for me. The only satisfactory solution to the cry we hear today for a "righteous peace" is a peace brought by a universal acknowledgement of Christ. This is impossible of course, but as Judas went to his own place so will those who fight against the Son of God. Can fallable man create an infallible and lasting peace? I wish we might heed the suggestion of Brother Rench in his editorial in Evangelist No. 45 and stop teaching merely general truths and teach the whole truth. Remember we must render account to God and our peace depends first on right relations with God and then we will enjoy right relations with our fellow-men.

The Kingdom of God

Matthew 6:10. Sermon preached by Charles H. Ashman, at opening of services after the influenza ban had been lifted in Sunnyside, Washington.

While earthly kingdoms are crumbling and falling about the heads of their rulers, it will be profitable for us to study prophecy concerning the Kingdom of God. Prophecy has thrown its light down through the centuries, indicating the trend of Gentile systems. In the vision of the image, it was revealed to Daniel what direction they could take. Contrary to the popular verdict, the tendency was downward from gold to silver, to brass, to iron, to iron mixed with clay, which would not adhere. History proves how true this prophetic vision was. Every system of man, upon being tested has failed. God has permitted these experiments of man, in which the chief characteristic is independence of God, to go on until he has seen fit to test them and reveal how weak and unreliable they are. But there is one Kingdom which we know is firm and eternal, the Kingdom of God. We desire to gain a Biblical conception of it this morning.

The promises of the Old Testament, like a mighty stream, are directed toward the Kingdom of God. To Abraham, God promised "In thy seed shall all the earth be blessed." The prophets beheld with annointed eyes and inspired hearts a kingdom of universal righteousness and peace. They foretold a condition of regenerated nature pouring her rich treasures into the laps of the people of God, instead of being controlled by ungodly monopolies and greedy real estate agents. They saw a time when the energies of the nations would no longer be sacrificed to the god of war, but consecrated to the Kingdom of God. Yes, they beheld more than this. They beheld, not only a Kingdom, but a King reigning in person. They foretold of the coming, not only of the Kingdom of Righteousness, but of "the Lord, our Righteousness." They gave promise, not only of a Kingdom of Peace, but of "the Prince of Peace." The Kingdom and the King cannot be separated from these Old Testament promises without doing violence to scripture.

The Kingdom note is strong in the New Testament. John the Baptist announced the approach of both the Kingdom and the King. The angels and wise men gave kingly honors at the birth of Christ. Christ began his ministry with this text, "The Kingdom is at hand." He performed kingly deeds throughout much of his ministry. But the Kingdom was rejected,—the King thorn-crowned and crucified. Yet, in the midst of it all, Christ claimed kingship and promised a Kingdom. But he spoke of a postponed Kingdom, best represented by the parable of the nobleman, who went away into a far country to receive for himself his kingdom and then to return. He told of the "mystery" of the church to come until the times of the Gentiles should be ripe. But he warned that we should not be deceived into thinking otherwise than that the Kingdom and King would surely rule o'er the earth in God's appointed time and manner.

All genuine Christians believe in some form of the Kingdom of God. They look for and believe in the ultimate victory of God and his Word. God cannot fail! God will not fail! "Thy Kingdom Come," must be answered or God mocks us in prayer. The promise that "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" must be fulfilled or the promises of God are vain. The prophecy that "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord" must come to pass or all prophecy is a delusion. We are forced to believe in some form of the Kingdom or reject the Word of the Lord. But there are varying and conflicting views concerning what constitutes this Kingdom, how, and when it will be established, etc.

The Traditional view teaches that the church is the Kingdom. If we accept it, we are asked to believe that in spite of the contradictory past and pessimistic present, the church will sometime wake up and usher in the Kingdom. She will some time bestir herself, to pray and pay and study and live and work enough that the Kingdom shall come gradually into actual existence. Into this dream has been woven the theory of organic church union. We are being told on every hand that one of the supreme benefits of the great conflict which we now hope is past will be that we will forget what we believe, cast aside all doctrine and on a purely humanitarian, socialistic, ethical platform join heart, hand, pocketbook, church house and all be ONE! Thus the Kingdom will become a reality. Let us faithfully consider this theory in the light of the Word of the Lord.

According to our understanding of this Word (and we have studied long and hard upon this point) the church is not the Kingdom of God. It is the herald, forerunner, John the Baptist of it, but not the Kingdom itself. The mission of the church is clearly defined in Acts 15:14, "Simeon hath declared how God for the first time did visit the Gentiles TO TAKE OUT OF THEM A PEOPLE FOR HIS NAME" She is the institution through which God is carrying on his elective process. He called Abraham, then Israel, now the church.

There is not a single command given to the church to convert the world or a single promise that in her day she should. She is commanded to EVANGELIZE, but not to CONVERT. She is to "preach the gospel to every creature," to preach "repentance and remissions of sins in his name AMONG ALL NATIONS, to "teach all nations," but nowhere is she told to expect universal acceptance of her preaching and teaching of the gospel. In fact Jeeus foretold the opposite. He drew a striking parallel between Noah's day and the end of this gospel day in Matthew 24: 37-38. Now Noah evangelized his generation but did not convert it. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the Son of Man."

The testimony of Jesus contained in the parables of Matthew 13 are supreme on this point. There are seven parables given and seven is the number for dispensational completeness, so we believe that the entire course of the gospel age until its end is here traced. In that of the sower we are told of a limited harvest of the world, not of a world harvest. In that of the wheat and tares we are informed that good and evil would be mingled together until the harvest. The mustard seed parable, we believe has been much abused and misinterpreted. It portrays the outward, organic but compromising growth of the church. The same birds that devoured the seed by the wayside, now come and lodge within the branches. Christ tells us previously that the birds represent the evil one. The difference between false teachers in early days and now is this:—John says that then they went out from them because they were not of them, but now they lodge in the branches of the church, stick their claws deep and you cannot drive them out. The parable of the leaven represents the secret, but impenetrating growth of apostasy within the church. Where in scripture is there any authority for any other interpretation of leaven than that it is evil? Always in scripture it represents evil, usually false doctrine. Three forms of leaven existed in Christ's time. The Leaven of the Pharisees which was formalism and hypocrisy; the leaven of the Sadducees, which was materialism; the leaven of Herod, which was worldliness. We have all three of these and others in the church today. Why were there three measures of meal? This interpretation has helped us, that it may represent the three divisions of the church, Greek, Roman, and Protestant. The parable of the treasure promises a redeemed Israel and that of the pear a redeemed church. Finally the judgment drag net comes, foretelling judgment at the close of this day of grace.

These parables plainly teach that through the gospel the universal Kingdom of God will not come.

Another view teaches the perpetual coming of the Kingdom and the King. Some say, "He is the COMING ONE." always coming, but never arriving. This theory is like that of "progressive evolution" which does not evolve. The same interpretation would have entirely destroyed belief in the personal coming of Christ in his first advent.

We believe that the Kingdom of God will come when the personal Christ comes to reign. Until then a distinction which will greatly aid in understanding of certain scriptures, needs to be made between the Kingdom of Heaven and the Kingdom of God. The Kingdom of Heaven is limited to the present stage of God's unfolding plan, while the Kingdom of God is universal, including all saints, angels, etc. The Kingdom of Heaven is the organic sphere of profession represented in the church, it may be real or false as the tares and wheat, while the Kingdom of God includes only those genuinely regenerated. The Kingdom of Heaven will be purged and merged into the Kingdom of God.

There seem to be five stages in the development of this Kingdom of God until it really is established. First, it was foretold and promised in the Davidic Covenant. Second, it was announced as "at hand," near, in the presence of its king, Christ. Third, it was rejected. Fourth it is heralded in the mystery form of the church. Fifth, it will be established universally in glory at the return of our Lord.

For the present, we must be busy in evangelization of the world. This is a gigantic task which has ever taxed the best efforts of the church. It is all she can do and more than she has ever done.

Preaching the Gospel

BY I. B. TROUT

Delivering the Sermon

When the minister gets in the pulpit he must preach. Preaching is more than reading a paper, however well the paper may have been prepared, and it is more than delivering an oration that has been written and afterward committed. Preaching is the delivery of the inspired Word of God to men in such a manner as to stir their will to set, through the agency of the intellect and the emotions. In order that this can be done several things must be borne in mind.

The minister must have a clear and harmonious conception of the scheme of doctrine and redemption as taught in the Bible. The minister must have such a ready knowledge of the doctrines of the Bible as to prevent him from contradicting himself, when he presents the message from widely different parts of the Word. There is great danger of a minister contradicting himself when he preaches on works and later delivers a sermon on salvation by grace. The Bible does not contradict itself, however much ministers may blunder in their efforts at setting forth the entire plan of redemption and salvation. Clearness and consistency are necessary in the delivery of sermons. The sermon must be delivered in such a manner as to address itself to the consciences of the auditors as well as their reason. The sermon that does not touch the consciences of men has missed the mark as much as the bullet that misses the target. Ministers must avoid merely shooting into space.

The sermon should be delivered in a natural, but serious tone of voice. It is largely the tone of voice that causes the average listener to say that, the sermon was spiritual. It is because of this fact that some ministers have cultivated the "ministerial tone of voice" for the pulpit. If some ministers would enter a store on Monday and ask to be shown a collar or a pair of socks in the same tone of voice that they used in the pulpit on Sunday, most of the clerks would feel like running and hiding, thinking that some lunatic had broken out of the insane asylum. It is not at all necessary to speak in the pulpit as if one war far down in some deep vat. Be natural, but serious. A proper use of the voice that God has given is all that is necessary. The proper use of the voice will soon give it the quality of tone and the volume that is most effective for any given minister.

Let me warn against a very common error which has wrecked many a good sermon. It is the unfortunate habit that ministers are apt to fall into, the habit of too rapid speaking and reading. The audience must have time, while the sermon is being delivered, to make the proper mental pictures of the truths and the imagery, in order that the points may make impressions that will remain in the mind after the sermon has been delivered, and thus cause the auditors to be able to put into practice the truths taught. If there is to be any rapid speaking during the delivery of the sermon, let it be at and near the close, and let it be in the hortatory part of the sermon. The minister who speaks too rapidly is wasting nearly all that he says. He reminds me of a gentleman who delivered an address in our Chautauqua this summer. The superintendent had previously warned us of the rapidity with which the gentleman could speak. Well, he came, he spoke, he shot out his words like a modern gatling gun, probably not quite fourteen hundred and forty per minute, but he sent them out very much faster than any one could succeed in getting them. The result was that some of us, who are not a little disposed to believe that we are able to understand lectures, went home wondering what he said. I think that what he said was good enough, judging from the reputation of the man, not from what he said, for I have never been able to catch up close enough to him to know what he said. However I wondered why the Association should send him out and have him sweat so much and work so hard, and have every one dodging so skillfully, lest there might be something dangerous in the noise that he made. Sermons should not be thus wasted. If the minister wants to sweat, let him take his sweat on Monday morning helping his good wife do the washing, but, when he preaches, let him do it so that his auditors can at least have the pleasure of following him close enough to know what he says. If the minister feels that he must go lively let him follow this timely advice:

"Begin low;
Proceed slow;
Rise higher;
Take fire;
When most impressed
Be self-possessed;
To spirit wed form;
Sit down in a storm."

Preaching has been called "Spiritual Gunnery," and gunnery to be effective must have force. Force as applied to preaching involves the subject matter of the sermon, the serious and persuasive tone of the voice, and the soul of the minister being red-hot with the message. The audience will soon detect the minister who has allowed his holy calling to sink down to the level of what is called "professionalism," that is, preaching because it is his vocation. The two best qualities of preaching are earnestness and simplicity. A certain lawyer one time said, "If I had a student in my office who was not more in earnest to win his first ten dollar suit before a justice of the peace than some ministers seem to be in trying to save souls, I would kick such a student out of my office." Another lawyer said, "If I plead law before the court as some ministers preach the gospel, I would expect to lose every suit."

One more thing. The sermon should be clothed in the language of the common people, though elegant in style to be effective. I have listened to sermons that were faultless in diction and that showed signs that the minister had taken pains to clothe them in words that were far beyond those used by the common people. Personally I have enjoyed some such sermons. I recall one which I enjoyed greatly, however, after the services were closed, one of our best and most successful soul-winners said to me, "I would die spiritually if I had to listen to that kind of preaching all the time." To be able to speak in the words of the highly educated is a fine accomplishment, and I would not discourage it in the least, but let it be understood always that, education must not be used to make ourselves hard to understand, but rather to speak so plainly that we can not misunderstand. It is not enough that we can be understood, but that we can not be misunderstood.

Kentucky: A Euture Home Base

BY J. L. GILLIN, PH. D.
The University of Wisconsin

No one can visit the Kentucky mountains without a keen appreciation of the strategic importance of a school like Riverside for the future of that region. Located on the Troublesome near its confluence with the Kentucky, Riverside occupies a position of strategic importance second to no institution in the mountains, I am told. Stretching in almost every direction from Lost Creek there are valleys untouched by the influence of good schools and a Christian civilization. Therefore, simply from the standpoint of introducing Christianity into the mountains, Riverside has an important location. No less important is the opportunity that is open to Riverside to introduce with Christianity the progressive influences of modern agriculture,—a real education, a campaign for health and a campaign for a higher moral tone in family and social affairs. The missionaries on the foreign field for the most part have long since given up the endeavor to Christianize the people to whom they go without also endeavoring to give them the training in other matters that are the usual accompaniments of Christianity. Kentucky can never become a self-supporting work until the Kentucky mountaineers whom it touches are taught the best there is to be known concerning a system of agriculture adapted to their needs, a system of education that will be at once idealistic and practical, and until they are given ideals of health and morality that will save them from the enormous toll in human life and endeavor that disease and immorality now take.

The important question with reference to Riverside for the Brethren church to answer is whether we want a large share in the redemption of the mountains. Has God called us to bring to these benighted brothters of ours the blessings that we enjoy or has he called us only to go there, proclaim the message of Christ's love like the mountain preachers and then move on? As I see it, God has called the church by giving us this splendid institution and the good will of the people who know it to make an attempt to do our part in the redemption of all that mountain district. The answer to this question as to whether the Brethren church wants a large share in the redemption of the mountains will be shown in the support which the church gives to Riverside in its attempt to carry out this great work. The novelty of the experiment has worn off. Those who give only to the institution or the cause that is new and appeals to their sentimentality will no longer give to Riverside. What is needed now is steady pulling on the part of our people who believe that in the support of the work at Riverside we are doing a work that is bound to influence all that part of Kentucky. That support should be adequate to enable the influence of Riverside to flow in an ever-widening stream up the numerous valleys which nature has plowed in that ancient plateau.

In order that the work at Riverside may be a seed work sending out its influences in all directions in the mountains, support must be adequate to make the farm an example in up-to-date agriculture adapted to mountain conditions which all who come to Riverside may see. My hope is that the time will come when each year a great agricultural institute may be held at Riverside at which will be gathered in increasing numbers the farmers from all the valleys round about. Already it is sending out young men with better ideals of farming that will mean much to the places to which they go.

Again, from the school a constantly increasing number of young people should flow up those valleys to carry new ideals as seed-corn with which to make that desert blossom. Already Riverside's influence is being felt in the better teachers that are teaching the public schools round about. It is to be hoped that the work that Riverside is doing will be so efficient that in the end Riverside will put herself out of business as an educational institution so far as it competes with the public schools. At the present time she is a shining example that cannot but have a good influence on the public schools of that district.

Another test of how earnestly the Brethren church wants a large share in the redemption of the mountains is to be found in the number of our young people whom we may induce to go and to invest their lives in the people of the mountains. Certainly it is disheartening sometimes when our Board by all sorts of efforts and personal solicitation cannot find among our people a half dozen young men and women who wish to do mission work badly enough to bury themselves in the mountains for the sake of these people who are lifting up dumb hands to God for light and leading. So far as I know Kentucky offers the greatest opportunity for young people imbued with a desire to do missionary work in this country. So far as I can see, city mission work holds only a fraction of the promise for real service that the Kentucky mountains offer at the present time. I feel sure that our people, especially our ministers, should urge upon our young people the field that Kentucky offers for missionary labors.

As a future home base for missionary endeavors Kentucky offers very little in the sense of ever being able to pay back to the church the money that has been put into it. The opportunity that is before it, however, as a future base, lies in the fact that if adequately supported, out from it will go workers who will establish its ideals and its message in other communities. Out from Lost Creek are going and have gone young people who are forces for good in far-flung places in the mountains, farmers, teachers, mechanics, store-keepers, Sunday school teachers, and occasionally a minister. Already Kentucky is a base from which people imbued with its ideals have moved out into other fields. True, their labors are unseen, they perhaps cannot be counted in a statistical table and buried as they are in the midst of their mountains, investing their lives in the lives of those with whom they associate, they are known only to God and the people whom they serve. They afford no sensational news stories for there are no reporters there. They excite no sympathy or enthusiasm because they are unknown to men who can make their deeds known. They cannot be used to extricate dollars from people who give only from sentiment and impulse, but in God's sight they are the salt of the mountains, and in his good time they will yet show that the money invested in their education has been well spent for the Kingdom of God.

THE NAME TO BE WRITTEN FIRST

It is the fancy of Collier's Weekly that the name of Jesus was the last to be written by the Roman official whose duty it was to take the census of the district about Bethlehem under Caesar Augustus. The scene is imagined as follows:

"All day long the line of tired pilgrims had filed before the desk. At last the wearying record was completed; the officer set himself to casting up the columns. Then suddenly a shadow fell across the page. He turned impatiently toward the doorway to see a figure of a stalwart man outlined against the setting sun, a child in his arms.

"'I could not come earlier', he said; 'the child was born last night.'

"'You are at the inn?' the officer asked.

"'No—we arrived too late; the babe was born in a manger.'

"'Your name?'

"'Joseph.'

"'Of what tribe?'

"'The tribe of Benjamin and David. We are the descendants of Kings,'' he added. The officer did not look up. The world was full of sons of former kings—and now there was no king but Caesar—lord of the earth by right of war.

"'Your wife's name?'

"'Mary.'

"'And the child's,'

"'Jesus.' The voice of the big man was soft, as though fondling the syllables. 'It means the Savior of his people.' The officer merely nodded.

"'Jesus, son of Joseph, of the tribe of Benjamin,' he wrote, and closed the book. It was the last name on his list.''

It comes to everyone to write that name—somewhere. Where it is written, or if not written at all, is significant, —significant of what a man is, significant of what he should be. No other factor is so determinative of what life and character shall be as the place Jesus Christ is given.

Write his name first, at the head of the column, on the first line of the page, boldly, capitalized, underscored. God first. "That in all things he might have the pre-eminence."

He should be first in our affections and ambitions, the supreme ideal towards which we struggle, the one voice of authority we recognize, the source of strength in which is our chief reliance.

Men now and again have written his name low, but it shall not always be so. In the imperial decrees of Omnipotence it is recorded that God has given him a "name that is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord!'—Evangelical Church Messenger.

THE SON OF MAN

He left the Father's bosom and his throne
And took our life of mortal woe instead.
Home, love, dominion, all were his in heaven;
On earth he had not where to lay his head.

He saw the sun, whose torch of light and heat
His breath had kindled, in the west grow dim,
A thousand lamps flashed out for homeward feet,
Not one was trimmed or candle set for him.

And, while unseen, the keys of death and hell
And life and glory at his girdle hung,
No lowly latch for Master knew him well,
No door for his tired footsteps inward swung.

That never soul redeemed should vagrant go
Unhoused through the hereafter, rest denied,
That all who would the Father's house might know,
A stranger, pilgrim, Jesus lived and died.

Wtihout the walls that spurned his love as dross,
'Mid faithless scorn and alien pity hurled,
He suffered, outcast, that his sheltering cross
Might be the rooftree of a homeless world.

The Sunday School

Now Then Do It

J. FREMONT WATSON, President

The time was that I approached the Christmas season with fear and trembling. I was afraid that our Sunday schools would not measure up to our needs for the year's obligations. I now approach it with joy and hopefulness that it will again be the biggest offering to date.

THAT HAS BEEN OUR RECORD SUPERINTENDENTS, each year has seen a greater offering than the one before. The credit belongs to the faithfulness of our leadership in the schools. Now then do it again. This has been an unusual year in many ways, but especially have we been called upon to sacrifice as never before. Let us not lag in our gifts to him who is our peace and the Prince of Peace.

This year we must pay for the printing of our Teacher Training books. Our apportionment to the chair of Religious Education is one hundred dollars more than last year. To meet our year's expenses we must have an offering equal to the one last year from our schools. Let those who contributed last year do their best again. Let those who failed to join our forces do something this year. Join the army of doers of the Word and ring the Christmas bells through the year 1919. Our budget this year is $900.00 for the chair of Religious Education, and $1,000.00 for Kentucky. For carrying on the general work we should have $500.00 to meet expenses. Again I urge all to be faithful to the task and do your best. We are expecting a great offering. Let every school help. Now then do it—Christmas.

Victory, Peace and "White Gifts"

The war clouds have been scattered and a new hope is dawning for the future. Our nation's efforts in behalf of humanity and democracy have been crowned with victory. Peace is being proclaimed throughout the world and our boys are coming home.

Many of the burdens and anxieties of the past year have been lifted from our shoulders and we ought to be ready now to turn our thoughts and hearts to the Master's work.

First, comes our Christmas offering of "White Gifts."

Brother Superintendent, it is but fitting that our schools should make this offering a real expression of gratitude to God for the great blessing of peace. Let every Brethren school unite in the effort to assure another year's victory for our cause among the Kentucky hills and the continuation of the good work of preparing leaders for the future in the Training Camp at Ashland.

Do your "bit" toward bringing the real "Peace on Earth."

Owing to the enforced inactivities in our schools of late on account of the "flu" let us put some of the wartime "Vim" and "Pep" into this effort. It is just the thing to get our schools awakened to some real enthusiasm for 1919.

Make it a big generous gift for the Master's cause.

From what school will come the first check?

ALBERT TRENT, General Secretary- Treasurer.

Alive or Dead?

G. C. CARPENTER

Does the reader believe the following statement taken from the Christian Advocate: "The religious journal is a vital necesisty in modern church life?" Then follows one of the best statements of the purpose of a church paper that we have ever seen. Here it is: "The religious journal is published to inspire men and women to a nobler life, to give them greater knowledge of the work of the church, to increase their efficiency as Christians, and to forward in every way possible the carrying of the Gospel of Christ to the whole world."

If the above be the true purpose of the publication of the Brethren Evangelist, and we believe it is, then it is true that the church without the Brethren Evangelist in its homes is like a lame man trying to walk without a cane. It is like a teacher trying to teach without knowledge of his subject. The secular journal is published for profit in dollars and cents, but the religious journal is published to turn the thoughts of the people in the church to God in order that his Kingdom may be advanced.

Careful observation convinces one that the writer in the Advocate is right when he asserts that it is poor economy for a pastor, a church officer, a Sunday school teacher, a father and mother, a home, a congregation to do without the church paper. The cost is nothing compared to the benefits it brings both to the reader and the local congregation and the church at large. You can get along without it, it is true, just as you can get along without your hands or your feet; but you are better off with it, just as you are better off with hands and feet. That home in which a religious paper is taken—and read—is a better home in every respect than it can ever be without such a journal.

The congregation in which the church paper is widely taken is generally described as alive while the opposite is often described as dead.

One live pastor summarizes the value of the church paper as follows:

1. It makes Christians more intelligent.
2. It makes them more useful.
3. It secures better pay for the pastor.
4. It secures better Sunday school teachers.
5. It secures better attendance at prayer meeting.
6. It leads to a better understanding of the scriptures.
7. It increases interest in the spread of the gospel.
8. It promotes unity of faith and practice in the church.
9. It exposes error.
10. It places weapons in the hands of all to defend the truth.
11. It affords a channel of communication between brethren.
12. It gives the news from the churches.
13. It awakens the talent of the church and makes it more useful.
14. It throws light on obscure questions of practical interest.
15. It is a great aid in the study of the Bible.
16. It cultivates a taste for the best reading.
17. It makes the children more intelligent.
18. It makes better children.
19. It creates interest in the salvation of others.
20. It gives the current news of general interest.

"The Brethren Evangelist in every Brethren home" is not a luxury but a necessity for the fullest life of the individual Christians and for the fullest life of the church.

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

Apologies are seldom graciously received and we made so many of them during the past year because of numerous delays and misfortunes that we felt there could be nothing more to apologize for during the year. Of course it was an easy matter to blame everything on the war until recently, but now that the war is over we will be compelled to look elsewhere for our alibis. Yet we must make one more apology or explanation before the year closes. The Evangelist went out late last week but it was not our fault. We aim to round up all composition for the paper on Monday and to get it on the press Monday evening, but last Monday the city light and power station shut down about the middle of the forenoon and left us without power to turn a wheel of our machines until about supper time, and then on Wednesday forenoon it shut down again and cut us out of electric power for about four hours. These things are annoying any time in the year but when they occur in the very busiest season during the rush for making Sunday school quarterlies they are doubly aggravating, for every hour counts. So we ask you to be patient with us once more.

Sunday school superintendents are warned that we have received notice from the Ashland post office that they will not send out any quarterlies the week before Christmas because of the congested condition of the mail service, so we fear there will be a great many schools that will not be able to get their supplies in time for distribution the last Sunday in December; but we will try to have the post office send out everything possible on the day after Christmas.

Much of the contents of this week's issue of the Evangelist bears a home missionary flavor, and this is as it should be for a great offering is desired on Christmas as a "White Gift to the King." Brother Carpenter writes at length of the needs of the work and of the importance of reaching the goals for all missionary offerings. If Brother Carpenter refers to his New Standard Dictionary he will observe that one does not have to be old and bald headed and lame and blind to be a veteran, but that a number of years' service in any line of work makes one a veteran in that line, and this makes Brother Carpeter and Brother Oberholtzer veterans in Endeavor work.

Mrs. G. E. Drushal makes the final report of the year of the gifts that have been received at Lost Creek from various churches, societies and individuals. It is not often that Sister Drushal writes but I am sure the many readers of the Evangelist appreciate her letters when she does write.

From his brief letter this week our readers will observe that George H. Jones is still alive, though he has not been making much noise lately. The Third Brethren church of Johnstown has gone the way of all the earth in regard to the handicap of the great epidemic, but while Brother Jones and his flock may feel somewhat depressed because of these conditions they should not forget that though "weeping may endure for a night, joy cometh in the morning," and we feel that the dawning of the New Year will open to our view a brighter day.

Brother Roy Brumbaugh had an unusually sad experience in his moving from Indiana to Kansas to take up his work as pastor in the new field that had called him into service, but his sorrow is not as the sorrow of one who has no hope, and we trust he may be able to lose himself in his work so that he may find real comfort in his activities among the Portis Brethren. Brother Brumbaugh writes at length of his work in the field of his former charge at Roann and Center Chapel, Indiana.

The contribution by Dr. Gillin treating on the subject of Riverside as a home base for mountain missionary work was written quite a while ago after Brother Gillin had visited Lost Creek, but in some unexplainable manner it got filed with personal correspondence instead of finding its rightful place in the file for contributions for the Evangelist and was overlooked until now, but it could not be more appropriate for this number of the Evangelist if it had been specially prepared for this occasion, so we are glad to give it a place in our columns with an apology to Dr. Gillin for past neglect.

Brother George E. Cone makes his first report from the field after entering upon his duties as pastor at Hamlin, Kansas. We think Brother Cone will find the work at Hamlin equal to all his anticipations for from a personal acquaintance with many of the members of the Hamlin church we can say with him that they are indeed a good people to work with.

Brother Kent of Long Beach, California reports some of the doings of the church at that place since the arrival of Brother Bell and his family upon the field, though here like everywhere else not much has been done for some time because of the epidemic. But they do things with a rush on the Pacific coast and we may expect a full recovery from the effects of the epidemic in a very short time. Brother Bell is now, or has been, engaged in an evangelistic meeting in the new Brethren church at Fillmore, California.

Washington, D. C. has been very largely a city of strangers during the past year and for this reason it has had unusually sad experiences with the dread epidemic as a reading of Brother Lyon's report clearly indicates. These have been days when pastors have had unusual opportunities to get very close to the people in personal service and helpfulness during the time they were prevented from holding public services.

Brother W. F. Johnson writes of the work at Berne, Indiana and of the week the church spent with I. D. Bowman in the study of prophecy in October and also of the week it expects to spend with Brethren Bauman and Cobb in similar Bible study during the Christmas Holiday week.

The contribution pages of the Evangelist offer a specially rich treat to our readers this week, but we have not the space to name them all and to point out the good features of them here. They must be read to be appreciated.

We have heard of days in the summer that were so hot that the mercury pushed its way out of the top of the thermometer, though we never saw where it had been done, but if Brother Beachler keeps up the present intensity of the College Endowmnt Campaign it will not be long until the College thermometer will have to take the lid off, especially if he strikes a few more places like Philadelphia and the other places in Pennsylvania that have been previously mentioned in these columns.

Around the Editor's Table

The Gift of Service

There is always more or less confusion in practically every household and also in every church and Sunday school during the Christmas season. It is the season when every one feels like doing something or giving something as a Christmas gift. That the principle underlying this desire which seeks to find expression, even as the wise men from the East found a means of expression for their own feelings in laying their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh at the feet of the child Jesus, is a legitimate desire is not to be denied.

Love unexpressed and unspent will wither and die and it is only natural to seek a means of expressing one's feelings at times and there seems to be no better time than this to find a way; but the one great drawback in connection with Christmas giving is found in the tendency to give as a matter of form or of custom rather than as an expression of true admiration or love.

But in the case of gifts for the King whom all true Christians love most sincerely there is often the mistaken notion that no worthwhile gifts can be given him because of a lack of wealth or of material things that can be devoted to his cauuse. This is a mistaken notion because the very spirit of the gospel teaches that Christ wants not what you call yours so much as he wants YOU, and the most highly appreciated gift you can lay upon his altar is not a gift of gold or of any other worldly possessions, so much as it is a gift of yourself—your own life laid upon the altar of service and dedicated to him. The Lord needs money it is true, or rather money is needed by his servants to carry out his work, but what the Lord needs more than money is men and also women who hold not their lives dear but who are willing to go where he would have them go or be what he would have them be. I know we are told we have young men and more especially young women who have trained themselves to work for God through the avenues of the church but that the church has made no place for them to use their talents, and the question is often asked, what has the Brethren church to offer to a young woman who will prepare herself for Christian service? and then many will answer, very little if anything. But when it is known that for more than six months the General Missionary Board has been trying to find some one, or more than one, who is willing to go to Kentucky to fill several much needed and important places without having any success whatever, there is reason to believe that a great many who have taken advantage of the oppportunity to secure an education at Ashland without tuition upon the assurance they are preparing to give their services to the church must have made the mental reservation, providing I can get the kind of position I want. Too many seem to say to the church and God, if you will give me a position that is agreeable to me I will take it ,but if I can not get the kind of work I want in the church I will work at something else. Such an attitude is not answering any call of the Lord, but is asking the Lord to answer and satisfy the desire of the individual. The work of the church and of the Lord never will be done so long as this attitude is assumed by our young people. It is not for them to say, Lord help me to find a place to do the things I would like to do, but it is theirs to say, Lord help me to like to do the things that need to be done, the things that you would have me do. The fact is there are too many unsurrendered wills and unsurrendered lives that think they want to work for God. If a few people would quit singing "I surrender all," and would actually make the surrender and lay their lives upon the altar of service this Christmas time as a White Gift to the King the pleading that has come from Brother Carpenter and from Brother Drushal for a matron and a nurse at Riverside would no longer be made in vain. It is high time some of us quit talking about our great desire to serve the King unless we are willing to make good when an opportunity is offered.

"The Gray Man of Christ"

Few expressions of a stronger faith in the divine triumph of Christian principles in the world and of the necessity of the leaders of the world in this great triumphant crisis of its history being servants of Christ have found their way into the columns of any religious paper in America than the editorial in a late issue of the secular paper, the Los Angeles Times. This paper is picturing the great French Generalissimo, Foch, and says of him:

"The deeper we question as to who Foch is, the clearer is the answer that in every act of his life and in every thought of his brain he is Christ's man.

"It seems beyond a shadow of doubt that when the hour came in which all Christ stood for was either to stand or fall, Christ raised up a man to lead the hosts that battled for him.

"Whoever does not realize this and see it clearly as a fact, he does but blunder stupidly.

"There will be a crowding company of critics when the war is ended and they will all be filled with the ego of their own conclusions. They will attempt to explain the genius of Foch with maps and diagrams. But, while they are doing so, if you will look for Foch in some quiet church, it is there that he will be found humbly giving God the glory, and absolutely declining to attribute it to himself.

"Can that kind of a man win a war? Can a man who is a practical soldier be also a practical Christian? And is Foch that kind of a man? Let us see."

The secret of where Foch used to go for "strength and magical power to bring home the marvelous victories" was surprised by a California boy. It was not published by any organ of France to show the world how "religious its" leader was:

"A California boy, serving as a soldier in the American Expeditionary Forces in France, has recently written a letter to his parents in San Bernardino in which he gives, as well as anyone else could give, the answer to the question we ask.

"This American boy—Evans by name—tells of meeting General Foch at close range in France.

"Evans had gone into an old church to have a look at it, and as he stood there with bared head satisfying his respectful curiosity, a gray man with the eagles of a general on the collar of his shabby uniform also entered the church. Only one orderly accompanied the quiet, gray man. No glittering staff of officers, no entourage of gold-laced aids, were with him; nobody but just the orderly.

"Evans paid small attention at first to the gray man, but was curious to see him kneel in the church, praying. The minutes passed until full three-quarters of an hour had gone by before the gray man arose from his knees.

"Then Evans followed him down the street and was surprised to see soldiers salute this man in great excitement, and women and children stopping in their tracks with awe-struck faces as he passed.

"It was Foch. And now Evans, of San Bernardino, counts the experience as the greatest in his life. During that three-quarters of an hour that the Generalissimo of all the Allied armies was on his knees in humble supplication in that quiet church, 10,000 guns were roaring at his word on a hundred hills that rocked with death.

"Millions of armed men crouched in trenches or rushed across blood-drenched terranes at his command, generals, artillery, cavalry, engineers, tanks, fought and wrought across the map of Europe absolutely as he commanded them to do, and in no other manner, as he went into that little church to pray.

"Nor was it an unusual thing for General Foch to do. There is no day that he does not do the same thing if there be a church that he can reach. He never fails to spend an hour on his knees every morning that he awakes from sleep; and every night it is the same.

"Moreover, it is not a new thing with him. He has done it his whole life long.

"If young Evans could have followed the General on to headquarters, where reports were waiting him and news of victory upon victory was piled high before him, he would doubtless have seen a great gladness on the General's face, but he would have seen no look of surprise there.

"Men who do that which Foch does have no doubts. When Premier Clemenceau, the old Tiger of France, stood on the battle-front with anxious heart, one look at the face of Foch stilled all his fears. He returned to Paris with the vision of sure and certain victory.

"The great agnostic statesman doubted, but the Gray Man of Christ did not doubt.

"The facts, then, in the case are that when the freedom of the world hung in the balance the world turned to Foch as the one great genius who could save it against the Hun; and that Foch, who is perhaps the greatest soldier the world has produced, is first of all, a Christian. . . . .

"Young Evans, of San Bernardino, just an every-day American boy from under the shadow of old San Gorgonio, spent nearly an hour with Foch in an old French church, and not even one bayonet was there to keep them apart.

"They represented the two great democracies of the world, but there in that old church they represented, jointly, a far greater thing—the democracy of Christ."

"How Are the Mighty Fallen?"

The fall of Wilhelm ,the figure head of the world's greatest folly, has been likened by the New York Tribune to the fall of Lucifer, and without regarding any comment as necessary quotes the following Bible passage as an adequate description of Wilhelm's case:

Isaiah xiv; 9-21

9. Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it had raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

10. All they shall speak and say unto thee, art thou also become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?

11. Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

12. How are thou fallen from heaven. O Lucifer, son of the morning! How are thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!

13. For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend unto heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:

14. I will ascend about the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High.

15. Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.

16. They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms;

17. That made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof; that opened not the house of his prisoners?

18. All the kings of the nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own house.

19. But thou art cast out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and as the raiment of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the pit; as a carcass trodden under feet.

20. Thou shalt not be joined with them in burial, because thou hast destroyed thy land and slain thy people: the seed of evil-doers shall never be renowned.

21. Prepare slaughter for his children for the iniquity of their fathers; that they do not rise nor possess the land, nor all the face of the world with cities.

Going Home for Christmas

BY EDMUND VANCE COOKE

The rattle of the coaches say
"I'm going, going home today."
December blooms as blithe as May;
The wind's shriek is a roundelay.
"I'm going, going home today,
Going home for Christmas."

The snowflakes dance and cry "Hurray!
He's going, going home today."
The skies are blue, or skies are gray,
And life is work, or life is play;
Who cares? I'm going home today,
Going home for Christmas.

My foot beats time, my pulses play
"I'm going, going home today."
Care turns her back and speeds away,
Love smiles upon me light and gay;
I'm going, going home today;
Going home for Christmas.

Oh, fate may bring me bells or bay,
But I—I'm going home today.
And fortune say me yea or nay,
And fame deny me, or delay,
But Mistletoe and holly say
"I'm going, going home today,
Going home for Christmas."

ALONE WITH GOD

We have heard so much about the "Quiet Hour." It would be useless for me to attempt a detailed discussion, outlining again the many well known details of the same. I find, however, there is still a great multitude of Christian Endeavor workers who do not understand what is meant by the two words, Quiet Hour. It does not mean one is to spend one hour each day in devotions. But it is hoped that every member of the Christian Endeavor societies be a member of the Quiet Hour department.

The pledge has hitherto asked for fifteen minutes each day to be spent alone with God. There is a new pledge which the United Society proposes, for the Junior Quiet Hour. It is that they set apart at least five minutes each day, if possible in the early morning, for meditation and communion with God. It is not the purpose of this article to stress the time spent in this service, for when one shuts out the world and comes into direct communion with heaven the time element is lost in the beauty and strength which the individual derives for his spiritual uplift.

It is hard for some people to decide just when the Quiet Hour can be most profitably observed. Experience has proved conclusively that the morning hour is the logical time.

After the rest of the night the mind is alert, active and careful. Before the burdens of the approaching day are allowed to enter the soul can best commune with God. The spiritual man is strengthened for the conflicts which the day will inevitably bring. Henry Ward Beecher said, "Let the day have a blessed baptism by giving your first waking thoughts into the bosom of God. The first hour of the morning is the rudder of the day."

Dr. Mott says, "The keeping of the Quiet Hour is the secret of the largest and most enduring achievement in life and in service. We will find the Quiet Hour will promote the wisest economy of time. It makes one more conscientious about the use of time. We learn to redeem it. It helps us to see things in true perspective. We enter the day well poised, under control of the spirit, not distracted strain; uncertainty and waste."

It is not hard to discover the secret of such men's strength. We, with these great men, should remember our Christ's program as recorded by St. Mark. "And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed."

Do not allow the time, place and method to cause this sacred service to become mechanical. But because of the vitalizing and transforming power received; create in the mind of every Junior Endeavorer the unmistakable and permanent value of this service.

Remember, fellow society workers, you who know the blessedness of the service are obligated to the inexperienced members. The Juniors of today must observe the Quiet Hour if it comes natural and spontaneous from the men of tomorrow. If the task is faithfully carried to completion the oncoming generations will know in a bigger way than the present one what it means to be, alone with God.

THE STONE WHICH THE BUILDER REJECTED

"Hello Ed!" cried a brisk young business man as he slapped the other jovially.

"How are you, Dick Haven't seen you for a month. Are all the folks well? Wife and baby preparing for Christmas, I suppose?"

"Oh yes! Big preparations at our house. We are to hold forth in great style. A Christmas tree, Santa Claus and all. Will you celebrate?"

"Will we celebrate? I thought you knew me better than that. Why, of course we will. You know I pulled off that big deal in fine fashion and cleared up $5,000 on it. We ought to rejoice over that, and then there are the many things to think of. Just the spirit of the season. The giving and all that,' 'and Ed's face showed that he was feeling the spirit of the season.

"Well! well! Fine work, Ed! Say, I just got returns from my last investment, and it surely proved up. I wanted to ask you something, but it has slipped my mind. Oh, yes; have you seen Uncle Martin lately?"

"Uncle Martin? Why no," said Ed. "I wouldn't be surprised if he had bitten himself and died." Which statement set the two off into a hearty laugh.

"The last time I did see him the old 'tightwad' was so sore on the world in general that I feared he would use some violent means to get out of it," replied Dick.

"Don't be afraid of that, Dick, not as long as there is a dollar to be made. Why, I believe that he would sell his natural freeborn right to enjoy Christmas for fifty cents. I would like to do something for the old bachelor. Do you suppose if I invited him out to see my little flock he would catch a vision?"

"Catch a vision!" cried Dick," "why he would be figuring out how much it cost you to keep the family, and what an extravagant project you were embarked upon."

"Nevertheless I would like to see him come out of it,' 'commented Ed. "What can we do for him?"

"We might give him a present," suggested Dick, half ironically.

"Ah! I have an idea. Would you be willing to invest, say $30 in the salvation of the old grouch?"

"Thirty dollars! I would give more than that to wake him up," and Dick was all attention.

"Leave it to me then. This is Wednesday. Monday is Christmas. I can get it through if I hurry. I'll send in the bill," said Ed, as he ran and swung on a passing car.

Over the doorway to his office, a small room on the third floor of the Continental building were the words, "Martin Jones Coal Co." He was a stout, middle-aged man, neat in appearance, brisk in speech, with hard features. His was a business-like walk. He never seemed exactly in a hurry, but he combined every act with business. When other men went to play he worked on, in this way keeping pace with the fastest of them.

The door opened and a poorly clad woman entered in a frightened manner. Her ragged shawl pulled clear about the neck spoke of poverty. Her pinched face spelled insufficient nourishment. The well fed, neatly clad one wheeled on his high office chair and uttered this sharp greeting, "Well!"

The shy expression fled from the face of the woman. She burst into tears, and half madly pulled a bill from under her shawl.

"Mr. Jones, I can't pay this bill today. I will get paid the first of the year, but we need coal so badly. The children are crying about the cold. Can't you let me have that last order?"

"No, I cannot," snapped Jones.

"But Mr. Jones, I have bought coal from you a long time now, and can't you trust me this once?"

"Trusting is poor business. People don't trust me," retorted Jones, as he swung around on his stool and began scratching figures in a big book. The door closed slowly. Jones turned about on his chair and looked out of the window into the street below, where the hurrying throngs passed to and fro on their Christmas errands.

"A pack of fools," he muttered. "Christmas! What's the difference? This chasing about like mad to give something away is all bosh. I suppose that woman is spending the money she should use for coal to buy Christmas presents," and he turned to his work.

Uncle Martin walked home that night feeling satisfied with the day's work. Business was good and prospects were fine, with a cold wave which would mean many more bushels of coal a day. He might as well have the money as the saloon. Jones was not a miser. He lived well in his own cottage, but he would not spend money for a servant, so he ate at a restaurant and looked after his own house.

It was Sunday afternoon and Jones sat alone in his parlor. The fire burned low on the hearth. Two tiny flames kept darting up in a vain attempt to join their lights. It was his habit to sit before such a fire and think over his business career. That afternoon somehow the Christmas spirit smote upon his heart for entrance. He waved it aside and began to recall his past life. One date stood out strongly in his memory.

"Eighteen hundred and eighty-nine," he repeated out loud. "That is the year I made the decision to put this Christmas stuff aside and go in to win." His thoughts were interrupted here. An express wagon loaded to the tail board stopped before his house and backed up to the curb.

What could it be? He had ordered nothing. But the two men were pulling and tugging at a box which seemed to weigh a ton. With considerable effort they got it to the walk and then upon his front porch.

What could it be? Surely they have made a mistake, thought Jones, but when he answered the knock and one of the men asked, if Martin Jones lived there, he answered in the affirmative, and took the book, which he signed rather mechanically. Then he directed that the box be placed in the hall.

"What can it be?" said Jones, as he stood in the hall and looked at the box. It was about three feet long and two and a half high by the same thickness. No label betrayed its origin. Only these words were stamped upon it, "Do Not Open Until Christmas." He looked the box over and then entered his parlor. The mysterious box held his attention. Supper time came and went unnoticed. On leisure days Jones retired early. Before going to his room he stepped into the kitchen and opened a cupboard from which he took a hand-ax. Softly he walked into the hall and knelt beside the box. The ax was raised; then he read the words, Do Not Open Before Christmas, and the arm dropped to his side. He arose and went away to bed.

It was with a new feeling of expectancy that Martin Jones jumped into bed. He spent considerable time rolling about before he went to sleep.

Christmas morning dawned clear and bright. The night clouds had brought with them a soft coverlet of white and left it as they hurried on. Jones sprang out of bed and dressed rapidly. A new feeling gripped him. Some one had sent him a present. Even before he lighted the fire he found the ax and went into the front hall. Yes, the box was there. It was not all a dream. Hastily he broke off the front boards. Wtih trembling fingers he pulled aside the paper.

His face grew pale. He started back and just suppressed a shout. His fingers worked at his throat as though his breath was failing him. In the box was a tomb stone. Engraved upon it were these words:

MARTIN JONES
Born 1869. Here lies a man
Who loved his life,
Died 1889. But loved a dollar more.

"Eighteen hundred and eighty-nine," he gasped. That date smote him like a mighty fist. As a man in a trance he moved about the house. Soon a brisk fire warmed his chilled frame. Before the sun set that Christmas day, if you could have pulled aside the curtains, you would have seen Martin Jones, sitting before his fire, the great struggle over. A dusty book lay open in his lap. Upon the open pages was the story of the Christmas Child.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

IS THERE A SANTA CLAUS?

How many times has the question been asked? There was once a little girl whose name was Virginia who sought high authority for an answer to the question. She wrote a letter to Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun, saying: "Some of my friends say there is no Santa Claus. Please tell me the truth. Is there a Santa Claus? The famous editor was pleased to tell her the truth. This was his reply, printed in his paper:

"Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They do not believe except they see. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehensible to their little minds. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's, are little. In this great universe of ours man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, as compared with the boundless world about him as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole of truth and knowledge. Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty, and joy. Alas! how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus. It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias. There would be no childlike faith then, no poetry, no romance, to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished. Not believe in Santa Claus? You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas eve to catch Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not; but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all the wonders that are unseen and unseeable in the world. You may tear apart the baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernal beauty and glory beyond. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding. No Santa Claus? Thank God! he lives and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood."

A CHRISTMAS LEGEND

Perhaps the children today who are wistfully waiting a view of the tree may like to hear the legend of the first Christmas tree, and yet it may not be legend merely, but history beaming through the mists of tradition. It is an old German story that Saint Wilfred transformed the heathen Teuton worship in the forest into the Christmas ceremony. About 732 with a band of priests, he sought to convert the worshippers of Thor. On Christmas Eve, fighting their way through the snow in the dense forest, they found a savage tribe assembled under a thunder oak symbolic of the god of thunder, Thor. The white-haired priest of the cult was about to offer as a sacrifice the son of the tribe's chief. Wilfred rushed forward and warded off the arm about to slay the child. The tribesmen were delighted at the saving of their favorite, and became converts to Christianity. The saint took his ax and started to cut down the oak. As it was about to fall lightning rended it into many parts, and in its place there sprang up a slender fir tree, green and sparkling. They bore it to the chieftain's hall, and 'round it made merry. It was about this first Christmas tree the old, old story was told, and the Teuton tribes became in time all Christians.—Junior Missionary Magazine.

CHRISTMAS IN OTHER LANDS

In Spain, we are told, many of the children are in the habit of hiding their shoes in the bushes on Christmas Eve, and early on Christmas morning they visit them, sure to find them filled with fruit and candy. It is not so cold out of doors on Christmas morning in Spain, however, as it is in some parts of the United States.

In France, also, the young folks take their shoes and put them in any convenient place, confident that they will be found.

In Porto Rico the Christmas decorations are not holly and mistletoe, as in colder climes, but poinsettias (those beautiful large red flowers), and bushes of ripe oranges.—Selected.

MAGGIE'S GIFT

BY GERTRUDE M. JONES

The minister's eyes swept with intense searching the apathetic faces of his stylish, worldly congregation. He had made an impassioned appeal for help in the support of a little mission church among the mountains—a section where rough men and women knew scarcely anything of God and of the religion of Christ. He had hoped to inspire the people with the spirit of giving, to make them feel that it was a sweet, blessed privilege, and—he had failed. A sense of desolation crept over him.

"God help me,' 'his lips murmured, mutely. He could not see the bent figure of little crippled Maggie in the rear of the church—a figure which was trembling under the fire of his appeal.

"Lord Jesus," the little one was saying, brokenly, "I ain't got nothin' ter give; I want the people in the mountains to hear 'bout my Savior. O Lord, I ain't got nothin' ter—

What was it that made the child catch her breath as though a cold hand had taken hold of her heart?

"Yes, you have, Maggie," whispered a voice from somewhere; "you've got your crutch, your beautiful crutch that was given ter you, an 'is worth a lot of shinin' dollars. You kin give up your best frien' what helps you ter git into the park where the birds sing, an' takes you ter preachin', an' makes your life happy."

"Oh, no, Lord," sobbed the child, choking and shivering," "Yes, yes, I will. He give up more'n that for me."

Blindly she extended the polished crutch, and placed it in the hands of the deacon who was taking up the scanty collection. For a moment the man was puzzled, then, comprehending her meaning, he carried her crutch to the front of the church, and laid it on the table in front of the pulpit. The minister stepped down from the rostrum and held up the crutch with shaking hands. The sublimity of the renunciation unnerved him so that he could not speak for a moment.

"Do you see it, my people?" he faltered at last: "little crippled Maggie's crutch—all that she has to make life comfortable, She has given it to the Lord, and you—"

There was a moment of silence. The people flushed, and moved restlessly in their cushioned pews.

"Does anyone want to contribute to the mission cause the amount of money this crutch would bring, and give it back to the child, who is helpless without?" the minister asked, gravely.

"Fifty dollars," came in husky tones from the banker.

"Twenty-five."

"One hundred."

And so the subscribing went on, until papers equivalent to six hundred dollars were lightly piled over the crutch on the table.

"Ah, you have found your hearts—thank God! Let us receive the benediction, almost whispered the minister, as he suddenly extended his hands, which were trembling with emotion.

Little Maggie, absorbed in the magnitude of her offering and the love which prompted it, comprehended nothing that had taken place. She had no thought of the future, of how she would reach her humble home, or of the days in which she would sit helpless in her chair as she had once done. Christ had demanded her all, and she had given it with the blind faith of Abraham. She understood no better when a woman's arm drew her into close embrace, and soft lips whispered in her ears:

"Maggie, dear, your crutch has made $600 for the mission church among the mountains, and has come back to stay with you again. Take it, little one."

Like the flash of light there came the consciousness that in some mysterious way her gift had been accepted of God and returned to her, and with a cry of joy the child caught the beloved crutch to her lonely heart; then, smiling through her tears at the kind faces and reverential eyes, she hobbled out of the sanctuary. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. Mal. III. 10."

Christmas is not a day or a season, but a condition of heart and mind. If we love our neighbors as ourselves; if in our riches we are poor in spirit and in our poverty we are rich in grace; if our charity vaunteth not itself, but suffereth long and is kind; if when our brother asks a loaf we give ourselves instead; if each day dawns in opportunity and sets in achievement, however small; then every day is Christ's day and Christmas is always near.—James Wallingford.

News From the Field

HOME MISSION NOTES

BY G. C. CARPENTER

"Both Veterans"

Why our esteemed Editor of the Evangelist should refer to the writer as a veteran when he is in the "flower of his youth" is hard to understand. Our good friend, Brother Oberholtzer, may not enter any objections, but not so with the other party. Mr. Editor we object. After all, this life on earth is but the childhood hour of eternity. If the Editor meant that these two brethren had reached the time when they actually had some sober and even profitable thoughts, then thanks for the compliment. But what has this to do with Home Missions?

Paul James

Another missionary has enrolled in the Brethren church and he bears the dignified apostolic cognomen, "Paul James." He arrived at the happy home of Brother and Sister James S. Cook in Krypton, Kentucky, on December 3 and has come for an extended stay. Congratulations from a host of friends. May this young missionary always bear with honor his apostolic name. Surely a fine nine-pound Christmas present. Let's remember "Paul James" with a Christmas gift. Put him on your list now!

Malicious Intent

In a recent Evangelist there appeared the suggestion from us that we might have to publish the names of those who were delinquent on the payment of pledges given to help erase that Washington, D. C., mortgage. Surely none of our friends thought there was any "malicious intent." We have never indulged in any unfair methods in securing mission funds. The suggestion has awakened some folks and for that we are thankful. $1,203 has been received leaving $297 of the $1,500 pledged yet to be paid. The influenza conditions over the country have hindered some churches and perhaps some individuals, making payment on time almost impossible, but this small balance ought to be met quickly now and the final cancellation of that old interest-consuming mortgage made possible. Do it now.

Intercessory Prayer

What a privilege! Intercessory prayer always brings a double blessing. Mrs. Landis R. Bradfield who was formerly Miss Mary Newlin, and who served so efficiently as nurse at Lost Creek in 1917, is ill at her home at Earlham, Iowa. Will the many readers who believe in prayer make special request for the healing of Sister Bradfield. Will one thousand who read this each send her some word of Christmas cheer and assure her that you will pray for her early recovery?

Not Too Late

Every church in the brotherhood "Over the Top" with that Thanksgiving offering for Home Missions. If any church was hindered at Thanksgiving time then take the offering as soon as possible. Brother Grisso of North Liberty, Indiana sent $45 from his church and assured Brother Bowman that they would make up the balance of their apportionment later. Brother Grisso has the right idea. Peru's "Little Brown Church" went "Over the Top." Church attendance is cut down but a special effort secured the amount. Let every church reach the goal.

Who Wants the "Flu?"

No less a personage than little Gordon Drushal. After several others at Riverside enjoyed (?) the "flu" Gordon asked that he might have it too and asked to be put to bed. Brother Drushal reports that conditions there are improved and that he is more optimistic for the school. If the school opens as expected another teacher will be needed for three months beginning after the holidays. Anyone who can render this service should write us at once. A nurse and a matron also will be needed. Brother Drushal writes that the influenza has not been severe in the case of those who took the proper precautions.

Good News

The amount given to the support of Home Missions in the Brethren church in the year ending June 30, 1918 was larger than in any previous year. This is remarkable when the demands of the war are considered, yet war demands do not decrease Kingdom demands.

A home mission board of another denomination published this statement recently: "Speaking of interest, we are under a heavy handicap by reason of our debt of $290,000, the accumulated deficit of several years. Our interest charge from this cause alone is nearly $10,000 a year. Help us to end the year free of encumbrance by joining our 'Out-of-Debt' club."

The announcement of the good news relative to our home mission support the past year ought to be made possible by repetition when the report of this year is arranged. If the Brethren churches will reach the thirty cent goal, which is low, the good news will continue. If the churches go "Over the Top" by reaching this home mission goal, and this despite the influenza epidemic, it will mean a greater victory than ever.

The work for the year has been planned, the mission pastors are at work and the mission board is counting on every church in the brotherhood to do its part and more.

Let every church help to make the good news better.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Before the close of the old year, we wish to report the things received which have not yet been reported.

The gifts of money for the work are as follows: Mrs. M. J. Perry, Dodge City, Kansas, $10; Junior C. E., Compton Ave. church, Los Angeles, California, $4.00; Miss Ida Shank, Jenny Lind, California, $8.00; Miss Helen Boyer, Bellefontaine, Ohio, $5.00; Geo. Powell, Turlock, California, $8.40; Mrs. Olive Tyson Grace, Montreal, Canada, $10.00.

These splendid gifts were truly gifts from the Lord, for with the closing up of church and school and dormitories, the income from the work here was entirely cut off, while many of the expenses have continued. From a human point of view it looked a little discouraging when things had to shut down here, but God takes care of any work done in his name, and puts it into the hearts of those who love him to help keep the work going that Satan thought he could bring to a standstill.

The other gifts are as follows: One box clothing from C. E., Meyersdale, Pa.; 1 box clothing, Meyersdale church; 1 package clothing, Mrs. M. H. Huyett, Zanesville, Ohio; 1 barrel clothing, also a dresser and wall paper for a room in girl's dormitory, from Sisterhood Girls, McKee, Pa.; 1 barrel clothing, Johnstown, Pa.; A year's subscription to Normal Instructor, Miss Helen Boyer, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

These gifts were also a source of revenue for the work. Only a few pieces of clothing are given away, the rest being sold. Most of the clothing sent is good material, and the people are eager to buy and make over the things for their children, thus enabling them to clothe their families at small cost, and at the same time it helps Riverside financially. At our last sale, where only a few were present owing to the influenza we received $19.00 in cash. Practically all of the clothing sent finds a ready sale, and the demand this winter has been greater than the supply.

The influenza ban has not been lifted at all, but I think we can soon have church and Sunday school, and it is thought the schools will all open the first of January. Riverside's opening depends on the coming of a nurse and matron, or man and woman for the dormitory. We believe they will come, so we are going ahead planning for the school work.

There is more influenza right now in the neighborhood than at any other time. There have been no deaths although some serious cases have developed.

We who remain at Riverside have our little Sunday school and singing and prayer service. Brother Akens takes charge, as he is the regular Sunday school superintendent. Mr. Drushal teaches "us big folks," while Miss Strode takes the boys and tells them the lesson story. Sunday afternoons Mr. Drushal visits the sick.

While the plague has been bad, God takes things in hand and is turning it to good account, and when things again open up, we believe people here will be more eager and anxious than ever to help the church and school and all that Riverside stands for.

MRS. G. E. DRUSHAL.

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Annual Report of the Johnstown Third Brethren Church

It is with sadness we make this report for the past year, 1918.

The joys of a preacher's life were marred by the extraordinary events of the past year in this pastorate. Linked to the war, with its sorrows, came the pestilence. Aside from the pestilence, the largest death rate for some years was suffered the past year. Many of our most faithful members were called to their heavenly home.

Our Sunday school suffered severely through the war drafts, then through the epidemic of influenza. Six Sabbaths the church and Sunday school were closed by reason of the quarantine. We had re-organized our Primary Department and much of our work was hindered by the unusual conditions. But with renewed courage the officers are planning on making the school the best it is possible to make it the coming year.

The number of deaths which the pastor has been called upon to record has exceeded in one year the whole of our past eight years in our former pastorate. We have officiated at (20) funerals.

All plans for our Thanksgiving offering were deferred until our church and school opens once more. We are hoping that when Christmas comes we will be going strongly again.

GEORGE H. JONES, Pastor.

FROM ROANN AND CENTER CHAPEL, TO PORTIS, KANSAS

We have moved again. But before we got located in our new home one out of our household, a beloved wife and companion, moved on beyond the vale of tears, toil and sorrow into eternity. Goodbye to tears, sorrow, sickness, want. Let us praise the name of our coming King that she knew Jesus and went to be with him. O how sweet it must be, to be with Jesus. In this time of distress, sorrow and death, O how terrible it must be for so many to look into the open grave with no star of hope beyond this mortal life. God pity the ones with infinite compassion who are compelled to cry when death overtakes them, "Faith tries to see a star."

Roann and Center Chapel comprised our last charge. Pleasant and sweet shall be the memories of our work while there, and of the warm friends whom we gained while there. The people of Roann need a man who will endeavor to do great things for God. But somehow or other they will have to get together. The day will somehow or other have to clear away when some are for Paul and some for Apollos, and some for Peter even in the calling of a pastor. God knows the way out, I do not. God wants to do wonders at Roann like many other places but the people must help him and give him a chance. I think one of the most needed things in the Brethren church is more modern church edifices. And God surely knows that Roan with her abundance ought to have a modern church building. O yes, some will say none of Brumbaugh's business whether Roann ever builds a new church or not. I know that. I am a million times glad of it, else I might be partners with you in sin. But let me tell you it is some of God's business. Jesus said; give Caesar what belongs to him, but forget God—No, never. Men making from one thousand to two thousand dollars a year in cold cash and then paying from twenty to forty dollars a year toward spreading the kingdom of him who had no place to lay his head, did not even have a lot in the cemetery and died penniless. Men, what do you think God thinks of us? Heaven forgive us. Let me whisper this in your ear, there is no pocket in the shroud. Eternity is long but money won't pass muster there, because they had plenty of gold in heaven before you ever saw the light of day.

Some are under the impression elsewhere that I had to leave Roann. No, I did not. This might have been the case had I been foolish enough to have stayed another year.

Remember, Paul had to leave some places too, simply because he uncapped the truth. Neither am I saying these things because I left out of humor, but simply because I think the truth ought to be known. I left no enemies there so far as I myself am individually concerned. No church will ever get a chance to vote me out gradually. They must make a clean sweep of it the first time or else my trunk is packed. The field is too big to face opposition from within when God knows there is enough from without. If not an inspired writer someone has said: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is unity." Too many churches have missed or lost the Spirit of the Lord. I sometimes feel as though I would rather plow corn or fish anyhow than try to preach. If it were not for the big salary and compliments which I receive I sure would quit at once. Good day.

God bless all the Brethren at Roann. Bless Brother Ronk, that he may be greatly used in leading these dear people on to greater things. God grant that they may pray fervently, plan wisely and execute thoroughly their plans for a greater work, for our Blessed Jesus at Roann. While we were here about forty or fifty members were added to the church. We also succeeded in placing the church paper in all active Brethren homes. Yet neither do we claim or want any of the honor, the honor is due him who died placed between two thieves, whom we are trying to serve in our weak and feeble way.

CENTER CHAPEL

Center Chapel is located in the country. This is the best country church I have learned to know. They surely are a bunch of loyal folks to their church and pastor. In my few years as pastor I have not as yet become so attached to any church as this one. There shall always be a warm place in my heart for these loyal and devoted people. Here I received a unanimous call for my third year, not a single opposing vote being cast and with the largest salary they have ever paid. While I was there no evangelist was on the field for the field was well gleaned when I took charge of the work. I held two meetings two years in succession and I presume had I stayed would have held my third consecutive meeting. Neither had the crowds ceased to come. I think about ten souls, if I remember rightly, came to the blessed Christ during our short stay here. The last day I was with them a man in the prime of life was led through the baptismal grave as he said he wanted me to baptize him before I left. May the Good Spirit hover over him. Bless their new pastor, Bless and keep them all faithful until their King comes.

These churches each sent a splendid bouquet of flowers in remembrance of Mrs. Brumbaugh in our hour of grief and sorrow. Likewise each church before our departure presented unto us some useful gifts. Some money has been sent since from Roann. Many thanks. Remember Jesus said: "Whosoever shall give a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple, shall in nowise lose their reward."

Portis now finds us waiting for the "flu" to speed away. Great God is it any wonder, John wrote, there shall be no more disease and all tears shall be wiped from our eyes? Yet Paul said: "And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even for them that are called according to his purpose." Brethren, let us believe it. Shall we be prepared to act with renewed zeal, shall we have experienced a more prayerful, consecrated, devoted life, and with this shall we be ready to do and dare for our Blessed Master, pressing on to perfection when things again open.

ROY BRUMBAUGH.

HAMLIN, KANSAS

It is quite possible that some who have been used to reading reports from Hamlin have been wondering why the silence. Others have noted the announcement, by the Editor, of the change o faddress of Brother Henderson to Flora, Indiana and mine to Hamlin. This may have caused some to await anxiously some report from here. I admit the wait has been rather lengthy but it seems to have been brought about by various causes.

I preached my first sermon as pastor on September 22nd. That day I had in mind to send a report of my change and the progress of the work here as soon as acquaintance with the parishioners and with the work could be effected. It seems that circumstances have ill favored us, for the most part, for between the closing down for the "flu" and my own spell of sickness, which has lasted until the middle of last week, the desired results have not been attained. However, in the face of all this, I now feel that the work is going nicely and that all the difficulties will soon be overcome.

Any one who wishes to see the results of last years' work here needs but to turn to page 29 of the Four-Year Program HAND BOOK. Their record sure is good and we are aiming to make it even better this year for we believe that we should have high ideals in respect to these Goals.

To show how earnest and enthusiastic the workers of the church here are we can truthfully say—"they are winners" for the day the Thanksgiving offering was to be lifted I was sick in bed but that made little if any difference for the offering was lifted and we will be reported as having swept clean the course and attained the goal."

Further it may be noted that the Sunday school moves right along, unhindered by any obstacles except the "flu" and all were shut down by that. So we are no whit behind the other churches of the Brotherhood when it comes to push and forward movement in the work of the Kingdom.

Hamlin has a splendid congregation, not what we usually call large, yet wide awake, progressive, hospitable and always ready to do God's will as they see it.

We are grateful to the many who have showed us hospitality in the first days of our stay while we were getting settled. We also acknowledge our indebtedness to those who encouraged and in other ways helped us while I was ill. I feel very sorry to have had to miss the preaching services for the three weeks but I am very thankful that the Brethren were so kind and considerate in that matter. We need the co-operation of all the Brethren in prayer if God's Kingdom is to be upbuilt in our midst and in the world.

GEO. E. CONE.

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

We are greatly rejoiced that we are permitted once again to assemble ourselves in our church for worship, from which we have been deprived for several weeks on account of the "flu" ban.

Elder Bell of the Dayton church who has taken up Elder Bauman's work in his absence arrived a couple days late in his Ford from Dayton. The churches were all closed on account of the "flu," so we had to wait patiently for them to be opened before hearing him preach; the waiting was about as hard for him as us. The ban was lifted just before the time for him to open his four week Evangelistic campaign at Fillmore where the brethren have organized a new church and built a new building; so we have not had the pleasure of hearing him many times. He is giving us good food and all seem well pleased with him and his family; his wife has been ushered into the work of the Sunday school and church and is a wonderful help. During the meetings at Fillmore we will have to be content with hearing our supply pastor only in the morning service Sundays.

The new church will be dedicated next Lord's Day and we are all invited to attend, no doubt many will go from here, Los Angeles and Whittier. It is just a good auto ride of 85 miles and return from here. We look for a strong church organization to be built up there if the Lord tarries.

The committees are all getting busy for the Christmas celebration, even the candy committee. This Christmas should be a great one to all of the saints, in that Palestine country has been freed from the cruel Turk and the Mohammedan rule, may we all rejoice in it and make this years' Christmas the greatest in the history of the church; the "Fig Tree" is truly "putting forth its leaves." Beware! The return of the Jew to his native land is vitally connected with the return of our Lord and Savior.

We rejoice that the "flu" has not made any inroads into our flock, several, indeed quite a number, have had the dread disease but none to our knowledge have been cut down by the destroyer death, we are truly thankful for this and praise his name for it.

How thankful we all are for the close of the dreadful war and the awful carnage it wrought; many has been the boy that has fallen in the cause of righteousness but we are again very thankful that none of our boys in the service were called upon to pay the supreme sacrifice, the giving of their lives. Oh he has been so good to us, how can we praise him enough? One of our boys left the morning the war was ended and was sent back from Los Angeles, others expected to get their marching orders any day, yet the end came and the Lord spared each and every one of the boys from our church, and we are looking now for their return from across the sea.

We close wishing you one and all a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

A. H. KENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Some have wondered at my silence. Yes, it has been much longer than usual. Well, perhaps the rest has been good for you. I am quite sure that I have taken no rest. All of our churches were closed during the whole month of October while the awful plague was on. I need not tell you there was no rest then! God forbid that we should have another such experience! I can not write of this at present. After all God has been merciful in that not many were called by death from among our church family. We had quite a number of funerals among those who were strangers, comparatively speaking. This is no strange thing, of course, when we consider that over one hundred thousand people have been added to our population within the last year; some have estimated the number at one hundred and twenty thousand. The fact that so very many of the deaths occurring at that time were from that class, makes it all doubly sad. To die among strangers, where it seemed almost impossible to get helpful care really needed, makes the death visit more sad than any one can tell in words. Let me give just one instance. It was a double funeral. (We had many of that kind here). This young couple came from Roanoke, Virginia. The husband twenty-six, the wife twenty-four. We kept their bodies seven days, finally, after receiving notice that no one could come, the undertaker and three others, with myself, (all strangers of course), proceeded with the funeral, placing their bodies in the narrow house beneath the sod. During those awful days, many times the words of Isa. 26:9 came into my mind. Listen! "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." And yet millions close their eyes in unbelief, as in the days of Noah, and refuse to acknowledge God!

The little flock at Washington rejoices that God has been so good, and has manifested his love and mercy in so many ways during the last few months. It is my desire to write more definitely by and oy. The Lord has surely manifested his presence with us in many ways. We give all praise to him. Perhaps I should refer to what took place with regard to the promise we had made to be responsible for one thousand dollars to be paid on account of the church mortgage. I simply made mention of the matter at the regular services during the month of August. We made no canvass. We simply asked all to then present their offerings accordingly. Praise God, when we received the telegram from Brother Carpenter, that the fifteen hundred dollars had been pledged, we had our part ready even then. Since then we have paid our's over and thus have saved paying further interest. We are earnestly praying that all who have given pledges to the Board will soon redeem them so that all may be able to rejoice together. We have much more we would like to say, but must close for the present.

In His Name,
W. M. LYON.

BERNE, INDIANA

We suppose you think Berne has quit the job, but we have not quite. We are still on the job but Satan has frustrated very many of our plans. The "flu" has had us handicapped since October first. I. D. Bowman gave us one week in the first of October on the present fulfillment of prophecy which was greatly appreciated by all Bible loving students. A great many of other faith than the Brethren attended those meetings and expressed their belief in all his utterances saying that they had not heard the scripture so taught, but now see the truth of it. We are now promised a week's meeting by L. S. Bauman and E. M. Cobb to begin December 23, and continue the week .

So we are expecting great things from the Bauman-Cobb meeting. They will give us purely prophetic Bible study, the thing that Berne relishes as spiritual food. That is if the "flu" does not play havoc with our plans. It has already caused some deaths in the Brotherhood and a great many of our membership is now suffering from the pestilence. But we are trusting that the Lord will rule against Satan (He being the prince of the air). But praise his name the Revelator tells us the Lord will cast that old demon into the bottomless pit so hard he will never hit bottom. See (Rev. 20:-, 2, 3). And then the prophet Isaia tells us the earth shall rejoice with us, the redeemed of the Lord. See Isa. 35 ch.).

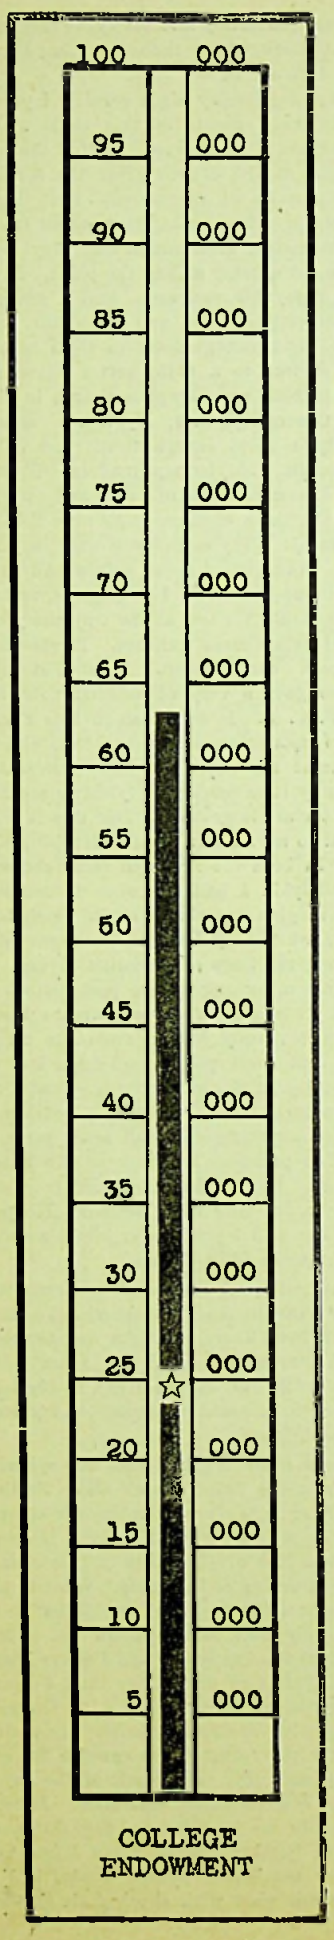
CAMPAIGN NOTES

On my way from Allentown to Philadelphia on Sunday afternoon, December 1st, I stopped off at Lansdale and had a delightful visit with Brother and Sister Jacob C. Cassel. To meet Brother Cassel in his own home was a privilege which I had not enjoyed before. And while I did not find him in possession of the bodily health and vigor his many friends covet for him, yet I did find him in a cheerful, hopeful frame of mind, and keenly alive and interested in the present Endowment campaign and the various activities of the church. I came away from the Cassel home feeling that I har been much benefitted by the visit, and I am hoping the same privilege may be mine again in the near future.



On the night of the first of December I preached to a good audience in the 10th and Dauphin Street church. Brother Alva McClain who is now serving this congregation, gave me a most cordial welcome into his pulpit and his congregation. I knew he would, for I have known him and loved him for a number of years. Indeed, I had been looking forward with pleasure to the canvass in the First church in Philadelphia. It being the home church of Brother Wm. Kolb who is chairman of the Board of College Trustees I knew everything would be most agreeable, and I was not in the least disappointed. Here is the one place in the campaign where I worked under the personal observation of my "boss." As chairman of the Board of Trustees I consider him my "boss." And needless to say, I have a fine "boss." And not only so ,but I also know that in the church at 10th and Dauphin I would find many folks deeply interested in Ashland College, because there are now at Ashland from this church three young men preparing for the ministry, viz., Edward Boardman, Earl Detsch, and Perry Horlacher. A church sending men into the ministry at such a rate would most naturally and surely be interested in the College where those men have gone. And so I found it.

Besides the Sunday night service, I preached three week nights in this church. Our work for the College was done for the most part right at the church after the services, and the results of the canvass were highly satisfactory. These folks had thought the endowment matter all through and they were ready to act quickly and to the point. It was a most enjoyable canvass. And I am glad to announce that 10th and Dauphin went $3,117.00 with enough more in sight to even up the figures to a little better advantage. This puts 10th and Dauphin church in third place. Conemaugh first; Myersdale second; Philadelphia First church third; and Johnstown fourth. Maybe my readers will wish they had seen the look of pride and satisfaction on the faces of these folks over this fine achievement. They might well wish they had seen it. And surely those smiles had to be seen to be appreciated. It was great, and my heart was truly thrilled at the way the young ladies of this church enlisted. It showed a magnificent consecration. The Sisterhood girls also gave a very substantial note, also the S. S. C. E. It was also in this church that two men stepped into the $500 class. I won't name the men—you must guess. And incidentally it is most gratifying to see how that $500 class is growing. But this is what I wanted to say: After all it is teaching that counts. In both the first and third churches in Philadelphia I had a chance to see how people will give and the spirit in which they will give when they have been taught carefully along the lines of Christian giving. If I had known nothing of the past history or the past leadership of these churches I still would have readily known from the recent canvass that these people had been led to know the joy of Christian giving. And I am more convinced than over that "teaching" more than anything else will solve some of the hardest problems we have in the Brethren church. Pardon this disgrssion.

We had a fine time with McClain. His people love him and I predict for him a successful pastorate in Philadelphia.

Brother and Sister Horace Kolb's home was my home while in the First church. To those who have been there, remarks are unnecessary. It was a real home and I am going back again the first chance I get. I shall always cherish pleasant memories of my stay in the Kolb home.

But I can report a grand visit and splendid results from the Third church also. Brother J. E. Braker is the pastor in charge of this work. I knew him when in college. I spent Sunday the 15th of December in this church preaching morning and evening. Went to the Sunday school in the afternoon. This Third church surely does look good to me. They have a great Sunday school and I never heard boys and girls sing any better than I heard them sing here. This church is literally throbbing with life and certainly has a fine outlook for the future. The canvass for endowment was a joy. The result of the day's work was a little more than $500. It was a pleasure to me to renew acquaintances again with Brother Braker whom I had not seen for a number of years. I also had a very pleasant visit with Brother H. C. Cassel during the day. Brother Cassel has stood close up behind the work of the Third church from its beginning.

It did not seem wise to make a canvass for endowment in the Whole Gospel Mission at this time. That may come later. But I did have a short visit with Brother I. D. Bowman in his home. Brother Bowman and his good wife have gone through the valley during the awful "flu" epidemic. But God has been graciously sustaining them and I found Brother Bowman full of hope and courage, strongly determined to go forward in his work.

I have doubtless written too much already. I hope the Editor may forgive me. I might at least add that during my week in Philadelphia I had the privilege of making a fuller acquaintance with the Rolliers. Of their genuine consecration no one can be in doubt after meeting them. May God richly bless them in Africa! The ship upon which they were to leave burned in New York harbor and this will delay their departure for some time. But I maintain if that ship had to burn it was far better to do so in New York than in mid ocean. And nothing is so bad but that it could be worse.

Don't forget to notice what Philadelphia did to the mercury.

Our Dead

BOHN—Charles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bohn, of near McGrawsville, Indiana, died of Spanish influenza, at Camp Taylor on October 10, 1918, aged 25 years. Charles had been a member of the Loree Brethren church at the time of his marriage two years ago, but on moving to Kokomo, there being no church there of his choice, he went with his wife to the Methodist church of that city. He leaves to mourn his departure his bereaved parents and one brother and a sister, besides his heartbroken wife. May the kind Heavenly Father bind up these broken ties and Heaven be made a more inviting place, and the "Flag" mean more because of Charles' departure. The funeral was conducted by the writer on Monday, October 14, 1918, from the Bohn home near McGrawsville.

SPURGEON—Mrs. Lawrence, second wife of Lawrence Spurgeon died at her home near Rossville, Indiana on October 14, 1918, at the age of 20 years. She left her parents and husband and two step children to mourn her departure. The sad part was she had never made a decision for Christ, but yet proved to be a motherly and true companion in her home. The writer had the funeral in the yard of the home on October 16th.

BUTCHER—Carl, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Butcher, died at his home near Darwin, Indiana, on November 13, at the age of 23 years, 6 months, 23 days, leaving a wife and little son, besides his parents and brother, Carl was a kind father and a loving companion, energetic and the business like way that he conducted himself had made him many friends. He answered to the call of the influenza reaper. Funeral conducted at the home by the writer.

Ring Out the Old, Ring In the New

The year nineteen hundred eighteen is drawing to a close and the year nineteen hundred nineteen is about to be born. History will mark the year that is closing as one of the most momentous years in the annals of time because it records the close of the greatest struggle between nations the world has ever witnessed. The church of Jesus Christ will remember it as the year when occurred the most wide-spread closing of all places of public worship because of an epidemic the church has ever known.

With this number of the Evangelist the term of the present incumbent of the editorial office terminates, the old will be rung out and the new rung in. For three years and three months we have sought to fill the office to the best of our ability. It is a position that came to us without our seeking and it, in connection with the business management of the Brethren Publishing Company, has been too much for one man. When we entered upon our double duties a little more than three years ago one of the older ministers said to us, "No man can succeed with both tasks." We knew it was a hard task but we were willing to undertake the work because it seemed impossible to arrange anything different at that time, but as to the success or failure of the project we will leave it to our readers to judge.

GEORGE S. BAER
The New Editor of the Evangelist

We know that neither the editorial part of the paper nor the business of the Company has reached its highest stage of development under these conditions, and yet the subscription list to the Evangelist is the largest in its history and the business of the Company the last year was also the largest in the history of the Company, so it was thought an opportune time to divide the responsibility and the writer was asked to give his full time to the business management of the Company and George S. Baer has been called to assume the position of Editor of the Evangelist and assistant to Brother Gnagey as editor of the Sunday school literature. Brother Baer is amply fitted for the work both by nature and by training. After graduating from Ashland a number of years ago Brother Baer became pastor of the Brethren church at Masontown, Pennsylvania for a while, afterward going to Chicago where he graduated from the Chicago Theological Seminary and later doing graduate work in the divinity school of Chicago University. His last pastoral charge was Louisville, Ohio.

In the years we spent in the editorial office we learned that it is easy to make enemies, also that it is not difficult to make friends and we succeeded in both lines, although we flatter ourselves that we made many more of the latter than of the former.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank all those who co-operated with me in bringing the paper up to its present standard and I sincerely ask them to give Brother Baer even better assistance than they have given me that he may do for the paper what it has been impossible for me to do with my double duties, and in the meantime I will do my best to develop the business of the Company in a way that will make it a real force in Christian work, and as I am relieved of editorial responsibility I will be able to give that personal attention to the needs of the churches and Sunday schools that is necessary to give them the service they ought to receive from their own Publishing House, so I will not deliver a valedictory or say farewell, but only ask you to give attention to the Business Manager's Corner as it may appear in the Evangelist from week to week.

From the Editor's View-Point

"The World, the Flesh and the Devil"

In the days of the long ago most candidates for membership in any of the Protestant churches were asked to renounce "the world, the flesh and the devil." There was supposed to be a complete separation from the things that had held the applicant from the Christian life and all ties were supposed to be broken, once for all. There may not have been as great activity in Christian works in those days as there is now but we are not quite so sure the quality of the Christian experience has been improved upon to any great extent.

It is much easier to unite with a modern church than it was in the churches of former days; there is not the same searching examination on the part of many of the modern churches and the bars have been taken down, one by one, until today there is no high fence between the world and the so-called church.

We do not say the church of the past was not too strict in its requirements for membership. Undoubtedly it was somewhat narrow in some of its views and doctrines, but no doubt it is better to be a little narrow in doctrine than to be without doctrine altogether, and in its efforts to keep pace with the "thought of the day" the church has abandoned too many of the old principles of religion that seemed not only good, but actually necessary to our fathers. If in order to meet the demands of the "new age" or the "new day" of which we hear so much just now the church must abandon the principles that held it together during the days of the persecution and must remove practically all restrictions then it had better cease calling itself a church and take the name of a "race improvement society," for that is about all it will be if the advice of a few modern leaders is to be followed.

So liberal have a great many of the modern churches become that a great many of their members can say with the ex-Crown Prince of Germany, "I have never renounced anything." Thus the world, the flesh and the devil still rule in the lives of many modern church members and these forces will rule still more completely in all the church if care is not exercised in trying to meet the so-called needs of the modern day.

Losing Life to Save It

There are many things that must be lost to be saved. When Jesus said that "he who would save his life shall lose it" and that "he who would lose his life should find it" or save it there were those who could not comprehend his meaning and there are still those who have not yet caught the vision of a life saved by being given up or lost. While this is true to a very large extent in the church, it is doubly true in the business and political world, and there are those who have been considered among the "far-seeing statesmen" of our country who have not yet caught this vision.

When the need became imperative there were many in America who quickly determined that the West should help the East and the great American people quickly decided that it was a clear-cut duty to join the forces of the Allies in their endeavor to save the world to democracy. Of course that thought did not enter into the plans of the European Allies in the beginning, for to them the war meant saving themselves from becoming vassals of the dominion thirsty Prussians, and the idea of saving the world to democracy was largely an American idea, but now that the world has been thus saved one may take time to consider what this democracy means, and whether it is worth the cost.

There are some American statesmen who are not too sure the advantage has been all on the side of America. Charles E. Hughes recently said, according to reports, "In saving the world we have lost our republic." I would not try to interpret the thought of this eminent jurist, but evidently he questions the ultimate good of it all. But he should remember that the greater things of life are secured at the expense of the lesser things and that even in such things as worldly governments the principle of "losing to save" as enunciated by Jesus Christ may be a nation's salvation.

Reconceived or New-born

In discussing the influence German teaching has had upon the world John D. Rockefeller, Jr., said, "German philosophy must be reconceived and reconstructed from its very foundation." We think Mr. Rockefeller is extremely liberal and generous in his attitude to this "thing" that most Christian people hold responsible for the late world war. If the philosophy of Germany has made of the people who have accepted it the kind of people the war has revealed the Germans, especially the leaders, to be why should any effort be made to reconstruct it or to have it reconceived? If this must be done "from its very foundation," why not go a little deeper and begin below the foundation, and then when the foundation is laid remember the words of the Apostle, "other foundation can no man lay than is laid, even Jesus Christ." If our political economists and our social scientists would keep this thought in mind and would always use the gospel rule and plummet to see if the structures they are trying to erect will square with this gospel foundation there would be fewer disappointments in the things they are trying to do for the world. The world needs a philosophy of life, it needs principles that are sure and that will hold in times of prosperity as well as in times of adversity. The world needs a better social and political structure than it now possesses but it can not build it upon the philosophies of men, especially that which has been denominated "materialistic" philosophy. So we do not agree with Mr. Rockefeller in his idea of a reconception or reconstruction of German philosophy for all such must be earth-born and thus is earthy, what is needed is a new-born philosophy, a philosophy born from above, the very philosophy that Jesus Christ demonstrated in his life and death while here upon the earth.

Not Always

Premier Hughes of Australia said, "What we have we hold." This of course was spoken in reference to the colonial possessions taken away from the German empire during the period of the war. So far as their relation to the German empire is concerned such colonies may be better governed by the various governments of the Allies, but if Premier Hughes states as a principle "What we have we hold" his statement is without foundation. In fact it is but a starting point for that other exploded principle "he may take who has the power and he may keep who can." This is but an expression in a different way of the principle that "might makes right" and which is one of the things the allied nations claim to have fought to overthrow.

In the triumphs of victory there is danger of forgetting the spirit of humility that is common in time of extreme danger and sometimes one is led to forget the "hand that was reached out to save," and in this forgetting there is a tendency to build up a spirit of boastfulness and pride that is without foundation in the real experiences that brought about the victory, and the heart that was humble and tender while in the presence of extreme danger may become cruel and hard in its hour of victory.

There are many things in life besides colonial possessions about which one might say, "what we have we hold," but it is not always for the good of the possessor or the things possessed. It is a clinging to the world and to the things of the world in a manner that is not wholesome and that comes under the disapproval of the gospel.

THE PRE-EMINENT CHRIST

BY FRANCIS J. REAGAN

"That in all things he might have the pre-eminence." Col. 1:18.

"We would see Jesus." Such was the request of certain Greeks who had come to the feast at Jerusalem. "We have seen the Lord." Such was the blessed experience of the disciples as the risen Lord walked calmly into their presence. To lead a soul from a limited knowledge of Christ to a vision of the risen Lord is the object of the Spirit of God in the church; but when the Holy Spirit unveils the person of Christ, we see "a teacher come from God" not only, but one who's face doth shine as the sun and whose raiment is as white as in the light.

The aim of the writer is to set in opposition some of the ideas and concepts of man, with what is written concerning the person and work of Jesus of Nazareth. The answer to the question, "Who and what was the great teacher whose advent changed the history of the world?" seems to have been answered by many in favor of Unitarianism. The name of Jesus is used along with other great teachers—which at times is legitimate—but usually infers that his Divinity was not exclusive. The Dean of a western university, when asked if he believed in the Deity of Jesus, replied, "I would no more doubt the Deity of Jesus Christ than I would doubt my own Deity." Much stress is laid upon scripture relating to his humanity, to the exclusion of that pertaining to his Deity; this is neither a scriptural nor scientific method, the honest investigator includes all available data. When proof of the higher claims of Christ is presented the rationalist sets himself to disparage the testimony of the writers. This is done by maintaining that the sacred books were not written by the men whose names they bear, but were the product of a later age, or more absurd still, that the writers being his disciples were not impartial witnesses, and their testimony, therefore, is not reliable.

Renan seems to have voiced the sentiments of this age, and to have reached the highest point in classic blasphemy—who weaves his dishonoring opinions of Jesus into his happy phrases descriptive of the orient. He condescends to say, "Jesus was a man of supreme personality, who, by his bold originality, and by the love which he was able to inspire, became the object, and settled the direction of the future faith of mankind . . . . the highest consciousness of God which ever existed in the heart of man was that of Jesus; but never once did he give utterance to the sacreligious idea that he was God . . . he believed himself to be more than ordinary man, but separated by an infinite distance from God." In closing his work he would fain veil his unbelief with homage, "Jesus will never be surpassed . . . All ages will proclaim that amongst the sons of men none has been born who is greater than Jesus." Glowing tribute, but vulgar amid the echoes of his words of unfaith. Strange that in the light of the Bible, this disciple of darkness should find so many likeminded; and sad that they occupy chair, pulpit and pew. Is the church to lose that exalted idea of her Lord which is set forth in his word and accept the conclusions of depraved humanity as to his attributes? We believe with Dr. Broughton that "Christ is more than good; he is more than divine; He is God and man, or he has no part in the Christian system."

Some time ago the writer's attention was called to a text book on Ethics, in which the author in referring to the incident recorded in the Bible, where Jesus walked through the cornfield with his disciples, spoke of the Master as a "Jew who lived in the first century." Think of a man to whom God has given talent enough to write a book on a subject so vital, who can find no better words with which to describe his Lord; to us this man is lacking a knowledge of Christ, a sense of propriety, and a knowledge of literary composition. We find no such conception in scripture, no such terms employed; but in stately and majestic language is set forth the character of the great High Priest, who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities.

1. He is Pre-eminent in Creation. "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him. Col. 1:16;" "He was in the world and the world was made by him, Jno. 1:10;" "hath in these last days spoken unto us in his son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds. Heb. 1:2." In these as in many other verses we see the Son as agent in creation. When we think of him we should look back farther than the days when he walked among men, and see him who was before Abraham, who's goings forth have been from of old.

2. He is Pre-eminent in Redemption. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of of sins." Col. 1:14. "Being justified freely by his grace through the Redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Rom. 3:24; "Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into Holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." Heb. 9:12; "When he had himself purged our sins, he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high Heb. 1:3". He is pre-eminent in redemption in its God-ward aspect not only, but also in the sense that would bar man from any co-operation with the cross. Some would "make a fair show in the flesh" here, and try to assist the Savior as he bears the sin of the world. Jesus was alone on the cross, there was a thief on either side, one of whose salvation consisted, (as ours does) in his realizing that the sinless one was suffering for the ungodly, and who was carried to glory as the first trophy this side of the Cross. Would that we might distinguish between what he did for us on the Cross, and what he told us to do in obedience to his commands, and thus not mingle our blood with that of Calvary. There is not room for boasting (Rom. 3:27) as we behold the cross we have not whereof to glory; as we rejoice in a full adherence to the ordinances of his church, let us remember that, he "obtained eternal redemption for us." Let us meditate upon his work, and we will be led to say as the herald of old, "he must increase, while I must decrease . . . . Whose shoes I am not worthy to bear."

3. He is Pre-eminent in Gospel Preaching. "I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified." This is a concise and comprehensive statement of the person and work of Christ; to be sure it had special application to the church at Corinth, but it should even now be the criterion for all who would herald the good news from heaven. "Preach the word" was the veteran's charge to the one who had yet to run his race, and this in the light of the coming judgment of the quick and the dead. To trace the method of the Spirit of God in scripture, is to see that no doctine has precedence of the person, and work of Christ, from cross, tomb, and throne. Satan rejoices when he can hide the cross with doctrine less fundamental, even though that doctrine be true. Let us preach "the whole counsel of God," but that in the order in which it is revealed; Giving him the pre-eminence. From sheer loyalty to the things we love as a denomination we sometimes obscure the seeker's view of the Cross and Christ. We resort to the conclusion of Peter's sermon on Pentecost: "Repent, and be baptized for the remission of sins" while we ignore the weightier matters of his discourse, as he reviews the colossal events just prior to the coming of the Holy Spirit. He flings into the teeth of his unbelieving hearers the facts (Acts 2:22-38) that, Jesus of Nazareth a man approved of God, v. 22; ye have taken and by wicked hands, have crucified, v. 24; whom God raised up, v. 24; him being by the right hand of God exalted, v. 33; when they heard this, they were pricked in their hearts." Heard what? "A Whole Gospel." Jesus Christ; Crucified; Risen; Exalted; When they, under the conviction of the Spirit of God cried out, "What shall we do?" Peter answered logically, "Repent and be baptized." It would have been out of place for Peter to haxe exhorted them to be baptized, as they stood in the shadow of Calvary, their hands red with the blood of the crucified one. What they needed was the mighty proclamation of the gospel truth which Peter sounded in their ears, before they were fit for the holy ordinance of the church which was then being formed.

The gospel (1 Cor. 15:1-3 should be preached in no uncertain terms before benighted sinners are admitted to the baptismal waters, and we would have few unsaved in our churches. Let us preach Christ, and him crucified; he who does not put this to the foreground, wrests the scriptures, robs Christ of his glory, and the sinner of his hope.

4. He is Pre-eminent in the Hearts of His People. "My sheep hear my voice . . . . and they follow me." With these words the Master describes the gracious disposition and happy state of his own. They are occupied with him. They meditate on his law day and night. They sit down under his shadow with great delight and his fruit is sweet to their taste. And thus it should be; he who has been given pre-eminence by the Father, must be first in the list of the children of the Father. How great the temptation in these unparalleled days for minister and layman, to yield to every demand on time, to the exclusion of him. He tenderly rebuked Martha for putting service before communion, and commended Mary for her place at his feet. Is he not grieved when we are so busy for him, that we find little time to be with him? C. H. M., says, "If I allow my work to get between me and my Master, it will be of little worth. We can only effectually serve Christ as we enjoy him. It is when the heart dwells on his powerful attractions, that the hands perform the most acceptable service in his name; nor is there any one who can minister Christ with unction, freshness and power, if he is not feeding on him in the secret of his soul. Happy is the man who ministers thus, whatever be the success or reception of his ministry." "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me," says the Master. "That I might know him," was the soul cry of the great Christian crusader. The Spirit of God leads us to him. The star in the east led the wise men to the Christ; so also will every book in the Bible. From the time we begin our journey from Gen. 3:15 (the acorn of revelation) as we pass under the blood marked door, stand to view the tabernacle with its service, sit at the feet of prophet, hear the angels sing over Bethlehem, weep over Calvary, roll away the stone on the third day, until with the seer on Patmos we fall prostrate, we are at all times in his presence. Out of every ordination of the Old and New Testament he stands forth, lays his hand upon our heads saying, "Fear not I am the first and the last." Paul said many were weak and sickly, and some had fallen asleep, because they did not discern the Lord's body, while at the communion table. Theirs was dull bondage to the letter of these symbols, instead of seeing the life, broken body, and shed blood. They were like the two on the road to Emmaus (Luke 24) who had missed the very essential thing of seeing him in the scriptures; to them he began at Moses, and all the prophets and expounded to them in all things concerning himself. There was little or no virtue in their seeming obedience, because they had their eyes and faith on their obedience instead of him, nor will there be much in ours if we glorify our obedience above his obedience unto death, even the death of the Cross. We are members of his body the church, and as such we owe him the affections which become that relation, but the affections do not obtain the revelation, they flow out of it, as it is written he that glorieth let him glory in the Lord (not in himself). Give HIM the pre-eminence.. For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things, to whom be glory for ever, Amen.

Except He Strive Lawfully

G. W. RENCH

The great character of the early church laid down the principle that, "if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully (2 Tim 2:5). a simple truth well to remember in these days when men are reconstructing (?) everything—even to the church. The revised version reads, "And if also a man contend in the games, he is not crowned, except he have contended lawfully." To contend lawfully means governed by law, and presupposes the existence of law. Our loose haphazard way of trying to be religious without God's divine "how" is held before the great search-light of high heaven, until its weakness is distressingly exposed.

Newspaper salvation by character, like Unitarian salvation, is one thing, but salvation by the blood of Jesus is quite another thing. The former ignores God's PLAN, not caring one whit about "striving lawfully." The latter, honors his plan. Christ's atonement—his sacrificial death—is set aside by these free-thinkers; it is held as indispensable by the other party. In the one system, MORALITY is the "procuring cause" of peace with God. In the other, "Therefore, BEING JUSTIFIED BY FAITH, we have peace with God THROUGH OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST."

Now, the two positions are utterly irreconcilable. If Christianity can be divorced from its "how," then St. Paul is either ignorant or a fraud, or both, by talking about "striving lawfully." The "blood" and its scriptural application does count, or the Bible is unreliable and its teachings a joke. It is clear, from the teachings of that Book, that God is not only back of the scheme to save men from their sins, but that he has given an EFFECTIVE PLAN whereby it can be accomplished. The task, to combat and overthrow sin, was CONSIDERED SO GREAT, that it could never be accomplished without divine aid. This was embodied in a DIVINE PLAN, and "striving lawfully" is so imperative that "climbing up some other way" is not to be thought of. Hence, we have many texts like these: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." "For there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter the Kingdom of God." Oh, yes; if we are to enjoy "peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ" we can not run across lots; we must follow the well beaten path, for, says Jesus, "no one cometh unto the Father but by me." We must "hit the ball" before we can run the bases; we must start with the crack of the pistol, if we are to run in the race. "For he is not crowned, except he strive lawfully." The game has "rules;" and we "must play the game." God's soldiers must be drilled according to his tactics. His generals must listen for his commands.

In 1 Samuel, chapter 15, there is a lesson put in the Book that leaves no doubt as to the mind of God in executing his plan. Saul was commanded to "utterly destroy" the Amalekites whom he was sent to subdue. With 210,000 men he marched against that wicked nation. He won a magnificent victory. He took Agag, their king prisoner. But he forgot his orders were from God, and he forgot to "slay utterly." He didn't play the game. When the Lord informed the prophet Samuel that Saul was doing as he pleased about "slaying utterly" it grieved him and he "cried unto the Lord all night." When Samuel stood face to face with Saul that dignitary summoned his saintly phraseology and said, Blessed be thou of the Lord; I have performed the commandment of the Lord." I can see Samuel almost falling in a faint. Like a modern machine gun, his words came thick and fast: "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears." God's plan was to utterly destroy. Saul's plan was, "spare the best." And there you have it—20th century religion—up to the minute in all its modern niceties. God commanded, Saul thought otherwise! But, then and there, Saul lost his kingdom.

There was such a thing as striving lawfully, which means "according to law;" but Saul missed his chance that God had given him. Does that mean anything to men now?

Apollos was a splendid New Testament preacher, though like some modern preachers, he was not given very much to "forms in religion." He was a gifted orator, "For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, showing by the scriptures that Jesus was the Christ" (Acts 18:28). And, by the way, we hear much these days about "Jesus the Christ" as being the foundation upon which all Christendom is to unite. But the context clearly shows that unless the life conforms to the real significance of such a plea, that it becomes a phrase without power to transform sinful lives. Plain, practical Paul coming to Ephesus, and finding certain disciples, begins to question them. What do you suppose Paul was concerned about? About the "latest" on the authorship of the Pentateuch? About the "preposterous doctrine of the virgin birth?" About "which Isaiah?" About the children of Israel crossing the Jordan on a land slide? Here was what he was interested in: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Oh, yes; Paul was not "up on modernisms," but he was "there" on the "Old Time Religion," the religion that had the Holy Ghost in it. What he made clear to these Ephesian brethren, who had accepted Jesus as the Christ, was, that if you want the "Crown of Reward," you will have to RUN THIS RACE LAWFULLY." Their running would not count, if they ran across lots. In amazement he seems to add, "You never heard whether there be any Holy Ghost?" "How then were you baptized?" They say "Unto John's Baptism." We can hear Paul say, "That will not do now; If Jesus is your Christ, his law now prevails, and he said, 'baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,' and you will have to strive lawfully." The record is, "When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." It doubtless caused some inconvenience to "get in the game," and play according to the rules, but when the rewards were distributed it will be found to be worth while to drill according to heavenly tactics.

In a great meeting, I am told, a professed member of the church, an officer of wide influence, was led to make a public confession of his sins. The minister entered his office and said, "I have been hearing rumors on the street and for some time that your life is not clean, and I have come to say to you that if these rumors are untrue I desire to stand with you to contradict them; but if they are true to stand nearer than a brother, and help you to get free from sin that is ruining your influence for God. The old judge turned pale, then bowed his head in his arms on the table, and soon falteringly said, "They are all too true." And he refused to lift his face. The minister said, "Judge, let's pray about it." He rose from that prayer, went out of his office, saw some parties who, too knew of his sins, returned to the afternoon services just as they were being closed, and said, "Just a moment before you close: I have lost my influence in my home, and almost, I fear, in the city. I have come to say I have gotten right with my minister, and with my God; if you will forgive me, I mean to live a different life." The meeting closed in sobs for a benediction. He had not been striving lawfully, and he almost missed his chance of reward.

Christian Ideals the Sure Foundation of Democracy

EDWIN E. JACOBS, PH.D.

The one fundamental upon which all democracy rests is justice, and if there is a second, it is like unto the first, namely, equality of opportunity. There can be no genuine democracy where injustice dwells nor can there be injustice where there is a pure and genuine democracy, Democracy counts large upon the inherent, eternal, and infinite worth of the individual man, and the sentiment that all are created equal must have its widest interpretation in such a government. There can be neither rank, caste, privilege, nor prestige in a democracy which is born to live, except those of personal worth. And America had better look well into this, for there are forces in these that will be the undoing of any free people.

In the judgment of the writer, one of the gravest perils which besets America today, is just this, special privilege on the part of the powerful, and this has been markedly so ever since the days of the Cleveland and McKinley administrations. This evil points out the way as clear as noonday, If America means to live as a free government. The menace of the I. W. W. is small as compared to this, for their very violence will defeat them and moreover, the government is always alert to suppress such a class of criminals more quickly than those who are higher up. By comparison, so also, is the menace of anarchism small, for the anarchist will not soon number many. The failure of the common man to take an interest in the government and vote is not our greatest danger, nor is there any indication at all that the people of America will forget their love of liberty. I am also bold to believe that the much-talked-of socialism is not only not a menace, but holds some promise of good. But the obtaining of special privilege by the powerful and sleek, strikes at the very heart of representative government and representative government is the basis of all democracy. The obtaining of such special and favored advantages does not strike at the heart of an autocracy for that is founded upon caste, but it does strike at the foundations of a government which is supposed to be subserviant, absolutely and willingly, to the sovereign will of the people.

When it costs $190,000 to obtain the mere nomination for the low salaried office of United States senator, by a man who is neither eminently worthy nor capable, then something is rotten in Denmark. And when bodies of men, be they either labor unions or groups of capitalists, are able to corrupt government, debauch courts, defy the sovereignty of governments, and buy laws, then it occurs to the writer that something about government is both undemocratic, unChristian and wrong. The principles for which thousands of my fellow countrymen have bled and died are abrogated and the name of democracy becomes a hissing and a byword among the nations of the earth. And we are coming more and more to believe in America, let us hope, that a government that is not of the people, for the people, and by the people, should perish from the earth.

The marvel of modern times has been that for the first time in recent history any great and free people should have made the world quarrel their quarrel and, not seeking advantage at all, but on the contrary suffering hardships, should have been willing to give of their all in war. But this we did because we held dear an ideal of government and that ideal was democracy. Our hearts ought to burn with pride that our own America should have been willing to lay so costly a sacrifice on the altar of human freedom. But with all this, there are forces set going now in America which make not for democracy.

Older notions of government as organized force alone, are disappearing before the blazing sun of righteousness. We no longer establish governments in order to have some potentate before whom we may fall on bended knee. We are not establishing governments that they may lead us into war nor that they may foster one class as against another, nor that our president may travel in luxury beyond description to some European capital, walking over rose-strewn paths, while little children in the crowd are hungry and blighted. But we do establish governments and elect officers to serve us AND THAT GOVERNMENT IS BEST WHICH SERVES THE PEOPLE BEST. THERE IS NO OTHER TEST.

Now these are both the principles of democracy and also of Christianity. Jesus had a supreme interest in the common folk. From these he chose the twelve and to these he gave the most of himself and his time. That nation, therefore, that wants to build upon righteousness must take into account Jesus' conception of humanity. He has bidden us to make the first of all our prayers to him, "Our Father who are in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done in America as it is in heaven. That is what that prayer means, exactly. Greece, Rome, Russia, Germany, and many other governments always had their foot on the neck of the humble and poor. They have perished, they could not long endure. One may say that a nation which builds upon injustice, has within its own heart, the seeds of destruction. God did not and will not destroy nations as Galveston or San Francisco were destroyed, in a single day, for the nation which makes much of its rulers and its powerful and forgets and despises the common man, will take care of its own destruction. A nation which forgets God is one which fails to keep faith with the people which it ought to protect and which it has sworn to serve. The Christian ideal, whatever else it may involve, holds to the immortal cry, that "the people in the past have been nothing. They must be everything." To that I tie as eternally true.

But you remind me that the early and apostolic church had little to do with governments, but there was a reason. It was weak and governments were strong. St. Paul, standing square with the powers there were, said that the powers that be are ordained of God, a statement which we must take with the same reserve that he must himself have had in his own mind. But after Constantine formally gave Christianity to the world, the church became entangled with the governments of the earth, an entanglement which was not even seriously questioned until the days of Martin Luther and which was not wholly severed until the stars and stripes gladdened and brightened the sky of what is now America. Since the days of Washington, there has been a certain marked aloofness on the part of the church towards government. This may not be only reasonable but highly commendable, but it is neither reasonable or commendable to seek to establish a democracy apart from the genuine principles of Jesus Christ. The church ought to be potent, then, in the new age that is coming, not meddlesome, but bold to push its ideals of justice into the very forefront of all departments of the nation's life. Let it be borne in mind that the government has a thousand duties more important than the waging of war, the collecting of taxes, and the punishment of criminals. It is wholly belated to think that government has no humanitarian duties to perform. I, for one, am not afraid of names such as socialism, paternalism, or what not. Call it hocus-pocus, if the name suits you better, but we ought to insist that our nation be exceedingly painstaking in matters that are related to our common welfare. The principles of Jesus Christ, as far as they may be understood today, are the sure foundation of a democracy.

THAT GOVERNMENT IS BEST WHICH SERVES THE HIGHEST INTEREST OF THE PEOPLE BEST. THERE IS NO OTHER TEST OF EFFICIENT, CHRISTIAN, AND WORTHWHILE GOVERNMENT.

THE MINISTER

BY J. FREMONT WATSON

Today the complaint is universal that there is a scarcity of first-class ministers, and that our brightest young men do not enter the ministry. I am sure the complaint is true. Moreover, as a rule, this has always been the case. It was true in Christ's day and Savonarola's, and Wesley's. The only exceptions being when God's people are under the spell of a deep religious mood, then that of the minister stands first among all humble callings. Whenever and wherever idealism is strong, the minister is strong. Wherever and whenever materialism is in the saddle, the ministry lacks great leadership. Materialism and greed are the great enemies of the ministry.

Another great enemy to the ministry is misunderstanding. The minister is thoroughly talked about; but he is the most misundertsood man in town! Many people regard the minister as a solemn man. Young people often do; and are afraid to be in his presence. Never seeing him except in the pulpit, which is a place for a seriousness and dignity, they imagine he always looks like a funeral and acts like a prayer meeting. "I'll never forget," said a young man, "the awful Sunday afternoons when the minister stayed at father's house. None of us acted naturally, and we would not let him. It was an awful solemn and holy time. One hot Sunday afternoon my eyes were opened. The minister left to himself for a moment, came out to us children, where we sat like martyrs on the lawn, and, grabbing up a blade of grass, put it between his thumbs and blew a blast louder than a locomotive's whistle. We had been dying to do something desperate all afternoon, but did not dare. Mother heard it and came around the house with the day of judgment in her eye. When she saw it was the minister she vanished like a dream. My soul went out in that screech, and to me it was sweeter than the sacred song. After that I knew the minister was human, and I loved him. Of all the men I know, ministers are about the most human and fun-loving."

Another trouble which wrecks the minister's usefulness, is a misunderstanding of the minister's true work. People care so little about his preaching. They care and talk about his social qualities, his visiting abilities, and his executive duties. They take it as a matter of course that he should preach two good sermons every Sunday, and several fine speeches through the week, but from their talk you would imagine that his real business was to coddle church members. So it is nag, nag, nag, with little petty questions, and it is run, run, run, to call once in so often on the elect. It is far worse in small than in large churches; and it takes a man with a backbone like Bunker Hill monument to withstand this pressure. Multitudes go down before it, and neglect their studies for this legion of social duties, with the result that they never make preachers at all. Their whole strength is given up to a sort of ecclesiastical tiddly-winks. The fact is, the Protestant churches have run the social end into the ground. PREACHING IS THE MINISTER'S BUSINESS FIRST, LAST AND ALL THE TIME. The great trouble with modern preaching is that it is like modern flat cooking on a gas stove—it is too quick; much of it is only half done. Sermons are not written, they are hatched. Sermons take time and solitude and quiet and brooding. Half-done sermons, and running, racing, calling, tea-drinking parsons have gone far to lose the grip of the church on men and to bring the ministry into disrepute among them as the little business of little men.

Another misunderstanding, is the feeling that his work does not count for much anyhow. This is hard for the minister to bear, because it is unjust, and is a mistake of dense ignorance. As a matter of fact the minister has occupied a large place among those who have wrought for the welfare of humanity.

In the realm of authorship the ministry ranks high above the other professions. Isaiah, Augustine, Anslem, Erasmus of old and Emerson, Milton, Newton, Coleridge, Edwards, and Bunyon in modern times are a few of the many names.

In the realm of statesmanship there is none to surpass Moses of old, and none to compare as nation-makers with John Knox in Scotland; John Calvin in Switzerland; Hildebrand in Rome; Savonarola in Florence, and John Wycliff in England. Where would democracy have been on this side of the sea without John Robinson and John Cotton and Dr. Witherspoon; and where would it have been in England without Eliot and John Milton?

That is what Guizot meant when, writing the story of democracy, he said, "Liberty came to Europe in the small boat that brought to the west the Apostle Paul." That is what Webster had in mind when he said, "Where have the life-giving waters of civilization sprung up save in the footprints of the Christian ministry!"

That is what John Ruskin was thinking about when he wrote. "The issues of life and death are in the pulpit. The preacher is the 'man sent from God,' to declare 'the unsearchable riches of his grace,' the man clothed in the might and power of God. To be God's man, God's messenger, think you it is a small thing?" "And I sought for a man to stand in the gap," saith God, Young man, would you count it a small thing to be that man?

EVANGELIST HONOR ROLL

The New Year in Ashland College

BY W. D. FURRY, PH.D.

On Friday evening, December 20, Ashland College suspended all classes for the year 1918. All classes will be resumed on Friday, January 3, 1919.. New students may enter at that time and find ample work. All Departments of the College will be open and students entering at the beginning of the new year may register for any work they are prepared to carry with profit. It is advised that all students who anticipate entering at the opening of the new year correspond at once with the President so that no disappointments may arise on entering the school.

Ashland is a fully organized College. Except training for the Ministry and Business no professional work is offered.| Students desiring to enter professional schools may complete two years in Ashland and enter professional schools as Juniors. During these two years spent in Ashland the student may ground himself in the knowledge of the Bible and the teachings of his own church. The young men of the church ought to avail themselves of this opportunity.

The College also maintains a preparatory department for students who are not prepared to enter at once upon collegiate or professional courses.

A number of new courses will be offered at the opening of the new year so that students entering at that time will have no difficulty in securing sufficient work.

The Special Departments, Piano, Voice, Expression and Business are well organized and offer splendid arvantages If it is impossible to remain the entire year in residence you can spend three months in one or more of these departments and carry some college or Bible work without extra cost. Numbers of our young people ought to spend at least a few months each year in Ashland College.

The Department of Religious Education offer a number of well-organized courses that Sunday School Workers and Endeavorers could follow with great profit. Why not come for twelve weeks at least?

Room and Board are under the direct supervision of the College and the cost is as low as conditions will justify.

The College will also conduct two sessions of the Summer School for Teachers, the first beginning about May 1. Announcements will be ready about March 1. The Summer School is fully recognized by the State Board of Education of Ohio and will be recognized by other states in consequence. The regular Faculty of the College will offer instruction in the Summer School and a number of teachers of recognized standing in the state will be added. It is hoped that many of our young men and women now employed in the public schools will consider Ashland in planning for Summer School work.

The days of social, industrial and moral reconstruction are on. There is great need of leaders. Why not qualify for a position of social and moral leadership? Ashland can help you. If interested address the President of the College for further information.

IN MY FATHER'S HOUSE

BY REV. ADOLPH HABERLY

It is all one house, my Father's home,
The living and dead each have his room,
Not into a far country do we travel on,
In that dread moment when life is done.
Nor through a shadowy or uncharted land,
Ere the soul can come to the heavenly strand.
It is only a passing from one room to another,
A step through a veil to a bright chamber, brother!
There is no facing of storm or of night,
We are e'er in God's house, and e'er in his sight.

A little child may well be afraid
When sent all alone through night's dark shade,
Through a lonely road, where dark shadows fall.
But fear is dispelled, when its father's call
Invites the dear child to the lighted room,
Away from the dark and the shadowy gloom,
With father and mother and love all aflame,
Calling their darling, by some tender, pet name.
'Twill ever be one of its happiest days,
One it will treasure in memory always.

In my Father's house are many rooms,
And death is not housing us in the dark tombs.
'Tis but our passing from our former school room,
To a much better room in our heavenly home.
Into no danger doth God send us out,
And into no storms that are raging without.
'Tis but one brief step, and lo! we have come,
Into a much brighter and glorious room,
Our tasks are all finished, our school days all done,
Our Father has called us to his heavenly home.

—The Presbyterian.

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

This week all records have been broken in the way of adding churches to the Honor Roll for the Brethren Evangelist as four churches have won places on the Roll. The churches that are thus honored are Berlin, Pennsylvania, J. B. Trout, pastor; Dutchtown, Indiana, Homer Anderson, pastor; North Liberty, Indiana, C. C. Grisso, pastor, and North English, Iowa with W. H. Miller pastor. This is a mighty fine record for this week, but there are many other churches that should win places on this Roll and it should be done at once so that the new subscribers will get the first number of the New Year, which will be the first number under the editorial management of Brother Baer. The Evangelist will come out next week with a brand new "title page" that will add much to the appearance of the paper and everybody will want a copy of this first number. We can also add that Muncie, Indiana and Conemaugh, Pennsylvania have gone on the list for the second year.

This week we publish two letters and a true story from our missionary party in Africa. From the dates on the letters it will be seen that the mail reaching Africa travels even more slowly than it does in the United States. Our readers who are inclined to complain if the Evangelist does not always reach them before Sunday should consider how it seems to the Gribble party to get only one paper in six months, even though the paper is sent to them regularly every week.

If there is a pastor in the Brethren church who is absolutely Brethren from the ground up it is Homer Anderson, pastor at College Corners and at Dutchtown, Indiana. With him everything possible about his work must be Brethren. Of course there are other pastors that feel the same way but among many there is room for the development of the spirit of loyalty that Brother Anderson manifests. Brother Anderson will surely make a record at Dutchtown and also at College Corners.

We have a very interesting letter from W. H. Bock, telling of the new work he has opened up in Carlota, Argentina. The Brethren church now has three mission stations in South America and from Brother Bock's report we gather that this newest station bids fair to become prosperous and fruitful in a very short time even though the opposition is great, for it has been noted that real Christianity often flourishes best where opposition and persecution are to be contended with. Such conditions throw the workers more fully upon the Lord for strength and his help never fails.

The first section of the Conference Minutes and the Brethren Annual has been off the press for several weeks, but because of the scarcity of help and the pressure of the work in getting out the Sunday school quarterlies the work on the Minutes had to be laid aside for a time, but as soon as the quarterlies are out of the way the work on the Minutes will be rushed to completion. This will be by far the most complete report ever made of the Conference, among other things the list of the names and addresses of all delegates in attendance will be included. This report is also being made at a greater cost than any previous report and we trust when the order cards are received by the pastors they will order as large a supply as possible, otherwise the Publishing House will suffer financial loss.

Dr. J. Allen Miller, Dean of Ashland Seminary makes a special announcement on another page concerning the work of the Seminary. As he says the conditions of the church and of theological seminaries have been greatly changed by the war, but now that the war is over there should be a turning of young men toward the work of the church and toward the ministry.

W. C. Benshoff, district director of the Four-Year Program for the Pennsylvania conference makes an important announcement on another page. The pastors of Pennsylvania are directed to read this notice.

Three Sunday schools have accepted the Waterloo, Iowa school's challenge for the four months' contest as announced two weeks ago, namely, Huntington, Indiana; Flora, Indiana and Ashland, Ohio. Are there not many more schools that will enter this contest?

It is a wonder that some writer of popular songs has not written "The Song of the Flu" for use in the theaters before this; but if the epidemic continues much longer we need not be surprised to learn that some minister has taken it upon himself to compose such a song. We are sure Brother Lytle feels very much like it, but while he is able to express his feelings in vociferous prose we are not so sure about his poetic tendencies. However, Brother Lytle does not intend to allow anything from Spain or from any other earthly kingdom spoil a whole year's work for the Kingdom of God and he plans to make his work intensive if it can not be extensive.

We ask the pardon of Brother Rench for running his concluding editorial on one of the inside pages instead of on the first page where it naturally belongs, but this being the final issue of the Evangelist under the present editorial management we felt that the first page should be given to an introduction of our new Editor and to an announcement of his work. However, we are sure Brother Rench's contributions will be read with just about as much eagerness on an inside page as they have been when occupying the front page.

We feel this week's paper offers our readers a feast of good things on the contribution pages and we commend the careful reading of the contributions from Brethren Jacobs, Watson, Reagan, etc. We are glad for these strong contributions for our closing number of the Evangelist, but we also have a few more on the "hook" for the use of Brother Baer, but out of our experience we can assure our contributors that they will lighten the labors of Brother Baer nearly one half if they will keep him supplied with good copy.

Around the Editor's Table

Religion and Social Service

Three different positions are held by the people of the Christian world in regard to the nature and character of the work suggested by the heading of this editorial item. It is possible that the Christian world or the church may never get together on the question but it is also possible for them to get a little more closely together than they now are.

There are those who see nothing in the religion of Jesus Christ that moves them to become active in any kind of social reform or of social service whatever. To them the religious life and the social life of the world appear as two separate and distinct things wholly and entirely apart and to them it appears neither desirable nor possible to bring them together. They see no obligation resting on the church to bring about any great social changes to relieve the sufferings and woes of mankind, to them the whole duty of the church seems to be included in the thought of evangelizing or teaching the whole world of the Kingship of Jesus Christ so that at the appointed time he may come and reign upon the earth when everything will be changed and the very power of the evil one that causes all the suffering and poverty and sin of the present dispensation will be overthrown and thus in one grand movement all social wrongs will be swept from human society.

On the other hand there are those who see no value in any religion, even including the religion of Jesus Christ, that does not strike at what they consider the very roots of all social and economic wrongs, and they will have no part with any religion that is not revolutionary in character and that does not have as one of its chief characteristics the purpose to overthrow the present social order and replace it with an order or a civilization that guarantees to every man, not only a chance to live, but a chance to live luxuriously or even royally without any great physical effort on his own part.

Both of these positions may be wrong, but they both can not be right, but on the other hand there are those, and we believe the greater portion of the Christian forces of America belong to this class, who believe there is a very close connection between the Christian life and the service a Christian can render his generation. They see where a practical application of the principles of Jesus Christ may be made to social conditions every day in the year, and though they do not make social service their religion they do give expression to their religion by engaging in service that is helpful to society as it now is. The primary function of the Christian religion may not be that of renovating or of reconstructing human society but the principles of the Christian religion are of such a nature that they can not be practised without bringing about great changes in the social order. In fact it is our firm conviction that there is not a single wrong from which society is suffering, not a single condition that makes life hard for the poor or the weak that would not or could not be changed by a strict application to life, on the part of all, of the principles of the Christian religion.

Thy Glory Hath Departed

The statement that "pride goeth before a fall" was never more forcefully illustrated than when the proud Prussian military organization with its haughty ruler, the Kaiser, suddenly collapsed like a snow man on a hot day in July. It is doubtful if the pages of history record the life and deeds of any monarch of ancient times who manifested a more bigoted and proud disposition than this fallen ruler of Germany. For many years he sought to impose himself upon his own people as well as the people of the world as one of the most humble and pious of men, but it should not be forgotten that the apostle warned the early Christians that in his attempts to deceive Satan himself would pose as "an angel of light." So we may take it that the great religious poses of the ex-Kaiser were but his satanic attempts to deceive the masses who were glad to acknowledge allegiance to such a pious and consecrated leader.

An attempt on the part of the Kaiser to impose upon the people in every part of his domain has been charged to his tendency to decorate many churches with his own likeness. This practice extended, if not from Berlin to Bagdad, at least from Metz to Jerusalm; but it has given the soldiers of the Allies an opportunity to wreak their vengeance upon the figure of the Kaiser when it was not possible to lay hands on his person. In regard to his pose as the prophet Daniel in the cathedral at Metz the New York Evening Sun says:

> "The Metz Cathedral struck the key-note of the meaning of today's events when the French formally reclaimed the capital of the lost province of Lorraine.
> "One of the stone figures on the facade is that of a monk, but the face beneath the cowl is unmistakable, with its pointed mustache, pointed nose, and sloping chin, which are those of the Kaiser himself, who ordered the head of Daniel removed and his own substituted.
> "'The devil a monk would be!'
> "But today sacrilegious pride has its fall, for the Kaiser's head has been broken off, his hands are bound with chains, and upon his breast hangs a placard proclaiming: 'Sic transit gloria mundi.'
> "The Kaiser has fled to Holland, and the rise and fall of unbounded ambition are typified by the statue."

George Wharton Edwards, in his recently published book on "Alsace-Lorraine," reports:

> "One could hardly believe this to be true, but true it is—the acme of banality. . . That lovely piece of Gothic work which was sculptured in the eighteenth century by Blondel was demolished by the German administration, who gravely reported that Blondel's style did not agree with or carry out the original plans of the architects of the Cathedral. The removal of this master work of Blondel was nothing short of a crime. And one is led to believe and accept the explanation of the French architects who protested against the substitution, 'That it was really because Blondel was a Frenchman.'"

There was a whole carnival of slaughter of Hohenzollern statues the night before General Petain entered Metz. "William I. had toppled over from the horse of his equestrian monument, while Frederick III., who for many long years had pointed a menacing finger at France from the pedestal upon which he stood, had come down with a rope around his neck." Had William consulted the Scriptures first he might not have chosen Daniel as the prophet for himself to impersonate, seeing that he thus suggests putting Daniel's words into his own mouth as the reader of his own doom:

> "And this is the writing that was inscribed: Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin.
> "This is the interpretation of the thing:
> ....."Mene: God hath numbered thy kingdom and brought it to an end.
> "Tekel: Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting.
> "Peres: Thy kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians."—Daniel v, 25-28.

ECHOES FROM BETHLEHEM

In that majestic silence of the night,
When earth has reached its darkest hour;
When ancient gloom was bathed in heav'nly light,
And regnant death should lose its power,—
Crown-jewel set among Judean hills!
What echoes sweet awoke in thee,—
What joy, that ringing down the ages, thrills
The sin-enslaved and makes them free.

Ring on, sweet Carol, swelling hymn sublime,
That echoed forth from highest Heav'n;
Resound ye greatest tidings of all time,
By angel's lips to mortals giv'n:
This eternal epic of the universe,
The Sons of God rejoiced to sing,
And evermore the hosts of Heav'n rehearse,
Through every age and clime shall ring.

Its theme: "All glory be to God above!"
Its aim: the peace of God below;
Its end: the Christ-love crowning all,—a love.
Too deep for angel-minds to know.
"He is our peace," the love of God revealed,
The Lord of lords in love's domain:
Bow down ye earthly potentates and yield
Your hearts to his pacific reign!

Though universal peace be long delayed,
Our prayers of faith shall rise the more,
Till nations long in battle-lines arrayed
Learn peace, a nobler art than war;
Till love most worshipful to God control
All powers of mind and heart, that so
A love to men, from fountain-depths of soul,
May ever pure and constant flow.

Now while we sing our songs of "peace, good will,"
Let hate and strife be crucified;
Let "peace on earth" its Heav'nly aim fulfill,
And kindly deeds be multiplied.
Roll onward holy echoes of his birth,—
Sweet hymn the angel-choirs began,
Till Father-love may reign in Heav'n and earth,
And brother-love bind man to man.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations" MATT. 28:19

The World Kingdom

"That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow." —PHIL. 2:10.

COMMUNITY SPIRIT IN THE COLORADO DESERT

Kinikin Heights community is located in the desert about seven thousand feet above sea level, far from any town, on the frontier of Colorado. Its residents are chiefly health-seekers, with meager resources, who had become homesteaders and until eight years ago lived most isolated lives—two or three families on a mesa with yawning chasms of canon between them. Then a former Sunday school superintendent moved into the community and some former teachers. Immediately a Sunday school was organized to meet at a private house, and a community interest sprang up. It became apparent that a day school must be started and the first year a short term was held in an old unused granary. The next year a building was constructed by community labor, centrally located. It has become the social center and in it are held both day and Sunday school, preaching services and prayer meetings. During the past winter a literary society met every week and has been a help socially and educationally. It has been the Sunday school that deserved the credit for what has been accomplished, for it has united the people and given them a common interest.

HEATHEN WORSHIP IN AMERICA ..

Foreign missionary work is not limited to heathen lands, as the following will prove:

"Twenty years ago the Swami Vivikenanda began missionary work in America. Now his followers in this country claim 100,000 converts and seventy-four meeting places. The sun god, Buddha and other heathen deities have temples in New York City, Boston, Pittsburgh, Washington, Denver, St. Louis, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle. Los Angeles has the well known temple to the worship of Krishna, where the rites of pure, east Indian type, are carried on by Americans. In the beautiful $100,000 Magdazzin temple in Chicago is a young woman, daughter of a former Presbyterian elder, though she now worships the sun god, and is its priestess. Theosophy, ancient Buddhism, the Persian faith of Abbas Effendi and a horde of other non-American and non-Christian religions are found in the United States.——The Continent.

ADVANCEMENT OF THE NEGRO

Hampton and Tuskegee Institutes, Fiske University, and other educational work for negroes, conducted by Northern and Southern churches of America, have been the leading factors in promoting the advance of the ten million negroes of the United States on physical, intellectual and spiritual lines. In the half century since the Civil War, the negroes have more than doubled in population, but they have increased their intellectual equipment by about one million percent. There are over 100,000 colored students in the 490 normal schools and fifty colleges of the South, and there are twenty-six theological seminaries, three schools of law, four of pharmacy, five of medicine and seventeen agricultural colleges, all for negroes. The cost of this higher education in one year is over $4,000,000. Intelligent Christian leaders have been developed, and negro school teachers, physicians and lawyers are steadily increasing in number and influence.

THE EVANGELICAL SEMINARY IN MEXICO

"Few institutions have taken a firmer hold on the thought and life of the people than the Evangelical Seminary in Mexico City," so writes Mr. Orwyn W. E. Cook. The native leaders and the members of the churches have shown an increasing interest in this center from which will come the trained ministry for Mexico's tomorrow. With such a backing the faculty and council look forward with high hopes.

The first annniversary exercises were held in the "patio" of the school on July 14th. There were present representatives of all the churches. The addresses looked to the place of the seminary in the life of Mexico and especially emphasized the power of a prepared ministry in helping to solve Mexico's difficult and intricate problems. The Rev. I. D. Chagoyan laid emphasis upon the need for a profound knowledge of the scripture message from burning hearts of men who have seen the Christ. The call today throughout Mexico—and throughout all Latin-America—is for leadership, scholarly and spiritual, religious and evangelistic. When the Mexican people see in the ministers of the Evangelical churches a leadership of this type the new day will come. Evangelical Christianity has a message not only for the lower classes but the rich, not only for the ignorant but for the learned, and the future will demand that attention be given to the needs of all and not of any one class.

This example of inter-denominational co-operation can not fail to point the way to future successes. The individual churches, their history, their points of distinctive emphasis and their work throughout the world are not lost sight of nor minimized, but the great common points of our faith, our common hope and the love and fraternity that unite us in Christ are dominant. Mexico needs a great national church united on the basis of St. Paul, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." The missionary societies of the co-operating churches have shown a deep interest in the school and are planning large things for the day to come.

ORWYN W. E. COOK.

BIBLE DAY IN MEXICO

The churches in Mexico have adopted a Bible Day on which they present the importance of the circulation and study of the scriptures and take offerings for the American Bible Society. The first collection of nine pesos came from the Seventh Day Adventists and $25 American money have been received from three Baptist churches. The Native Pastors' Association of Mexico City have taken up the idea of Bible Sunday very enthusiastically. In fact they celebrate Bible Week, finishing with Bible Sunday.—Bible Society Record.

RUSSIAN BIBLE SOCIETY IN 1818

It is interesting to know that there was a period in Russia in which the Bible was freely distributed in that country. During the latter part of the regime of the Emperor Alexander I, a Russian Bible Society was in existence which, under the favoring auspices of the Emperor, distributed a great many copies of the Bible. In 1818 as many as 128 branch organizations were affiliated with this society and the Bible was printed for them in 28 different languages.

This work of Bible distribution originated in Moscow when a minister of the gospel became a tutor to the children of a Russian princess and employed his influence so well for the spiritual good of those about him that he finally obtained the Emperor's permission to found this first Russian Bible Society.

THE BIBLE IN BRAZIL

In a little village in the Brazilian forests a colporteur of a Bible Society had sold a number of copies of the scriptures, but no sooner did the native priest discover that the villagers were reading the words of Christ than he ordered them to deliver up all the copies to be publicly burned. A great fire was kindled and the crowd stood looking on, sullen and reluctant, while their purchases went up in smoke. They did not altogether approve of the proceedings, for what they had read of the books had not seemed to them very dangerous. But one by one the Bibles and Testaments were torn from their covers and thrown into the blaze, and as a breeze fanned the burning leaves one was whisked out of the fire, carried over the house-tops and away to the outskirts of the village, until a final puff of wind sent it in at the window of a devout senora. As she read the fragment she was greatly impressed, and when her husband returned in the evening he, too, was deeply interested and the leaf was carefully put away. A year passed and another colporteur visited the village and called at the home of the senora. She hurried away and brought out her treasured leaf, asking if he could tell her the rest of the story. "Why," said the colporteur, "this belongs to the book I am selling," and he showed her the third chapter of John, from which the page had come. Gladly a Testament was purchased and the woman and her husband sat down together to read the story. They studied over it earnestly until they found the peace of the gospel and one by one their whole family came to know the Word of God. So it came about that through the very action of a fanatical priest a center of Christian knowledge grew up in that village.

ALLAH AND THE PANAMA CANAL

Rev. John Van Ess, writing in Asia, tells the following amusing and significant incident:

"One day D—— wandered into a school up the Tigris. On the wall hung a map of the western hemisphere. The class was being taught something about the new world. The teacher, knowing that his visitor was an American, asked him to tell something of his homeland. So D—— pointed to the Isthmus of Panama and told of the canal and the project of uniting two worlds. When he was through the teacher stepped forward with the following cogent moral: 'This teaches us how we are privileged to live in a land where Allah is known and feared. Over there they purpose to cross Allah's path by making water to flow where he made land!'

"But D——'s reply took the wind out of the sails of the mullah. 'I see,' said he, 'you have made a bridge across the Tigris here. If Allah had wanted you to walk on the other side, why did he separate you from it by a river?' "

PROGRESS IN CHILE

Fifty years of evangelical effort in Chile have brought remarkable results. Half a century ago a score of men and women met in a Valparaiso dwelling to form a league for extending religious ideas which ran counter to all former thinking. They were ridiculed, persecuted, distrusted, but carried on with resolute courage. At the present day the evangelical community numbers thousands. Their influence on legislation in Chiel can be plainly seen, and great progress is being made in the effort to abolish illiteracy.

WILL THERE BE A NEW "CHURCH" IN FRANCE

The London Morning Post, in a recent issue, makes the following comment upon the somewhat prevalent idea that the Pope and Roman Catholic authorities at Rome are more in sympathy with the Kaiser than with the Allies:

"The silence of the (Papal) church upon the issue of right and wrong in Germany's assault upon the peace of Europe, the treatment of Cardinal Mercier, the coincidence between the papal note and Germany's interest at the time it was issued—these and other incidents have aroused a feeling among Roman Catholics akin to the national resentment in England before the Reformation. Nor would we be surprised to see among the Roman Catholics of France an irresistible movement for the foundation of a Gallican church similar in national independence and sentiment to the Church of England as one of the results of this war."

A fulfillment of this forecast would make an important epoch in France's religious history.

THE BELGIAN MISSIONARY CHURCH

The Belgian Missionary church (Protestant) is maintaining its work heroically, distributing New Testaments among prisoners and wounded, keeping up morale of the unemployed and preaching the gospel. The treasurer of this church reported recently that during the year ending March 31, 1918, gifts had been increased over the previous year by twelve percent. In addition, they gave $4,000 to orphanages, medical missions and pensions for old people. They are doing a most efficient work of material and spiritual relief in more than seventy stations and outstations.

INDUSTRIAL WORK IN NORTH AFRICA

The importance of organizing industrial work for converts from Mohammedanism is understood when one realizes that to become a Christian often means persecution, a broken home and inability to find employment. The carpet school at Cherchell, Algeria, in which women and girls are employed, is conducted by the North Africa Mission and not only enables converts to earn a living, but brings them under Christian teaching and influence. It serves the same purpose from an evangelistic standpoint, as a mission hospital, where the patients are brought in contact with systematic gospel instruction. In other places, agriculture, carpentry and other trades have been valuable agencies, both for materially helping native converts and spiritually winning the uncontroverted.

It is unfortunate that the work is now somewhat hindered by the war, because of the great difficulty of obtaining wool and dyes, and the fact that the import of the goods is prohibited by the government.

WHAT SHOULD CHRISTMAS MEAN TO ME?

It is certain that Christmas should mean much to every Christian. Especially should it mean much this year to us. Surely the blessed words of the angels who sang, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," should mean more to us than ever before. We have had so recently the first realization of the blackness of modern warfare. Praise God we did not learn to like it. Revolutions and strikes that are not considered respectable, are awful, but how about the so-called respectable warfare which calls evil good and good evil?

Then, too, those of us who have kept our lives, by the power of God, from the "flu" evil, have much for which to thank our dear Redeemer for his saving power. Also those who have passed through trials and losses—as well as those of satisfaction.

If any of you have taken a trip from the east, or the middle west, to Los Angeles, California,—under suspense,—you will understand the situation of the scribe in going to see a dear, and only full brother, who had been badly injured in an automobile wreck, —his beloved wife having given her life; because of it, the same day! Going, yet simply trusting God, and expecting to live in the brother's home if he recovers. Then, indeed, you have reason to praise God,—in spite of grief and loss,—for the brother's recovery. This, too, is what Christmas this year means to us, and this is where you find your humble scribe today.

We have opportunitly to attend and do attend, often, the First Brethren church, of Los Angeles. We find them wide awake and active in the good work. They are ready to extend the hand of Christian fellowship and courtesy. In His Name

HOW THE BATTLE-HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC WAS WRITTEN

In an article in the july St. Nicholas, Mary R. Parkman tells the life-story of one of Americas' most worthy citizens, "Julia Ward Howe: The Singer of a Nation's Song."

"Mrs. Howe," said her minister, James Freeman Clarke, "why do you not write some really worthy words for that stirring tune?"

" 'I have often wished to do so,' she replied.

"Let us tell the story of the writing of the 'nation's song' as her daughters have told it in the biography of their mother:

" 'Waking in the gray of the next morning, as she lay waiting for the dawn the words came to her.

"Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord—"

" 'She lay perfectly still. Line by line, stanza by stanza, the words came sweeping on with the rythm of marching feet, pauseless, resistless. She saw the long lines swinging into place before her eyes, heard the voice of the nation speaking through her lips. She waited till the voice was silent, till the last line was ended; then sprang from bed, and, groping for pen and paper, scrawled in the gray twilight the "Battle-hymn of the Republic." ' "

"And so the 'nation's song' was born. How did it come to pass that the people knew it as their own? When it appeared in the Atlantic Monthly it called forth a little comment; the days gave small chance for the poetry of words. But some poets in the real world of deeds had seen it—the people who were fighting on the nation's battlefields. And again and again it was sung and chanted as a prayer before battle and trumpet-call to action. A certain fighting chaplain, who had committed it to memory, sang it one memorable night in Libby Prison, when the joyful tidings of the victory of Gettysburg had penetrated those gloomy walls. 'Like a flame the word flashed through the prison. Men leaped to their feet, shouted, embraced one another in a frenzy of joy and triumph; and Chaplain McCabe, standing in the middle of the room, lifted up his great voice and sang aloud:

'Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord!'

Every voice took up the chorus, and Libby Prison rang with the shout of 'Glory, glory, hallelujah.' "

In 1778 President Washington wrote: "If we do not get money and soldiers from France, our cause is lost." The answer to this was the coming of Lafayette, and the contribution of six thousand soldiers under Rochambeau. The French city of Le Puy, in memory of Lafayette, presented a flag to one of the regiments of the American Expeditionary Forces, shortly after it landed in France.

LITTLE GIRL AND THE CHRISTMAS TOYS

It was early Christmas morning. The Brown-Flannel Monkey stuck his head out of the top of Little-Girl's stocking, and made faces at the toys heaped on the hearth rug. "Quick," he cried, "before she wakes up. Which of us will Little-Girl like best?"

Instantly the toys began to talk all at once, and to show off their accomplishments. A top started spinning, a wooly lamb cried "Baa-aa!" Two gayly dressed dolls sprang from their boxes, and a music-box began a lively tune. The confusion was put to an end by a loud thumping noise, and out from a dark corner walked a tall, thin stranger, so big and black that he frightened some of the little toys almost into fits.

"Friends," he said, "I am Mr. Umbrella. As I am only a Useful Present, it is not likely Little-Girl will care for me. Therefore let me be judge among you. Now—each in turn. Miss Pink-Silk Dollie, you begin."

The Pink-Silk Doll tossed her curly head and courtesied grandly to the Toys. "Little Girl must love me best," she declared, "because I am so beautiful!"

"Not necessarily," a sharp voice broke in. "Beauty for dolls is out of style nowadays. "She'll choose me first, for I'm a Natural Doll."

"No, she'll like me, for I'm not a silly doll, but a furry Bear!' '

"No, me, for I can say Baa-aa!"

"Me, for I am Jumping-Jack, and I can make her laugh!"

"Me, for I am a Brown-Flannel Monkey, and I can scare her!—"

In spite of all Mr. Umbrella's efforts to keep order, the noise and arguing was as bad as ever again, but in the midst of it all the clock struck six! Instantly every sound was hushed, every toy stood stiff and still in its place on the nursery rug. In her crib in the corner Little-Girl began to stir and to stretch. She sat up, rubbed her sleepy eyes, and stared hard at the toys. Then she sprang out of bed, trotted over to her presents, and picked out —what do you suppose? Not the Lamb or even the Brown-Flannel Monkey—no, she stooped and drew from her hiding place behind a picture-book, Jemima-Ann, the old rag doll with a new head! Tucking her lovingly under one arm, Little-Girl stretched out her other hand for Mr. Umbrella. She opened him, spread him carefully over her head and Jemima's, and then trotted off to wake Mother and say a "Merry Christmas."—Gertrude Knevels in The Churchman.

CHRIST AND CHRISTMAS

Out of the lore of Grecian legend comes the story of a prize contest for the best statue of one of the goddesses.

Among the many rare and costly statues presented was one which was the work of a country youth utterly lacking the artistic gift. In consequence his work was clumsy and crude. But his labor had been prompted by a loving heart, having entered the contest only because of his devotion to the goddess.

Strange to say when the day of awards arrived the much coveted prize was given him. And yet it was not so strange, for the goddess in appreciation of the lad's great love for her, herself entered into the crude stone making it to glow with a beauty far surpassing all the others.

A beautiful truth is taught by the impossible supposition of the legend. It was the living spirit within that made the difference.

Like that crude piece of stone are our lives, needing a spirit within to transform them into things of beauty and grace and power. And the spirit which alone can so change them is that of Jesus Christ, and no life is lacking in these qualities into which he comes.

This Christmas should find the coming into many a soul from which he has hitherto been excluded of this great Transformer of the ugly into the beautiful, the base into the noble. The song of which Phillips Brooks so beautifully sang may well be ours.

O holy Child of Bethlehem,
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin, and enter in,
Be born in us today.

That will be an experience which will make the natal day of the world's Redeemer glow with a beauty far surpassing any other we have ever experienced; yea, it will make every future day radiant with glory and blessed with peace.

African Letter

Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa,
September 16, 1918

My dear Friends:

I am almost three years old now. Probably by the time you receive this my third birthday will be past. We are still here at Brazzaville. Since I wrote you last I am learning many things. I can go to church now and sit quietly on Daddy's lap during the service, and listen to a native preacher whom I do not understand. Mamma says that is more than some big people can do. You would be surprised to see how tall I am. Mamma says I look very much so in my overalls. I like to call myself a boy and everyone seems to think I am a boy. Mamma says it is because I am so boisterous.

I talk only a little Sango, for we do not have the Sango people around us, but I understand it, for I hear Daddy and mamma and Aunt Toddy talking it to the boys who work for us, and the boys speak it to me. They are Bakongo boys, and speak a very hard language. Mamma and Daddy understand a little of it, but we are not trying to learn it, as it is not used in Ubangi-Shari where we are going when Jesus lets us. Mamma wants all the little boys and girls to pray very much that the gospel, that blessed story of Jesus Christ may soon be preached in Ubangi-Shari by your little band of missionaries and by any others whom the dear Lord sends.

I speak a very little French too. I can say, "Bon jour," (good day) and "Bonne nuit" (good night), and "Silvous plait") If you please). There is a French lady at Brazzaville whom Mamma and Aunt Toddy sometimes take me to see. As soon as we went in the other day I climbed up on Mamma's lap and said in English, "Jesus loves the French lady." The lady did not understand, and asked Mamma what I said. Mamma told her in French, and although she is not a Christian, she said, "C'est bon," (It is good). I like to tell the boys who come here to store palm-nut kernels in the old magazine near here, about Jesus. I do not know Babongo of course, so I just talk to them in English. I always say to them, "Many boys. Jesus loves you." They always seem interested in what I say. Often I show them my little dolls, which they think are very strange indeed. Some of them are even afraid of them, and try to run away. My dolls wear no dresses. They have clothes but I do not see why they need to wear them when the black babies do not wear clothes. So I make no other use of their clothes except to wash and iron them, which I dearly love to do. My little iron is always cold, but I enjoy the process of ironing them anyway. The other day when Daddy went to town, he brought me four large pictured handkerchiefs in which I like to wrap my dolls, for that is the way in which the natives sometimes dress.

When I wash their clothes, I usually do so about eleven o'clock. Mamma plans it this way because I take my bath at 11:30 and put on my sleeping suit ready for bed right after my lunch. You see, I haven't learned to wash my dollie's clothes yet, without getting my own wet.

We have had a long, cool, dry season, no rain since May. The dust is very thick upon the ground. Now it is beginning to grow hotter again. By and by when you are having your long, cold winter we shall be having our long hot rainy season again. When we first came here in March it was hot and rainy.

We are happy here for we feel that we are obeying Jesus. He has provided for us, kept us well, and has kept away from us all thieves and others who would do evil. We have had shelter in the time of rains, and we have had no hard storms.

The only hard thing which Jesus has asked us to do or to suffer is to wait for his working. Mamma says it is hard, but that his grace is sufficient. We are all praying that just as soon as we may go on, the way will be open. Mammma says we must pray for Jesus to send us there. I know we must go on a boat, so I am always praying and singing, "Oh, Jesus send a boat." Won't you pray that too? I see many wonderful things that Jesus does, how he breaks the moon, and makes it whole again, how he cares for us, and I believe in answer to our simple prayer of faith he will soon send a boat to take us on to Ubangi-Shari.

Very lovingly, your friend,

"WANGECE," A TRUE STORY

In the highlands of British East Africa among the Akikuyu tribe there is a station of the Africa Inland Mission known as Kinyona. In connection with this station are a number of outschools. To one of these, in the latter part of 1914 was attracted among other boys and girls, our little heroine Wangece. In February, 1915, arrangements were made by the missionaries at Kinyona to forward her to one of the Homes established for girls by this Mission. So Wangece left her heathen village, its smoke and its filth, its red ochre and castor-oil, its gardens and its granaries, but above all, its sin and its witchcraft and came to Kijabe. Contrary to most Kikyu girls she was shy and modest in her character and deportment,—a pearl of great price among heathen women.

Wangece was an orphan, but she was not lacking in those who claimed her as their property, and who expected at her marriage to be the recipients of the dowry which must be paid, for African girls of heathen origin. Her people came to see her, bringing her favorite porridge meurn, with the tempting bananas and other fruits of Kinyona district. But tempting as was the food, she looked without touching. She wanted the words of Jesus and the ways of God, and firmly rooted in her yet untransformed heart was the superstition that to eat food from home would tempt her to return to that place upon which she had turned her back, that she might know the Lord. By repeated persuasions, however, she finally yielded and put on once more the skins and ornaments which she had worn in her heathen days,—But oh, how sad she felt! The Superintendent said to her, "I want to see you in your Kikuyu dress, Wangece." And suddenly Wangece saw herself! Running to the matron and throwing her arms around her, she said, "Ndikwendaguthie," "I don't want to go." "You need not go," replied the matron tenderly. She took off the skins and her ornaments, and giving them to the natives who had come after her, she said, "Go back with them. I shall never go."—This battle was fought, the victory won. The European clothing signified the inward desire of the Kikuyu maiden to seek the things of God.

"Only a little girl was Wangece, but she had been bought by a young man, a raw heathen before she came to the Home at Kijabe.

A very popular young man indeed, was he, dressed always in paint and feathers, the usual gala attire of an Akikunyu warrior.. He never gave her people or herself any trouble about her desire to be other than a heathen, nor her rapidly increasing desire to know God.

Shortly after Wangece gained the victory over her manifold temptations to return to her heathen life a change came also over her young lover, whom we will call Kiewill. He too came under the influence of an outschool teacher, who being instant in season and out of season, labored with him one morning while they were having a dance in the village. He was persuaded to leave his sinful ways, and immediately left the village, dance and all. he had once earned while working for a settler, on the other arm, he went to a neighboring stream. Paint and feathers were removed, his head was shaved, his body washed, his clothes were donned, and thereafter he started to school. Temptations have come to him, but he has kept true and faithful to him whom that day he saw revealed as the Savior, and for whom he had counted it a joy to forsake his heathen ways.

Wangece, faithful also to him who had called her was to have the reward of earthly happiness as well. For Kiewill sent word to the matron of the home that he still loved Wangece. Permitted to do so, he approached Wangece with that story of true love, which whether couched in English, Spanish, French Kikunyu or Sango, never is unwelcome to the loving maiden's ear. And so, "Mingukwenda, Wangece, mingukwenda, tu," was again repeated, until Wangece yielded not only herself but her heart as well to the one who, owning her, yet sought her. Kiewill and Wangece are engaged. It was a glad but touching day when they both went down into the baptismal waters. The two loving each other, love him most, and the marriage day so soon to follow, will be a day of earthly joy, foreshadowing the heavenly bliss one day to be ours when our Lord returns to his bride.

Kiewill must make the final arrangements with her relatives, he must go through the last formalities, and then he shall receive his own bought and sought one as his bride.

Wangece will be arrayed in white, as I have seen so many sweet brides arrayed in East Africa. Brides of two colors if you please, but all in white. It reminds me of the time when black and white, native Christian and missionary worker, we shall be alike arrayed in the fine linen, which is the righteousness of the saints and shall be made ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb.

When shall these happy types, these sweet foreshadowings, come to Ubangi-Shari? His messengers are present, his time is being rapidly fulfilled, and there, too, as in East Africa our Lord shall be glorified as his ransomed ones comes.

GETTING READY FOR LIFE

One had far better take a bushel baskot to carry a peck of plums than to attempt to carry a bushel of plums in a peck measure. It sometimes looks, however, as if people are so eager to get the "plums" that they never stop to think whether they are able to carry them or not. The nations of the world are cursed with incompetents who have secured positions of trust and responsibility through political influence. Much of the unhappiness of this world grows out of the attempts of people to secure something of value without making an adequate return. Instead of seeking a place of honor and influence, one should rather aim to secure the ability to fill such a place with credit.

When the great pianist Paderewski was giving recitals in Boston, he was about to enter the music hall one day when an old lady stopped him and exclaimed in great glee: "Oh, Mr. Paderewski, I am so glad to see you! I have tried in vain to purchase a ticket to your concert. Haven't you a seat you could let me have?"

"Madam," said the great pianist, "the management has placed but one seat at my disposal, and that you are welcome to if you think fit to take it."

"Oh, yes, and a thousand thanks! Where is it?" was the excited reply.

"At the piano," replied Paderewski.

It is needless to add that the woman did not take the seat that was offered her. Though thousands of people filled the hall that day, there was only one who could occupy that seat. That seat could neither be bestowed nor received as a gift. It belonged to the one who had qualified self for it, and from him it could not be taken away. The important thing for us to learn is that we must earn what we get; we must qualify for a large place if we hope to secure and retain such a place. The young Indian brave was not allowed to wear feathers until he had shown himself worthy by pulling those feathers from the tail of a live eagle. The world will not allow you to hold any honored position until you have shown yourself worthy of that honor.—Friend for Girls and Boys.

DID YOU?

Did you give him a lift? He's a brother of man,
And bearing about all the burden he can.
Did you give him a smile? He was downcast and blue,
And a smile would have helped him to battle it through.

Did you give him your hand? He was slipping down hill,
And the world, so I fancied, was using him ill.
Did you give him a word? Did you show him the road,
Or did you just let him go on with his load?

Did you ask what it was—why the quivering lip?
Why the half-suppressed sob and the scalding tears drip?
Were you brother of his when the time came of need?
Did you offer to help him, or didn't you heed?

Do you know what it means to be losing the fight,
When a lift just in time might set everything right?
Do you know what it means—just the clasp of a hand,
When a man's borne about all a man ought to stand?

—F. B. Gawell, in Grit.

THE SORROWS OF GENIUS

Homer was a beggar.
Spencer died in want.
Cervantes died in hunger.
Terence, the dramatist, was a slave.
Dryden lived in poverty and distress.
Sir Walter Raleigh died on the scaffold.
Butler lived a life of penury and died poor.
Bacon lived a life of meanness and distress.
Plutus, the Roman comic poet, turned a mill.
Paul Borghese had fourteen trades, and yet starved with all.
Tasso, the Italian poet, was often distressed for five shillings.
Steele, the humorist, lived a life of perfect warfare with bailiffs.
Otway, the English dramatist; died prematurely through hunger.
Chatterton, the child of genius and misfortune, destroyed himself at eighteen.
Bentivoglio was refused admittance into a hospital he had himself erected.
Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield" was sold for a trifle to save him from the grip of the law.
Milton sold his copyright of "Paradise Lost" for $75, at three payments, and finished his life in obscurity.

BEFORE YOU GET ENGAGED ..

Before you get engaged, my dear girl with the dreamy eyes—

Consider whether the young fellow is the kind of man whose company you could enjoy —not only on Sunday evenings, but on Monday mornings.

Find out how he treats his mother and sister and younger brother, when he is alone with them.

Discover the opinion of him entertained by his employer and by his fellow employees, way in the back of their heads.

If he smokes, think how you would like to breathe for the rest of your life the odor of stale tobacco—and have your children breathe it.

Make up your mind whether the process of getting five dollars out of him would be equivalent to the siege of Verdun.

Learn the caliber of his religion; can it hold its own in the face of disappointment, and loss, and sickness and death?

Scrutinize his love for you; is it more than skin deep? or will it fade as soon as your beauty fades?

Do you regard him as a suitable companion, not so far above you intellectually that you cannot stimulate him, or so far below you intelectually that he cannot stimulate you?

Do you believe in him so thoroughly that your promise to love, honor—yes, and obey —will come without hesitation or reservation and with glad and proud loyalty?

Are you sure that he would bring to you the same unsullied purity that you would bring to him?

In short, are you confident that he would be to you a life companion dearer than life, with a love stronger than death, and that your marriage would have upon it the blessing of the Christ of Cana?

Then, dear girl with the dreamy eyes, place your heart in his hands.

But not until then.—C. E. World.

News From the Field

Carlota, Argentina

Nov. 1, 1918.

Dear Readers of the Evangelist:—

Those of you who are interested in missions will be glad to learn of our recent change. We left Rio Cuarto the 17th of last month and came to Carlota, which is about three hours' ride and a distance of some seventy miles. It was a beautiful morning just after a heavy rain and we could not but admire the vast fields of alfalfa with the thousands and thousands of cattle grazing upon them. It was a perfect picture, the fresh green meadows speckled with red and white herds as far as we could see in places. One accustomed to ten and twenty acre fields almost feels that he is dreaming to see these vast fields, some of them with sections thrown together. The wheat is growing nicely where there is any, but the crop will be short in this section due to a drouth at sowing time.

Another sight we shall not soon forget, was the large stacks of wheat, of last year's crop, which are yet to be seen at many stations. There was no shed room for a large part of the crops so it was sacked and piled up to endure the weather. Canvass covering is extremely expensive and almost unobtainable, so hundreds and doubtless thousand of bushels of fine wheat is just rotting and wasting. Due to a staggering shortage of freight cars this wheat could not be hauled to Buenos Aires and thence to hungering Europe. But what is possibly the most surprising and most shameful fact is that in the same towns where large quantities of wheat are going to waste, bread is selling twice as dear as it should, and many poor people must go hungry right in sight of the food they deserve but can not get. On every hand one hears the Argentinos condemning their government for its bad management of affairs, and one does not have to be here a life time to see just reasons for their complaining. We can but wonder how long it may be before the teachings and principles of our Lord shall sway the minds of those who rule this vast land so fertile and so rich in natural resources. When shall righteousness and justice be practiced? But upon hesitating a moment, the question naturally comes, what can be expected of a country where Roman dogma has reigned supremely for over three centuries and where the love and saving power of our Lord Jesus is so little known? What can be expected where selfishness is uppermost in the lives of so many, where lying is a habit and a convenience, and where so many have a price instead of a conviction? After a little reflection one is rather made to marvel that conditions are as good as they are.

Carlota is a quiet beautiful little town of about 4,000 inhabitants, I mean beautiful in comparison with these other interior towns. But anyone coming from Winona would hardly describe any of these towns as beautiful, he would likely think many of them had been forsaken by both God and man. Here we have found several American and English people, and they have had a great deal to do with improving things. Mr. Ross a man from Illinois, has been the Mayor of the town for some years, and has the confidence and respect of the people. He is known as a Protestant and his influence will be a help to the mission work. We have already found some Christian people and several others who are very sympathetic with us. A few days ago I was explaining our work to a business man, he was very glad and said, "that is one thing this town lacks," and then went on to manifest his disgust with the priests as so many do.

Last Sunday we had our first service, a private meeting in English. Twelve came, one family having driven a Ford 18 miles to get here. This family has been in the Argentina for 16 years and told me that they had been to church twice in that time. They had nowhere to go and such is the case with many, but as well we find many who left their religion in England or America when they came here. Those few who came seemed exceedingly glad to hear the old gospel once more. We hope to have more such meetings in the future along with the meetings in Spanish.

We are now very busy trying to get our home arranged and a hall painted and fitted up for the meetings. We are planning a special campaign to open up the work. We expect Brother Langran and Brother Doorn from Villa Maria and Bellville to come with their Bible coach to help get things started.

We understand that the priest has given a solemn warning to the Catholics to have nothing to do with us and do us all the harm they can.

Let the new work in Carlota not be forgotten before the Throne of Grace.

WM. H. BOCK.

A NOTE FOR THE EVANGELIST

After some delay the Four-Year Program hand books have been received. Distribution has been made. If any pastor, auxiliary president or superintendent has not receivd a copy, please inform me. Dupliate copies have beten sent to you pastors who have more than one church so that you will have sufficient blanks for the reports. There are quite a few of the hand books left. ANY worker in the district who desires a copy, just drop me a card. And pastors, let us not forget to report. The failure of our district last year was the failure to report.

CHALLENGE ACCEPTED

If the "flu" lets up Flora, Indiana will accept Waterloo's challenge.

SYLVESTER WHETSTONE.

We want to enter the Goughnour "Four Month Contest." Sincerely,

J. W. BROWER,
Huntington, Indiana.

MEETING THE "FLU" AT EVERY TURN IN THE PIKE

This seems to be a very fitting, and faddy, yet not fanciful heading for our little contribution to let our brethren know that we are yet hoping and praying that "in due season we shall reap if we faint not."—Now, we planned to have a meeting in October at Darwin, and a meeting in November at Burlington, and a meeting at Bryan, Ohio in December, but,—We did not get to carry this program out in even a very small way. At Darwin we have been able between "bans" and "bonds" to preach three Sundays since the first of October, and at Burlington (December 17), have only been inside the church once, and walked in and turned and came out. At Bryan, Ohio—I will let Brother Maus tell that experience.

Yet, hopeful, as the "flu" has defeated the already mentioned program, and we have not been able to make any accomplishments toward our various offerings that have been requested; and even have not been able to meet our pledges to the Washington, D. C. work. We are planning to get off on our own right foot and program a meeting to begin January first at Burlington, for which we solicit the prayers of the entire brotherhood.

The conclusion, will have to be with me as well as with a number of more brethren, "We dare not fail," and we shall have to do full time in three-fourths time, and I have always told my congregations there is no such animal as "can't,"— and there must not be any such a result as as failure,—I have this confidence in my brethren at Burlington and Darwin that we are going to win out "in Christ who strengthens us—" remembering "in our patience we possess our souls."

Co-operation is our word, "as workers together"—therefore there is nothing left but for us to press on toiling and rejoicing, knowing that the sun always shines brighter after the clouds roll away.

Then, committing all to Jesus, we are assured of victory, may be not our "wants" but always our needs. In these days, Brethren may we manifest more "faith" and less "quibbling."

W. T. LYTLE.

HOME MISSION NOTES

BY G. C. CARPENTER

Two Teachers Needed

Two teachers are needed for three or four months, one at Krypton to teach the subscription grade school, and the other to teach at Riverside Institute. Neither will have to have a Kentucky certificate. This need should be met by two consecrated volunteers at once. Brother Drushal writes that school should begin December 30 and the school at Krypton should open about the same time. Who will go? Write us at once.

The Matron Secured

The matron volunteered and bettor still her husband will go too. Brother and Sister Russell Humberd, of Flora, Indiana have offered their services for about three months. They are among the faithful workers in the Brethren church at Flora, Indiana. The Lord verily is sending forth workers into his fields.

The Nurse

Word comes from the East that Sister Laughlin has a nurse who has offered to serve. We are hoping that final arrangements will be quickly made so that a nurse will be on hand at the opening of school.

Good News

Brother Cook writes: "I do not know of a case of influenza around here at present. We are planning a Christmas tree and address. The people are anxious for school to begin.

The White Gifts

The Kentucky Mission work shares in the White Gift offering at Christmas time to the extent of $1,000. Every Sunday school ought to do better than ever, not permitting even an epidemic to hinder the carrying of the good news to the ends of the earth. Yours for a record White Gift offering.

The Thanksgiving Offering

Brother Bowman, our faithful secretary-treasurer, states that the churches are not responding very fast. Long Beach just remitted an offering of $125. Long Beach is all right! Every other church ought to reach the thirty cents per member apportionment. The First Brethren church of Muncie, Indiana reached the goal, the only one thus reported in the November report. Peru will be included in the December report as the amount has been sent to Brother Bowman. And if Muncie and Peru can reach the goal, then every church in the brotherhood can. Am I right, Brother Kimmel? There should be two hundred star churches in the December report. Watch for that report.

LOUISVILLE ACCEPTS

The generous offer and courageous challenge of the Waterloo, Iowa Sunday school was accepted by a vote of the Louisville Ohio, Sunday school, and notice is hereby served that the latter school will wage relentless war on the influenza slump. Every division is being made ready and every leader is being groomed for the fray. The rules for the contest as stated by Waterloo are simple and to the point and are accepted by Louisville without change. We are entering this contest for the sake of the restoration of our own school to its former state of health as well as to add momentum to the whole Sunday school movement. We are not saying what star we shall win, whether gold, blue, or red, or none, but this we do say, that we shall be in the contest to the end for "maximum attendance, maximum efficiency and maximum zeal, and therefore we shall win.

F. E. CLAPPER, Supt.

GEO. S. BAER, Pastor.

COLLEGE CORNERS, INDIANA

We take pleasure in reporting the work of the Master at this place. College Corners is not one of the slacking churches of the Brotherhood. They have built a fine new church, which is lighted with the Delco system, and you may know that when people are interested in God that they will be interested in a place to gather to worship him. So we believe College Corners is far from being a dead church. We are not boasting of our job. While they called us to be their pastor, for the remainder of the conference year, we feel sure that they have made a mistake, yet we are willing to do our best to give them the gospel. And with the help of God we shall endeavor to do our part to help them to better things. The work is at a standstill just now, as the "flu" is doing its work. We could stand the midsummer slump better than the "flu." Brother C. C. Grisso is our evangelist at College Corners as soon as we think it safe to start our revivals. We believe that we shall give the devil a good fight. For the devil has no use for me, and I have less use for him. I am on the job, and if he gets a vacation for ten months it will be because the "flu" helps him to it. I believe the College Corners members are a faithful and trustworthy people, and since I have to divide the time with Dutchtown and College Corners, I know that my task is greater, and I will devote all my time now to the work of the Master, and if God my Father, and Jesus my Savior, will let the Holy Spirit lead me all the way, and with the best gift on earth to man the Bible, as my guide, Why should I fear to take the work at College Corners?

DUTCHTOWN, INDIANA

For the Evangelist all old subscriptions will be renewed, and will be sent in with the new ones as soon as we finish the canvass. We are going over the top. I have been in twenty homes and have secured 23 subscriptions in the canvass. One home will be without the paper as the only member there cannot read, so you see you could not expect them to take the Evangelist. We have 12 homes yet to visit and we expect to add 11 papers yet to the list. I wonder how many churches have done as well. We are proud of this good spirit. I am safe to say now that 99 percent of our homes will have the best paper in the world to a Brethren in them.

I am in the harness to make the Brethren church the best church in the world. I want to say I am a radical Brethren, and I think I am right. I don't help any other. If I am wrong I have harmed no one but myself. I believe we ought to practice what we preach.

HOMER ANDERSON.

Ring, Happy Bells

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go,
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in to redress to all mankind.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out, my mournful rythmes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

—Tennyson.

AFRICAN LETTER

Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa,
October 22, 1918.

On the Belgian mail that arrived last week we received the first copy of the Brethren Evangelist (one of the issue of August 14th) that came to our hand since we left America for Africa. We certainly were glad to receive it. It was not our intention that we should get away and not have made arrangements for the Evangelist to follow us. Each of us expected the other to be getting it with the "usual result" of any such expectations. We were so glad to get some "church news' 'as we have been hearing so very little. Never since we have entered the Lord's work have we had such a dearth of news as we have had since sailing from New Orleans. However, we are not, nor have we been, lonely, for we have had his presence with us to a very marked degree.

We are very anxious concerning a second party. For all we know, they may be nearing the African coast now, although the latest news that we have is from May when Brother Rollier was writing about passports. We are exceedingly anxious to have him come for we believe that he will be a tremendous help in this field.

We are all well and happy in spite of circumstances for we are greatly exposed to malarial infection and to wait is not easy. But never more in all of our lives have we been able to say, "We are being kept by the power of God." He is our only refuge and he is a safe One. We are so glad for the many, many promises contained in the Word for those who "wait upon the Lord."

Yours in Christian love,
JAMES S. GRIBBLE.

SPECIAL NOTICE

The Seminary of Ashland College will be open to receive all men who may wish to enter in January. You can enter as late as January 27th, and find work and classes. This announcement is made to meet the needs of the men who were in the U. S. service and who may be mustered out. There were such who had intended to prepare for the ministry. Now will be the time to resume their studies or to enter thereon. Never did the church of Christ call so loudly for trained and consecrated leadership as now. Young men, enter school in January and save practically a year. Write for information.

J. ALLEN MILLER, Dean,
Ashland, Ohio.

Our Dead

MARTIN—John, an old pioneer of the county of Carroll, and the father of Mrs. Rolla Michael, of Flora, Indiana, died at the age of 83 years. The funeral was held at the Michael home on November 12, by the writer.

HARNESS—William John, second son of Mr. and Mrs. Elsworth Harness, of Burlington, died at the family home at the age of 17 years, 5 months, 16 days. He answered to the call of the epidemic, and with his bright future and earnest convictions before him, had proven himself to start aright for he made his decision for Christ in the Brethren church a year ago in the Thomas meeting, and proved himself to be a loyal attendant in every service of the church since. His last place of attending was the only time the Burlington Brethren had Sunday school which was November 3rd. What a fine example of manhood is left to mark his existence in the memory of his friends. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the family residence. Besides his parents, he leaves to mourn his departure two brothers and two sisters and one grandfather. May the Holy Spirit lead all of his friends and relatives to the loyalty in service manifested by this youth of tender years.

W. T. LYTLE.

TROXELL—Olive Troxell passed to her long eternal home on Sunday, October 27, 1918, in the bounds of the Center Chapel congregation, Indiana, at the age of 25 years. It was the writer's privilege to be a close friend of the family for many years, having received Olive and her mother into the church eleven years ago. Hers was a beautiful life, devoted to the Master and the interests of his church always. Her going was peaceful after four days battling with influenza. Services at Rich Valley near Peru, Indiana, on October 30, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Wake of the U. B. church.

C. C. GRISSO.

SOLOMON—J. D. Solomon was born in Preble county, Ohio, August 5, 1849; died November 15, 1918, aged 69 years, 3 months, 10 days. He was united in marriage to Lovina Hemmelberger January 4, 1869. Soon after they moved to Michigan, settling near Almena, where he has resided except four and one-half years in Kansas. He leaves his faithful wife, one son, 3 grandchildren, one sister and one brother. Soon after their marriage Brother and Sister Solomon united with the church. He was a strong pillar in the Almena church and will be sadly missed.

PARKS—Hays Parks for twenty years one of the most active members of the Conemaugh Brethren church, died November 5th, 1918, at the Mercy hospital, aged 39 years, 10 months and 26 days. Pneumonia, superinduced by influenza, was the immediate cause of his death. He was anointed before he died.

Brother Parks was received by baptism into the Conemaugh Brethren church during the pastorate of J. F. Koontz and continued in that faith until called home. He was recording secretary of the church for eighten years, and at the time of his departure he was superintendent of and a teacher in the Sunday school. Besides holding these elective offices in the church, Mr. Parks was the peacemaker of the church, an active supporter of everything that was for the good of the church, and the friend and loyal supporter of every minister this church has had since he became a member of the church. No pastor of this church ever had cause to complain of "Hays."

By his death the family has lost a good husband and father, the town a most splendid citizen, the church a loyal member and an efficient teacher, and all who knew him a loyal friend. He was one of God's good men and the church's faithful servants. While no words from human lips can add peace to his ashes nor sweetness to his sleep, yet we feel that he is worthy of Antony's compliment to Brutus:

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

We therefore address him in the language of the poet:

Thy day has come, not gone;
Thy sun has risen, not set;
Thy life is now beyond
The reach of death or change,
Not ended—but begun.
O, noble soul! O gentle heart! Hail, and farewell.

Besides a host of friends who mourn his loss, he is survived by his widow, four sons and one daughter.

Private service was held at his late home on November 7th, and a public memorial service in the church on the following Sunday. Both services were conducted by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church.

HARBIDGE—Among the first in the city of Mansfield, Ohio, to fall a victim to that dread disease, Spanish influenza, was Dean Gale Harbidge, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Harbidge, who up to a few weeks ago were residents of Mansfield.

On June twenty-first, 1910, he was married to Miss Stella Smith, a daughter of Rev. E. H. Smith and wife. Mr. Smith has been for many years an honored minister in our denomination and has a son pastor of our church in Conemaugh, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Harbidge was a promising young business man, and one who held the confidence and esteem of a large circle of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Harbidge were the parents of two beautiful children, a boy, Walter Charles, and a girl, Mary Alice.

Everything that medical skill and careful nursing by his devoted wife could do was done for him, but his Savior whom he loved sent the summons "Come Up Higher," and he answered, "Lord I come."

ROHRER—Flora, died October 5th, 1918. in her death the church here suffered a keen loss. She was a regular attendant and worker; she was secretary of her Sunday school class in which she took an active part. She was an efficient clerk in a large department store of the city. Flora was one of our familiar figures in social as well as religious life and we keenly feel the separation which her early death has caused. Our loss is her eternal gain.

ROHRER—Edgar F., brother of the above, died October 10th, 1918, just five days after the death of his sister. Deceased was our Sunday school superintendent. He was a young man of promise, in his official capacity he was careful, painstaking and deliberate. The Sunday school was making progress under his leadership and the loss is greatly felt by all. He was the Business Manager of The Globe, one of our daily papers. He left to mourn his early death a wife and baby girl, mother and brother, besides a large circle of friends.

A. B. COVER.

STUTZMAN—Brother George B. Stutzman passed away in his 47th year, October 20th. He had been a sufferer for a long time avail. He was a member of the Third church having undergone special treatment in Washington Hospitals the past summer, but to no and lived some distance away, upon a farm. Brother Stutzman was a member of a family whose religious life has been part of the growth of our Brethren churches in the Conemaugh Valley. Many of our honored members and old dependables have been of the family relationship. Our prayers and sympathy are extended to the family in their bereavement of father and husband. Services by the pastor.
